After a lapse of six years, for which the war has been responsible, the 'Mary Wakefield' Westmorland Festivals were resumed at Kendal last month. It was pleasant to note the general feeling of enthusiasm that prevailed, and particularly satisfactory to find little or no evidence of any breach in the tradition which has been slowly and painfully built up in the past thirty years or so. Conditions had so much altered that it was necessary to reduce the expenditure, but it was astonishing how slight a difference this made in the general result. The chief difference was in the orchestra of fifty-five that took part in the evening concerts, for it went back to the early days of the Festival, and consisted mainly of amateurs, stiffened by several members of the Hallé Orchestra. Mr. Hamilton Harty, who conducted with conspicuous ability, had no doubt a hard task in the work of preparation, but he succeeded in making the band more than respectably efficient. It may seriously be doubted whether such an orchestra does not really accomplish more for the music and musicianship of the neighbourhood than importing practised players from outside. Pains had evidently been taken to enlist as many as possible who had participated in former Festivals. The three vocalists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. A. W. Willink, and Mr. Heyner—were all there in 1914, so was that most helpful and genial of judges, Prof. Walford Davies, and Mr. Harty himself had appeared to conduct his own 'Mystic Trumpeter.' Mr. George Rathbone, who may be styled a son of the Festival, was again most useful in innumerable capacities, and Mrs. Argles, as president, was something much more than a merely ornamental official; she conducted the children's concert, and was a focus for the enthusiasm inspired in all the county by an event which has done so much for its appreciation of good music. The programme presented was no doubt on somewhat modified lines, but if the music may have been slightly simpler the general character of the Festival was by no means depreciated. The test-pieces were all good examples of native art, from the madrigals of Benet and Morley to part-songs of living composers. The standard of performance was remarkably high. Prof. Walford Davies is emphatically a merciful judge, but without straining any point he was able to award almost uniformly high marks throughout. On the whole they averaged somewhere about eighty-five (out of a maximum of a hundred). The outstanding feature of the performances was refinement, what was chiefly lacking being the dramatic instinct which should make the sense of the poetry reveal itself in the performances. The one instance which remains in memory as a perfect realisation of both music and poetry was from a choir of children—hardly any of whom, it is worth noting, could have possibly taken part in a previous Festival. These were the children of a Milnthorpe School, whose singing of the charming unison-song, 'A low and aloft,' by Mr. Rathbone, showed a wonderfully sensitive intelligence, which their teacher and conductor, Miss Scott, had directed with the happiest results. Most of the children were quite young, and it was noteworthy that some choirs of Girl Guides, who had a class to themselves and were of rather older growth, did not reach so high a standard, probably because they were just old enough to be self-conscious. There were, as a matter of course, sight-reading tests for both choirs and individuals, adults and juniors, and Mr. Rathbone, who judged these in private, came to conclusions which suggested that the best results in the set pieces were achieved by precisely those choirs that had had the most thorough training in elementary work.

At the two principal concerts the works chosen were Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Parry's 'Voces Clamantium,' of which Mr. Harty secured performances which were more than praiseworthy. His inclination was to brilliance and quick tempo, which was probably wise in dealing with forces so largely amateur, and no doubt the general effects justified him. 'Voces Clamantium' is certainly not one of Parry's most inspired works, but it has an austere dignity which could not be enhanced by any attempt to brighten it. The tremendous, almost primeval, force of the soprano solo and final chorus, 'As from the power of sacred lays' from Handel's 'St. Cecilia's Day' was very effectively realised. The orchestral pieces included such popular things as the 'Freischütz' Overture and the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, which went well, while Mozart's 'Serenade' for strings (the 'Kleine Nachtmusik') was creditably performed, though of course much too difficult for inexperienced players.

We give below a summary of the chief results:

JUNIOR CHOIRS.

Large elementary schools, secondary schools, &c.—Test: 'In praise of May' (John Ireland). Eight entries. 1st, Milnthorpe (Miss Scott); 2nd, Kendal Parish Church (Miss D. Huck).

Small elementary schools, &c.—Test: 'A low and aloft' (Rathbone). Six entries. 1st, Milnthorpe; 2nd, Howard Home (Miss W. Wakefield) and Levens (Miss Pennington).

Girls' choirs.—Test: 'The sun does rise' (Luard-Selby). Five entries. 1st, Milnthorpe; 2nd, Kendal Parish Church.

Girls' choirs (no age-limit).—Test: 'A laughing song' (Stanford). Four entries. 1st, Kendal Co. (Y.W.C.A.) Girl Guides; 2nd, Milnthorpe Girl Guides.

Sight-reading.—Twelve entries. 1st, Windermere; 2nd, Levens.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Test: 'Encinctured with a twine of leaves' (Coleridge-Taylor). Seven entries. 1st, Kendal N.W. (Mrs. Argles); 2nd, Burneside (Mr. Robson).

Another competition.—Test: 'Flow down, cold rivulet' (Luard-Selby). Seven entries. 1st, Sedbergh; 2nd, Arncliffe.

VILLAGE CHORAL SOCIETIES.

Test: 'Since first I saw your face' (Ford). Three entries. 1st, Cartmel.

CHORAL SOCIETIES.

Test: 'Corydon, arise' (Stanford). Seven entries. 1st, Kendal N.W.; 2nd, Burneside and Skelsmergh Choral Union.

Another Competition.—Test: 'Diaphenia' (Stanford). Seven entries. 1st, Carnforth; 2nd, Arncliffe.

MADRIGAL SINGING.

Test: 'Come, shepherds, follow me' (Benet). Seven entries. 1st, Windermere; 2nd, Burton.

Another competition.—Test: 'April is in my mistress' face' (Morley). Seven entries. 1st, Sedbergh; 2nd, Carnforth.

CHORAL SIGHT-READING.

Two classes, totalling sixteen entries; first prizes, Kendal N.W. and Kendal Parish Church.

MANCHESTER GIRLS' CLUBS.

At the eleventh annual competition between the clubs of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Girls' Club Union on March 24, six choirs sang Handel's 'O lovely Peace' with the following results:—George Street was first, Great Bridgewater Street second, the other competitors being Wesley Hall, Dock Mission, Albert Hall, and Central Hall. Premier honours in the Musical Drill Class fell to the last-named.

Although as many clubs as there are letters in the alphabet took part in the various contests held at the thirteenth annual competition organized by the Manchester, Salford, and District Girls' Club Union on March 27, only five appeared in the choral contest. The tests comprised the catch, 'Would you know my Celia's charms,' Handel's 'O lovely Peace,' and a simple sight-test. The result was as follows:—Manchester Girls' Institute was first, and Salford Girls' Institute second; also sang, Crossley Hall, Home Bridge, and Poynton. The Manchester Girls' Institute was also successful in the Junior Section. Heyrod Street accomplished the 'hat-trick' by securing premier honours in the Physical Drill, Swedish Drill, and National Dance Classes.

MOUNTAIN ASH.—In connection with the important Festival to be held in South Wales during the Whit-tide holidays, a number of competitions have been arranged. The list of test-pieces has a strong flavour of modernism which is not unwelcome. Out of the ten choral tests one is by Elgar, two by Julius Harrison, and seven by Cyril Jenkins, who is also represented in the brass section.

THE MANX FESTIVAL.

It is worthy of remark that this Festival continued its annual meetings without interruption during the war, and that interest in it never waned. When the twenty-ninth Festival was held on April 13, 14, and 15 this year, the great audiences and high enthusiasm recalled the Welsh Eisteddfod. It was shown that a high standard of musical performance and musical appreciation prevails on the Island. Some of the choral-singing was first-class. In previous years it was not unknown for a Manx choir to come to England, and after a stormy crossing to win the premier choral prize at a great English festival.

Among the best features of the competitions may be mentioned the pianoforte-duet playing by young girl musicians (which drew such warm praise from Mr. Frederick Dawson, the judge), the skill exhibited in pianoforte accompaniment at sight, and the charm of some of the solo singing by the young ladies of the Island (for there are many beautiful voices among its residents). Also a very notable success was the playing of the small orchestra under the baton of Mr. J. E. Quayle, which obtained the very high marks of fifty-four out of sixty and the first prize. The piece was Eric Coates's Miniature Suite, and the performance was a delightful one.

The concert on Thursday evening brought about five thousand people—one in every ten of the population of the Island—to the great dancing-hall. The Lieut.-Governor (Major-General Fry), Mrs. Fry, Sir Hall Caine, and Lady Hall Caine were present. The programme was given by the Douglas Orchestral Society (conducted by Mr. J. E. Quayle), Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Frederick Dawson.

The following were the chief results:

CHILDREN'S CHOIRS.

Sunday Schools.—Test: 'Autumn' (Stanford). Four entries. 1st, Buck's Road P.M. (B choir) (Miss Effie Fayle).

Boys' Choirs.—Test: 'The fiddler' (Fletcher). Two entries. 1st, Demesne Road School (Mr. P. H. Christian).

Girls' Choirs.—Test: 'In summer woods' (Ireland). Two entries. 1st, Arbory Board School (Mr. T. C. Corris).

Mixed Choirs.—Test: 'The babes in the wood' (Buck). One entry. Arbory Board School.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Open Class.—Tests: 'The desire' (Taylor) and 'The stars are with the voyager' (Pointer). Three entries. 1st, Victoria Ladies' Choir (Mr. W. H. Cubbon).

Country Choirs.—Tests: 'Stars of the summer night' (West) and 'A song' (Buck). Three entries. 1st, Foxdale (Mr. W. E. Callister).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Open Class.—Tests: 'Full fathom five' (Dunhill) and 'Rolling down to Rio' (German). Two entries. 1st, Douglas Male Chorists (Mr. W. H. Cubbon).

Country Choirs.—Tests: 'Song of Inisfail' (Wood) and 'The fairies' (Lloyd). One entry. Onchan Male-Voice Choir awarded second prize.

CHURCH AND CHAPEL CHOIRS.

Open Class.—Test: 'Abide with me' (Atkins). Two entries. 1st, Buck's Road P.M., Douglas (Mr. T. P. Fargher).

Country Choirs.—Test: 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' (Williams). Three entries. 1st, Crosby Wesleyan Choir (Mr. A. E. Corlett).

COUNTRY AND VILLAGE CHOIRS.

Test: 'My bonnie lass' (German). Five entries. 1st, Arbory (Mr. T. C. Corris); 2nd, Foxdale (Mr. W. E. Callister).

Challenge Shield Class.—Tests: 'Summer is gone' (Coleridge-Taylor) and 'The three knights' (German). Three entries. 1st, Malew (Mr. T. P. Fargher).

CHORAL SOCIETIES.

Tests: 'O happy eyes' (Elgar) and 'Fraile man' (Bull). Two entries. 1st, Castletown (Mr. W. H. Cubbon).

Open Class.—Tests: 'England expects' (Hubert Bath) and 'A Fenland love song' (Keeton). Two entries. 1st, Douglas Festival Choir (Mr. Noah Moore); 2nd, Castletown Choral Society (Mr. Cubbon).

SIGHT-SINGING.

Andreas Village Choir (Miss E. A. Collins) was first in both three-part and four-part sight-singing.

ORCHESTRAL CLASS.

Test: 'Miniature Suite' (Coates). Douglas Orchestral Society, the only competitor, received the first prize.

There were also competitions in solo and duet singing, vocal quartets, and pianoforte playing.

The adjudicators were Dr. H. Campbell Stewart, Mr. H. Field Hyde, and Mr. Frederick Dawson.

CARLISLE.—March 9, 10, and 11.

The war took effect on this twenty-year-old Festival chiefly by putting the Drill Hall—the best available centre—to its nominal use, and afterwards turning it into a shell factory. The Festival has at length been resumed, with little change in its aspect. Lady Mabel Howard is still chairman, and Mrs. Nigel Buchanan is secretary. The programme had a prominent and valuable feature in the shape of three concerts at which competing choirs sang en masse, and artists of good standing took part. Mr. G. O'Connor Morris, solo pianist and accompanist, was formerly a Carlisle musician, and Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, the adjudicator, was for some years organist of Carlisle Cathedral.

The first day was devoted to children's choirs, and choirs of people in business, junior and adult. Although entries were few, the singing of Bishop Goodwin Boys (Mr. W. H. Reid) and St. Barnabas Sunday School (Mrs. Webb)—the two prize-winning choirs—supported the reputation of children's singing in the Carlisle district as a model for the whole kingdom.

On the second day quartets and village choirs were heard. The best performance of Dudley Buck's 'In absence' was given by Brigham Choral Class (Mr. J. W. Huddart). In the class for treble and alto voices six choirs sang Charles Wood's 'Who is Sylvia?' and Elgar's 'False Love,' Greystoke (Mr. Titterton) being best, and Dacre Choral Class (Miss D. Hasell) second best. Hallbankgate Choral Class (Mr. F. Drakeford) were first in sight-singing. At the afternoon concert combined choirs sang Parry's 'England' and German's 'Rolling down to Rio' under Mr. Reid's direction. In the evening a similar concert was arranged to bring combined business choirs on to the platform.

The chief choral competitions, which occurred on the last day, attracted good entries. In the open class for female-voices five choirs sang P. C. Buck's 'Autumn' and Marie Wurm's 'About the sweet bag of a bee,' with the following result: 1st, Stanwix (Mrs. Easton); 2nd, Carlisle (Mr. Reid). Fisher Street Presbyterian (Mr. J. A. Stewart) won the open competition for church and chapel choirs; Brampton Madrigal Society (Mr. F. Drakeford) that for choral societies within the radius.

Fletcher's 'Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree' and Brewer's 'Alexander' were sung by Carlisle Male-Voice Choir (Mr. Cockbain)—which was adjudged first—Goodwin Male-Voice Choir (Mr. Reid), and Brampton Orpheus (Mr. Drakeford) in the open class for men's choirs.

The tests in the Challenge Shield class for choral societies were Brahms's 'The Maiden,' Michael Cavendish's 'Come, gentle swains,' and Stanford's 'The Witch.' The four choirs that competed were placed in the following order: Carlisle (Mr. Reid), Carlisle Madrigal (Mr. Cockbain), Stanwix (Mrs. Easton), and Howard (Mr. C. F. Eastwood). Carlisle Madrigal was the best of five choirs in sight-singing.

At the final concert the combined choirs of the Challenge Shield competition sang Dunhill's cantata 'Tubal Cain' under Mr. Nicholson.

BUGLE.—The Annual Mid-Cornwall Junior Vocal Festival was held at Bugle on March 26, Mr. Alfred Worth adjudicating. In the class for unison-singing, Wilson Manhire's 'Gather ye rosebuds' was the test, and five choirs competed. Bugle Girls' Choir (Miss Meta Hawke) was first, and Treverbyn Council School Girls (Mr. W. G. May) second. The Bugle Girls were also successful with the two-part test, F. W. Wadeley's 'The song of the bell,' Indian Queen's Council School (Mr. A. W. Husband) being second. Other competing choirs were Roche Girls (Miss Clarke) and Bugle Boys (Miss Hawke).

WEST SUSSEX COMPETITIONS, CHICHESTER.

March 25 and 26.

This Festival, which owes its inception to the Duchess of Norfolk and rose to considerable importance before the war, has been revived under her leadership this year. Much ground has unfortunately been lost during the years of inactivity, and the choral societies and schools of the district did not respond readily. Town choirs were especially backward, and several classes arranged for their benefit were abandoned for want of entries. It is to be hoped that conductors, choirmasters, and school authorities will in future be more alive to the advantages offered by these competitions.

Dr. Somervell adjudicated. The following are brief particulars of the principal classes:

CHOIRS FROM LARGE VILLAGES.

Mixed Choirs.—Test: 'There is beauty on the mountain' (J. Goss). Four entries. 1st, Lower Beeding Choral Society (Mr. W. S. Sutton).

Men's Choirs.—Test: 'The winter is gone' (Vaughan Williams). 1st, Wisborough Green Choral Society.

Female-Voice Choirs.—Test: 'Land of heart's delight' (P. Edmonds). Two entries. 1st, Barnham Choral Society (Mr. F. G. Chandler).

CHOIRS FROM SMALL VILLAGES.

Mixed Choirs.—Three entries. 1st, Bignor and Sutton Choral Society (Mrs. Whitcombe).

Female-Voice Choirs.—Two entries. 1st, Itchingfield Choral Society.

SCHOOL CHOIRS.

These were much subdivided, according to standard, sex, and number. The first prize for secondary schools was won by Chichester Lindenau School (Miss Pearce), the tests in this class being Coleridge-Taylor's 'From the green heart of the waters' and Handel's 'O lovely Peace.' Other first prizes were won by Worthing Sussex Road Boys (Mr. A. W. Woolgar), Arundel St. Philip's Boys (Mr. Archbold), Worthing Sussex Road Girls (Miss F. M. Grey), Horsham Victory Road (Miss Redford), Littlehampton St. Catherine's, Pulborough North Heath (Miss Wright). A prize offered for the highest aggregate of marks in the test-pieces and in sight-singing was won by Worthing Sussex Road Boys.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Four choirs sang the test-piece, Somervell's 'Pack, clouds, away!' the first place going to Chichester Bishop Otter College Seniors (Mr. F. J. W. Crowe).

WANSBECK.—March 26 and 27.

For the first time since 1914 this was a two-day Festival with adult as well as juvenile choirs taking part. Dr. R. R. Terry, the adjudicator, was full of praise for the standard of the choral singing.

Nine schools were heard in the various junior competitions on the first day, prizes falling to Morpeth High School (Mr. Wyatt), Stannington (Mr. T. Dixon), and Ponteland Cottage Homes (Mr. Harris). Under the direction of Lieut.-Col. W. Orde combined choirs gave 'Just as the tide was a-flowing' (folk-song), 'Land to the leeward' (Parry), 'Evening' (Smart), and 'For God, King, and Right' (Bridge).

Netherwitton (Lieut.-Col. Orde) was best of the village choirs and won the trophy for sight-singing. Felton Choral Society (Mr. J. Brown) won the challenge cup for choral societies and was first in the madrigal class. The excellent Ashington Choir (Mr. W. H. Batey) stood alone in the male-voice section.

The Midland Federation of Competitive Choirs gave a concert on March 20 in the Baptist Church, East Kirkby. The combined choirs sang several choruses under the conductorship of Mr. Harris Barke, and the Ilkeston, Mansfield, and Kirkby Choirs, under their respective conductors, contributed part-songs. The soloists were Miss Dora Hitchener, Mr. Herbert Payne, and Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, who, in addition to his organ solos, was also the accompanist.

FORTHCOMING COMPETITIONS.

BALLYMENA.—May 4 to 7. Mrs. W. Wier, 4 Mount Royal, Portrush, Ireland.

BIRMINGHAM (THE MIDLAND FESTIVAL).—May 8 to 15. Messrs. G. J. Bowker and F. W. Stevens, Queen's College, Birmingham. The names of the thirteen adjudicators, and a complete list of the test-pieces, were given in the Competition Festival Record for October, p. 80.

BLACKPOOL.—October 18-23. Mr. Lionel H. Franceys, Williams Deacons Bank, Blackpool (see p. 1).

BRISTOL.—June 21 to 23. Mr. W. E. Fowler, 8, Elmdale, Tyndall's Park, Bristol.

BYWELL - ON - TYNE.—May 24. Mr. G. Richardson, Stocksfield.

CLEETHORPES.—July 2, 3. Mr. S. G. Dilnot, Council Offices, Cleethorpes.

COLERAINE.—May. Mrs. Huston, Ulster Bank, Coleraine, Ireland.

CORNWALL.—May 19, 20, 21. Lady Mary Trefusis, Falmouth. Adjudicator, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson.

DEVON MUSIC COMPETITIONS (EXETER).—July 13, 14, and 15. Miss Retallack, Bidlake Veau, Bridestowe, Adjudicator, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw.

DORSET CHORAL ASSOCIATION (WIMBORNE AND SWANAGE).—May 6. Miss F. Kindersley, Clyffe, Dorchester, Dorset.

EDINBURGH.—May 20, 21, 22. The Secretary, 27, George Street, Edinburgh. Adjudicators, Mr. H. Plunket Greene, Mr. H. S. Robertson, and Dr. R. Vaughan Williams.

ESKDALE.—May 11, 12. Miss May Yeoman, Woodlands, Sleights S.O. Adjudicator, Dr. A. Somervell.

GLASGOW.—April 30 to May 8. Mr. R. P. Graham, 187, St. Vincent Street, Glasgow. Adjudicators, Prof. Granville Bantock, Prof. H. Walford Davies, Mr. Ernest Newman, and Sir J. Forbes-Robertson.

HASTINGS.—May 17-20. Mr. John Lockey, 47, Havelock Road.

HULL AND EAST RIDING.—May 14, 15. Mr. S. H. Clark, 29, Coltman Street, Hull. Adjudicators, Dr. R. R. Terry and Dr. E. Markham Lee.

KENT (CHATHAM).—May 15 and 19. Mr. Leslie B. Mackay, 378, High Street, Rochester. Adjudicator, Mr. Harvey Grace.

LEAMINGTON.—May. Mrs. Bernard Green, 175, Rugby Road, Royal Leamington Spa.

LONDONDERRY.—May 9-12. Mrs. A. Stewart, Holly Lodge, Londonderry. Adjudicators, Mr. H. Plunket Greene, Dr. E. C. Bairstow.

MID-SOMERSET (BATH).—May 19-22. Mr. H. Bowen, 13, Daniel Street, Bath. Adjudicators, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, Mr. Martin Shaw, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Basset Rowe, and Mr. Cecil Sharp.

MORECAMBE.—May 6 onwards. Mr. William C. Fawcett, Festival Offices, Morecambe.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (THE NORTH OF ENGLAND MUSICAL TOURNAMENT).—June 19-26. Mr. W. Deans Forster, Lloyds' Bank, Collingwood Street. Adjudicators, Mr. Arthur Catterall, Mr. Herbert Fryer, Capt. Francis Harford, Dr. R. R. Terry, Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, and Mr. J. Weston Nicholl.

PEOPLE'S PALACE (E. LONDON).—May 4-15. The Rev. C. J. Beresford, 392, Commercial Road, E. 14. Adjudicators, Mr. T. Dunhill, Mr. Harvey Grace, Mr. Granville Humphreys, and Mr. C. Kennedy Scott.

STOCKSBRIDGE (S. YORKSHIRE).—June 18, 19. Mr. V. Challis, Viola Bank, Stocksbridge, near Sheffield. Adjudicator, Dr. Keighley.

WORCESTERSHIRE.—May 18. Mr. A. B. Banks, Okehill, Kidderminster. Adjudicator, Dr. R. R. Terry.

SIR EGLAMORE.

p Fa la lank - y down dil - ly,
p Fa la lank - y down dil - ly,
f The drag - on laid him down and roared, f The f The drag - on laid him down and roared, f The f p
p Fa la lank - y down dil - ly, 8
p Fa la lank - y down dil - ly, p cres.
knight was sor - ry for his sword; The sword it was a knight was sor - ry for his sword; 8 p cres.
col Pedale.
f Fa lank - y down, la lank - y down,
f Fa la, fa la,
right good blade, As ev - er Turk or Span - iard made. mf cres. made. f Fa la, fa la,
As ev - er Turk or Span - iard made. f Fa la, fa la,

Fa

Fa la, fa la lank - y down dil - ly.

fa la, fa la lank - y dil - ly.

ff. Fa lank - y down, la lank - y down, fa la lank - y dil - ly.
ff. fa lank - y down, la lank - y down, fa la lank - y dil - ly.

fa la la la, fa la lank - y dil - ly.

dim.

9

FIRST HALF OR SOLO.

When all was done, to the ale-house he went, Fa . . . la . . .

Fa . . . la . . .

Fa . . . la . . .

Fa . . . la . . .

p

9

FIRST HALF OR SOLO.

lank - y down dil - ly, And pres - ent - ly his tuppence was spent; Fa . . . la . . .

lank - y down dil - ly, Fa . . . la . . .

lank - y down dil - ly, Fa . . . la . . .

lank - y down dil - ly, Fa . . . la . . .

p

SIR EGLAMORE.

FIRST HALF OR SOLO.

lank - y down dil - ly, He was so hot with fight-ing the drag-on, That nought could quench his lank - y down dil - ly,

lank - y down dil - ly,

p

10 SECOND HALF.

ALL.

thirst but a flag - on. Fa lank - y down, la lank - y down, Fa lank - y down, la lank - y down,

Fa la, fa la,

Fa la, fa la,

Fa la, fa la,

p

10 Fa

fa la lank - y dil - ly. Well, now let us pray for the King and the Queen, fa la lank - y dil - ly. Well, now let us pray for the King and the Queen, fa la dil - ly. Well, now let us pray for the King and the Queen, fa la lank - y down dil - ly. Well, now let us pray for the King and the Queen,

p ff

SIR EGLAMORE.

Fa la lank - y down dil - ly, And eke in Lon-don that may be seen, Fa la
 Fa la lank - y dil - ly, And eke in Lon-don that may be seen, Fa la
 Fa la lank - y dil - ly, And eke in Lon-don that may be seen, Fa la
 Fa la la la la la la, And eke in Lon-don that may be seen, Fa la la la la lank - y down dil - ly, As ma - ny knights and as ma - ny more, And all as good as Sir lank - y dil - ly, As ma - ny knights and as ma - ny more, And all as good as Sir lank - y dil - ly, As ma - ny knights and as ma - ny more, And all as good as

11

 As ma - ny knights, as ma - ny more, And all as good as la la, As ma - - - ny knights, . . . And all as good as

11

SIR EGLAMORE.

Musical score for "The Lark Song" by J. S. Ziehr. The score is in G major (one sharp) and 2/4 time. It features a vocal melody and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "Eg - la - more, Fa lank - y down, la lank - y down, Fa . . . la, . . .". The piano part includes chords and single notes, with some measures marked with "V" for vibrato. The score is arranged in two systems, each with a vocal line and a piano line.

fa la lank - y down dil - ly,

fa la lank - y dil - ly,

fa la lank - y dil - ly,

fa la lank - y dil - ly,

dim.

SIR EGLAMORE.

12

Lank - y down down, lank - y down down, lank - y down down, lank - y down down,

Lank - y down down, lank - y down down, lank - y down down, lank - y down down, . . . down, . . . down, . . . down, and lank - y down dil - ly.

12

down, . . . down, . . . down, . . . down, and lank - y down dil - ly.

down, . . . down, . . . down, . . . down, and lank - y down dil - ly.

down, . . . down, . . . down, . . . down, and lank - y down dil - ly.

down, . . . down, . . . down, . . . down, and lank - y down dil - ly.

down, . . . down, . . . down, . . . down, and lank - y down dil - ly.

down, . . . down, . . . down, . . . down, and lank - y down dil - ly.

mf

Our hearts . . lift up this prayer to Thee, . . Whose love . . our ev-'ry

mf

Our hearts . . lift up this prayer, this prayer to Thee, Whose love our ev-'ry

mf

. . Our hearts lift up this prayer to Thee, . . Whose love . . our ev-'ry

mf

. . Our hearts lift up this prayer to Thee, Whose love . . our mf Gt.

cres.

f e sost.

want sup-plies, . . That, when the morn a - - gain we see, . . .

f e sost.

want sup - plies, That, when the morn a - gain we . . see, . . Re - f e sost.

want sup - plies, . . That, when the morn a - - .

f e sost.

ev - 'ry want sup - plies, . . . That, when the morn a - - gain . . .

f

Re-freshed and pure we may a - rise, . . . That, when the
 - freshed . . and pure we may a - rise, . . we may a -
 - gain we see, . . . Re-freshed and pure . . . we may a -
 . . we see, Re-freshed and pure . . we may . . . a - - morn a - gain we see, ... Re -

 - rise, That, when the morn' a - gain . . we see, . .
 - rise, That, when . . the morn a - gain we see, . .
 - rise, That, when the morn a - gain we see, Re -

- freshed and pure we may a - rise, ...

mp Re - freshed .. and pure we may a - rise, ...

mp . . . Re-freshed .. and pure . . we may a - rise, ...

- freshed and pure we may . . . a - rise, ...

p Sur. poco cres.

re - freshed and pure we may a - rise, . . .

p re - freshed and pure we may . . . a - rise, . . .

p we may . . . a - rise, . . .

p we may a - rise, . . .

poco marcato.

we may . . .

re - freshed and pure we

we . . . may . . .

re - freshed . . . and pure we

a - rise.

may a - rise.

a - rise.

may a - rise.

32 ft.

The musical score is for a hymn titled "O LOVING SAVIOUR". It is arranged for four vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is common time (C). The score is divided into two systems. The first system contains the first four staves, and the second system contains the next four staves. The piano accompaniment is written for grand piano (treble and bass clefs). The lyrics are: "we may . . . re - freshed and pure we we . . . may . . . re - freshed . . . and pure we a - rise. may a - rise. a - rise. may a - rise.". The score includes dynamic markings: p (piano) and pp (pianissimo). The piece ends with a fermata on the final note of the vocal parts and a double bar line. The page number (8) is at the bottom center.

Choral Notes and News

BY W. McNAUGHT

A correspondent asks why, when a choir is singing unaccompanied, and indulging a tendency to sing in the untempered scale, 'it is a mere matter of arithmetic' that the original pitch is in danger of being lost? The remark was made in this column last month, and the question may therefore be answered here, although it may seem to belong to acoustics rather than to choralism. In reality it is somewhat intimately concerned with choral practice—more so than some conductors, and especially composers, seem to realise. My correspondent is presumably one of those fortunate people whose only connection with music is enjoying it, and who have no need to be concerned with its technical problems. Therefore my explanation must needs be simple and elementary. Those who have studied acoustics from Pythagoras to Helmholtz are recommended to pass over this page.

A certain rapidity of vibrations (of a string or of a column of air) produces the note :

Twice the rapidity of vibrations produces the note an octave above, twice more again produces the note another octave above ; continuing, it will be easily reckoned that 128 times the original rapidity of Ex. 1 produces the note :

Returning to the original starting-point (Ex. 1), proceed upwards in perfect 5ths. The upper note of a perfect 5th has a vibration-number half as big again as the lower note. Therefore with successive multiplications by $\frac{3}{2}$ we get the series :

the last note of which ought to be the same as the last note (Ex. 2) of our octave series. But unfortunately $\frac{3}{2}$ to the twelfth power is not 128 ; it is nearly 130. Hinc illæ lachrymæ. These notes get more and more 'out of tune' with the C's of our former progression the higher we proceed, and a chromatic scale filled up in accordance with this perfect-5th table would be all at sixes and sevens, except that in the key of C would sound quite satisfactory. But other keys are equally worthy of consideration. Accordingly the perfect 5ths have to be slightly adjusted to make twelve of them on end exactly equal to seven octaves on end. The same discrepancy can be found by a progression in perfect 4ths (natural ratio, four-thirds), and most easily of all in major 3rds (natural ratio, five-fourths). Thus three major 3rds should give an octave :

D

but $\frac{5}{4} \times \frac{5}{4} \times \frac{5}{4} = \frac{125}{64}$, which is less than 2. So major 3rds have to be made a little larger, perfect 5ths a little smaller, than according to nature, in order to make all keys in tune. By this means we get our 'tempered' scale, on which all modern music is built. Great inconvenience has been caused by these inconsiderate laws of arithmetic. Perhaps it is too much to expect that some Einstein will alter them for the benefit of musicians.

The trouble is that although singers may listen all their lives to this artificial 'tempered' scale they have a tendency, when left to themselves, to sing the intervals in Ex. 4 in accordance with the untempered scale. A player on a keyed instrument (pianoforte, organ, clarinet, &c.) has his tempered scale ready-made in the mechanism ; a violinist has the feeling of the finger-board to help him and the four open strings as landmarks. The singer can only pitch on a note by a marvellous unfathomable co-ordination of flesh, ear, and brain, which being entirely composed of human elements is liable to human error. Sing :

to a great composer and a great singer, and in nine cases out of ten neither you nor they will be able to tell with certainty whether your major 3rd was tempered or untempered or merely hovering near. But when a chord is out of tune—say, when the bass and alto are not an exact octave apart in :

almost any ear that is not entirely unmusical can detect that something is wrong.

The exact measuring out of a semitone is perhaps the most haphazard experiment a voice can undertake. Get a bass to sing :

without accompaniment Are his mediant and dominant going to be tempered or untempered, and are his three semitones going to be exactly equal? Impossible to say. Let an alto sing :

Will her G be an exact octave above that of the bass in Ex. 7? Perhaps, and perhaps not.

Start a choir with a perfectly tuneful and tempered chord of D flat with the help of a pianoforte and launch it forth, unaccompanied, into this progression, which illustrates Exx. 7 and 8 in combination :

Only the god of chance or a set of super-choralists can ordain that the chord of G will be in tune. Yet the progression is not uncommon in part-music that affects to be simple or 'suitable for use in village churches.' The tenor part is highly characteristic. Here is another simple succession with a

With a small semitone from the sopranos and an untempered major 3rd from the basses their final octave will at least give that uncomfortable feeling that is easier to perceive than to diagnose. An unaccompanied passage of choral singing is full of little divergences of this kind, and in the continual intrusion and re-adjustment of error a choir can flatten, sharpen, or come round to its original pitch. If the choralists have cultivated the habit of listening to each other, if they have a feeling for key-colour, and if they keep their senses on the alert, they can continue for page after page without departing a jot from the correct pitch. But the danger is always present, and it takes a great deal of experience to be sure of avoiding it.

Countless performances of 'Messiah' and 'The Crucifixion' have been given during Easter by Choral Societies and Church choirs throughout the kingdom. The descriptions that have reached this office would fill more space than can be spared, and the Editor hopes that correspondents will be satisfied with a general acknowledgment that their reports came to hand. The one performance of 'Messiah' that shall be singled out for notice is that of the Royal Choral Society at the Royal Albert Hall on Good Friday, conducted by Sir Frederick Bridge. It attracted a great audience who were equally pleased by the choral singing and with the solo work of Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Norman Allin.

The performances of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' to be given by the Novello Choir at Central Hall, Westminster, on May 8, stand for exceptional enterprise, for the choir is not a body of picked and tested voices, such as the ordinary choral Society, but is almost entirely recruited from the staff of Messrs. Novello's printing and publishing houses. That such a choir should be capable of tackling 'The Pied Piper' does credit to its zeal and to the determination of Mr. Harold Brooke, the conductor. Parry's work is well worthy of such attention, as its choral writing is extremely interesting and contains some of the composer's richest humour.

BASINGSTOKE.—Stanford's 'The Revenge' and the concert version of 'Faust' were given by the Basingstoke Victory Choir of eighty voices at the Town Hall on April 15, Mr. Duncan Hume conducting.

BIRKENHEAD.—St. Peter's Parish Church choir gave a concert on March 25 under Mr. G. A. Jones, with a programme that included Percy Fletcher's Fantasia 'Reminiscences of Verdi,' Elgar's 'It comes from the misty ages,' and two Weber choruses.

BUDLEIGH SALTERN.—Gaul's 'Joan of Arc' was given by the Musical Society on April 15 before a large and appreciative audience. A creditable performance was conducted by Mr. Hugh Fowler.

BUILTH WELLS.—The Philharmonic Society gave a good performance of Spohr's 'The Last Judgment' on March 31 under Mr. A. P. Morgan, with Madame Rosie Jones, Miss Bronwen Williams, Mr. D. Thomas, and Mr. L. Powell

Evans as principals. An orchestra of strings, wood-wind, and pianoforte accompanied. Dudley Buck's 'Ode to Peace' and Mr. Morgan's 'For all the saints' were in the same programme.

EAST KIRKBY.—A combination of prize choirs from Ilkeston, Mansfield, Sutton, Annesley, and Kirkby connected with the Midland Federation of Competitive Choirs took part in a concert at the Baptist Church on March 20. They sang 'Be not afraid,' 'The heavens are telling,' and other choruses under Mr. Blyton Dobson, and part-songs were given by separate choirs.

ECCLES (LANCS.).—Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was sung by the choir in the Parish Church, Eccles, on Good Friday evening. The solo parts were sung by members of the choir, and Mr. Kimberley Smith presided at the organ.

KIRKCALDY.—After an interval of five years, the Kirkcaldy Musical Society's concerts were resumed with a performance of 'Messiah' on March 17. The soloists were Miss Flora Woodman, Miss Etty Ferguson, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Herbert Brown. There was a chorus of two hundred and forty voices, and a professional orchestra of thirty-two performers under the leadership of Mr. J. M. Cooper. Mr. Charles M. Cowe conducted.

LONDON AND DISTRICT.—The London Choral Society has resumed its useful life, and gave a re-opening concert at Central Hall on March 31. Under Mr. Arthur Fagge's direction the 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung in a way that promised well for the choir's future work. There is still room for more tenors. Solo parts in the Passion were unstained by Miss Carrie Tubbs, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Adams, and Captain Herbert Heyner. Coleridge-Taylor's 'A Tale of Old Japan' was given by the Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society on March 23, under Mr. David M. Davis, and a miscellaneous programme concluded with Elgar's 'It comes from the misty ages.'—The Great Eastern Railway Musical Society gave an astonishingly good concert at Queen's Hall on April 17, under Col. W. Johnson Galloway's direction. The attraction was both orchestral and choral. A male-voice choir of two hundred and thirty voices from the Company's establishments at London, Cambridge, Norwich, and Ipswich, made excellent effect in Coleridge-Taylor's 'Viking song,' Beale's 'Come, let us join,' and other vocal pieces, the tone being pleasant and the expression well-drilled. Loughton Choral Society and Orchestra gave a setting of Psalm xlii. by Mr. William Cuttle, who conducted, and Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' under Mr. Henry Riding, at Buckhurst Hill Hall on April 11. 'The Field of Honour,' by Vincent Thomas, was performed on April 13 at Central Hall by the Westminster Choral Society, under the composer's direction. Ealing Choral Society gave 'Elijah' effectively on April 17 under Mr. Harold Howell.

NORWICH.—The Philharmonic Society, with the assistance of the Norwich Choral Society, gave a most impressive performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' in the Cathedral on March 18. There was an immense congregation, who listened with the greatest attention to the wonderful setting of the old Latin hymn, the building lending to the work a beauty and impressiveness that are rarely attained. The soloists were Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Capt. Herbert Heyner. Dr. Frank Bates was the conductor. The Norwich Handel Society, which plays no inconsiderable part in the musical life of the city, gave a sacred concert on Good Friday evening before a large audience at the Agricultural Hall, in addition to the usual afternoon performance of 'Messiah.' Mr. Ernest Harcourt conducted. It will be remembered that Mr. Harcourt was concerned in the performances of Handel's 'Deborah' that recently attracted wide attention.

OVERTON (HANTS.).—The Recreation Committee of Overton, Hants, has started a Glee and Orchestral class under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur C. Bennett, of Andover, and on March 16 the first season closed with a very successful concert in St. Mary's Hall. The choir sang eight part-songs, including John Ireland's 'In praise of Neptune' and Ravenscroft's 'In the merry Spring,' and the band played four specially written pieces.

PETERBOROUGH.—The Peterborough Choral Union and Peterborough Orchestral Society had an exacting day on April 15. In the afternoon they gave 'The Dream of Gerontius,' and in the evening 'St. Paul,' and proved well equal to the double task under Mr. A. E. Armstrong's direction. The solo parts were sung by Miss Gladys Palmer, Miss L. Snowden, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Dan Richards.

RHONDDA VALLEY.—Highly creditable performances of Brahms's 'Requiem' were given at Ton Pentre on March 24 and 25 by the Bethesda Choral Society, under the capable direction of Mr. James Davies. The choral singing is said to have reached the highest standard that has been known in the district.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Viola and clarinet player wishes to join in practice of any kind of good music. Most evenings free. Within two miles of Charing Cross.—CLARIVIOLA, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to join chamber music party. He is also a clarinet player.—WILLIAM ROLLISON, 104, Cadogan Terrace, Victoria Park, E.9.

Violinist wishes to join trio or quartet party. Leeds district.—RICHARD P. STEAD, 8, Thornhill Terrace, Wortley, Leeds.

Pianist desires to form quartet for study of good music. Violinists and 'cellist. Any afternoon or evening. N., N.E., or N.W. district preferred.—N. V. C., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist would like to meet with number of players, stringed instruments preferred, for practice of classical and modern music. Would also play with amateur orchestra. Manchester district.—'Alceste,' c/o Musical Times.

Good amateur string players required for symphony orchestra, and to co-operate with choral Society. Short test required. Rehearsals Wednesday evenings, near Liverpool Street.—J. H. CHISHAM, 30, Broke Road, Dalston, E.-8.

Pianist (male) wishes to join other men in practice of classical chamber music. Ealing or Acton.—H. S., 45, Myrtle Road, Acton, W.-3.

Flautist (not a beginner) desires co-operation with pianist and small party, locally. Not too advanced. Evenings. Mr. M. MATHEW, 97, Cromwell Road, Wimbledon.

Gentleman, higher public school teacher, wishes to join any London band as violinist (amateur).—A. FROSTIG, 12, Essex Road, Acton, W.-3.

Experienced pianist desires to meet competent violinist, 'cellist, and viola player (preferably G.E.R. season-ticket holders) for study and enjoyment of classical quartets. Broxbourne and Bishops Stortford district.—H. G. B., c/o Musical Times.

Young pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for study of classical trios, or would join violinist alone. Any evening after 7.—J. W. SINCLAIR, 65, September Road, Tuebrook, Liverpool.

Quintet party want practice-room containing a good piano, in a private house, hall, or school, within two miles of G.P.O., for use once a week (not Saturday or Sunday) from 5-8 p.m. In return free recitals would be given.—B. B. H. W., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to join chamber music party. Most evenings free.—Miss D. E. L. TREVOR, c/o 'The Homestead,' Rawlings Road, Bearwood, Smethwick, near Birmingham.

THE LATE LADY ELGAR

The sympathy of the musical world goes out to Sir Edward Elgar in the heavy loss he has sustained in Lady Elgar's death, which occurred in London on April 7. The Times of the following date contained a striking tribute to the devotion with which she helped her husband not only by sympathy and encouragement, but in such severely practical directions as music-copying—one of the most fatiguing of drudgeries. We quote the article, by kind permission :

Lady Elgar was the daughter of Major-General Sir Henry-Gee Roberts, K.C.B., of Hazeldine House, Worcestershire, one of Sir Charles Napier's most trusted officers in the Sind campaign, and of Julia Raikes, a descendant of Robert Raikes, the founder and promoter of the Sunday School movement. This short statement, to which a good deal more might be added, will in itself suggest that she was an exceptional woman. She was in truth a very remarkable one.

Caroline Alice Roberts married, in 1889, Mr. Elgar, a well-known teacher of the violin at Worcester, whose compositions had as yet met with no favour, sacrificing thereby considerable personal income. She, an amateur pianist, believed in these compositions, and set to work by every means in her power to strengthen and support the composer both by her sympathy and her practical aid. She made herself a good copyist, since an amanuensis would have been too expensive a luxury. She 'laid out' his scores, copied in the voice parts, planned the barring—all this for several thousands of pages of 40-line scores; the score of 'The Music Makers,' for instance, alone contains 150 pages of 31 lines. She would ask overnight what size his orchestra was to be, and, hearing it was to be a small one, would say, 'With a bass clarinet, I suppose?' or 'Aren't you going to have a cor anglais?' and he would come down next morning to find as much of the form ready as he could fill in during the day with the orchestral parts. There is scarcely a full score of his which she has not laid out in this way.

Her husband is indebted to her for more than a little of the words he has set. 'In Haven,' in the 'Sea Pictures,' is hers. She wrote the words for the part-song 'O happy eyes,' 'The Snow,' 'Fly, singing bird'—the last two from the longer poem of Isabel Trevithoe, and many others; and they did 'The Bavarian Highlands' together. She was one of his best critics. He played over the Quartet to her, and she said little; but next morning he found pencilled over the close of the slow movement 'Is this quite?—please!' and so we owe the fine close to her gentle correction.

Lady Elgar was besides this a fine linguist. To the languages that everybody knows she added Latin and Spanish. She accompanied Sir Edward Elgar on most foreign concert tours, and electrified the orchestra at Turin by making a speech of thanks for him to the orchestra in Italian. She translated Hoffmann's 'Ritter Gluck.' In early days she wrote a novel, 'Marchcroft Manor'; a sonnet of hers appeared in the Bookman early in the war; and she saw through the press, and supplied a copious index to, Symonds's 'Records of the Rocks.' But whatever she might have done in the way of literature she gave up in order to help him; and he, in return, broke his resolve to remain 'Mr. Elgar' all his days, and took whatever honours came his way for her sake. The last entry in her diary is: 'In one week, symphony again, and the Institut de France; Deo gratias.'

The funeral took place at Little Malvern on April 10. The chief mourners were Sir Edward Elgar, Miss Elgar, Colonel Napier Roberts, and Mr. Leo Schuster. At the close of the service in St. Wulstan's Church Messrs. Albert Sammons, W. H. Reed, Raymond Jeremy, and B. Patterson Parker played the 'Andante piacevole' Elgar's String Quartet—a movement of which Lady Elgar was specially fond.

Church and Organ Music

WHEN WERE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FIRST USED IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH?

BY CLEMENT ANTROBUS HARRIS

Of all the Churches which profess and call themselves Christian, one only, the Society of Friends, eschews the use of music in worship altogether; and two only, while allowing purely vocal music, prohibit instrumental—namely, the Greek Church, and the small Presbyterian remnant known as the Wee Frees. One cannot look upon these things without wondering when the discrimination between vocal and instrumental music arose. Were instruments used by the first Christians, and if not, when were they introduced? That vocal music was used is, of course, obvious. The question is the more interesting inasmuch as, so far as I am aware, the tabooing of music, either vocal or instrumental, obtains in no other religion than Christianity.

Dr. Ferdinand Ritter ('History of Music,' p. 24), says 'the music which formed a part of the religious devotion of the first Christian congregations was purely vocal. Instrumental music was excluded at first from the Church Service. It was despised as having been used by the Romans at their depraved festivities.' And Dr. Emil Naumann ('History of Music,' vol. i., p. 177) makes an equally positive statement: 'There can be no doubt that originally the music of the Divine Service [he is speaking particularly of the Last Supper] was everywhere entirely of a vocal nature.'

While admitting that the music of the early Church in all likelihood was preponderatingly of a vocal nature, and perhaps wholly so in times of persecution, it yet seems to me that to speak of it with certainty as 'everywhere entirely' of this character is to outrun the evidence.

Instrumental music is a conspicuous feature throughout the whole history of the Jews after their return from Egypt, especially in their religious services. It consequently has a direct and forceful bearing on the question that in whatever other ways the earliest Christians differentiated their own practices from those of Judaism, they certainly did not do so in regard to the singing of psalms. For 'psalms and hymns are easily distinguished,' Bishop Ellicott's 'Commentary for English Readers' tells us (under Eph. v. 19) 'The psalm, as the word itself implies, is music with instrumental accompaniment' (italics mine), 'The hymn is purely vocal music.' Even in times of persecution, if the members of the new and forbidden religion could not audibly show how great was their love of music, they could, and did, do so silently. 'Paintings of this period [early Christianity] represent Christ as Orpheus, who by his sweet sounds subdued the demoniacal and animal creation, and Christ by His loving gentleness overcame the like evil passions in man. Numerous paintings both of Orpheus and Hermes are to be found in the catacombs of the earliest Christian communities of Naples and Rome.* I take it that this substitution of mythological deities for the Messiah was done to avoid detection and destruction. But the particular deities chosen are not without a bearing upon the attitude of persecuted Christianity towards instrumental music: Hermes was the mythological inventor of the lyre, and Orpheus one of its most renowned players, the latter also sharing with several other divinities the credit of having invented the pipe.

Sir John Hawkins in his 'History of Music' (vol. i., Book iv., p. 399) says: 'Nay, the antiquity of instrumental Church-music is still higher [than the time of St. Ambrose], if we may credit the testimony of Justin Martyr and Eusebius' [fl. c., A.D. 163 and 313]. But the passages evidently referred to in these Fathers do not seem to me absolutely to prove the use of instrumental music, though they strongly imply it.

The antipathetic attitude towards instrumental music characteristic of some of the early Fathers, notably St. Jerome, is in reality an argument in favour of such music having formed a part of Christian worship. For the objections raised were directed not against instruments as such, but against particular instruments, notably the tambourine and cymbals, owing to their association with indecent orgies. Thus Clement of Alexandria objected to the flute on account of its being a worldly instrument, but said that 'If you accompany your voice with the lyre or cithara you will incur no censure.' (The lyre was an instrument of the harp kind, in which the strings were stretched between sound-posts; the cithara was of the guitar kind, in which the strings were stretched over a sound-box and between frets, one of which was placed on it. The sound-box, which in its later forms was pear-shaped, was covered with a tightly-drawn membrane.)

But, it may be said, Jerome addresses his prohibition especially to maidens, saying: 'A Christian maid should not know what a lyre or a flute is, nor what their use is.' (It will be noted that he differs from St. Clement, who wrote over two hundred years earlier, in regard to the lyre.) 'Jerome therefore objects to the use of' these instruments for even secular purposes, and it does not follow from his attitude that the instruments he does not condemn might be used in worship. Quite so; such an argument is sound, and our conclusions as to the permitted instruments having been used as an aid to worship or not will depend upon other evidence. But I think this further witness is in favour of their having been so used.

The objection to the flute by St. Clement, just referred to, was to its use at love feasts. Obviously this would not have been raised unless the flute had already been used at love feasts, or, at least, somebody had proposed so to use it. Naumann tells us definitely, 'History of Music,' page 177, that: 'It is on record that about the year 180 A.D., the Christian communities of Alexandria accompanied the chant of the Last Supper with the sound of the flute.' He does not state by whom the fact is recorded. From the date and place, however, I gather that this evidence is not additional, but merely a deduction from the words of St. Clement just quoted. This singling out of the flute plainly implies that other instruments were permissible at the Eucharist. And this is confirmed by the Alexandrine Father's favourable reference to the lyre and cithara; also by the following passage, in the last sentence of which he seems to be speaking of something distinct from the vocal music referred to in the first part of the paragraph, and therefore of instrumental music (in the present day a similar distinction is often—inaccurately, but conveniently—made between 'music' and 'singing') : 'The singers are holy men, their song is the hymn of the Almighty King; virgins chant; angels glorify; prophets discourse; while music sweetly sounding is heard.' And one of the Church fathers, whom I take to have been St. Augustine of Hippo, though the fact is not expressly stated, is unequivocal, urging the 'singing of psalms to the accompaniment of the lyre or psaltery.' (The psaltery was a very ancient instrument of the dulcimer type, and in the Middle Ages was extremely popular in the Church.)

* Naumann, 'History of Music,' page 176.

Dr. Rimbault, without naming the authority whom he quotes, says : 'We are told St. Ambrose joined instruments of music with the public service in the Cathedral Church of Milan; which example of his was so well approved of, that by degrees it became the general practice of other churches.*'

This passage is so like a statement of St. Augustine's that one cannot but think that Dr. Rimbault was founding on it. Speaking of Milan about the year 386, St. Ambrose's most famous disciple says 'It was first ordered that hymns and psalms should be sung after the manner of Eastern nations. . . and from that period it has been retained at Milan, and imitated by almost all the other congregations of the world.' There is here no mention of instruments. It is probable the reference is to antiphonal singing, which originated at Antioch. But from what is known of Eastern nations, and especially of the musical elaboration in the Christian Church at Constantinople, it is probable that the introduction, or increase, of instrumental music was included in the change made.

The impression left on my mind by these facts is that musical instruments have been used in Christian worship, public and private, from the very first, though probably in many cases to only a slight extent; and that they have never been for any great length of time, or over any wide area, wholly discontinued.

Perhaps it should be added that the instrument now used exclusively in the Church, the organ, was not introduced till about A.D. 450, at which period the Spanish Bishop, Jullianus, speaks of it as common in the Churches of the Peninsula.

NEW CHURCH MUSIC

'The Fa-burden Chant Book,' for use with the Gregorian Tones, edited by Godfrey Sceats and Francis Burgess.

'The Old Hundredth,' arr. by C. Macpherson.

[Novello.]

Fa-burden—the English equivalent of 'fauxbourdon' and 'falso-bordone'—is a simple vocal harmonization or counterpoint in which a plain-chant appears as one of the parts—usually the tenor—but not the top part. Familiar examples of fa-burden—though often used in debased forms—are found in the Litany and Responses of Thomas Tallis.

The system of placing the melody in the tenor dates back to the earliest times. It was especially flourishing in Tudor days, when a high point of excellence was reached: but by the end of the 18th century it had practically fallen into disuse.

Within the last few years there have been signs of a serious revival of this method of singing. The 'English Hymnal' includes some old settings of the metrical psalm-tunes by Ravenscroft and other English composers of the 16th and 17th centuries, where the tune appears in the tenor. Recently the Faith Press brought out 'The Tenor Tune Book,' where the same method of treatment has in addition been applied to certain modern tunes.

Turning to the Psalm tones, settings for the Canticles to Gregorian tones, with verses in fauxbourdon, have been brought out within recent years; but, so far, nothing on similar lines has been available for use in the singing of the Psalms. Much as many of us enjoy the unisonous singing of the Psalms to the old tones, it has to be admitted that there are many people to whom continuous unison singing, however well done and accompanied, does not appeal; and with them may safely be classed the average choirman!

A quarter of a century ago, in the first edition of 'The Elements of Plain-song,' Dr. W. H. Frere wrote: 'In some kinds of Plain-song—the simple parts such as the Tones and the Hymns—there is a real place for vocal harmony, even though it is almost inevitable that the rhythm should suffer from it to some extent.' 'The Fa-burden Chant Book' is the first consistent attempt to carry out this suggestion of one of the foremost English authorities on the traditional Chant. How completely the work has been done will be gathered from the fact that the collection contains a hundred and thirty specimens. All the more common Tones and Endings have several settings. The additional Endings—as given in the latest edition of the Sarum Psalter—are included, and even those forms (such as VIII. iv.) which such authorities as Dr. Palmer hold not to be suitable for general use. Hitherto, only a few isolated examples of pure plain-chant fa-burden have been available. Most of the classical writers contented themselves with a single specimen in each of the eight modes. The classical settings by Thomas Morley, G. A. Bernabei, and La Feillée, which appear in the book, are complete sets as far as it has been possible to make them so without including anything of doubtful value. Scarcely any of these have hitherto been available except here and there in rare and expensive works. In order to make the work complete it has been necessary to write many others, so that the book contains a large proportion of specially composed settings.

'The Fa-Burden Chant Book' is divided into two main sections. The first contains a complete set of the tones in fa-burden, either specially written or collected from classical sources by Mr. Godfrey Sceats. The second part, for which Captain Burgess is responsible, consists of a further collection of very simple fa-burden settings intended for use in the alternate verses of the Psalms, and printed in quaver notation to coincide with the normal method of transcribing Plain-chant characters. This collection may very well be used in conjunction with Briggs and Frere's 'Manual of Plainsong' (Novello).

We quote two examples from Part I and one from Part 2 as illustrations of the treatment of the same tone (II. i.). The minims of the first two and the quavers of the third are of course nominally of the same time-value: in the one case the minim, and in the other the quaver, is the unit note. The rhythm should be free, and relative note-values merely approximate:

Ex. 1. Tone II. Ending 1. MORLEY.

* 'The Organ: Its History and Construction.' Hopkins and Rimbault, page 17.

Ex. 2. Tone II. Ending i. BERNABEI.

Ex. 3. Tone II. Ending i. F. BURGESS.

It will be noted that Exx. 1 and 2 need special treatment, as the chord immediately following the breve (recitation) does not correspond with the first note of the Mediation and Ending. The editors give suggestions for the treatment of this and other exceptional cases. Such examples would obviously be used only for occasional verses, and those the simplest. On the other hand the settings in Part 2—as seen from Ex. 3 above—may easily be sung to alternate verses, as may also a large proportion of those in Part 1.

All the fa-burdens are in four-part vocal harmony, and should preferably be sung unaccompanied. In fact, unless four vocal parts, properly balanced, are available, fa-burden should not be attempted.

With regard to the best method of using the book, a practicable arrangement when the congregation can be depended on to sing—and this is where congregational practices are of special value—would be for the choir and people together to sing the first and second verses of the Psalms in unison, the choir then singing the odd verses in fa-burden and the people singing the even verses in unison. The second half of the Gloria Patri (not the first) might also be sung in fa-burden. If thought advisable, a portion of the choir might sing with the people, the remainder of the choir—perhaps a quartet only—singing the fa-burden verses.

There can be no doubt that if the book were used in some such manner as this it would provide a stimulus to both choir and congregation, and the singing of the Psalms might easily become one of the most enjoyable parts of the Service.

It is, perhaps, scarcely necessary to add that the settings for which the editors are personally responsible are invariably in the best possible taste, and provide an admirably-varied selection.

Dr. Macpherson's arrangement of the 'Old Hundredth' provides special treatment for the first, third, and fifth verses, the last two of these being supplied with faux-bourdon settings for the choir, while the congregation sing the melody. Many will probably regret that Dr. Macpherson has used the modern form of the tune in preference to the older version, where the semibreves not only help to keep things together, but add so much to the rhythmical interest. The presence of the semibreves, moreover, renders it possible to take the hymn at a greater pace, so that a fine swing may be obtained without the sacrifice of dignity. Dr. Macpherson suggests that the setting may be sung a tone lower. As the congregation is expected to take its part, it would perhaps have been better had the work been published in G instead of A.

GEORGE GRACE.

(Church and Organ Music News will be found on page 351.)

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. F. H. Sawyer, at Queen's University, Belfast—Pæan, Harwood; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Choral, Franck; Passacaglia and Double Fugue, Bach; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge; Fantasy Prelude, Charles Macpherson; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—Chorale Fantasia on 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Fantasia in G, Bach; Chorale Preludes on 'Deck thyself, my soul,' Bach and Brahms; Choral Prelude on 'Jesu, dulcis memoria,' Parry.

Mr. W. R. Anderson, Wesleyan Church, Cottenham—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Musette, Lemare; Two Monologues, Rheinberger; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; Elegy, Lyon; Minuet and Trio, Wolstenholme.

Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh (six recitals)—Rhapsody No. 3, Howells; Vesperale, Cyril Scott; Prelude, Scriabin; Dithyramb, Harwood; Evening Song, Bairstow; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Prelude on 'St. Thomas,' Parry; Scherzo, Guilmant; Marche Solennelle, Borowski; Prelude in E flat minor, Rheinberger; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Légende, Vierne; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Basso Ostinato and Improptu in B, Arensky; The Gate of the Bohatyrs at Kiev, Moussorgsky.

Dr. H. G. Ley, New College Chapel—Chorale No. 3, Franck; Three Preludes on Welsh Hymn-Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Elegy, Parry; Sonata in C, Bach; Preludes on 'Ye holy angels bright,' and a theme of Tallis, Harold Darke.

Dr. Thomas Keighley, Albion Church, Ashton-under-Lyne (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Pastorale and Finale, Guilmant; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Andante Cantabile and Finale (Symphony No. 4), Widor; Barcarolle, Sternalde Bennett; Romance, Reger. Collection for Organists' Benevolent League, £6 12s. 2d.

Mr. H. Percy Richardson, St. Chad's, Far Headingley—Pæan, Harwood; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Choral No. 3, Franck; Arabesque, Vierne; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (four recitals)—Caprice Héroïque, Bonnet; Dithyramb, Harwood; March in E flat, Léfebvre Wely; Introduction and Passacaglia, Reger; Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger; Prelude to 'Colomba,' Mackenzie; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Overture, 'Di Ballo,' Sullivan; Toccata in F, Bach.

Mr. Rlyton Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (eight recitals)—Rhapsody, Rowley; Sonata in C minor, Rheinberger; Overture to 'The Mastersingers,' St. Stephen's Hall, Bristol—Sortie, Faulkes; Postlude in E, Lyon; Sonata in G minor (first movement), Merkel; Fantasia and Fugue in D minor, Stanford; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme; Passacaglia, Cyril Scott; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Concert Overture in C, Hollins; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; and a Bach programme.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (seven recitals)—Impromptu, Alcock; Prelude and Fugue in D minor Mendelssohn; Fantasia in E minor, Silas; Caprice Orientale, Lemare; Adagio in E, Merkel; Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger. St. Stephen's Walbrook—A Bach programme: Toccata and Fugue in D minor; Sonata in E flat (first movement); Fantasia and Fugue in G minor; Trio in D minor; Passacaglia.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, Unthank Road Baptist Church, Norwich (six recitals)—Overture, 'The Mastersingers'; Sonata No. 1, Lemare; Choral No. 2, Franck; Prelude on Darwell's '148th,' Harold Darke; Sonata No. 3, Alan Gray; Toccata in A, Purcell; Pastorale in G, Rheinberger; Postlude in D, Stanford; Kieff Processional, Moussorgsky; Grande Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Sonatas Nos. 4 and 6, Rheinberger.

Mr. Frank Greenwood, Town Hall, Rochdale—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Good Friday Music (Parsifal); Sonata No. 5, Guilmant.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Lamentation, Guilmant; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Prelude and Fugue in D, De la Tombelle.

- Mr. A. E. Jones, Town Hall, Bolton (two recitals)—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Meditation, d'Evry; Concert Fantasia on 'Hanover,' A. E. Jones.
- Mr. Matthew Kingston, St. Luke's, Hampstead (four recitals)—Overture to 'Athalie'; 'The Storm,' Lenmens; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Nocturne in G, Chopin; Symphony in D, Guilmant.
- Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, Barking Parish Church—Impromptu in B minor, Coleridge-Taylor; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.
- Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's, Haverfordwest—Air, Blow; Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Andantino in G minor, Franck; Minuetto, Gigout; Evening Song, Bairdow; Marche Final (second Suite), Boëllmann; Choral Prelude, 'Forty days and forty nights,' and Fugue in G, Bach; Berceuse, Vierne.
- Mr. H. C. L. Stocks, Holy Trinity, Leamington—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Andante Cantabile in G, S. S. Wesley; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.
- Mr. G. Bernard Gilbert, Town Hall, Stratford—Variations on 'O filii et filiae,' West; Pastorale, Lemare; Allegro moderato, Schubert.
- Mr. R. Buchanan Morton, House of Hope Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn.—Concerto in F (first movement), Handel; Cantabile, Franck; Toccata from Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.
- Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden—Five short Bach recitals.
- Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church (three recitals)—Pastorale, Recitative, and Chorale, Karg-Elert; Vision, Rheinberger; Concerto in C minor; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Dithyramb, Harwood.
- Mr. Cyril F. Musgrove, St. Martin's, Scarborough—Sonata in G, Elgar; Fantasy Prelude, Macpherson; Elegy, Bairdow.
- Mr. Norman F. Demuth, St. Wilfrid's, Bognor—Voluntary in D, Croft; Voluntary in A, Russell; Pastorale (Sonata in D flat) and Marcia Religiosa (Sonata in E flat minor), Rheinberger; Fantasia, Stanford.
- Mr. Fred Gostelow, Luton Congregational Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Scherzo Symphonique, Guilmant; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.
- Mr. A. E. Howell, Melksham Parish Church—Larghetto, S. S. Wesley; Allegretto in B minor, Lemare; Sonata No. 7 (first two movements), Rheinberger; Pæan, Harwood.
- Dr. W. H. Speer, Christ Church, St. Leonard's—Sonata in E flat (first movement), Bach; Allegro moderato, S. S. Wesley; Pastorale from organ sonata, Speer; Prelude and Angel's Farewell, Elgar.
- Mr. Alban Hamer, All Souls', Leeds—Fugue, Reubke; Prière, Jongen; Prelude on the tune 'Vexilla Regis,' Bairdow; Rhapsody, Howells; Fantasy Prelude, Macpherson.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Fantasia in E, Wolstenholme; Lamentation, Guilmant; Two Choral Preludes, Karg-Elert.
- Mr. G. H. Heath Gracie, St. Peter's, Brockley—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Andante in D, Hollins; Allegro and Minuet (Symphony No. 4), Vierne; Coronation March, Saint-Saëns.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport (three recitals)—Toccata for a double organ, Blow; Sonata, Arne; Introduction and Fugue in C sharp minor, S. S. Wesley; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Finale (Sonata Britannica), Stanford; Choral Prelude on 'St. Mary's,' Wood; Concerto in E flat, Felton; Voluntary in G minor, Stanley; Lied and Scherzetto, Vierne; Finale in B flat, Franck.
- Mr. F. E. Wilson, St. John's, Eastbourne—Overture in C, Hollins; Barcarolle, Sterndale Bennett; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant.
- Mr. C. St. Ervan Johns, Chepstow Parish Church—Chorale No. 3, Franck; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme; Concert Piece in F, Mansfield.

- Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. John's, Mortimer, Berks.—Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West; Scherzoso in A minor, Rheinberger; Air from County Derry, Hamand; Adagio and Allegro Fugato, Stanley; Allegretto Pastorale, West.
- Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (four recitals)—Concerto in G minor, Camidge; Allegro con Spirito, Dupuis; Triumphal March, Guilmant; Allegro (Paschal Sonata), Lenmens.
- Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, St. Stephen's, Wandsworth (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Dithyramb, Harwood; Festival Toccata, Wolstenholme; Song of Triumph, West.
- Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Programme by living British composers, Bairdow, Frank Bridge, Harold Darke, Harvey Grace, Howells, Wolstenholme, Vaughan Williams, Alan Gray, and Stanford.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. J. R. Buffel, organist and choirmaster, St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Liverpool.
- Mr. Ernest E. Chasteeney, organist and choirmaster, Cromer Parish Church.
- Miss Lilian G. A. Rigg, organist and choirmaster, Loughborough Parish Church.

New Music

BY WILLIAM CHILD.

PIANOFORTE DUETS

Francis Poulenc is a young French composer who is just now enjoying a vogue across the Channel. His Sonata for four hands (J. & W. Chester) is a curious mixture of the almost baldly simple and the bizarre. It consists of three movements—a Prelude in which a grinding discord is repeated with maddening insistence, relieved, however, by a charming middle section; a naive and pleasing 'Rustique' entirely free from accidentals; and a Final largely made up from material already used. There are a few places where one doubts the accuracy of the engraving—for example, the sixth bar on page 15, in which the flats should surely appear in the secondo as well as in the primo. But one dare do no more than timidly hint at mistakes in music of this type. Such passages may turn out to be extra-special japes of the composer—for Poulenc clearly has his tongue in his cheek, though he is far more tuneful than Erik Satie, with whom he has a good deal in common. The Sonata is a really enjoyable little work, its affectations being redeemed by passages of fancy and real beauty.

Much more sophisticated and a good deal less genial is the humour of Lord Berners's 'Valses Bourgeoises' (J. & W. Chester). There are three of them—Valse Brillante, Valse Caprice, and 'Strauss, Strauss, and Straus.' The third is really funny, and most players will laugh aloud at such points as the deciso cadence and the quotation headed 'Mais je connais ça.' The waltzes are difficult in that players rarely get the notes they expect, and there are so many notes of the other sort that a good deal of mental effort is called for in order to avoid the hesitancy which is fatal in works of this type. By the way, the jest may be made the most of by firing off one of the waltzes, especially the third, at an unsuspecting and elderly hearer to whom the word 'waltz' means 'Blue Danube.'

SMALL ORCHESTRA

An essay in what may be called the elaborately infantile type of humour is Francis Poulenc's 'Rapsodie Nègre' for pianoforte, two violins, viola, violoncello, flute, clarinet, and voice (J. & W. Chester). It is mere spoof from beginning to end, the most obvious example being the 'Intermede Vocal' called 'Honolou-lou,' a monotonously discordant setting of a 'Poème de Makoko Kangourou' (!), consisting of a string of nonsense syllables. The whole work is so ugly and childish that one grudges the excellent engraving and paper spent on it when so much beautiful music has to remain in manuscript.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

It is a relief to turn to Arthur Alexander's arrangement, for violin and pianoforte, of two Irish folk-songs—'The Foggy Dew' and 'I'm the boy for bewitching them,' published in separate numbers by J. & W. Chester. Purists sometimes object to arrangements of the kind as being too sophisticated for the simple folk-tune basis, but here, as usual, much depends upon the way the thing is done. 'The proof of the pudding, &c.' Judged by this sound maxim, these capital versions of two fine airs are entirely successful.

ORGAN MUSIC

Four pieces by Hugh Blair are good examples of sound work, moderately difficult, well written, and pleasant for both player and hearer. The 'Solemn Prelude' is an impressive Largo that would be suitable for use at funerals and memorial services, and other occasions when there is a call for dignified and serious music. Less original is the 'Intermezzo,' in which a simple main theme is effectively set off by an expressive second subject. The 'Capriccietto' should be a popular recital item, its tuneful subject being treated with skill and resource. Contrast is provided by a very pleasing tranquillo section. The Postlude—perhaps the most original work of the set—is a vigorous piece that will serve equally well for both recital and voluntary purposes. Its middle section makes excellent use of three contrasted manuals. The four pieces are published by Messrs. Novello as Nos. 61-64 of 'Original Compositions (New Series).'

CHORAL MUSIC

Sir Edward Elgar has arranged the opening chorus of 'For the Fallen' ('With proud thanksgiving') for S. A. T. B., with accompaniment for military or brass band. The adaptation is inscribed to the League of Arts, at whose request it has been made for performance at the dedication of the Cenotaph, and for similar ceremonies throughout the country. It is also suitable for concert use, and for gatherings at which it is desired specially to remember those fallen in the war. Its moving expressiveness is too well-known to need reference; but one may point out that its breadth and directness make it eminently fitted for open-air performance.

Letters to the Editor

A GLARING ANOMALY

SIR,—I desire to call your attention to the action of the British Music Society, which is holding a widely advertised Congress of British musicians—including concerts, orations, receptions, banquet, &c.—in London, May 3-6. Now, according to their official programme, among 'the chief objects of the Congress' the first place is occupied by the desire 'to focus public attention on British Music and Musicians'; yet the programme of the central event—the orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on Tuesday, May 4—consists of:

Overture, 'In the South'	Elgar
'London Symphony'	Vaughan Williams
'Nuits d'Été'	Berlioz
'Heldenleben'	Strauss

Is there not a glaring anomaly here? The greater part of the programme is foreign music; and obviously the chief centre of attraction is Strauss's 'Heldenleben,' a work for which I have myself the highest admiration, though that does not blind me to the inconsistency of its place in the professed aims of the Society. May I ask who is responsible for this gratuitous insult to British music and talent? Is it, as I suspect, the conductor, or the energetic propagandist secretary, or the complacent members of committee? Can we imagine for one moment a Deutscher Musik Verein, or German Music Society, committing so disloyal and egregious an act of folly as to devote the greater part of a National Festival programme to the work of a modern British composer, however famous he might be? But we have neither faith in our national music nor loyalty to our composers. After all the talk of the better opportunities for British music as one of the collateral consequences of the war, it seems that the old parasitic system is to be resumed: we are to return like dogs to our vomit, and the lying promises with which we have been deluded are to be forgotten.

As a member of the Society in question, and as a British musician, I hereby enter my most emphatic protest against this procedure. There are many honoured names of living men to bear company with those of Sir Edward Elgar and Dr. Vaughan Williams. To name only a few, there are Mackenzie, Stanford, Delius, Holbrooke, Ireland, Wallace, and Boughton; and I may inform those who are 'promoting' British, by playing German, music, that their policy is not convincingly logical.

Why should Elgar be represented merely by an Overture? Why should the expense for the large extra force of instruments needed only for 'Heldenleben' be incurred? To make a concrete proposal, why should not Elgar's Second Symphony—a work which is honoured everywhere and too little performed—take the place of 'Heldenleben'? This need not interfere with Vaughan Williams's Symphony. In a concert of this class, and for an audience of musicians, a symphony in each part should not prove beyond their digestive powers.

It is action such as this that brings discredit on all similar propagandist movements by throwing wide the door to intruders and aliens, while hardly opening it a crack to the person we are supposed to be welcoming, and throwing him an occasional crust, forgetful of the adage, 'Charity begins at home.'—Yours, &c.,

The University,
Birmingham.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

[As we pointed out in an 'Occasional Note' in our April issue, there is another side to this question. However, as we go to press, we learn that in deference to protests such as the above, the Society is reconsidering the programme for May 4.—ED. M. T.]

THE NEW PAROCHIAL COUNCILS AND THE ORGANIST

SIR,—I am writing to ask if organists realise how profoundly they will be affected by the new Parochial Councils now being formed. Although their powers will not be exactly defined until the General Church Council meets in June, there is no doubt that according to the Archbishops' Committee's report they will take over the powers of the clergy and churchwardens in business matters, and will advise as to the Church Services. From this it would certainly appear that they will have the appointing and dismissal of the organist.

Generally speaking, the Councils will comprise representatives of all the Church workers, including the choir, and these will form various sub-committees.

It is in the interest of the organist that representatives of the choir and best musical people of the congregation be on the Music sub-committee, and that he himself act as head of the same. As a further development of Church reform, I would suggest that the R.C.O. and National Union of Organists approach the General Church Council at their June meeting and ask for:

- (1.) A central fund for organists from which financial aid could be granted to Churches in need for securing a better musical service;
- (2.) The raising of the organist's salary and converting it—in the case of professional organists—into a living wage foundation.

And I further suggest that all organists, amateur and professional, should join without delay (or institute where necessary) the National Union of Organists in their own district.

57, Bexley Road, S.E.9.

HERBERT WESTERBY.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

J. A. RODGERS, of Sheffield, whose sadly premature death removes a musician of very varied gifts, one who as critic, as conductor, and, latterly, as organizer, showed exceptional ability, while as a man his amiability of character made him a pleasant and sympathetic companion. In his capacity of critic for the Sheffield Daily Telegraph he went far afield, and was a familiar figure at the chief English Festivals, while at times he took the proverbial 'busman's holiday' by going abroad to Bayreuth and elsewhere, to hear music. As a critic of Sheffield performances his own participation in the music of the city—as conductor of the Promenade Concerts and the Amateur Musical Society—might be thought to have involved some embarrassment, but his happy geniality enabled him to get over difficulties which would have tried many men severely. Perhaps his greatest work was the directing and conducting, from the beginning, of the so-called 'Promenade' concerts, which have been none the less successful because the audiences have unanimously declined to promenade. These have introduced many interesting and important works to Sheffield, and it will be very difficult to find a conductor and director who will be able to sustain them at their high artistic and executive level. As recently as March 9 did he conduct one of these concerts, the last of the season, and, alas, the last in which he was destined to take part, when Miss Helen Guest, another Sheffield musician, played a pianoforte concerto by Moszkowski. At a former concert of the season he had introduced Rachmaninov's fine second Symphony, of which exacting work he gave a really impressive performance. In the midst of the war he had added to his responsibilities the onerous duties of managing director of an important local firm of music-dealers, and it may well be that by so doing he overcrowded an already busy life. He was for many years the Sheffield representative of the Musical Times.

RAYMOND RÔZE (C. Perkins), which occurred in London at the end of March at the early age of forty-seven. He had been ailing early in the year, and thought himself recovered, but was seized with illness on his return from a theatre, and died during the night. A man of varied activities as composer, conductor, and impresario, his best-known work is his opera 'Joan of Arc,' which he produced during the season he conducted at Covent Garden, and which during the war was mounted at the Grand Opéra, Paris, for a charitable purpose. He was for a long time musical director under the late Sir Herbert Tree, and composed the incidental music for several of his productions. In the early days of the war he founded the United Arts Rifles (1st Batt. C.L.V. Regt.). He was associated with Sir Thomas Beecham in the earlier stages of his operatic enterprises. His mother was Madame Marie Rôze, who survives him. He leaves one daughter.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of May, 1860:

BATH.—A testimonial was presented, on the 10th ult. to Mr. Joseph W. Pearson, organist of Quiet Street Chapel, at a meeting which was also held for the purpose of celebrating the extinction of the debt upon the organ. The testimonial consisted of a copy of Macaulay's History of England, in an elegant binding.

KIDDERMINSTER.—On Thursday evening, the 5th ult., the Choral Society held a special meeting for the purpose of presenting their conductor, J. Fitzgerald, Esq., with a testimonial of their respect and regard for his valuable and gratuitous services as their conductor ever since the formation of the society. The testimonial consisted of a very handsome, massive silver snuff-box, richly embossed and engraved with ornamental musical devices.

ROMSEY.—On the 29th of March, Mr. Jones had a public rehearsal, in the New Hall, with the members of his Singing Class, and a few of the Abbey Chapel Choir. The class consists chiefly of children from six to twelve years old; there are also grown-up members, amounting altogether to nearly eighty. The choruses and other music sung upon the occasion went off with great spirit.

VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—The members of this society held a conversazione at St. James's Hall on the evening of the 18th of April. . . . The hall was decorated very tastefully upon the occasion. In the body of the building, pictures, photographs, stereoscopes, statuary, vases, and other interesting works of art were displayed to good advantage on tables and screens. Pictures were placed in the side galleries, and thus the entire salle was transformed into a very elegant reception-room, with shrubs and flowers distributed in various directions to increase the general effect. The staple entertainment of the evening was a grand concert by members of the association, assisted by several vocal and instrumental performers, many of whom made their first appearance in London on this occasion. Among the débutantes, Madame Goldberg Strossi created the most favorable impression. She has a powerful voice, and a good dramatic style, well adapted to the stage. Herr Schneider, first tenor to the Duke of Nassau, sang 'Adelaide' in excellent taste. He is a great acquisition to the concert-room. Several German ladies also favoured the audience for the first time, but they did not prove themselves worthy of special attention. Herr Eibenschütz sang Schubert's song 'Der Wanderer.' His strong bass voice wants cultivation, but the quality is decidedly good. Madame Rudersdorf and other performers contributed to the evening's entertainment. . . . Tea and coffee, wine, ices, &c., were provided gratuitously, and the whole was done in a most liberal spirit.

THE SYMPHONY AND THE CINEMA

By SYDNEY GREW

Suggestions were recently made in the Press that in the Covent Garden performances of 'Parsifal' the cinema might have been used in place of the (discarded) panorama devised by Wagner. The suggestion presents the idea that the cinema might be employed in conjunction with tone-poems (and with the music of operas in other than stage-performances) for the purpose of making clear the 'meaning' of the music.

This idea appears to be very generally held. Many critics seem to believe that the cinema and the tone-poem might blend on terms of equal importance, producing a compound art. These critics imagine a darkened auditorium, a fine orchestra, a film-representation of the story of the composition exactly timed to proceed with the music, with for result an increased vividness and significance in the meaning of the piece.

The idea has already been carried into effect in Italy. In 1918 the 'Frate sole' tone-poem of Mancinelli, and in 1919 the 'Fantasia bianca' of Gui (works deliberately designed to be performed with the aid of the cinema), were produced. According to the reports, neither experiment was a success. The only serious attempt of this class that I call to mind in England is the 'illuminated dramatic symphony' of Holbrooke known as 'Apollo and the Seaman'; the attempt was to blend music, limelight pictures, and spoken verse: it was a complete failure.

I consider that the idea is fallacious, and that there will never be an art where the cinema and music combine, as do drama and music to form the art of opera; and I maintain that the cinema and the symphony are antagonistic in nature.

The cinema is a compound of pictorial art and dramatic art, both of which clash in every way with music. Their 'terms' are utterly unlike.

The painter has to reduce his idea to physical form. He has to reproduce it with an almost photographic exactness. The musician has to expand his idea to emotional form. He has to avoid concrete imagery and to allow the idea to represent itself absolutely and purely (hence the erroneous use of the term 'abstract' in connection with music). Speaking very broadly, painting deals with the outside of things, music with their inner essentials. The one is imitative, the other real with the reality of nature.

The poet has to reduce his idea to thought. His art expresses the intellectual aspect of things. If he be a dramatist, his art has to show thought translated further into action. (I repeat that I am speaking very broadly.)

The poet cannot paint a picture. The musician cannot tell a story. The dramatist cannot philosophise. Wordsworth does not paint descriptive images even in such poems as 'On the Naming of Places.' He certainly erects a scaffolding of description, but at the end the scaffolding falls away and only the pure structure of the thought is left. The true poet rarely refers to painting as an art. Milton gives the impression that for himself as a creative artist it had no existence. Only at his worst does Milton paint, as when he introduces gunpowder into the conflicts of the heavenly hosts and as when he speaks of the 'lion pawing to set free his hinder parts.'

The poet does not 'paint' because painting is relatively a restricted art. The musician does not tell a story because story-telling is similarly a restricted art. His art is all creative. It is in antagonism with whatever in any degree restricted to imitation or forced to express itself by aid of imagery.

The cinema is the least creative of all arts. It is essentially concrete, entirely imitative; meaningless when confined to pure emotion, and obscure when restricted to pure thought. I consider that it can no more aid pure music than water can mix with oil.

The foregoing is not however my chief reason for saying that this particular idea is fallacious. My chief reason is this: We find by everyday experience that when an art of intellectual nature is combined with one of spiritual or emotional nature, the former takes precedence over the latter. As the eye is first of the senses, so the mind operates more quickly than the deeper faculties, and when the latter obtrude upon the mind the result is confusion.

In the ordinary cinema picture we are irritated, or at least we are disturbed, when in the accompanying music a familiar theme appears; for our mind is drawn away from what for the moment is the principal matter of concern. In opera we forget the music at all points of dramatic intensity. Who thinks of the music at the close of 'Louise'?

Therefore since in symphonic performance the music itself is the beginning and the end of the matter, any cinematographic representation of the idea of the music would either become dominant or tend to confuse the issue. It would not help us as musicians to see Don Quixote charging through the sheep, the trolls kicking Peer Gynt, or the faune dozing in the sultry air with the nymphs of his dreaming flitting around him. Such visible imagery is as unnecessary to music as was the concrete imitation of sounds (horses trotting, dynamite exploding, storms raging, and the like) which accompanied the cinema in its first years and which was so soon discarded.

Both the cinema and music are 'absolute' arts. When they meet, one of the two must subordinate itself to the other. I have shown that in the nature of things it must always be music that so takes second place.

'VENUS AND ADONIS' AT GLASTONBURY

There is so far no sign of that Festival Theatre which already in days before the war Mr. Rutland Boughton conceived of as arising on the green slope of Glastonbury Tor for the production of his Arthurian music-dramas. One hears hopeful talk here, and the site is pointed out, but definite news of construction is not available. What actually exists is a small band of zealous artistic spirits who—to the great advantage of this isolated little town—keep going a 'Festival School' where instruction in many branches of music is given, as well as in dancing and other scenic arts. The youth and the infancy of Glastonbury appear to be so far profiting that, if this admirable activity is maintained, there should within five or ten years be here on the spot all the singers, dancers, and players for the sort of scene one understands Mr. Boughton to have in mind. At present the public performances are largely helped out by gifted folk from over the hills and far away, whose sympathies the irresistible Rutland Boughton captures by a magnetism of his own.

The faith and the zest in the movement (the fun there is in it too, one guesses) are such that a little Easter Festival, subsidiary to the August meeting, has been managed. Not only hadn't it the theatre of the future, but not even the hall where the summer performances took place last year. Yet in the most reduced sort of space it succeeded in creating some very charming impressions, an earnest of what, if all goes well, will some day induce many holiday-makers to think of turning towards the Quantocks and Somersetshire byways. We had madrigal singing and the playing of viols and harpsichord; Arcadian dancing after the manner of Dalcroze; a Purcell concert, and a solemn and decorative performance of 'Everyman.' The main matter, however, was the masque 'Venus and Adonis,' of Dr. John Blow, a production which showed again the genius of the movement for seizing and making much of a quaint and appropriate rarity. One was reminded of last summer's masque, 'Cupid and Death,' and it is clear that these 17th century pieces, which call so much more for fresh feeling and the grace of ingenuous youth rather than any grandeur of apparatus, will be irresistible in the Glastonbury of the future.

Blow's piece was written late in the years of Charles II. as a Court entertainment, hence not for the wide spaces of a theatre. The part of Cupid was originally taken by the King's daughter, Lady Mary Tudor, when aged not more than twelve, and though Venus must be a good singer, the general scope of the music is lenient. In Scene 1 the lovesick Adonis is against his will persuaded by the railing of Venus to join in the boar-hunters' chase. Scene 2 is a pretty diversion—songs and dances of loves and graces at Venus's Court. The surprise is in Scene 3, that of the return of Adonis, mortally wounded:

And lo! the feast turned funeral, and the crowns
Fallen; and the huntress and the hunter trapped;
And weeping and changed faces and veiled hair.

The poignancy of the lovers' farewells and the mourning accents of the last funeral chorus are cause for marvelling—so simple, so uninflated, so true in effect are these pages of 17th century English music-drama! Why was so hopeful a beginning doomed to founder in the tedium of the next century's opera seria?

The performance, to the accompaniment of the Misses Chaplin's viols and harpsichord, brought youth and beauty on the scene in Arcadian tunics and with bared Arcadian limbs. Such bareness of limb, which in these Dalcrozian days seems to us so naturally granted and perfectly appropriate, would probably have appeared 'a laxity to Charles II., whose own laxities to-day would doubtless be intolerable. So do manners change. Miss Gladys Moger was Venus, Mr. Clive Carey the Adonis, and Miss Ruby Boughton a delicious Cupid.

C.
GLASTONBURY, Easter.

'MUSIC AND LETTERS'

The second number of this new quarterly is even better than the first. We regret that lack of space prevents detailed reference to only one of its excellent articles. We single out for special notice Mr. R. O. Morris's paper on Parry because it is a piece of criticism of a type all too rarely met with—frank and sympathetic. Parry, perhaps, more than most composers of his time, received an overdose of frankness from some critical quarters and too much mere adulation from others. Mr. Morris gives us an estimate in which the balance is nicely held, and which is also notable for its literary quality. Apropos Parry, our readers will remember that in the first number of Music and Letters Mr. Bernard Shaw associated that composer's name with a clique which slighted Elgar in his early days. We are glad to see in the number before us a letter from Sir Edward defending Parry from the charge, and at the same time paying a tribute to 'his ungrudging kindness.' We hope Mr. Shaw will make a note of this.

THE MAKING OF BELLS

On Friday, April 16, in connection with the Conference of Musicians held at Nottingham, an explanatory lecture of great interest was given by Mr. William Wooding Starmer at the famous Taylor bell foundry at Loughborough. The conditions under which the lecture was given were unique, as all the processes in the making of bells were practically demonstrated before the audience, not the least fascinating of which was the casting of a number of bells requiring no less than four tons of molten metal. A large bell, weighing a ton and a-half, was cast in forty-five seconds. The visitors had the opportunity of hearing thirty-five bells (chromatic) of the fine carillon in course of construction for the new City Hall of Rotterdam, which when completed will consist of forty-nine bells, weighing together twenty-seven tons, and will be the largest carillon (with clavier) founded in Europe during the past hundred years. The accuracy of tune and the rich, resonant tone of these bells were much admired. As examples of bells cast for the purpose of change-ringing a new peal of ten for St. Giles's Church, Pontefract, weighing four tons, showed the difference in the construction scale used for such bells and that for carillon use. The lecturer remarked that a greatly increased interest in bells had recently arisen in this country, and particularly in carillons and carillon music.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

The local musical season, now approaching its close, has been unusually active and full of interest. Mention has now to be made of a number of concerts that have been held since the Birmingham notes appeared in the Musical Times last month. Plenty of novelties in one shape or another have had a hearing, and under this head prominence must be given to a delightful programme of modern Spanish music that occupied Madame Minadiou's last Musical Matinée at the Grosvenor Room on March 20. Under the direction of Mr. Pedro J. Morales a most attractive Iberian selection was arranged, the creative talent to be found in the works of the modern Spanish school being strongly brought out in the following works: Sonata for violin and pianoforte by Oscar Esplá; String Quartet in G by R. Chapi; 'Scène Andalouse,' for viola solo, pianoforte, and string quartet by Turina, two violin solos ('Lied,' by Manen, and 'Esquise Andalouse,' by Pedro J. Morales); and pianoforte solos by Manuel de Falla, Enrique Granados, and Albeniz. The splendid list of artists included Messrs. Arthur Beckwith and S. Kutcher (violins), Lionel Tertis and Pedro Morales (viola), Cedric Sharpe (violoncello), and William Murdoch (pianoforte). The vocalist was Miss Dorothy Robson, who is gifted with a remarkably rich soprano voice of great volume which she uses with perfect art. Her selections comprised songs by Turina, Albeniz, Morales, and Manuel de Falla. Madame Minadiou will continue these charming 'Matinées Musicales' next season, the dates for which were announced in the programme.

The Wassell Concert Society gave its last orchestral concert of the season at the Town Hall on March 20, conducted by Mr. Richard Wassell with his usual care and watchfulness. The programme contained no novelties, prominence being given to Beethoven, represented by the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, and by the 'Emperor' Pianoforte Concerto. The soloist was Mr. Frederick Dawson, whose magnificent playing of this great Concerto denoted the true artist. Mr. Dawson also contributed solos by Debussy, John Ireland, Ravel, and Scriabin, in which he achieved a veritable triumph. Other orchestral items were Bantock's Comedy Overture, 'The Pierrot of the Minute,' Grieg's characteristic Norwegian Dances, Op. 35, and the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Lohengrin.' The vocalist was Miss Elsie Morgan, and the accompanist Mr. Michael Mullinar.

The customary terminal concert by the orchestra of the Midland Institute School of Music was held in the large Lecture Theatre on March 15, conducted by Mr. Granville Bantock. The programme of orchestral music contained Liszt's Symphonic Poem 'Orpheus,' Berlioz's Symphony, 'Harold in Italy,' and the Procession to the Minster from 'Lohengrin.' In addition to these, Madame Siviter sang with dramatic effect and vocal ability the Letter Scene from 'Eugène Oneigin.' The symphony has been given here only once before, so far as memory serves, and that was at our Triennial Musical Festival of 1903. The Students' Orchestra has made wonderful progress under Mr. Bantock, whom nothing escapes. The playing of the Symphony was lucid and full of character, the viola part being ably interpreted by Miss Eleanor Finegan.

A successful pianoforte recital was given by our talented local pianist, Miss Rosemary Savage, at the Grosvenor Room on March 15. Her repertory included Bach's 'Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue' and excerpts from Granados, Rene Baton, Cyril Scott, Balfour Gardiner, John Ireland, Bax, Chopin, and Liszt. Songs were contributed by Mr. Arthur Jordan, one of our foremost local tenors.

Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay's matinées are always attractive, and to hear her again, on March 16, afforded a delightful musical and dramatic function. The venue, as on so many former occasions, was the Repertory Theatre, and once more her special art was revealed in its characteristic individuality. Some dramatic recitations were contributed by Mr. Harcourt Williams.

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society's magnificent series of concerts was brought to a close with a glorious performance of Bach's Mass in B minor, its great success being in a measure due to Sir Henry Wood's meticulous preparation of the work and to the way he directed its interpretation. Mr. C. W. Perkins at the organ filled a prominent part which should not be overlooked. Choir and orchestra are entitled to just acknowledgment of all they did to make the performance a memorable effort. Sir Henry has always been an admirer of our Festival Choral Society, or he would not have invited its members a few years ago to come to London and give a performance of the Mass at Queen's Hall under the conductorship of the late Dr. Sinclair. That was an event of the greatest significance in the history of our great Choral Society, which those who took part in still recall with pride. It should be stated that the Town Hall was crowded on March 24, the audience evidently being greatly impressed with Bach's sublime creation. The principals, all of whom sang with much care and artistic delivery, were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Edward Dykes. The violin solos were beautifully played by Mr. Alex. Cohen. Mr. Allen K. Blackall, the chorus-master of the Society, gave an interesting lecture before the members of the local Bach Society at the Midland Institute on March 27, his subject being the 'Organ Chorale Preludes,' a number of which were played on the Midland Institute organ by Mr. Bernard Jackson and afterwards analysed by the lecturer.

Good Friday inevitably inspired a number of representations of masterworks connected with Passion music. Mr. Appleby Matthews once more gave two performances of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion at the Repertory Theatre, one in the afternoon and another in the evening, that were even more profoundly moving than those of last year, a distinctive feature being the valuable assistance rendered by Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. William Hayle.

At the Town Hall the Midland Musical Society revived Dvorák's 'At the foot of the Cross' ('Stabat Mater'), which Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted in a deeply impressive manner. His principals were Miss Emilie Waldron, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Herbert Parker, with Mr. C. W. Perkins at the organ.

Brahms's 'Requiem' was down for performance at the Cathedral Church, and in many centres Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was given as usual on Good Friday.

The Birmingham Chamber Concerts Society's fourth concert of the current season, having for its executive the Catterall combination, took place at the Royal Society of Artists' Gallery on April 6. The reputation of these excellent concerts is now so firmly established that in spite of the Easter holidays the attendance was as great as ever. While the programme offered no novelty, yet musicians welcomed once more Beethoven's String Quartet, Op. 18, No. 5, in A, Brahms's String Quartet in C minor, Op. 51,

No. 1, and in the way of variety Arensky's String Quartet in A minor, Op. 35a, which has for its second movement a Theme and Variations of special attractiveness. The performers' virile and truly musicianly readings of these works denoted perfect unanimity in their ensemble, the outcome of ripe experience and assiduous study.

A violin and vocal recital was given at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on April 8, by Miss Marguerite Loriot and Miss Dorothy Lycett, when the former contributed well-known violin solos and the latter a variety of songs which suited her pleasing contralto voice. The joint efforts of the concert-givers were well appreciated, and the programme on the whole was framed on artistic lines. The Birmingham Orpheus Choir, so ably trained by Mr. Joseph Lewis, contributed some part-songs with pleasing tone and artistic nuances of light and shade.

In aid of St. Stephen's Church a concert was given at the Town Hall on April 9, organized by the Rev. E. Lewis Blood with the co-operation of the Wolseley Male-Voice Choir, when a number of part-songs were sung under the able conductorship of Mr. W. E. Robinson. Interest in the programme was further enhanced by a selection of songs of a popular character sung by Miss Alice Vaughan, Mr. McKeown, and Mr. Charles Till, and violin solos brilliantly played by Mr. Arthur Hytch.

Mr. Appleby Matthews's weekly Sunday Orchestral Concerts, which began on September 7 of last year and lasted till April 25, were a unique event in the musical history of Birmingham, breaking all records, and amply demonstrating what can be achieved by perseverance. These fine orchestral concerts have become an established educational factor, and have been the means of popularising orchestral concerts among the masses. A departure was made on Sunday, April 11, when the concert was devoted to chamber music, and the programme included Elgar's new compositions in this form, namely, the beautiful Violin Sonata, the String Quartet, and the Pianoforte Quintet.

BOURNEMOUTH

During the latter half of March and the first two weeks of April musical activity has continued with its usual strenuousness, the artistic range of the concerts being as extensive as ever.

The Symphony Concerts have attracted good audiences, the average attendance being perhaps slightly in excess of last season. But even so, a still further improvement is much to be desired; while it is really surprising to find so many self-styled keen lovers of music whose appearances at these concerts are by no means to be regularly reckoned upon. The musical residents of Bournemouth, however, should feel it incumbent upon them to give a clear lead in this matter, as it is they, after all, and not the casual visitor, who derive the chief benefit from the Municipal Orchestra and all that it stands for. It may be that they are ignorant of the fact that the Orchestra is maintained at its present strength—which is an absolute minimum for effective performances of high-class works—simply for the continuance of the Symphony Concerts, although it is no less true that if these were perforce abandoned through a reduction of the personnel many other engrossing musical features would also disappear simultaneously. Therefore it is ardently to be hoped that the residents of Bournemouth will show their appreciation of the artistic entertainment provided for them by vigorously supporting these fine concerts. An aloof attitude can only spell disaster to the town's principal artistic asset.

The extent of the disaster that would follow upon any reduction of the Orchestra may be calculated from an inspection of the programmes which it was found possible to present under prevailing conditions during the past four weeks. Where, for instance, can one hear nowadays such a work as Tchaikovsky's 'Manfred' Symphony, which was revived at the twenty-fourth Symphony Concert? Few and far between, too, are performances of Glazounov's most desirable 'Seasons' Suite, played here on March 18. Rimsky-Korsakov's Overture to 'A Night in May,' again, is one of this clever musician's most attractive lighter compositions; but its performance here on April 8 served to remind the musical cognoscenti of its neglect elsewhere. Has Mr. E. L. Bainton also been besieged recently by voracious conductors hungering to produce his extremely charming 'Elegy' and 'Intermezzo' for orchestra? We sincerely hope that this experience has befallen him, while we rather doubt its actuality, although Mr. Dan Godfrey did not fail to perceive that the pieces would materially add to the attractiveness of the concert on April 1. Another British composer, Dr. Cyril B. Rootham, also participated in the programme of the twenty-fourth concert when he conducted the Overture and Dances from his opera, 'The Two Sisters,' the dances, in particular, proving distinctly enlivening.

Needless to say, the programmes at these concerts have been balanced by repetitions of many works that have already won fame and fortune, such as the 'Academic Festival' Overture by Brahms, Beethoven's B flat Symphony, Schumann's Symphony in D minor, Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite (No. 1), Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations (the second performance this season), and Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony. These established favourites were interpreted with real skill—the Schumann Symphony was a particularly fine effort—and met with the usual welcome.

The solo performers have been well up to standard. Mr. Giovanni Barbirolli, an exceedingly promising young musician, gave an exceptionally good performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Variations on a Theme Rococo' for violoncello and orchestra: the composition itself is rather jejune, and does not improve on fuller acquaintance. On March 25 Miss Marie Novello played the well-known E flat Pianoforte Concerto by Liszt, her performance being marked by plenty of dash and other stimulating qualities. The following week's concert had for one of its most interesting features the performance by the Countess Helena Morsztyn of Saint-Saëns's C minor Pianoforte Concerto. Beginning a trifle uncertainly, the pianist soon warmed to her work and gave us one of the most attractive keyboard displays of the season, the somewhat unequal composition being played with such fire and vigour as to arouse considerable enthusiasm. Finally, Miss Norah Blaney was decidedly in the picture in César Franck's beautiful Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra. So often do pianists attempt to turn this lovely work into a mere vehicle for display that Miss Blaney's interpretation in the right spirit made its representation a very pleasurable affair.

BRISTOL

Though the season should be drawing to a close, there is every likelihood that it will continue strong and vigorous till well into the early summer. Immediately following the Choral Society's concert which was noted in our last issue, Bristol New Philharmonic Society gave its third and last concert of the season. This Society, under Mr. Arnold Barter's guidance, has achieved some notable work in the way of presenting modern music, and its educational efforts—though, of course, not absolutely perfect—have been of great value to the city. On March 17, at Colston Hall, the principal item was César Franck's D minor Symphony, which was very creditably performed by the band, and with much more style than the players infused into it a year ago. Rutland Boughton's extraordinary symphonic poem, 'Midnight,' was not so successfully given. The choir was outclassed by it, but in Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands' songs the choralists were much better placed. Emphatically the choir wants more voices to steady and increase the tone-volume. Miss Rosina Buckman made another dramatic appearance, and was warmly welcomed in arias from 'Aida,' and 'Madame Butterfly.'

There has been a very notable feature in four concerts, on Sundays, at the Empire, given by the Bristol New Symphony Orchestra under Mr. W. S. Porter's baton. This body of three dozen musicians, all of Bristol and all professionals, has made a praiseworthy endeavour to show Bristol folk that they have the nucleus of a Bristol first-class band without going outside the city for it. The Orchestra has given excellent examples of its powers in Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony and Kalinnikov's symphonic production. We shall hear more of these players next season.

Probably the outstanding concert of the whole season was that given by the New Queen's Hall Light Orchestra, with Madame Calvé, and under Mr. Alick MacLean's direction, on March 18 at Colston Hall. The band was a great revelation to Bristol musical people. A Liszt Rhapsody, the Finale from Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, and Frederick Laurence's 'Tristis' were chief among the pieces performed, and were faultlessly played. Madame Calvé, of course, gave the 'Habañera' from 'Carmen,' Gounod's Serenade, and Beethoven's 'In questa Tomba,' with other interesting selections, in her own peculiar and fascinating manner. Miss Myra Hess played Rachmaninoff and Chopin with equal facility. All who took part were new to Bristol, which was the reason perhaps why the hall was not full.

Dr. Frank Merrick, one of Bristol's leading pianoforte masters, whose technique and powers of interpretation are greatly valued here, gave a special recital on March 19 at Victoria Rooms, presenting an uncommon programme that included Bach's French Suite in G, Brahms's F sharp minor Sonata, works of John Ireland and Debussy, and two of the unfamiliar 'Goyescas' of Granados.

The Cecilian Choral Society, a very vigorous and surprisingly good amateur society of vocalists, drawn from the staff of Messrs. J. S. Fry & Sons, the great chocolate firm, gave a most creditable performance of 'Messiah' under Mr. Charles Read at Colston Hall on March 21, with Madame Hilda Blake, a cultured Bath soprano, Miss Rébé Hillier, Mr. Robert Ripley, and Mr. Dan Richards as principals.

Mr. R. T. Morgan has continued his series of interesting and educative fortnightly organ recitals at St. Mary Redcliff Church, the only place where organ music is regularly played. He has had large audiences, and his well-chosen programmes have been a delight, including as they have excerpts from modern as well as classical composers of the highest class.

Bristol Musical Society held its second concert of the season, on March 24 at Victoria Rooms, under Mr. Charles Stear, giving Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' with band and organ accompanying. Miss Norah Delmarr, Miss Grace Ivell, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Herbert Spiller were the soloists, and Mr. F. S. Gardner led the orchestra. The works were pleasingly performed, but the choir needs some rounding up in order to establish a high standard of choral work.

On the same evening Mr. F. E. Weatherly, the well-known song-writer, gave a delightful jubilee celebration lecture at the Y.M.C.A. Hall. He has always been happy in his musical collaborators, and he emphasised the great debt he owed to the veteran Bristolian, Mr. J. L. Roeckel, who first suggested he should write songs.

Bristol South Choral Society, another active young combination of singers, gave 'Messiah' with spirit and force on March 27, at the Totterdown Y.M.C.A., and showed considerable promise.

On March 30 we had Mr. Mark Hambourg, who gave all students a lesson in phrasing and clear thinking at his recital in Victoria Rooms. He drew upon various schools, ancient and modern, for his themes, including the weird and mysterious 'Barlumi' of Malipiero.

Good Friday concerts at Colston Hall were given by the Welsh Apollo Glee Society from Barry. The evening concert was packed to the doors. Mr. George Riseley played two 'Storms' on the organ, Madame Hilda Blake sang, and Mr. N. Eager, a clever young local violoncellist, supplemented the plaintive Welsh vocalisation of the Glee party.

A unique and altogether delightful entertainment was provided by Will Marion Cook's American Syncopated Orchestra on April 5, for a week, at Colston Hall, but it proved a failure financially.

The greatest of all our visitors to give pianoforte recitals was Mr. Frederick Lamond, whose masterly interpretations of Beethoven are so well-known to London concert-goers. His reputation drew a crowded and enthusiastic audience to the Victoria Rooms.

West Bristol Choral Society presented 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean,' and the 'Mystic Trumpeter,' under Mr. Charles Read's enthusiastic conducting, at Victoria Rooms on April 14. Mr. Montague Hook was the soloist, and choir and band numbered a hundred and twenty. The performance was thorough and the singers showed much merit.

Cotham Grove Choral Society, yet another of the local societies to bear excellent fruit, made a good showing on April 15, under Mr. F. George Taylor, at its second concert, given in the Baptist Church. Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' were quite creditably given by Miss Hilda Stowar, Miss May Keene, Mr. George Lewton, and Mr. James E. Passmore, a full orchestra and organ assisting the choir of seventy performers.

Weston-super-Mare, our local Brighton, has an enterprising Orpheus Society, conducted by an old and tried Bristolian, Mr. Edward Cook, and at its fourteenth annual concert on March 18, in Knightstone Pavilion, the Society drew a large audience. In Coleridge-Taylor's 'Drake's Drum,' Wilfrid Shaw's 'Divine Pastorale,' Hiles's 'Hushed in Death,' as well as in lighter works by Sir Frederick Bridge, the singers sustained their old traditions. Miss Phyllis Lett, a very favourite singer in the West of England, contributed eight items with marked success.

The local testimonial fund, under the lead of the Lord Mayor, to celebrate in appropriate fashion the jubilee of Mr. George Riseley, Bristol's famous conductor of the Choral Society and the Orpheus Glee Society, is being well supported.

CORNWALL

In addition to the revival of male choirs which are the great feature of music in Cornwall, several mixed choirs have been re-formed and have made welcome appearances. Newlyn Choral Society, on March 19, gave the Passion music from 'Messiah' and Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' Mr. A. W. Rablen conducting. After celebrating its jubilee a few years ago, Penzance Choral Society collapsed, and has now reappeared with a strong membership of a hundred and twenty voices, under the conductorship of Mr. E. Fugler Thomas. In a performance of 'Messiah' on March 18 the singing was generally good, though weak in attack. For once, the tenors were the strongest and most able department. Mr. H. C. Tonking was at the organ, and Mrs. L. Williams at the pianoforte. An entirely new Choral Society has been formed at Wadebridge, and on March 31 also chose 'Messiah' for a first attempt. Mr. H. S. Derry obtained a very good performance, the choir numbering eighty voices and the orchestra being led by Miss Clarke and Mr. E. Pedlar. Miss Keast was at the organ, and Miss Richards at the pianoforte. Enunciation was unusually clear, while the phrasing was good. Wesley Choir, Camborne, performed 'The Creation' on March 31, Dr. H. V. Pearce conducting, with Mr. Godfrey Uren at the organ.

Before the war much good music was made by the amalgamated Choral Societies of Truro and Falmouth, conducted by Canon Corfe. The Truro body exists no longer, but Falmouth has a vigorous Philharmonic Society which has greatly increased in numbers during this winter. 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and part-songs by Bantock ('On Himalay') and Elgar ('My love dwelt') were excellently sung on April 7. The orchestra which supplied the accompaniments was led by Miss B. Treweek, and played also the 'Hebrides' Overture (Mendelssohn), and a selection from 'Lohengrin.' The Rev. C. Daly Atkinson conducted, and a part-song of his, 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps,' received an excellent interpretation by the choir. Miss E. B. Blight was at the pianoforte.

Lostwithiel Choral Society (Mr. E. A. Russell, conductor), has attained a membership of a hundred voices. A very good performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' was given on April 7, with orchestra. The chorus, 'The Vikings,' and orchestral pieces, were also given.

As in Wales, so in Cornwall—male choirs are to be heard everywhere. Performances which must be chronicled include Marazion Male Choir (Mr. J. H. Trudgen) on March 16; Falmouth Male Choir (Mr. Howard) on March 21; Stithians Male Choir (Mr. J. H. Bowden) on March 22; Gunnislake and District Male Choir (Mr. W. P. Leverton), at Callington, on March 24, when H. J. Edwards's beautiful part-song, 'Give me thine heart,' made a great success; Camborne Male Choir (Mr. Holman), at Twelveheads, on March 25, when 'To arms' and 'On the ramparts' were sung. A new male quartet has been formed at Flushing, and at their first concert at Mylor, on March 31, the singers achieved success in 'In absence,' 'Perfect in Christ,' and 'Comrades' Song of Hope.'

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The advent of daylight-saving and the growing attractions of the countryside around Coventry at this season inevitably reacted on local musical life, and the concert season may now definitely be regarded as on the wane.

Considerable interest was centred in the visit of the regimental band of H.M. Scots Guards to the Opera House on March 21. Local concert-goers were thus afforded an opportunity of hearing an indoor programme presented by a military organization well-known to patrons of the Coventry Corporation summer concerts. Two interesting programmes were conducted by Mr. F. W. Wood, and M. Jose de Moraes, the Portuguese tenor, renewed his popularity.

The final concert of a highly successful season was given by members of the Coventry Musical Club on March 24, the Club's male-voice choir, orchestra, and prominent member-soloists all contributing to the programme.

On March 28, Mr. Mathew Stevenson conducted the final concert of the season given by the Armstrong-Siddleley Orchestra at the Opera House. The programme included the 'Meistersinger' and 'Magic Flute' Overtures and Moszkowsky's 'Boabdil' Ballet Music. Miss Katrina Lund, in conjunction with the Orchestra, recited Elgar's 'Carillon.' The vocalist was Mr. Foster Richardson, whose fine bass voice was heard to advantage on this his first visit to Coventry.

During Passiontide, Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was heard at the Churches of St. Peter and All Saints, and also at other places of worship. Mr. Frederick Rollason's setting of the 'Stabat Mater' and Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' were also performed. Easter music at the Cathedral and at numerous other Churches was of interest, some notable settings to the Communion office being heard. On Easter Monday Mr. Walter Hoyle gave another of his customary bank holiday organ recitals, when the attendance was greater than ever before.

The fourth of the special series of Corporation Concerts took place in Leamington Town Hall on March 25. Miss Lucy Nuttall created a most favourable impression with her singing. Mr. Herbert Fryer proved himself a pianist of unusual ability, and the violoncello solos of Mr. Warwick Evans were followed with attention. Mr. Fryer and Mr. Evans were associated in a masterly interpretation of Grieg's Sonata in A minor.

Mr. Walter Warren arranged a noteworthy selection of music for the Easter services at St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church.

The visit of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company to the Theatre Royal, Leamington, in the week commencing April 12, attracted much attention. Large audiences witnessed the representations of 'The Mikado,' 'The Gondoliers,' and 'Iolanthe,' which formed the repertoire.

The Rugby Philharmonic Society has recently given a successful performance of Brahms's 'Requiem.'

DARLINGTON AND DISTRICT

The period of Good Friday inevitably brought a number of performances of Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' of which detailed notices are unnecessary. The choir of St. Hilda's Church, Darlington, made a departure by singing Gounod's fine but seldom-heard 'Stabat Mater,' to the English text 'O come near to the Cross,' and at Darlington Parish Church the choir, under Dr. Kitson, gave Maunder's cantata 'Olivet to Calvary.' The Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society's second concert, on April 13, had Mr. Frank Mullings for soloist. He was naturally received with much enthusiasm, because his first great success was achieved by singing the tenor solo part of Berlioz's 'Faust' for this Society in 1909, the present occasion being his fifth visit to the town. The programme was miscellaneous, Mr. Mullings's contributions comprising Lohengrin's Narration, 'Deeper and deeper still' and 'Wait her angels,' Bantock's 'Adrift,' Brahms's 'Love Song,' and Schubert's 'Erl-King.' He was in his happiest vein, and sang superbly, the 'Erl-King' reaching the highest pinnacle of dramatic interpretation. The orchestra, which is almost entirely amateur, was led by Mr. Alfred Wall, and gave a good account of the Overture to 'Figaro,' the first movement from Beethoven's Symphony in C, Saint-Saëns's 'Danse Macabre,' and Jarnefelt's 'Prælude.' The choir sang unaccompanied madrigals and part-songs, including 'In going to my lonely bed,' Palestrina's 'When flow'ry meadows,' Horsley's 'See the chariot,' and Stanford's 'Sweet love for me' and 'The Witch.' The last is a remarkably fine work, and well worth the attention of any choir in search of a novelty. Mr. T. Henderson conducted, and Mr. A. Minto was the accompanist.

The Auckland Musical Society, though small in numbers has under the inspiring influence of Dr. Kilburn been for many years a centre of musical enthusiasm in the district, and has kept its programmes well in the van of musical progress. On March 30 the choir gave an elevating performance of Bach's 'St. John' Passion with the assistance of members of the Leeds Symphony Orchestra. The singing was keen and fresh in tone, the chorales especially being beautifully sung. The soloists were Miss Suddaby, Miss Vipond, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. William Hayle. The following night another excellent performance of the same work, with the same performers and orchestra, but with Miss Rachel Hunt in place of Miss Vipond, was given under Dr. Kilburn in the Town Hall, Middlesbrough, with Mr. Felix Corbett at the organ.

The Stockton and Thornaby Choral and Orchestral Society gave its second concert on March 18. Bennett's 'May Queen' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'A Tale of Old Japan' were the principal works, both of which were well sung. The Society is steadily improving under Mr. Webster's careful training.

DEVON

Choral Societies all over the county have brought forward the fruits of their revived energy and a winter of rehearsal. A notable feature has been the formation of voluntary choruses to supplement Church choirs for performance of oratorio. Foremost among these must be mentioned the choir of over a hundred voices formed and trained by Dr. Ernest Bullock, of Exeter Cathedral, which with the Cathedral regular voices gave a remarkably good first performance at Exeter (probably, also, in Devon) of the 'St. Matthew' Passion. Unfortunately, at the last moment, Dr. Bullock was prevented by illness from conducting, his place being taken by the Rev. R. C. B. Llewellyn. Mr. F. Gandy, of Bradford, was at the organ.

Nearly every Church had a performance of oratorio during Lent and Easter. St. Andrew's Church choir, Plymouth, conducted at the organ by Mr. H. Moreton, performed 'The Redemption' in the Guildhall. Augmented to eighty voices, the choir sang with beautiful tone and interpretation. The principals were Miss Hilda Blake, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. Matthew Newton, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.

In this connection mention must be made of a newly-formed choral society at the tiny village of Alphington, near Exeter, under the direction of Mr. Tidball, organist, supported by the rector, the Rev. B. C. Bennett. By dint of persevering labour in educating raw material, a really creditable performance of the 'Crucifixion' was achieved on March 31.

At Sherwell Church, Plymouth, Gaul's 'Holy City' was given on March 24, conducted by Mr. Douglas Durston. At Bideford, on March 22, the cantata 'Heroes of Faith' was presented, with Mr. W. J. Couch at the organ. Elsewhere Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was most frequently heard, and various Lenten pieces by Maunder were popular. Parts 2 and 3 of 'Messiah' were sung at Totnes, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Worth, with Miss E. M. Hingston at the organ, and on the same date (March 31), at St. Margaret's, Topsham, the choir sang 'Hear my prayer' and one of Maunder's cantatas with Mr. A. C. May at the organ.

On March 20 the Junior Choir of Plymouth Co-operative Society, excellently trained by Mr. H. Woodward, gave a really good programme of part-songs, choruses, duets, and solos. Under the same auspices a Senior Choir has been formed, and has begun rehearsals under the training of Mr. T. Martin, with a membership of eighty. Among the most active of male choirs in Plymouth and district are the Orpheus (Mr. D. Parkes) and the Cecilian (Mr. T. Downing). Unfortunately they selected the same date (March 24) for their spring events. The concert of the Orpheus was remarkable for fine performances of Schubert's 'Great is Jehovah' (vocalist, Miss Minnie Searle), Brahms's 'Rhapsody,' the 'Homage to Aviators' of Saint-Saëns, and part-songs by Elgar. The Cecilians sang Maunder's 'To Arms,' 'Strike the Lyre' (Cooke), 'Not a drum was heard' (Goodhart), Walford Davies's fine piece 'The winds,' and other pieces by Abt and Brahms, in which they showed real progress in their art.

'The May Queen' was sung by North Tawton Choral Society (forty voices) on April 7, Mr. H. Phillips conducting. It is long since choral music was heard at Teignmouth, and the Choral Society was well supported on April 8 when it presented 'Faust,' in concert form, 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' and some part-songs. Mr. Taylor conducted, and the principals were Madame Fiffine de la Côte, who sang with exquisite voice and much temperament, Mr. W. N. Kennedy, and Mr. Walter Belgrove. Miss Phyllis Smith (Dawlish) led the orchestra.

Sidmouth Choral Society, with orchestra, and Exmouth Choral Society, also with orchestra, performed 'Messiah' on April 8 and 9 respectively. Mr. J. A. Bellamy conducted at Sidmouth, and Mr. Raymond Wilmot at Exmouth. Activities at the latter town had been suspended since 1916.

Dr. Harold Lake and his well-trained Madrigal Society gave a concert at Plymouth on April 9, which afforded ample testimony of the value of their work for music at Plymouth. Novelties were a madrigal of characteristic type, 'Charm me to sleep,' composed by the conductor for the Society, Parry's sublime Motet, 'There is an old belief,' and a modal and imaginative work by Sakhnovsky, 'The pampas grass,' sung with much finish and with thrilling effect. The Society was supported by M. Jacques Van Lier (whose violoncello-playing in the Saint-Saëns Concerto surpassed any we had previously heard), Madame Dilys Jones, and Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, vocalists.

Orchestral music at Plymouth has received a set back, firstly by the departure for several months of the band of the R.M.L.I. to escort H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and secondly by the promotion of Mr. R. G. Evans, who has conducted the band of the R.G.A. since 1903, to the bandmastership of the Coldstream Guards. A feature of Mr. Evans's period of control of the R.G.A. has been the number of excellent symphony concerts given at Plymouth at which the programmes have been of a high classical standard.

The orchestra organized at Exeter by Mr. Edward Petherick, and conducted by Mr. A. J. James, has played twice during the month. On the first occasion (March 25), a Suite, 'Gressenhall,' by Cunningham Woods was a prominent item. The second occasion, on April 13, was another of the concerts for the people by which Mr. Petherick hopes to raise the taste of the masses in recreation. The programme was on the light side, but of very good standard, including music by Percy Grainger, Elgar, Mozart, Brahms, and Edward German.

A concert given at South Molton by singing pupils of Mrs. John Passmore (a professor who visits there weekly from Exeter) on April 7, brought forward several young singers who were evidently being well trained. Other vocalists were Mrs. Passmore herself and Mr. John B. Passmore, a baritone singer with gifts and temperament that promise a distinguished career. Dr. H. J. Edwards gave examples of his beautiful pianistic art in Chopin and Debussy and in some of his own compositions, and with Mr. S. W. A. Moyle played a pianoforte and violoncello Sonata by Grieg. Mr. Moyle also contributed some violoncello solos of a very high order.

The Rev. Greville Cooke gave an instructive lecture at Plymouth on March 20 on 'The Harmonic Bass and Modern Music.' That his ideas are thoroughly carried out in his compositions was evidenced at Tavistock on April 10, when he played several pieces and songs were sung by Mr. Orlando Jolliffe. Vagueness of tonality, the whole-tone scale, and the use of figures rather than defined themes (this was not invariable) were general characteristics. Mr. Cooke is a young man of decided gifts, in the use of which experience will no doubt inspire originality.

Plympton Choral Society has turned its attention to opera, and on April 7 performed 'The Mikado,' conducted by Mr. T. Lavers. Singing and acting were alike praiseworthy, and Miss A. Smith led a small orchestra.

DUBLIN

Mr. John Mundy is rapidly establishing himself as a prime favourite in musical circles, and his violoncello recital on March 24 was a great success.

On March 26, at Trinity College, the Dublin University Choral Society gave a most successful concert, the two works presented being Mendelssohn's Octet in B flat, and Palestrina's famous 'Missa Papæ Marcelli' (sung in the Sistine Chapel, Rome, on June 19, 1565). The interpretations were very good, especially in view of the small choir, and the whole reflected credit on the able conductor, Dr. Fred Figgis.

During Holy Week, at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Bach's 'St. John' Passion was given each evening—a custom that was inaugurated by the present Dean in 1880. The organ accompaniments were most judiciously played by Mr. W. E. Hopkins, sub-organist.

Verdi's noble 'Requiem' received adequate treatment on March 29 and 30, at the Empire Theatre, by the Æolian Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. T. H. Weaving. Some selections from 'Messiah' were also given. Among the soloists Madame Borel, Miss Mollie O'Callaghan, and Mr. J. C. Doyle won golden opinions. Mr. Weaving had both orchestra and choir well in hand, and gave a remarkably good interpretation.

The D'Oyly Carte Company gave a successful three weeks' season of Gilbert and Sullivan opera commencing on Easter Monday, April 5, at the Gaiety Theatre. All the old favourites were represented to full houses.

Commencing on Easter Monday last, Dublin places of entertainment have increased their prices of admission owing (as the managers say) to 'various causes, including the increase of wages to the employees and higher costs in other directions.'

Mr. Patrick Delaney's new Society of Amateur Orchestral Players won a deserved success at the Antient Concert Rooms on April 7. Miss May Mechan was an attractive vocalist, and Master Rathborne displayed uncommon powers as a flautist.

The Antient Concert Rooms (built by the Antient Concerts Society, under Joseph Robinson in 1845) is again being used for its original purpose. Utilised during the war as a show-room by Messrs. Eason, it is gratifying to find the classic venue once more available for concerts, and interest centres in the fact that it was for the Antient Concerts that Mendelssohn scored his 'Hear my prayer' in 1847.

During Easter Week the Father Mathew Feis attracted large numbers of competitors. It is generally looked upon as a stepping-stone for the Feis Ceoil, and there was a potential array of talent. Mr. Sean O'Carroll won the gold medal, and is a most promising tenor vocalist. The adjudicators included the Rev. George O'Neill, Prof. O'Dwyer, and Mr. John Mundy.

The Celebrity Concerts at the Theatre Royal on April 10 and 11 were good value, but much disappointment was expressed at the regretted absence of Madame Guilhermina Suggia. Miss Beatrice Harrison and Miss Terry O'Connor were however very acceptable, while Mr. Vincent O'Brien supplied the place of Mr. Reeves.

Dr. Henry Coward and his Sheffield Choir were an undoubted attraction at the Theatre Royal during the week April 12-17. Although in his seventieth year, the energetic Doctor shows no sign of waning vitality, and the vigour of his conducting compelled admiration.

EDINBURGH

The last of the Reid Orchestral Concerts was given on March 20. The novelty at this event was the Double Concerto for violin and violoncello by Brahms, in which Miss Jelly D'Aranyi and Mr. Arthur Williams did full justice to the solo parts. The former artist also gave a fine interpretation of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and Miss Lucy Romain sang a Mozart Aria.

On March 27 Mr. Max Mossel brought a small Symphony orchestra, under Mr. Landon Ronald, to the last concert of his series. Miss Olga Haley was vocalist, and Mr. Albert Sammons was solo violinist.

Mr. Mark Hambourg drew a large audience to his recital on March 20, when his programme included the 'Moonlight' Sonata, Chopin's Sonata, Op. 35, Liszt's Rhapsody No. 11, Cyril Scott's 'Caprice Chinoise,' and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Dance from 'The Midnight Sun.' On the same evening a novelty was presented to an Edinburgh audience in the form of a concertina band concert, the programme consisting of popular overtures and selections. The band, which came from Clydebank, was under the baton of Mr. Browne, and has been in existence for some ten years.

Mr. De La Haye's Choir gave its first concert on March 30. This is a new organization, and promises to be in the front rank of Edinburgh choirs. It is small in numbers, but excellent in quality, and has a very able conductor. Two new works were introduced, viz., the choral ballads 'The jolly Goshawk,' and 'Kinmont Willie,' by Hamish MacCunn. This was their first public performance, and they can be recommended to choral conductors in search of refreshing and characteristic novelties. The remaining choral number at this concert was Elgar's 'From the Bavarian Highlands.'

On March 31 Mr. Moonie's Choir gave a fine performance of Coleridge-Taylor's great trilogy, 'Hiawatha.' We have heard individual parts of this work here, but had not before had the opportunity of hearing it in its entirety at one concert. The soloists were Miss Marie Thomson, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Frederic Austin. A pleasing feature of the concert was that by permission of the University the Reid Orchestra accompanied.

On the same date an interesting pianoforte and violoncello recital was given by two local artists, Mr. David Bayne (pianoforte) and Mr. Millar Craig (violoncello). Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 5, No. 2, and Brahms's Sonata, Op. 99, were the numbers selected for performance, and were greatly enjoyed. Miss Elsa Barker, a young pianist, had an excellent reception at the same concert for her interpretation of Brahms's Rhapsodie Op. 79, and several short numbers by Schumann and Chopin.

The Royal Choral Union gave a performance of 'Elijah' on Good Friday, when Mr. Greenhouse Allt showed fine dramatic instinct in his interpretation of the work. His tempi were not traditional, but fully justified themselves by the effects that he obtained. The soloists were Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Maurice O'Oisly, and Capt. Herbert Heyner.

GLASGOW

The Ladies' Choir of the Scottish Song Society, under Miss Mary Dixon, gave a very attractive concert on March 22. The choral programme consisted mainly of harmonized settings of Scottish melodies, and these Miss Dixon's well-balanced and well-trained vocalists sang with excellent tone and finish. Members of the Choir contributed solos. The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, a body with a fine record, has been resuscitated after a lapse of several years. At its concert on March 22 a not too ambitious programme contained, however, promise that under the new conductor, Mr. H. A. Carruthers, the Society will readily regain the place it formerly held in the musical life of the city. On the same evening the Bach Choir, conducted for the last time by Mr. J. M. Diack, gave its annual Easter concert in Trinity Church, Mr. John Pullen, of St. Mary's Cathedral, acting as organist.

Among other Easter music-makings were three fine presentations of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion (on March 31 and April 1 and 2), by the choir of Glasgow Cathedral.

As usual, the wholly admirable playing of the organ part by Mr. Herbert Walton was an outstanding feature of the performances, and Mr. Henry Brearley was soloist-in-chief. The custom of marking Eastertide by more or less elaborate services in the churches seems to be growing, Stainer's 'Crucifixion' and excerpts from 'Messiah' being largely laid under contribution. The spring concerts of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir (Mr. H. S. Robertson, conductor) took place on March 23, 24, 25, when the same programme was presented to crowded audiences on each successive evening. Among the choral numbers were Cornelius's 'O Death, thou art the tranquil night,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death in the Sierras,' Elgar's 'Evening Scene,' and Morley's 'My bonny lass.' The singing of the choir throughout the entire programme exhibited the acme of beauty and charm, making detailed notice superfluous, but mention ought to be made of the complete unity of the tenors in the Cornelius number, where the effect was of one finely trained voice performing the part, and of the impressive sonority of the basses in the same piece. Mr. Gervase Elwes as solo vocalist gave several groups of English songs, artistically accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Wilfred Senior. The Orpheus Club, which devotes its energies to Gilbert and Sullivan opera, gave a week's performances of 'The Yeomen of the Guard' in the Theatre Royal (April 12 to 17). The Club is wholly amateur in its membership and conductor (Mr. William Speirs), and by means of its annual performances large sums have been raised for benevolent purposes. This year's proceeds will bring much needed help to the Victoria Infirmary. The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company concluded a successful two months' season at the Theatre Royal on April 10.

The month's music has included concerts by several visiting performers, among these being the Mossel concert, with Mr. Landon Ronald and a symphony orchestra and Mr. Albert Sammons as solo violinist.

HASTINGS

After the first winter season of serious music Hastings and St. Leonards has ever enjoyed, Mr. Julian Clifford and his excellent Orchestra have transferred their activities to Harrogate until they reappear here in the autumn. The last two symphony concerts managed to stir up some enthusiasm for Brahms, whose second Symphony was remarkably well-played, and also for César Franck's unequal example in D minor. The two novelties were Giovanni Clerici's sensational symphonic poem, 'The Triumph of Progress,' and the late Ernest Farrar's Rhapsody, which so vividly portrays the spirit of 'L'Avengro.' Mr. Frank Howgrave gave a perfectly sound, though prosaic, exposition of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor. The series of Concerts culminated in those given for the benefit of the conductor and for the orchestra. These events afforded opportunities for hearing Madame Blanche Marchesi, whose charm of style and personality is as potent as ever it was, and the inimitable Belgian pianist M. de Greef.

A good all-round reading of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was conducted by Mr. Leonard O'Connor at St. John's Church in Lent, while the elaborate Easter music under Mr. Allan Biggs at Christ Church attracted hundreds more people than the big fabric would hold.

This month will witness the annual competitive festival for choirs, solo singers and players, vocal and string quartets, organ playing, and composition, of which Mr. John Lockey is the moving spirit.

There was an interesting group of recitals given during April on the Lewis organ at St. Barnabas', Tunbridge Wells, by Messrs. H. Goss Custard (Bach, Elgar, Wagner), Allan Biggs (mostly Bach), W. W. Starmer, Norman Colлие, and Dr. W. H. Speer.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT

A hearing of the 'Divine Poem' at the Philharmonic Society's Concert on March 16, following previous performances of the beautiful first Symphony (without the choral Finale) and the much more complex 'Poem of Ecstasy' has enabled us to form a fairly complete impression of Scriabin's later work. Apart from its avowed aims, it is sufficient to enjoy the beauty and mastery of the music.

without seeking to speculate deeply upon the source of its inspiration. Whether taken as music written round a definite programme with easily recognizable leading themes, or heard as absolute music, the 'Divine Poem' is conceived in the grand manner and infused with a lofty spirit. It seems to carry us a step further in realising the possibilities of descriptive thought by musical sounds. In the modernity of the expression there is little that is disturbing, any more than in César Franck's D minor Symphony with which the music of the 'Divine Poem' has some affinity, indefinite though it may be. The work had an appreciative interpreter in Mr. Albert Coates, whose programme also contained the 'Tannhäuser' Overture and the Introduction to Act 3 of 'The Mastersingers.' Distinction was added by the exquisite playing of Madame Suggia in two Violoncello Concertos—Lalo in D and Saint-Saëns in A minor.

The tenth and closing concert of the Philharmonic Society's season was conducted by Sir Henry Wood on March 30. The programme opened with Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto in G, which was followed by a performance of Dvorák's delightful 'From the New World' which will long live in memory, especially the slow movement, in which Sir Henry entirely realised the mood of the dreamily lovely music. Herbert Howells's all too short 'Puck's Minuet' is quaint and full of the humour that is so precious a possession. Apparently very few people took the opportunity of leaving before the last item, Richard Strauss's 'Don Juan,' the performance of which caused no special qualms. The vocalist was Miss Felice Lyne, who delighted all hearers with her flute-like warblings and the extraordinary range and flexibility of her voice.

Dr. Arthur W. Pollitt conducted a spirited performance of the Motet in eight parts, 'I wrestle and pray,' whose composer was most likely the J. Christoph Bach described by Spitta as Sebastian's uncle, and by Bitter as his second cousin.

The fourth and closing concert of Mr. Max Mossel's series was held on March 20, when Mr. Landon Ronald conducted a small but very competent orchestra, locally provided, in Mozart's G minor Symphony, and in Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' Overture and Violin Concerto. The solo in the latter work was admirably played by Mr. Albert Sammons, who was content to interpret the spirit of the music rather than seek an opportunity for the display of mere virtuosity. Some songs artistically sung by Miss Olga Haley were well received. Stravinsky's 'Fire Bird' made some amends for the abandonment of the 'Siegfried Idyll' owing to the non-arrival of parts.

The Tobin Trio—Mr. John Tobin (pianoforte), Mr. John Lawson (violin), and Mr. Walter Hatton (violoncello)—gave an interesting concert at Crane Hall on March 17, when Miss Elysabeth Dyson contributed effective contralto songs, notably Bantock's 'Song of the Genie.' Thanks are due to Mr. Tobin and Mr. Hatton for their artistic collaboration in a first performance of Elgar's Violoncello Concerto with pianoforte accompaniment.

Apparently unchilled by the smallness of his audience, Mr. Mark Hambourg gave a wonderful display of 'higher pianism' at his recital on March 24. Among other things he played Malipiero's 'Barlumi,' a remarkable example of how young Italy has learnt the new musical language and acquired the modern, or perchance futurist, plan of harmony. Judged by 'Barlumi,' its composer is not lagging behind, but is distinctly in the van and marching with a strong individual stride in addition.

At the fifth concert of the Rodewald Society, on February 16, the Catterall Quartet played Smetana's short and melodious String Quartet 'From my life,' with its tragic undercurrent; the Adagio from Goossens's Quartet in C, music which is disturbing and even discordant in its modernity; Speaight's plaintive fragment 'The Lonely Shepherd'; and Beethoven's Quartet in A, No. 5, a noble number very well interpreted. The same Quartet gave Beethoven's Op. 132 ('The Sick Man') at the sixth and closing concert of the series on March 22. The work compelled attention in a transcendent performance, in which the strength and sonority of the four instruments at times gave the impression of a larger number. Equally good was the performance of Arensky's delightful Variations on a theme by Tchaikovsky, and of Ravel's Quartet in F.

The Rodewald Society may well be congratulated upon the success of its season. The concerts have been extremely well attended, no doubt owing to the attractive programmes and splendid performances by the Catterall Quartet.

The project of a Municipal Orchestra for Liverpool is apparently in a fair way of being speedily realised. The idea was launched here at a public meeting of the British Music Society at which Mr. Dan Godfrey and Dr. Arthur Somervell spoke, and since then further advocacy has been provided by a series of special articles which appeared in the Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury. The proposal has been warmly welcomed by musical people, while also receiving the approval of more than one shrewd member of the City Council, a body primarily concerned with the economic administration of the City rates. But the contingency of a public charge has been promptly met at the present time by two public-spirited citizens who are the first subscribers to a guarantee fund. The Lord Mayor has expressed his willingness to receive a deputation to discuss the matter, and all that remains to ensue is the evolution of a definite scheme. Concrete proposals were discussed at a meeting convened by the Liverpool Centre of the British Music Society and held in the Rushworth Club-room on April 14.

A great and good work is being done in a quiet way by the ladies who carry on the Liverpool Union of Girls' Clubs, an organization which seeks to improve the spiritual and bodily welfare of working girls whose lives are too often spent in most depressing surroundings. It has been found that these girls are readily taught to love class-singing, and at the annual massed-singing festival held in Sun Hall on March 27, some surprising results were obtained from a highly responsive choir drawn from twenty clubs and conducted by Mr. William Scott. The pieces included Easthope Martin's 'Come to the Fair,' Aylward's 'Song of the Bow,' Cecil Sharp's 'Coasts of High Barbary,' and Vaughan Williams's 'Cuckoo and Nightingale.' There was also some part-singing by the prize choirs in the recent competition, notably the St. Helen's Girls' Institute and Holy Cross Girls' Club. Seven winning choirs joined in singing the test-pieces, Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Man o' Dreams,' and Dr. Alcock's 'A Pedlar of Dreams.' The Cathedral organist, Mr. H. Goss Custard, is also identified with the movement, having acted as one of the adjudicators, as also did Miss Edith Roberts, whose two-part 'Gondola Song' was an item in the programme.

Instrumental soloists at recent Crane Hall musical Wednesday afternoons have included Miss Ethel Midgley, Mr. E. S. Mitchell, and Miss Winifred Purnall (pianists) and Mr. Walter Hatton (violoncello). The singers were Miss Myrtle Jones, Miss Anne Thursfield, Miss Ethel Penhall, Miss Edina Thraves, Mr. John Pegg, and Mr. John Lindop.

Organized by Mr. W. J. Riley, the Philharmonic Society's energetic secretary, the usual free performance of 'Messiah' was given to the poor (and others) in St. George's Hall on Good Friday afternoon, with Mr. Branscombe as conductor and Mr. Ellingford as organist. The vocal principals were Miss Ina Hill, Miss Phyllis Archibald, Mr. Parry Jones, and Mr. Kingsley Lark.

A welcome departure from the stereotyped rut of Lenten cantatas was the performance of Bach's 'St. John' Passion by the St. Nicholas Parish Church choir, conducted by the able organist, Mr. C. W. Bridson. There was an augmented choir and a small orchestra, and a notable vocal soloist in Mr. W. H. Cross.

The old-established Liverpool Choral Society gave a good and steady choral performance of Handel's 'Samson' on March 27, conducted by Mr. P. H. Ingram. The vocal principals were Miss Esta d'Argo, Miss M. Ballour, Mr. John Harrison, and Mr. Hamilton Harris. Mr. John Lawson led the band, with Mr. Branscombe at the organ. In another direction the musical activities of the Bank of Liverpool and Martin's Amateur Operatic Society deserve commendatory mention for the clever performances they gave (with orchestra) at Crane Hall of Edward German's 'Merrie England,' conducted by Mr. John Tobin. The cast contained notable principals in Mr. W. Brown (Wilkins), Mr. Spencer Hayes (Raleigh), Mrs. Arthur Wall (Bessie), and Mrs. C. Barlow (Queen Elizabeth).

The Warrington Musical Society gave a performance of 'Elijah' on March 25, to the success of which the extremely fine singing of Mr. Horace Stevens in the title-rôle largely contributed. Miss Elsie Suddaby, Mrs. Smallshaw, and Mr. Walter Glynn were the other vocal principals, and Mr. Frank H. Crossley conducted.

Choral Societies whose doings enliven their respective districts include the Crosby, Waterloo, and Blundellsands Choral Union, and the Neston and Parkgate Choral Union. Conducted by Mr. John Tobin the former Society sang Stanford's 'Phaëdra Crohoore' on March 24, and the Neston singers, whose male voices are rather on the weak side, were conducted by Mr. A. B. Coleman in Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' on April 9.

The St. Helens Male-Voice Glee Club, under its able trainer and forceful conductor, Dr. S. B. Siddall, well-sustained its old reputation in Picton Hall on April 13, singing with fine tone and ensemble in part-songs by Elgar, J. W. Elliott, and Prothero. The choir also sustained the choral background in Brahms's Alto Rhapsody, in which the solo was expressively sung by Miss Enid Cruickshank, of English opera fame.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

This month's record is of a more miscellaneous character than has obtained recently. The big concerts series are practically ended, and chamber-music has emerged from the overshadowing presence of opera and orchestral performances. The Tuesday Noon Concerts have maintained a more consistently high level recently, stimulated doubtless by the increasing tendency to spread such 'snack' luncheon concerts over the whole week. Monday and Saturday are now the only days when no music can be heard during lunch-hour, for during April two new series have arisen—an orchestral series playing the lighter sort of stuff in quite capable style under Mr. E. C. Pickerill, and a popular series under the direction of Mr. Charles Armand. For the information of visitors I add that these mid-day music-makings are all held in Houldsworth Hall, Deansgate, two minutes' walk from the Royal Exchange, and within a stone's-throw of at least a dozen cafés. They last from 1.15 to 2 p.m., cost eightpence, and on Tuesday and Friday the programmes are almost invariably of the severer type of instrumental or vocal chamber-music (occasionally choral), whilst Wednesday and Thursday are usually of a more popular order. Smoking is the rule.

On March 30 Mr. Carl Fuchs was warmly welcomed back to central Manchester concert rooms after his long sojourn at Ruhleben. Max Reger's unaccompanied Suite for violoncello in D minor, played by Mr. Fuchs, was a work of unrelieved tedium. For such music the Germans themselves have used the term 'fabricated,' and even distinguished men do not always avoid turning out this mechanical sort of stuff. New settings of three of Rossetti's 'Boccaccio' Sonnets recently composed by Julius Harrison, interested very much. These 'Fiammetta' Sonnets, and one of the miscellaneous poems, 'Sudden light,' were full of enthralling beauty for me—colour, warmth, balance of design and exquisite detail. They were sung by Miss Olive Turner with convincing interpretative power, though her voice displayed only occasional purity of tone. Captain Francis Harford has also brought to these Tuesday audiences two very searching programmes of Schubert lyrics. His approaching departure from the staff of the Royal Manchester College removes a first-rate Bach master and an artist of very comprehensive attainments. No one person has more consistently worked up in these noontide audiences an interest in out-of-the-way pianoforte music than Mr. Edward Isaacs, and now a series of evening recitals testify to his hold on a public mainly the creation of his own untiring labours.

The University Musical Society is now more firmly established than ever, and the bond between it and the Royal Manchester College of Music, only a few yards away, was clearly revealed on March 16, when Dr. Brodsky and two former students who have 'made good'—Messrs. R. J. Forbes and Charles Neville—played and sang to a University audience in the beautiful Gothic Whitworth Hall. How this enriched the beauty of Elgar's Violin Sonata can best be realised by any who have been fortunate enough to hear such music in our Cathedrals.

Elgar's Quintet on March 18 received its first performance by the Brodsky Quartet, assisted by Miss Lucy Pierce, who, of all the pianists who have emerged from the Royal Manchester College, has displayed the greatest aptitude for ensemble work in chamber music. The Brodsky Quartet, after twenty-five years' labour, has lost its viola-player by the death of Mr. Simon Speelman. An original member of the Hallé band, the first conductor of Saturday orchestral promenade concerts here, and for nearly forty years conductor of the Blackpool North Pier concerts, he was, until quite recent years, regarded also as the prince of viola players in this country. Elgar had often commented on the beauty of Speelman's playing of the 'Sleep' motif in 'Gerontius,' or the pastoral theme in 'In the South,' and he was equally famous in the part for his instrument in Berlioz's 'Harold in Italy' Symphony. Every lover of the new Elgar Quintet was eagerly anticipating Speelman's treatment of the slow movement, but it was not to be. Taken ill that week, he died before its close.

Considering the hold which music has at Manchester, it seems strange that in the last twenty years there have been so few who have excelled in composition. The Manchester School of Dramatists has attained much distinction. When will Manchester match this in music? The names of Mr. Edmondstone Duncan, Mr. Agate, Mr. Isaacs, Mr. J. H. Foulds, spring to mind, and more recently Mr. Baynton-Power and Mr. Eric Fogg have shown conspicuous ability. On March 30 the British Music Society organized a meeting at which Mr. Leigh Henry spoke at length on the compositions of Mr. Eric Fogg, aged seventeen, son of Mr. Charles H. Fogg (organist to the Hallé Society) and Madame Sadler-Fogg, and in the course of the evening some twenty-five of his compositions for voice and instrument were performed. Even the longest musical memory recalls nothing like this before at Manchester. Mr. Henry found in this music of Mr. Fogg, clarity, integrity, directness, and concentration; little of pathos, no warping sentiment or of eroticism. He was most happily presented through the playing of Miss Kathleen Moorhouse in the 'Phantasy' Violoncello Sonata, and many songs beautifully sung by Miss Bella Baillie. At a concert of the Sunday League series four nights later 'Sea Sheen' by Mr. Fogg and a Ballade in C sharp minor by Mr. Baynton-Power, as well as two orchestral sketches by the conductor, Mr. Walter Mudie, all found places in the programme. Mr. Fogg has shared in the award under the Cobbett competition for a 'Dance Phantasy' for string quartet.

The Peace Choir organized last summer for a monster outdoor festival is to give a similar performance in June, and next month I hope to give more details.

The Pageant Choir, conducted by Mr. W. Arthur Lomas, is made up of contingents from about a score of church choirs and three choral societies, and is the outcome of the St. Dunstan's Pageant Choir formed last autumn. It is intended to continue its good work on behalf of any charitable institution that aims at making brighter the lives of poor and needy children, and a typical programme on March 31 closed with Bridge's 'Flag of England.'

After a continuous musical tradition of exactly a hundred and fifty years (started in 1770), the Manchester Gentlemen's Concerts look like coming to an inglorious finish. For many years prior to the erection of the Midland Hotel they were held in their own concert hall, on the site of which the hotel was built. It was originally an exclusive subscription society. Latterly this restriction had been relaxed, and for many years orchestral concerts had alternated with recitals. Declining support and increased expenses led to the adoption of a purely recital policy, and even this now shows signs of failing. The Society's annual meeting was held on March 30, when, despite a special whip, only fourteen persons were present, half of whom were directors. Possibly a means of securing the survival of this old organization may be found in associating its venerable traditions with the chamber-music life of the community, much as the orchestral life is bound up with the Hallé Orchestra.

The O'Mara Opera Company has been here for a month (March 22 to April 17), under the joint conductorship of Mr. R. J. Forbes and Mr. W. J. Hekker. Its work is on quite a modest scale, conformable to the dimensions of the repertory Gaiety Theatre.

The Co-operative Wholesale Society, about whose musical propaganda I wrote last month, concluded its season on March 17 and 18, the second night being an overflow meeting imposed by the demand for tickets. The soloists were Madame Kirkby Lunn, M. Arthur de Greef, and Mr. Frank Mullings, the latter being replaced by M. Rosing on the second night. The male-voice choir, conducted through the season by Mr. Alfred Higson, needs to explore the interpretative side of its art. A quotation from Beethoven printed on its programmes, 'Music should strike fire out of a man,' needs observance in choral circles here, and one hopes that the more constant association of Mr. Hamilton Harty with the Hallé Choir will yield more of this quality than was evident on March 25 in Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Hamilton Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter.' Only in the 'Joy! Joy! all over Joy!' finale did the Choir find any freedom.

Respighi's 'Fountains of Rome' symphonic poem was repeated as a result of its welcome last December. It creates an atmosphere successively suggestive of Dawn, Noonday glory, and Sundown, and its imaginative power is more interesting than its clever play with the externals of fountains in the Julian valley or the Villa Medici. This Italian, in his suggestion of dazzling, blinding sunlight at high noon, produces an æsthetic sensation which for me was something of a revelation. Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' and Elgar's Violoncello Concerto must stand over for next month's notice.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE AND DISTRICT

The Armstrong College Choral Society gave a programme on March 17 which was a delight from start to finish. The most noteworthy feature of these concerts is the consistently high level of the music chosen for performance. On this occasion the Society's singing of Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the unknown region,' realised the atmosphere of mystery and awe with which the work is charged. Three of W. G. Whittaker's clever North County Folk-Song settings were presented with fine humour, and two traditional religious songs by Gustav Holst completed the choral portion of the programme. Mr. William Hendry's tasteful singing of a group of songs by John Ireland, and a few Eastern County Folk-Songs were also a feature of the evening, while Madame Blanche Newcombe showed great artistic insight in songs by César Franck, Duparc, Grechaninov, Handel, Beethoven, Schubert, and Schumann. Messrs. G. W. Danskin and A. F. Floyd accompanied the choir in a two-pianoforte arrangement of the accompaniments, also giving a fine performance of Bach's Sonata in E flat, No. 1 (originally written for harpsichord with two manuals and pedals), arranged as a duet for two pianofortes. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

On March 19 the Newcastle Symphony Orchestra gave a concert, the programme of which consisted of the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings, Hamilton Harty's 'Fantasy Scenes,' and Mendelssohn's 'Scotch Symphony.' Madame Agnes Nicholls sang songs by Bach, Walker, Harty, and Elgar, and Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted.

The Philharmonic Orchestra gave a programme on Sunday evening, March 21, which included the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3, 'Romeo and Juliet' (Tchaikovsky), 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance' (Baltour Gardiner), 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and the waltz from Strauss's 'Rosenkavalier.' Mr. W. Hayward was the vocalist, and Mr. E. L. Bainton conducted. A performance of 'Elijah' was given by the Central Hall Choral Society on March 24.

Messrs. H. Sheepshanks and E. Sharp gave a pianoforte and violin recital on March 25, at which the principal items were Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 24, and Elgar's Op. 82. Both works were thoughtfully interpreted.

By far the outstanding recent event has been the splendid performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion by the Bach Choir. By way of preparing the audience, a lecture was given on the work, a week previously, by Mr. W. G. Whittaker, with illustrations by the choir. The actual performance took place on March 27, and in order to present it without cuts, the first part was given in the afternoon and the second in the evening. The strength of the choral and instrumental body was approximately the same as that at Bach's disposal at Leipsic, the advantage of this arrangement being that many beautiful and intimate nuances were possible, which are often submerged when large forces are employed. The principal soloists were Mrs. George Dodds, Miss A. Lawton, Messrs. J. Vine, G. Clapperton, and E. J. Potts. The ripieno soprano part in the first chorus was sung by a choir of girls from the local secondary schools. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted, the solemnity and intense human feeling of the work being thoroughly realised. It would be difficult to pick out any performer or item for special comment where everything was so beautifully done and the result so wonderfully impressive.

On March 19, the Hexham Gentlemen's Glee Club gave a programme including items by Battye, Webbe, Horsley, and Bantock.

The Stocksfield Ladies' Madrigal Society gave a concert on March 18, at which Elgar's 'The Snow,' Walford Davies's 'The Shepherd,' and Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' were performed.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

The Albert Hall Choir gave some delightful examples of madrigal- and part-singing on March 16, when Mr. Johnson's training was perhaps most perfectly displayed in the delicacy of expressive effect. Specially charming were Morley's 'Fire, fire my heart,' and Walmisley's 'Sweete flowers.' Miss Phyllis Lett's smoothly-resonant contralto was heard in a wide range of songs, and Mr. George Baker gave admirable interpretations of modern works, including the 'Repita' of Eric Coates (the Nottinghamshire composer). Mr. Baker's baritone voice is of attractive quality, and he proved himself a singer of temperament. Mr. Stanley Kaye, the young Sheffield pianist, has become a favourite locally, and he played with considerable effect the pianoforte part of Grieg's Concerto in A minor, the orchestra being represented by Mr. Johnson at the organ. The Nottingham University College concert on March 17 attracted a large audience. The chief choral work was Coleridge-Taylor's graceful 'Kubla Khan,' in which very good results were attained by the choir, and Madame Glen Morton sang expressively. The orchestra played excellently in movements from Haydn's 'Surprise' and Beethoven's Symphony No. 1. Mr. Harold Glover, the possessor of an exceptionally fine baritone, sang admirably. Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet was introduced for the first time at Nottingham, but it was regrettable that owing to the length of the programme only the first movement could be given. Prof. Allen Gill and Prof. A. Henderson were the conductors, and Mr. F. Mountney was the principal violinist.

Miss Helen Guest was associated with Mr. Johnson on March 21 in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor. This clever Sheffield pianist plays with rare technical skill, and her reading of the Chopin Nocturne in D flat was a perfect example of romantic interpretation. Miss Guest gave Percy Grainger's 'Shepherds' Hey' as an encore; her other items including Chopin's Etude in C minor and Valse in F. Mr. Johnson's solos were a Franck Choral, Dvořák's 'Humoreske,' and the 'Rakoczy' March from Berlioz's 'Faust.'

The well-known baritone, Mr. Charles Tree, gave a lecture-recital on March 22, which was a skilful demonstration of vocal art supplemented by sound advice to musical aspirants. Three most charming examples were 'Little feet come home' (Carlisle), 'Reaping' (Coningsby Clarke), and 'Maiden of Norven' (arranged by M. Lawson). A pleasing diversity was lent to the programme by Mr. William Turner's Girls' Prize Choir, whose performance was characterized by its customary perfection of balance, attack, and tone. Mr. Johnson accompanied Mr. Tree's songs.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society has the reputation of excelling in its 'Elijah' performances, and quite sustained its laurels on March 25. The Baal choruses were admirable, 'Thanks be to God' was notably buoyant, and in 'He watching over Israel' the choir proved itself equally commendable for smoothness of tone and delicacy of expression. An outstanding feature of the evening was the work of the double quartet, all members of the choir. Miss Jennie Bentley, a well-known local vocalist, sang the second soprano music with conscientious effect. The principals were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Ethel Peake, Mr. Sam Hemsall, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Prof. Allen Gill conducted, and the orchestra, led by Mr. Fred Mountney, was excellent throughout.

On Palm Sunday (March 28), at St. Barnabas' Cathedral, the Passion music was sung to the restored Vatican chant, which had not previously been heard at Nottingham. A huge audience assembled in the afternoon for Mr. B. Johnson's Passion-tide cantata, 'Ecce Homo,' when the work was admirably interpreted under Mr. Marshall Harding, the Albert Hall Choir being augmented by the choir of St. Andrew's Church. The soloists were Messrs. Charles Keywood, Charles Morley, Herbert Smith, and C. Nugent. Mr. Johnson was the organist.

The St. Mary's Choral Society has been in existence only five months, but has already given abundant proof of fine training under Dr. F. Radcliffe. A performance of Bach's Passion Music was given on March 30, the choral singing being extremely smooth and the tone well balanced. The principals were Mrs. C. A. Howell, Miss Winifred Wood, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Charles Keywood. Miss Cantelo was the pianist, and Mr. B. Johnson presided at the organ. Dr. F. Radcliffe conducted with his customary insight. On Good Friday performances of Stainer's 'Crucifixion' were given at several places of worship, and Maunders' 'Olivet to Calvary' was chosen by Halifax Place Chapel and also by other choirs.

A creditable performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' was given by the Long Eaton Choral Society on March 18, conducted by Mr. Ernest Smeeton, the principals being Miss Clytie Hine, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Joseph Farrington. The choir met the dramatic periods of the work with commendable precision and power. Mr. F. Mountney was leader of the orchestra.

Derby was visited by Mark Hambourg on March 25, when the celebrated pianist's programme ranged from Bach's 'Italian Concerto,' Blow's Suite in D major, and Arne's Sonata in G major, to Chopin, Brahms, Cyril Scott, Percy Grainger, and the bizarre 'Barlumi' of Malipiero. Derby United Choirs gave a performance of 'Messiah' on Good Friday in the Temperance Hall, and Derby Orpheus Society gave a concert on March 28, in aid of the Children's Hospital Fund.

The promoters of the Leicester Chamber Concerts must have been encouraged by a noticeably better attendance on March 16, the last concert of the series. The Modern Quartet was heard in Dvorák's Quartet, Op. 87, and Beethoven's Quartet in G, Op. 18, No. 2. Mr. Jack Rosselson and Miss Constance Hardcastle contributed songs. It is sincerely to be hoped that enough support will be forthcoming to make it possible to continue these concerts next season.

The many admirers and supporters of that well-established body, the Mechanics' Institution Operatic Society, were glad to witness and hear its successful resuscitation in a series of performances of 'Iolanthe' on March 15 and five successive evenings. Under the direction of Mr. Charles Pindar the representations were all admirably conceived, principals, chorus, and orchestra acquitting themselves well. Local charities have good reason gratefully to remember the work of this Society.

The High Pavement Choral Society resumed its activities with a performance of Bennett's 'May Queen' on April 12. The choir dispensed with an orchestra, and gave an admirable interpretation, revealing good tone and attack. Miss Edith Shipley delivered the soprano music delightfully, Mrs. Griffith sang well in the contralto numbers, Mr. E. Wainer's robust baritone was well suited to the part of Robin Hood, and Mr. Cooper proved an acceptable tenor. Miss F. M. Towers accompanied.

A big choral success was secured by the Oriana Choral Society on March 19 with a recital of Edward German's 'Merrie England,' under the composer's conductorship.

Mr. German's reading of his work was most interesting, and both choir and band loyally responded to his demands. The soloists were Miss Annie Rees, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. George Baker. Mr. Mark Hambourg's Leicester programme on March 22 included Beethoven's 'Moonlight' Sonata and Chopin's Sonata Op. 35. The Leicester Philharmonic Society presented Berlioz's 'Faust' on March 24 with a band and choir of three hundred and fifty performers. Mr. W. J. Bunney conducted, the principals being Miss Lilian Stiles-Allen, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Charles Tree.

The Lincoln Amateur Operatic Society began a week's performances of 'Les Cloches de Corneville' on April 12, with great success.

The I.S.M. Conference opened at the Nottingham University College on April 14, when the gathering was inaugurated by the Deputy Mayor. The proceedings included a paper by Prof. Henderson, and a statement with regard to the registration of teachers by Mr. F. Roscoe, secretary of the Teachers' Registration Council.

SOUTH WALES

This month South Wales has been a veritable land of song, with a plethora of oratorios, singing festivals, and Eisteddfodau, and this notwithstanding the counter-attractions afforded by the many dramatic societies recently sprung up, in producing plays by native authors.

On March 16 the Bethlehem Choral Society, Cardiff, performed Haydn's 'Creation,' and this work was also presented to a Port Talbot audience on March 27 by the Grove Place augmented choir of that town. On March 17, at Cory Hall, Cardiff, the Star Street Congregational Choir gave Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' followed by miscellaneous items. Mr. Charles Jessop's 'Galilean' was given at Caerphilly by the Caerphilly and District Choir of two hundred voices, under Mr. T. Rowland Davies, with orchestra; and the same work was performed in the neighbouring district of Bedwas by the United Baptist choirs with Mr. Beynon Jones as conductor. A very fine performance of 'Elijah' was given at Tredegar by the Choral Society of that place on March 20, under the baton of Mr. W. I. R. Davies, with Madame Laura Evans-Williams, Miss Dilys Jones, Messrs. Dan Jones and Hubert Brown as principals, and Mr. Huxley, Ebbw Vale, as leader of the orchestra. 'Elijah' was also performed on March 27 at Llangennech, near Llanelli, by the Salem Choir, conducted by Mr. J. R. Davies, and assisted by the Llanelli Orchestral Society. The newly-formed Choral Society of Penarth gave a pleasurable interpretation of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' under the capable conductorship of Mr. Downing, at the Paget Rooms, Penarth, on March 24. To the miscellaneous programme which followed Mr. Alfred Heather contributed some ballads, and M. Zacharewitsch, the eminent violinist, some violin solos.

With a magnificent performance of 'Messiah,' given with due solemnity on Good Friday at Park Hall, to a packed audience, the Cardiff Musical Society's season came to a close. The choir of two hundred and fifty voices, under the conductorship of Mr. T. E. Aylward, was assisted by the Misses Annie Rees and Elsie Chambers, and Messrs. Walter Hyde and Glanville Davies as soloists, with Mr. Tonking at the organ. On the same day, the St. Woollos Church Choir, Newport, gave Stainer's 'Crucifixion,' while at Machen, Lee Williams's 'Bethany' was sung by the choir of St. John's Church, and at Penrhwi-ceiber, in the Aberdare Valley, the Carmel Congregational Choir gave a fine performance of the 'Stabat Mater.' On the following Saturday evening the Cardiff Blue Ribbon Choir, conducted by Mr. Jenkin Morris—with Mesdames Ethel Thomas-Fairburn and Morfydd Williams, and Messrs. D. Thomas and R. Chivers as soloists—gave a capital interpretation of 'Messiah.'

Singing festivals, an important feature of Welsh religious life for improving the singing of the sanctuary, were held by the various denominations throughout the whole of South Wales this Eastertide.

Prof. Walford Davies, the musical director to the University of Wales, speaking at the annual prize-day of the County School, Aberystwith, strongly advocated the holding of short concerts weekly to encourage ensemble singing—such as part-songs, quartets, and concerted pieces—among the pupils, in preference to solo-singing, as it was in this direction lay the greatest value of their musical output, while tending to inculcate a love of music and inspire esprit de corps.

Pontypool has appointed a director of music for its newly-acquired park. This assuredly is a sign of the times.

At a concert given by the celebrated Williamstown male-voice party on March 18, at Clydach Vale, in the Rhondda Valley, the chairman, Dr. T. L. Morgan, deprecated the present state of the Competitive Eisteddfod, as it did not tend to elevate art. Another weakness of Welsh music was the want of orchestral music, and it was imperative that a Welsh National Orchestra should be established. Without it Wales could not soar to the highest flights, as her wings were clipped.

The question of a National College of Music attached to the Welsh University seems to be reviving, though long in abeyance owing to the war.

On April 13 a meeting convened by the Lord Mayor of Cardiff was held at the City Hall, to enlist the sympathies of the musical people of Cardiff with the Welsh National Orchestra movement. A nucleus has already been formed in conjunction with the South Wales Musical Festival, but it was felt that to make it truly national the metropolis of Wales should take its share in the responsibility of such an inauguration. The Lord Mayor, in the course of his remarks, questioned the feasibility of a levy on the rates at this juncture to aid in its permanent support. A letter was read from Prof. Walford Davies expressing his appreciation of the projected scheme of establishing a National Orchestra. Dr. David Evans, of University College, pointed out that there was a wealth of talent in the Principality which only needed consolidation to make it effective. It was decided to ask the Welsh National Council of Music to call a conference of representatives throughout Wales to discuss proposals for launching the Orchestra on a national basis.

YORKSHIRE

BRADFORD

At the Bradford Subscription Concert on March 19, Mr. Felix Salmond was to have played Elgar's Violoncello Concerto, but for some reason or other, Saint-Saëns' Concerto was substituted, which was a disappointment, though of course the work was finely played. Mr. Salmond was, if possible, even happier still in his performance of 'Kol Nidrei.' Mr. Albert Coates and the Hallé Orchestra gave an exceedingly fine performance of Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' which they had played at Leeds two days before, and some Wagner pieces made up the rest of the programme. On the following day the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave its final concert. Mr. Julius Harrison, who has made a very good impression during this his first season with the Orchestra, conducted his own quaint and pleasing little series of 'Worcestershire Pieces,' and another novelty was a tone-poem by C. Jenkins, 'The Magic Cauldron,' which was clever, if not very spontaneous. Mr. William Lindsay was the soloist in a refined rather than vigorous performance of Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte Concerto, and Miss Alice Moxon was a very pleasing vocalist. Pachmann appeared on April 12 in a Chopin recital, and filled the great space of St. George's Hall. He realised Chopin's lighter characteristics perfectly, but in so huge a room any chance of intimacy was of course impossible.

HULL

Hull has been busy of late. I am unable to speak from personal experience of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society on March 18, when Glazounov's C minor Symphony was in the programme, or of the performance of 'Everyman' by the Hull Harmonic Society on March 19, but I can testify to the very excellent performance by the Hull Vocal Society of 'Gerontius' on March 25. Dr. Coward has never done better as conductor, and he was well supported by his choir, while the solo parts were quite exceptionally good. Mr. Coates, who was on familiar ground, made a great impression, and Mr. Ranalow was completely satisfying in the bass solos. The part of the Angel was taken by Miss Astra Desmond, who fitted it perfectly, her clear, pure voice, certainty of intonation, and quiet refinement being precisely what the character demands.

LEEDS

The event of the month has been the two Elgar concerts, given on March 23, 24, by the Leeds Choral Union. Sir Edward Elgar conducted his 'Dream of Gerontius' and 'The Apostles,' and the choir, trained by Dr. Coward, has never sung better. In spite of their familiar task, the singers seemed keener than ever, and the great choruses in 'Gerontius' can rarely have been so brilliantly done. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Messrs. John Coates (who was at his best as Gerontius, singing without book), Heyner, Radford, and Knowles, an admirable selection, who helped materially in the highly sympathetic performances. At Leeds Parish Church the annual service at which the 'St. Matthew' Passion is given took place on March 29, and presented some distinct improvements, a small orchestra of strings and flute, with organ and pianoforte, having a generally satisfying effect. Miss Suddaby, Miss Etty Ferguson, Messrs. Middleton and Herbert Parker took the solo parts, and Mr. Willoughby Williams conducted. An overcrowded church indicated how much this great work has grown in popular appreciation. The Leeds Bohemian Chamber Concerts ended their season on March 31, when the Pianoforte Quintets of Schumann and César Franck, with Brahms's C minor String Quartet, were creditably played by Messrs. Ghent and Perkins, Miss Simms, and Mr. Haynes, with Miss Frise Smith as pianist. Mr. Ghent's own series of concerts ended on March 22, Frank Bridge's Pianoforte Quintet in D being heard for the first time at Leeds. Though not so individual as this composer's later works, it has a breadth and melodic charm that make it generally acceptable. Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet closed the concert very pleasantly. Messrs. Ghent, Perkins, Moxon, and Giessing, with Miss Frise Smith as pianist, did justice to the music. On March 30 Mr. George Parker gave a vocal recital with a highly interesting programme that included the 'Serious Songs' of Brahms. On the previous day he gave a similar recital at Ilkley, his songs being all British, and mostly contemporary. Martin Shaw was drawn upon for several, and Stanford was also well represented, John Ireland, Ernest Bullock, and Geoffrey Shaw being among other names whose works were selected for performance. English composers occupied half the programme of Mr. Alban Hamer's organ recital at All Saints' Church on March 20, when Reubke's splendid Fugue in C minor was another striking feature.

YORK

The Passion music ('St. Matthew') was given in York Cathedral on Sunday, March 28, and Dr. Bairstow secured a very impressive performance. One wished for a good soloist in the soprano airs, for choir-boys, well drilled though they be, cannot be expected to sing with any elasticity. Miss Dorothy Parkinson, although not quite free from mannerism, sang the contralto solos well, her voice proving highly effective, Mr. Gervase Elwes, as Narrator, was unfortunately too hoarse to do himself complete justice, and Mr. George Parker was thoroughly satisfying in the part of Jesus. Miss Rhoda Backhouse was excellent in the violin solo.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS

At Halifax, on March 18, the Madrigal Society gave a concert which was even more enjoyable than usual. The programme was not overcrowded, and had some coherence, affording a very interesting survey of British part-music from the early 'Sumer is icumen in' to recent pieces by Ethel Smyth and Julius Harrison, both admirable in their respective ways. Mr. Mullings, the only soloist, followed suit in an historic series of songs. Mr. H. Shepley does wonders with his choir, whose performances reached the singers' usual high level—they could hardly surpass it. On March 26 the last of the Chamber Concerts was sustained by the Catterall Quartet which played, in addition to familiar numbers by Beethoven and Borodin, Dr. Ernest Walker's altogether delightful 'Phantasie,' a work in which a fine musicianship is made the means of expressing ideas that are refined and beautiful.

At Huddersfield Mr. Kaye's enterprising and well-drilled orchestra, the strings of which are chiefly amateur, gave a concert whose only fault was that it attempted too much. So long and difficult a programme not only runs the risk of tiring the hearers, but must enhance the difficulty of adequate full rehearsal. Better results would have been attained had at least a quarter of the programme been sacrificed. Miss Myra Hess played the Grieg Concerto with admirable zest and freedom, and was well accompanied, while a striking feature of the concert was the very clever performance of Bach's D minor Concerto for two violins by two little girls, Jane Marcus and Jessie Hinchliffe, whose charming playing suggested that Mr. Kaye is a most capable teacher. Mr. Mullings was the vocalist.

Musical Notes from Abroad

MILAN

'Il piccolo Marat' (Little Marat) is the name of a new opera by Pietro Mascagni. Written to a libretto by Forzano, this latest work of the maestro was to have been given at the Costanzi at Rome during the present opera season, but the agreement was embarrassed by certain conditions imposed by Mascagni, with the result that it was no longer included in the repertoire. The libretto is after all only in part by Forzano, who did not see his way to introduce the changes required by the composer.

Mascagni is very enthusiastic about his new work. In passing, it may be worth recording that he invariably works all night (what a worker the man is—he is always, as it were, head and shoulders inside his pianoforte!), and dines once every twenty-four hours, at nine in the evening. 'Il piccolo Marat' was composed at his villa facing the sea at Antignano, near Livorno. It is a very dramatic affair, as the title suggests, the scene being laid in October, 1793, during the French Revolution.

A concert of old Italian music was given recently in the hall of the Royal Conservatorium. The programme consisted entirely of music composed towards the end of the 16th and the beginning of the 17th century by those grand old masters who practically laid the foundation of modern violin music, and contributed so powerfully to the development of various forms of composition, particularly of sonatas. Such were Corelli's Sonata in C, Op. 5, No. 3; Veracini's Sonata in G, Op. 1, No. 1; two 'Sonate Notturme' for two violins, of Sammartini, and Tartini's Sonata in E minor. Certain reflexes of the traditional forms of the 'Suite' can be heard in these old works, and the novus ordo is distinguishable in certain particulars of the structure, particularly of Corelli's music.

E. HERBERT-CÆSARI.

MONTE CARLO

On February 3 the opera season opened at Monte Carlo with a brilliant performance of Gounod's 'Faust,' given in aid of French charities at Monaco. The season promises to be one of the most successful on record, the repertoire being of the best and the artists of the first rank. Among the several novelties announced are 'Blancs Fleurs,' by Henri Février; 'La Dogaresse,' by Vincenzo Davicon; 'Les Charmettes,' by Armand Bolsène (on a poem by Jules Méry, author of 'La Passion'); 'Amours des Rois,' by Montemezzi; and the rather startlingly-named 'Satan,' by Raoul Gunsbourg, which it is said the composer has been working at for twenty years. Other operas to be presented are 'Don Juan,' 'Gioconda,' 'Don Quixote,' 'Manon' (Massenet), 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'Samson,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Barbiere,' 'Traviata,' 'Rigoletto,' and five of Puccini's operas—'L'Hirondelle,' 'La Fille du Fur West,' 'Butterfly,' 'Bohème,' and 'Tosca.' A representative corps of artists has been engaged, but with the exception of two or three none are known in England, although eminent in their profession on the Continent. It is a pity that so many stars heard abroad are for some strange reason not introduced to the London public during the grand Covent Garden season, having in mind that not a few of the brilliant galaxy of 'once upon a time' have now little but their names to recommend them.

CLAUDE TREVOR.

ROME

THE 'POLIFONICA ROMANA'

This title was given to the company of fifty singers from the Roman Basilicas who recently made a triumphal tour in America, under the leadership of Don Raffaele Casimiri, the director of the Lateran Cappella. It is the first time in history that the Roman choirs have undertaken such a tour, and their unaccompanied singing produced a fine impression on the other side of the Atlantic. American criticisms on the concerts were unanimous in their expression of appreciation, the general verdict being summarised in the following extracts:

'It is without doubt the most wonderful of all the great choruses, almost miraculous in its gradations of light and shade, in its massive or unaccentuated nuances, in its unisons and attacks, in its meticulously graduated crescendi and diminuendi.'—Morning Telegraph, September 19, 1919.

'New York hears no such choir-singing in these days, and probably never has heard quite its equal. The great Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto was itself in its best days not capable of the wondrous effects achieved by the singers from Rome.'—New York Evening Journal, September 19, 1919.

The scope of the tour was to illustrate the great polyphonic writers of the 16th and 17th centuries, and Maestro Casimiri has kindly furnished, for reproduction in the Musical Times, a complete copy of the repertoire which was executed in America. During the three months' tour every large centre was visited, the greatest enthusiasm being everywhere aroused. The repertoire is subjoined:

'O quantus luctus'	4 vv.		Palestrina
'Super flumina Babylonis'	"		"
'Sicut Cervus'	"		"
'Hodie Christus natus est'	"		"
'Bonum est confiteri'	5 "		"
'Laudate Dominum'	"		"
'Vox dilecti mei'	"		"
'Nigra sum'	"		"
'Introduxit me'	"		"
'Exultate Deo'	"		"
'Sanctus'	"		"
'Jerusalem, convertere ad Dominum'	8 "		"
'Estote fortes in bello'	4 "		Marenzio
'Puer qui natus est'	"		"
'O rex gloriæ'	"		"
'Exultate iusti'	"		Viadana
'Caligaverunt oculi mei'	"		Vittoria
'Ava Maria'	"		"
'Velum templi scissum est'	"		Ingegneri
'Veliciter exaudi me'	5 "		Orlando di Lasso
'Veni Sancte Spiritus'	6 "		Casimiri
'Ave Maria'	4 "		"
'Popule Meus'	5 "		"
'Qui operatus est'	6 "		Perosi
'Cruz Fidelis'	4 "		Pagella
'Oremus pro Pontifice'	4 "		Franco
'O felix anima'	3 "		Carissimi

THE AUGUSTEUM

It is certain that the recent season of Sunday afternoon concerts will count amongst the most successful hitherto known at the Augusteum, and chiefly was this success due to the splendid series of six programmes conducted by Toscanini. To say that the great master added to his reputation by these concerts would be banal: it would be more correct to say that his reappearance at the Augusteum for the first time after the Wagner fiasco of 1916 was a triumphant assertion of the security and dignity of his 'place in the sun.' I regret that I have not space to give all the programmes. Amongst the most interesting and successful were the following:

Pastoral Symphony (No. 6)		Beethoven
(a) Scena d'amore { from the 'Romeo and Juliet' }		Berlioz
(b) La Fata Mab { Symphony }		Strauss
'Don Giovanni' (Symphonic Poem)	Verdi
'Vesperi Siciliana' (overture)

It is pleasing to find an English composer's name in the second programme:

Symphony in E flat (No. 39)	Mozart
'Leonora' Overture	Beethoven
'Tristan and Isolde'	Wagner

(1.) Prelude. (2.) Death of Isolde.

Symphonic Variations	Elgar
-----------------------------	-------

The 'Leonora' Overture was repeated at another of the Toscanini concerts, while the 'Siegfried Idyll' and the Prelude to the 'Meistersingers' also figured in later programmes. Other concerts have included programmes given by Vladimir de Pachmann and by William Backhaus, who gave two concerts, in one of which he played Strauss's symphonic-poem, 'The life of a hero.'

An event of general interest has been the production of the long-promised opera 'Mirra,' by Domenico Alaleona, which took place at the Costanzi Theatre on March 31. The Intermezzo was already known to the public, and the steady progress made by the composer in gaining a name for himself raised vivid expectation on the part of musicians, a consequence being a full house at the presentation. On the whole, the opera gained a good success. Act 1 was judged to be more or less heavy, both in respect of the music and the poetry, but there were several passages worthy of note, especially the entrance scene of the lover Pereus, a page vividly reminiscent of similar scenes from Verdi. It may be well at once to note that the whole opera is strongly suffused with the Verdi manner, for which Alaleona does not cloke his preference.

Act 2 has more movement, while the music takes on a passionate character, but the general effect remains somewhat heavy and monotonous. Although the work was accorded a favourable reception, it is not probable that it will have a long life.

AN ITALIAN CRITIC ON CYRIL SCOTT

Messrs. Ricordi's excellent new periodical, Musica d'oggi, contains in the February issue an interesting critique on the works of Cyril Scott, from the pen of Elisabeth Sulli Oddone. After lamenting the lack of general interest in foreign music, the writer continues:

'In the pianoforte music of Cyril Scott we should open the door to a radiant splendour of light—living, warm and penetrating, an entire contrast to the grey skies and heavy atmosphere of the land of its origin. This composer's music is never academic, arid, or cold. The artifice of rhythmic and harmonic combinations nowhere appears: and one would say that in his hands the sounds became colours, or are projected in lines and curves to produce the impression of so many miniatures, remarkable alike for their evident veracity and their rare pictorial efficacy. Note, for instance in "Water Wagtail," how the characteristics of this bird are reproduced with inimitable naturalness, by the rhythmic instabilities of the composition: and how, in the "Soirée Japonaise," the music immediately conjures up visions of an exotic land, with typical architecture, many-coloured kimonos, yellow faces and almond eyes: how the free lines and movements of "Lotus-land" fascinate us and move us like the stories of Pierre Loti.'

The article concludes with a pious hope that in the near future the works of Cyril Scott may be widely known by means of an accurate Italian adaptation.

LEONARD PEYTON.

Miscellaneous

We have received the tenth annual report of the Organists' Benevolent League, and are glad to note that during the past year this excellent organization has been so well supported that it has been able to grant relief to every deserving case brought to its notice, and at the same time slightly to increase some grants made formerly. But the League needs still more generous support in order that it may establish pensions sufficiently generous to meet the present high cost of living. Every organist should give at least one recital annually for the benefit of the League.

On Tuesday in Holy Week the 'St. Matthew' Passion was performed in St. Asaph Cathedral by a choir of ninety voices, under the direction of the Cathedral organist, Mr. H. C. L. Stocks. The soloists were Miss Rita Landi, Miss Nellie Dodd, and Mr. Charles James (bass). Mr. H. Armitage, one of the alto lay-clerks, sang the tenor solos at a few hours' notice, owing to the sudden illness of the singer engaged. Dr. A. W. Wilson, organist of Manchester Cathedral, was at the organ.

The seven hundredth anniversary of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, was celebrated on March 14-21. Music played a prominent part in addition to that comprising the services. On March 16 Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung by the Cathedral Choir augmented by the College Choral Society, and on March 18 Mr. W. E. Hopkins, sub-organist of the Cathedral, gave an organ recital with a fine programme.

In connection with the local branch of the Church Music Society Mr. Geoffrey Shaw lectured recently to a large audience at Bristol on 'Children's Music.' He made a strong plea for giving children nothing but the best, however simple it might be. His remarks were well backed up by a class of girls from St. Nicholas School, who sang delightful songs with very obvious enjoyment and appreciation of their beauty.

Two lectures on Dunstable, Fayrfax, and Tallis, were given at St. Alban's Cathedral on March 23 by Mr. Royle Shore. Examples from their works were excellently sung by the Cathedral choir, under the direction of Mr. W. L. Luttman. The lecturer aroused much interest, and the appealing beauty of this old music was a revelation to many.

Mr. B. Vine Westbrook has just completed twenty-five years' service as organist and choirmaster at St. George's, Perry Hill, the occasion being marked by the presentation of an ebony and silver baton from the choir, and a cheque for fifty pounds from the vicar, churchwardens, and congregation, together with many warm expressions of appreciation.

The 'St. Matthew' Passion was sung in Malvern Priory Church on Good Friday by the Oratorio Choir of a hundred voices, the soloists being Messrs. E. Howell and Henry Brown. The soprano and contralto solos were sung by the boys of the Priory choir in chorus. Dr. Louis Hamand conducted, and Mr. G. W. Whitehouse was at the organ.

Welsh composers are invited to submit choral works for performance at the Harlech Castle Musical Festival of 1921. We learn from Mr. John Griffith, County School, Dolgelley, that from fifteen to twenty choirs will take part in the Festival, and that these may sing singly, or in groups, or in a massed choir of fifteen hundred voices.

Over £2,700 having been subscribed towards the erection of a new organ in Crediton Church as a War Memorial, the committee has decided to proceed with the building. The total cost will be about £5,000.

Widor's Mass for two choirs was sung on Easter Day at Hurstpierpoint College Chapel, the first choir consisting of a large body of men's voices chiefly in unison, and the second comprising a four-part choir of forty voices.

The Bohemian (Czech) Quartet will be in London during May for the purpose of giving five concerts at Wigmore Hall.

A Municipal Choir has been established by the Auckland (N.Z.) City Council.

We are asked to announce that some surplus copies of the fine programme book of the Bach Festival may be obtained from Messrs. Keith Prowse at half-price (2s. 6d.). Readers who were unable to attend the Festival should do the next best thing and invest in this book, which is a real contribution to Bach literature.

Any reader who has a spare copy of Samuel Wesley's Organ Concerto in D is asked kindly to communicate with Mr. G. Lightfoot, The Gables, Mill Lane, Shoreham-by-Sea.

Miss Anna Case is announced to appear at Queen's Hall on May 20.

The Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of 'A Tale of Old Japan' on March 23. Miss Margaret Ardley, Miss Wynne Runtig, Mr. Arthur Strong, and Mr. Herbert Tracey were the soloists, and Mr. David M. Davis conducted.

Stainer's 'St. Mary Magdalene' was sung at St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town, on Wednesday in Passion Week, directed by Dr. Barrow Dowling. This and other news for which we have no space reaches us from Mr. R. Keeves, who tells us that he was at St. Paul's Cathedral from 1872 to 1904. He sends greetings to his old friends of the Evening Service and Special Service choirs, and would like them to know that he is still very much alive.

CONTENTS

Page

The Visit of the New York Symphony Orchestra ...	297
The Symphonic Works of W. H. Bell. By M. van Someren-Godfery ...	297
Expression and Diction. By Agnes J. Larkcom ...	299
Modern British Composers—X. Ralph Vaughan Williams (continued). By Edwin Evans ...	302
Interludes. By 'Feste' ...	305
The Organ Works of Bach.—II. The Weimar Period (continued). By Harvey Grace ...	308
Sedley Taylor, 1834-1920. By Edward J. Dent ...	310
A French View of Brahms ...	311
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. VIII.—Simon Burton. By W. H. Grattan Flood ...	312
Occasional Notes ...	313
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch ...	313
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste' ...	315
The Bach Festival. By H. C. Colles ...	316
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett ...	317
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught... ..	329
Chamber Music for Amateurs ...	331
The Late Lady Elgar ...	331
Church and Organ Music ...	332
When were Musical Instruments first used in the Christian Church? By Clement Antrobus Harris... ..	332
New Church Music ...	333
New Music. By William Child ...	335
Letters to the Editor ...	336
Obituary ...	337
Sixty Years Ago ...	337
The Symphony and the Cinema. By Sydney Grew... ..	337
'Venus and Adonis' at Glastonbury ...	338
'Music and Letters' ...	338
The Making of Bells ...	339
Music in the Provinces ...	339
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	350
Miscellaneous ...	351

MUSIC:

'O loving Saviour.' Anthem for Four Voices. By F. W. WADELY ...	321
---	-----

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. 'Sir Eglamore.' Part-Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices and Pianoforte. By H. Balfour Gardiner.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BLAIR, HUGH.—Solemn Prelude. (No. 61, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s.
— Intermezzo. (No. 62, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s.

— Capriccietto. (No. 63, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s. 6d.

— Postlude. (No. 64, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s.

COLES, DOROTHY.—"Fain would I, Lord of grace." Hymn Tune. 1d.

HERMANN, L. E. A.—Metrical Litany. Tune only. On Card. 1½d.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—"With proud thanksgiving." Chorus arranged from "For the Fallen." For S.A.T.B., with accompaniment for Military or Brass Band; Organ, or Pianoforte. Vocal Score, with Pianoforte Accompaniment. 6d.

REDMAN, D.—Office for the Holy Communion. In F. (Credo in unison.) 1s.

ROBERTS, W. H.—"Lord of our Faith." Hymn and tune "Eirianedd." English and Welsh words. Staff Notation and Tonic Sol-fa together. 2d.

— "Morio'r wyf o don i don." Hymn and tune "Abergwili." Welsh words only. Staff Notation and Tonic Sol-fa together. 2d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 335) contains the following music in both notations:—"Orpheus with his lute." Unison Song. ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.

SHORE, ROYLE.—Plain Chant for Holy Communion. From the Vatican Kyriale "Missa de Angelis." (No. 7, Diocesan Music for Congregational Singing.) 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
No. 2315. "The De'il's awa' wi' the Exciseman." Arranged as a Four-part song by F. T. SWEETING. 2d.

No. 2316. "No shadows yonder." Chorus, Tenor Solo and Quartet from "The Holy City." A. R. GAUL. 1½d.

No. 2317. "They that sow in tears." Chorus from "The Holy City." A. R. GAUL. 2d.

No. 2318. "Thine is the Kingdom." Chorus from "The Holy City." A. R. GAUL. 2d.

No. 2320. "The Lord is my strength." Short Anthem for Easter. S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR. 2d.

TYSOE, A. C.—"Love Divine, all loves excelling." Hymn. (No. 970, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

WADELY, F. W.—"O loving Saviour." Anthem. (No. 927, Musical Times.) 1½d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

DICKINSON, C.—Symphony for the Organ. ("Storm King.") $2.50.

GAUL, H. B.—"God's Heaven." Negro Spiritual for T.T.B.B. 10 cents.

— "Little David." Negro Spiritual for T.T.B.B. 10 cents.

— "Swing low, sweet Chariot." Negro Spiritual for Baritone Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.). 12 cents.

— "Wheel in a wheel." Negro Spiritual for Tenor Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.). 10 cents.

LUTKIN, P. C.—"The Lord is my Shepherd." Chorus for S.S.A. 20 cents.

VEACO, J. G.—"Dirge." For Organ. 50 cents.

WEBBE, W. Y.—"Indian Lullaby." Song for Mezzo-Soprano. 60 cents.

— "The Song of the Metro-Gnome. Two-part Song. 12 cents.

WOOD, D. D.—"Gently fall the shades of evening." (Ave Maria.) Part-Song for S.S.A.A. 10 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THREE CHORALE PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN.

1. ST. PETER.
2. DARWELL'S 148TH.
3. THEME BY TALLIS.

COMPOSED BY

HAROLD E. DARKE

(OP. 20).

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THREE CHORALE PRELUDES

FOR THE ORGAN.

1. WINCHESTER NEW.
2. BURFORD.
3. ST. MICHAEL.

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR SALE.—FULL SCORES, VOCAL SCORES,
PIANOFORTE CONCERTOS, SOLOS, AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS.
A. M. Gifford, Cowlinge Place, near Newmarket.

FOR SALE.—A VIOLONCELLO. Write "Music."
Weekly News, Wellington, Somerset.

TENOR WANTED for St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. Applications to be sent to the Succentor, who will give full particulars

ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER WANTED.—
Presbyterian Church, Belgravia. £40. Sunday and one weeknight. Apply, by letter, Rev. K. Williamson, 26, Arlington Gardens, W.4

THE MUSICAL TIMES
ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION (WHICH INCLUDES POSTAGE), FIVE SHILLINGS, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions,
Advertisements for the next issue should reach
the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1,
not later than

TUESDAY, MAY 18 (FIRST POST).

CYRIL SCOTT

NEW Transcriptions for Organ

BY

PURCELL J. MANSFIELD.

PRICE NET.
s. d.

Passacaglia - - - - 2 0

(Pastoral Suite, No. 5).

The Wild Hills of Clare

All through the Night

2 C

(From "British Melodies"
for the Pianoforte).

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

CHORALE PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

FIRST SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 1.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Dundee."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Rockingham."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on S. S. Wesley's "Hampton."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on the "Old 104th."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Melcombe."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Christe Redemptor omnium,"
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Ann's."

SECOND SET.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN
(NEW SERIES), No. 45.

CONTENTS.

1. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Croft's 136th."
2. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Martyrdom."
3. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Thomas."
4. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Mary."
5. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Eventide."
6. CHORALE PRELUDE on "St. Cross."
7. CHORALE PRELUDE on "Hanover."

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH SET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.			Staff	Tonic
			Notation.	Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	...	...	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	...	...	3d	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	...	...	3d	2d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	...	...	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	...	...	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	...	...	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	...	...	2d.	2d
Jubilate	...	...	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	...	6d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	...	...	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	...	...	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis...	...	...	3d.	2d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	...	...	1s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	...	...	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	...	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	...	...	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	...	...	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)...	...	...	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	...	...	3d.	2d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	...	...	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	...	...	1/6	1s.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR WHITSUNTIDE

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.
TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, in E	...	...	3d.
BENEDICITE, in E	...	...	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, in E...	...	...	3d.
CANTATE DOMINO, in E and	...	...	}	4d.
DEUS MISEREATUR, in E	...	...
COMMUNION SERVICE, in E	...	...	6d.
ANTHEMS.
IF YE LOVE ME—Two Voices	...	...	3d.
I WILL MAGNIFY THEE	...	...	4d
I WAS GLAD—(FESTIVAL)	...	...	4d.
TONIC SOL-FA	...	...	2d.
O HOW AMIABLE—Soprano Solo and Chorus	...	...	4d.
THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD	...	...	3d.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES			FOR THE VOICE.
			WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.
			BY GEORGE HENSCHEL.
			IN TWO PARTS.
PART 1.	High Voice	...	s.	d.
	Medium Voice	...	2	6
	Low Voice	...	2	6
PART 2.	High Voice	...	2	6
	Medium Voice	...	2	6
	Low Voice	...	2	6
LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S

Sunday School Anniversary Music

ANTHEMS.

*Sun of my Soul	...	...	J. H. ADAMS
†Thine for ever	...	...	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
†I love to hear the story	...	...	MYLES B. FOSTER
†Lord, Thy children guide and keep	...	...	J. H. MAUNDER
†Hosanna we sing	...	...	JOHN E. WEST

Price Threepence each.

† Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d. each. * Tonic Sol-fa, price 2d.

HYMNS AND TUNES.
No.	SET I.
1.	Come, children, on and forward	GEORGE C. MARTIN
2.	For the freshness of the morning	LADY EUAN-SMITH
3.	I love to hear the story	FREDERIC CLAY
4.	Come, O come! in pious lays	J. STAINER
5.	Thine for ever! God of Love	W. C. HARVEY
6.	Jesu, Whom Thy children love	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
7.	Sweetly o'er the meadows fair	F. A. CHALLINOR
8.	Would you gain the best in life	C. J. MAY
9.	On our way rejoicing	WALTER B. GILBERT
10.	Now the daylight goes away	J. ADCOCK
SET II.
1.	Again the morn of gladness	J. STAINER
2.	The Angels' Song	ALBERTO RANDEGGER
3.	Forward, Christian children	ALFRED MOFFAT
4.	The Golden Shore	J. STAINER
5.	Saviour, blessed Saviour	JOHN E. WEST
6.	Enter with thanksgiving	F. H. COWEN
7.	Man shall not live by bread	J. VARLEY ROBERTS
8.	Stars, that on your wondrous way	J. STAINER
9.	The day is past and over	JOSEPH BARNEY
10.	God will take care of you	FRANCES R. HAVERGAL
SET III.
1.	We march, we march, to victory	JOSEPH BARNEY
2.	Hark! hark! the organ loudly peals	GEORGE J. BENNETT
3.	O what can little hands do	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
4.	While the sun is shining	T. ADAMS
5.	I love to hear the story	H. J. GAUNTLETT
6.	The roseate hues of early dawn	A. SULLIVAN
7.	Lord, Thy children guide and keep	A. S. COOPER
8.	In our work and in our play	F. WESTLAKE
9.	The Beautiful Land	J. STAINER
10.	Gentle Jesus, meek and mild	J. STAINER
SET IV.
1.	The boys and girls of England	J. STAINER
2.	The crown is waiting	J. STAINER
3.	The City of Light	E. J. TROUP
4.	He dwells among the lilies	LADY EUAN-SMITH
5.	God is in Heaven! Can He hear	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
6.	The Good Shepherd	J. STAINER
7.	A little kingdom I possess	R. S. NEWMAN
8.	Raise your standard, brothers	E. J. TROUP
9.	Flowers	ALBERTO RANDEGGER
10.	Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me	HORATIO PARKER

Both Notations, price Fourpence per Set.

Words only, 5s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EDITED BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

THE CRYES OF LONDON

HUMOROUS FANCY

THREE SETTINGS FOR S.A.T.B. BY

(1) RICHARD DEERING, (2) ORLANDO GIBBONS,
 AND
 (3) THOMAS WEEKES.

NOS. 1 AND 2, PRICE 6d. EACH; No. 3, PRICE 4d.

String Parts may be had on hire.

The Daily Telegraph says:

"... What Sir Frederick Bridge doesn't know about the great madrigal period in English music is surely not worth knowing. . . . Once more he puts us all in his debt by the publication of 'The Cryes of London.' . . . Perhaps the most attractive of the three is Richard Deering's: 'Have ye any wood to cleave?' Sung by a bass voice to a beautiful tune, is one of the many delightful details that make up this patch-work composition. The variety of songs and cryes is bewildering."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Frederick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SMALL

	Full Orchestra.	Small Orchestra.	Full Score.	Piano, Conductor.	Violin Conductor.	Piano, Solo.	Piano, and Violin.	Violin 1mo.	Violin 2do.	Viola.	Cello and Bass.	Cello.	Basso.
Bennett, "Eventide"	3/-	...	...	...	1/6	...	6d.	6d.	6l.	...	6d.	6d.	3d.
Carse, "Gavotte"	4/-	...	...	...	1/6	...	6d.	3d.	3l.	6d.	...	...	...
Coleridge-Taylor, "Four Characteristic Waltzes" ...	13/-	...	...	...	2/6	...	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	...	...
" " "Prelude"	12/-	...	...	2/-	...	2/-	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "2nd Entr'acte, "Nero" ...	5/6	...	...	6d.	...	1/6	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.	...
" " "Intermezzo," "Nero" ...	12/9	...	...	1/6	...	2/-	1/-	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "Singing Girls' Chorus" ...	8/9	...	...	1/-	...	2/-	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "Finale"	2/9	2/6	...	...	...	2/-	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "1st Entr'acte, "Nero" ...	2/9	2/6	...	...	...	2/-	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "Eastern Dance," "Nero" ...	2/9	2/6	...	...	...	2/-	6d.	6d.	6l.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "Novelletten," No. 1 ...	4/3	2/6	...	...	...	2/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " " " "2 ...	15/-	...	...	...	2/6	...	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	...	...
" " " " "3 ...	18/-	...	...	...	2/6	...	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	...	...
" " " " "4 ...	3/-	...	...	...	2/-	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	6d.	3d.	...
" " " " "5 ...	3/6	...	...	...	2/-	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	...	...
" " " " "6 ...	7/6	...	...	...	2/-	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " " " "7 ...	5/9	...	...	...	2/-	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...
" " " " "8 ...	4/3	...	3/6	...	1/6	...	6d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...
Davies, "Solemn Melody" (strings and organ) ...	1/9	2/-	...	...	1/6	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...
" " " " (full orchestra) ...	5/-	3/-	...	...	1/6	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...
Elgar, "Chanson de Matin"	3/-	2/6	6d.	...	1/6	...	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	3d.	3d.	...
" " "Chanson de Nuit"	2/9	2/6	6d.	...	1/6	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...
" " "Pleading" (Song), in G ...	3/-	...	...	3d.	...	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...
" " "Serenade" ("Wand of Youth") ...	1/9	...	1/-	A	...	1/6	3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...
" " "Romance" *	7/-	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "Canto Popolare"	4/9	3/-	...	...	2/-	...	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
Fletcher, "Bagatelles" (strings only) ...	2/6	...	...	...	2/-	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	1/-	...	...	...
Gounod, "Green Hill," in E flat ...	3/6	6d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...
Haynes, "Westwood Gavotte"	4/9	...	...	...	2/-	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
Holbrooke, "Souvenir de Printemps" ...	3/3	...	...	...	2/-	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...
Holst, "Greeting"	3/3	...	...	...	2/-	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...
Ireland, "Bagatelle"	5/9	...	...	...	2/-	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
Johnson, "Elves," "Faerie Suite" No. 1 ...	6/-	1/-	...	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
" " "Pavane"	5/-	6d.	...	1/6	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
Kreuz, "Conversation Amoureuse" ...	5/-	1/-	...	2/-	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	1/-	...	...	...
Lemare, "Andantino"	4/3	1/-	...	1/6	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
" " "Chant sans Paroles" ...	3/9	...	6d.	1/6	...	...	3d.	6d.	6d.	...	3d.	3d.	...
" " "Menuet Nuptiale" ...	3/3	6d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...
Mackenzie, "Benedictus"	3/6	...	...	...	2/-	6d. A	A	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...
Rameau, "Gavotte"	4/6	...	...	...	1/6	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...
Reed, "Serenade" ("Suite Venitienne") ...	3/6	6d.	...	3/-	...	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...
Roëckel, "Graceful Dance"	5/-	...	...	2/-	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
Wareing, "Summergold Gavotte" ...	5/6	...	...	2/-	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
Wendt, "Air de Ballet"	5/6	...	1/-	2/-	...	...	6d.	6l.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...
West, "Intermezzo"	3/9	6d.	...	...	1/6	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
" " "Marjorie Gavotte" ...	4/3	...	...	2/-	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
" " "Maypole Dance"	10/-	...	1/6	2/-	...	...	6d.	6d.	6l.	...	6d.	6d.	...
Wolstenholme, "Allegretto"	4/6	...	...	...	1/6	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...

N.B.—Parts marked A are printed together.

Parts marked B are printed together.

Parts marked C are p

↑ Transposed

ORCHESTRAS. SUITABLE FOR CINEMAS, &c.

Oboi.	Clarineti.	Fagotti.	Corn 1 & 2.	Corn 3 & 4.	Trombe.	Cornetti.	Tromboni 1 & 2.	Trombone 3.	Euphonium.	Tuba.	Timpani.	Cassa.	Piatti.	Side Drum.	Triangle.	Tambourine.	Harp.	Solo-Cornet.	Organ.	Harp or Piano.	Bells.
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	3d.	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	3d.	...	...	3d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/6	1/-	1/-	...	1/-	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.A	A	A	A	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	6d.B	B	3d.	B	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
†6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	6d.A	6d.B	B	A	3d.C	...	6d.	...	...	...	C
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
1 -	2/-	1/-	1/-	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1 6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/-	1/-	†1/-	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.
6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	3d.	...	3d.
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...
...	3d.	...	3d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	A	...	...	6d.	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	3d.	3d.B	...	B	3d.C	C	...	...	C	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	3d.	...	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	3d.	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	3d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	3d.	...	...	3d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	6d.	...	...	6d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	3d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	6d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	3d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.A	...	...	...	A	6d.	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...

† Oboe has the Melody.

X Flute has the Melody.

* For Solo part, see Pianoforte and Bassoon Copy, 2/6.

mpet Part.

Our Craftsman says :

“AND STILL THEY COME ! TWO MORE TESTIMONIALS IN PRAISE OF OUR STRINGS.”

“I was very pleased to read through this one.”—“It is with great pleasure I write to thank you for the Sample G String. I tried it at a concert last night and found that it has a beautiful tone and is very responsive. I have had great trouble to obtain durable strings, and it is a treat at last to find something of real British manufacture. I shall patronise nothing else but your ‘Cathedral’ Brand of Strings, and shall certainly recommend them highly to all my friends.—BELLA N. BIRCH, 135, Bedford Street S., Liverpool.”

“Good, isn’t it? And now you Violinists, just note this one.”—“I received the ‘A’ Violin String and I was very pleased with the tone of it. Another good point about it, too, besides the splendid tone, is that it is not so clumsy to finger as the gut ones the shops are selling just at present.—ROBERT WEBSTER, 4, Christian Road, Preston.”

“Nothing gives me greater pleasure than reading these fine testimonials as they come in day by day. A little bit of praise goes a long way, you know, and after all we craftsmen are just human—like yourselves. We take a genuine pride in making the ‘Cathedral’ and ‘Summit’ Strings the finest on the market. They are far superior to all foreign brands, and much cheaper. I like, too, the artistic way in which ‘Cathedral’ and ‘Summit’ Strings are packed. But actual trial satisfies everybody, and it is rapidly increasing our list of ‘Cathedral’ and ‘Summit’ Strings enthusiasts. Our offer of a Sample String is still open. Have you had yours? Write now.”

Send for FREE Sample String.

This offer of a Sample String applies to Violin, Mandoline, and Banjo. State exact String required.

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD.,

MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

Telegrams : “CELLO, FINSPARK, LONDON.”

Telephone : NORTH 2954.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY EDWARD ELGAR.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR
FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS
(Op. 84).

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

QUARTET

FOR STRINGS
(Op. 83)

SCORE PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.
PARTS „ EIGHT SHILLINGS.

SONATA

FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE
(Op. 82).

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CONCERTO

IN E MINOR

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 85).

ARRANGEMENT FOR
VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire only.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee, and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured base for the harpsichord or organ ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.				s. d.
1.	SONATA in G major	...	JAMES LATES	2 0
2.	SONATA in D minor	...	HENRY ECCLES	2 0
3.	SONATA in B flat major	...	WILLIAM BABELL	2 0
4.	SONATA in G minor	...	JOHN STANLEY	2 0
5.	SONATA in A major	...	JOHN COLLETT	2 0
6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	...	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	3 0
7.	SONATA in D major	...	RICHARD JONES	2 0
8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	...	WILLIAM BOYCE	3 0
9.	THREE PIECES	...	WILLIAM BOYCE	2 0
10.	SONATA in E major	...	CHARLES MACKLEAN	2 0
11.	SONATA in G minor	...	WILLIAM CROFT	2 0
12.	SONATA in D minor	...	JOSEPH GIBBS	2 0
13.	SONATA in D minor	...	JOHN HUMPHRIES	2 0
14.	SONATA in A minor	...	THOMAS VINCENT	2 0

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO
FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLAND

AN ODE

BY ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

SET TO MUSIC FOR
SOPRANO AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY
ERNEST CAMPBELL MACMILLAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REFLECTIONS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO PASTORALS

COME YOU, MARY.

WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES FORSAKE?

THE WORDS BY NORMAN GALE.

THE MUSIC BY
ERNEST BRISTOW FARRAR

(Op. 21, Nos. 2 and 3).

TWO KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR SHAKESPEARE SONGS

1. HARK! HARK! THE LARK,
2. WHO IS SYLVIA.
3. TAKE, O TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY
4. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

COMPOSED BY

REGINALD STEGGALL.

Op. 28.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD GERMAN.

Full Score, 21s. ; String Parts, 9s. ; Wind Parts, 23s.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo ... 3s. 6d.
" " Pianoforte Duet ... 5s. 0d.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Diversions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Diversion, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Diversion is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed. The Fifth Diversion is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Dispatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work"—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

(KYRIE, RESPONSES TO COMMANDMENTS, CREDO, SANCTUS, BENEDICTUS, AGNUS DEI, GLORIA).

SET TO MUSIC IN THE KEY OF E MINOR

BY

BASIL HARWOOD

(Op. 28.)

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW AND SUCCESSFUL SONGS

A. HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.
Price 2s.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR—

Sweet evenings come and go, love.

In F (Compass, D to E flat) and B flat.
Price 2s.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).
Price 2s.

LAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).
Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.
Price 1s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER—

Hark! Hark! my Soul.

In C (Compass, A to C) and E flat.
Price 2s.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.
Price 2s. each.

W. G. ROSS—

A Daffodil Wedding.

In C (Compass, C to F) and D.
Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

The Summertime of Love.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.
Price 2s. each.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW SONG BY POLDOWSKI.

"DANS UNE MUSETTE"

(JEAN DOMINIQUE)

MEDIUM VOICE.

FRENCH WORDS.

Price 2s. net cash.

OTHER SONGS BY POLDOWSKI PUBLISHED PREVIOUSLY:—

(Words by PAUL VERLAINE unless otherwise mentioned)

- "L'ATTENTE." "BERCEUSE D'ARMORIQUE" (A. le Braz).
 "BRUME." "CIRCONSPÉCTION." "COLOMBINE."
 "CORTÈGE." "CRÉPUSCULE DU SOIR MYSTIQUE."
 "CYTHÈRE." "DANSONS LA GIGUE." "EFFET DE NEIGE."
 "FANTOCHES." "LE FAUNE." "L'HEURE EXQUISE."
 "IMPRESSION FAUSSE." "MANDOLINE."
 "NOCTURNE" (Jean Moréas).
 "PANNYRE AUX TALONS D'OR" (Albert Samain).
 SÉRÉNADE (A. Ratti). "SOIR" (Albert Samain). "SPLEEN."
 "SUR L'HERBE."

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

If you have room for an upright piano you have room for : : :

The Weber Small Grand Piano

Length:
4 ft. 10 ins.,
Width:
4 ft. 10 ins.

This instrument is the latest product of the famous Weber factory at Hayes, Middlesex. It is a triumph alike for its producers and for British craftsmanship, for never have any foreign makers succeeded in obtaining so rare a tone in an instrument of such limited proportions. Less than five feet in length, it occupies almost the same space as an ordinary upright piano, but has all the advantages of tone and appearance that characterise the Grand type of piano ::

The tone of the Weber Concert Grand Piano has made that instrument the choice of the world's chief pianists, and in this miniature model all the beauties of the Weber tone are preserved. This wonderful new piano may be seen and played in our showrooms; it is obtainable upon easy payment terms that make it as accessible as an upright piano.

THE AEOLIAN COMPANY, LTD.,
(Formerly the Orchestrille Co.).

Aeolian Hall, 131-7, New Bond St.,
LONDON, W. 1.

ROGERS

There are other Pianos more widely advertised and better known than the Rogers, but there is none that is so irresistible in its appeal to the musician.

The Rogers Piano represents the careful development of an artistic ideal, and the musician is quick to realize the possibilities it offers him in its delicacy and responsiveness of touch and variations of tone-colour.

GEORGE ROGERS & SONS,

Showrooms and Music Studios: 60, BERNERS STREET, W. 1.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF

THE ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC & THE ROYAL COLLEGE of MUSIC

FOR

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
ASSOCIATED BOARD—
ERNEST MATHEWS, Esq., Chairman.

SIR ALEXANDER C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., St. And., Cantab., Et Edin., LL.D., D.C.L., Principal of The R.A.M.
PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Director of The R.C.M.
OSCAR BERINGER, Esq.
PROFESSOR PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
EATON FANING, Esq., Mus. Doc., Cantab.
FREDERIC KING, Esq.
SAXTON W. A. NOBLE, Esq.
SIR WALTER PARRATT, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Cantab. Et Dunelm.
H. W. RICHARDS, Esq., Mus. Doc., Dunelm.
PROFESSOR SIR CHARLES V. STANFORD, D.C.L., LL.D., M.A., Mus. Doc., Cantab. Et Oxon.
S. P. WADDINGTON, Esq.
H. WESSELY, Esq.

Secretary: JAMES MUIR, Esq.

Bankers: BANK OF ENGLAND, WESTERN BRANCH, BURLINGTON GARDENS, LONDON, W. 1.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout the United Kingdom and in the Colonies in both Theoretical and Practical Music. The Examinations are of two kinds, "Local Centre" and "School." The Local Centre Examinations are carried out by two Examiners chosen almost exclusively from the Staffs of The Royal Academy of Music and of The Royal College of Music. The School Examinations are conducted by one Examiner.

The Subjects for Examination are comprised in the following list:—

GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.	ORGAN.	DOUBLE BASS.
RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.	VIOLIN.	HARP.
HARMONY.	VIOLA.	WIND INSTRUMENTS.
COUNTERPOINT.	VIOLONCELLO.	SINGING.
PIANOFORTE.

Local Centre Examinations (Syllabus A). Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March—April at all Centres; and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November—December also. Entries for the November—December Examinations close Wednesday, October 13th, 1920.

School Examinations (Syllabus B) held three times a year: viz., June—July, October—November, and March—April. Entries for the June—July Examinations close for Great Britain, Wednesday, May 12th (or, with extra fee, May 20th), Irish Entries close May 5th (or with extra fee, May 13th), 1920.

Theory Papers set in past years (Local Centre or School) may be obtained from the Central Office, price 6d. per annual set post-free.

The Board offers annually Six Exhibitions tenable at The Royal Academy of Music or The Royal College of Music for two or three years. These Exhibitions are limited to Candidates under twenty years of age who fulfil certain conditions set forth in each Syllabus.

Syllabuses A and B, Forms of Entry, and any further information, may be obtained, post-free, from the Secretary—

JAMES MUIR,

TELEGRAMS:—"ASSOCIA. LONDON."

TELEPHONE:—MUSEUM 1710.

CENTRAL OFFICE: 14 & 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON, W.C. 1.

No.
928

Price
4d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

JUNE 1, 1920

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

HAVING acquired the West End Premises of Messrs. J. & J. Hopkinson, Ltd., are opening

NEW SHOW ROOMS AT 52, WIGMORE STREET

for the
Sale of Pianos

by the best
English Makers

Tunings & Repairs effected by a skilled staff of Piano Makers.

Pianos Stored in a special storage warehouse which is kept at an even temperature throughout the year. Insurance included in the storage rates.

WIGMORE HALL

32-40, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON · W · 1

Piano Removals

by experienced men in our own motor vans.

TELEPHONE:
MAYFAIR 1761.

The Name of

J. & J. HOPKINSON

Stands for the HIGHEST ATTAINMENTS
in THE WORLD OF MUSIC

REMARKABLE FOR THE EXQUISITE QUALITY OF TONE

J. & J. HOPKINSON, LTD.,

44, FITZROY ROAD, PRIMROSE HILL,
LONDON, N.W.-1

SONGS and MUSIC of DISTINCTION.

"The Harvesters' Night Song"

First introduced to the public by Mr. NORMAN ALLIN, the well-known Lancashire Bass. A great Blackpool favourite.

"The Minster Bell"

A song with a refrain that has positively jumped into fame. Ask your music dealer to play it over.

"Rest at Eventide"

An unusual combination of real musical merit and popular appeal. Suitable for all voices.

"My Lady Charming"

Charming by name and charming in character. Just a delightful little entr'acte for piano.

"Dream Sprite"

An intermezzo for pianoforte. Dainty in construction, melodious, and effective.

Of all Music Sellers, price 2/- net; or direct from the Publishers, post free, 2/1½.

THE NEWMAN PUBLISHING CO., Ltd.

7, Newman Street, London, W. 1.

THE MOST NOTED HOUSE FOR REALLY MUSICAL NUMBERS.

SAMES
HIGHEST QUALITY
GRAND & UPRIGHT
PIANOS

WILLIAM SAMES, LIMITED.
Ombersley Road :: BIRMINGHAM.
LONDON SHOWROOMS: 126 NEW BOND ST.

THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW

A Monthly Periodical devoted to the interests of Music in Schools.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

PRICE TWOPENCE

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, INCLUDING POSTAGE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 928.—Vol. 61
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

JUNE 1 1920

Price 4d.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
—
THE ORCHESTRA
OF THE
SYMPHONY SOCIETY OF
NEW YORK

(CONDUCTOR: MR. WALTER DAMROSCH)

WILL GIVE

FIVE CONCERTS

IN LONDON

DURING THE MONTH OF JUNE.

AT THE QUEEN'S HALL

ON

MONDAY, JUNE 14, at Eight o'clock.
TUESDAY, JUNE 15, at Eight o'clock.
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, at Eight o'clock.
SATURDAY, JUNE 19, at Three o'clock.

AND AT

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL

ON

SUNDAY, JUNE 20, at Three o'clock.

QUEEN'S HALL PERFORMANCES.

SINGLE TICKETS: Reserved, 12s., 8s. 6d., 5s. 9d.; Unreserved 3s. 6d. and 2s. 4d.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES: For the Performances at Queen's Hall on the Evenings of June 14, 15, 16, and on the Afternoon of June 19—£1 19s. for the series of four 12s. seats; £1 8s. for the series of four 8s. 6d. seats; £1 for the series of four 5s. 9d. seats. All Prices are inclusive of Tax.

THE UNRESERVED SEATS are not sold by Subscription.

THE SUBSCRIPTION SALE will be opened on Tuesday, May 25, and will be confined to Queen's Hall Box Office. All seats not sold on subscription by Wednesday, June 2, will be placed on general sale at regular prices, as above. Unreserved Seats will be on sale for all four performances on May 25, at Queen's Hall, Chappell's Box Office, Usual Agents, and at the offices of the WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, 245, Oxford Street, W. 1.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted. LECTURE by Mr. Frederick Corder "On the Evolution of Music from Bach to the present day," will be given on Wednesday, June 2, at 4.30.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, June 5 and 19, at 8.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Wednesday, June 9, at 3.

L.R.A.M. September Examination. Last day for entry, June 30.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams:

"Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone:

"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

THE MIDSUMMER HALF-TERM will commence on Monday, June 7, 1920.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 15 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

(CORPORATION OF LONDON).

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

SUMMER TERM COMMENCED MONDAY, 26TH APRIL.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and/or Orchestra.

There are two Orchestral Classes, viz.:—Mondays, Preparatory Orchestra at 11 a.m., for beginners who ultimately join the Principal's School Orchestra which meets on Friday mornings.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c. may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications were again advanced on April 1, 1919, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 13th, 1920.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., October-November, March-April, and June-July. Entries for the October-November Examinations close Wednesday, October 6th, 1920.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per annual set, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M., for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,
14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.
Telegrams: "Associa, London."

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1919-1920.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Twenty-eighth Year opened on October 6, 1919.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, and Art of Teaching, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-five Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in Scotland and Ireland in JUNE, and at all other Local Centres in JULY. Last days of entry, May 15th, and June 15th respectively.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary. Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.
Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches: Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3,
and 117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORKE-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.)

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examination in Music and Elocution, July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the

CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC. LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.
Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.
Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.
Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.
Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.
Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

ORCHESTRAL CLASS for Ensemble Playing, Thursdays, at 12 (noon). Terms, £1 11s. 6d. per course.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND. ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS, ETC. MANY TESTIMONIALS RECEIVED.

Write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glenholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

THE ART OF VOICE TRAINING.

MR. FIELD HYDE will conduct a

VACATION COURSE IN LIVERPOOL,

From Thursday, JULY 29, to AUGUST 6, 1920.

FOURTEEN LECTURE-DEMONSTRATIONS will be given, and the Course will include :—

1. A COMPLETE EXPOSITION OF VOICE-TRAINING METHOD.
2. COMPARISONS OF VARIOUS SYSTEMS WHICH ARE FOUNDED UPON DIVERSE THEORIES.
3. PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATIONS IN VOICE-TRAINING AND TEACHING.
4. PERMANENT NOTES (LETTERPRESS) OF THE VOCAL METHOD.
5. VOICE CHARTS, AND A COMPLETE SERIES OF EXERCISES AND STUDIES.
ETC., ETC.

Mr. Field Hyde's Method and the Course of Lecture-Demonstrations have had the recommendation of many of the best Authorities—Musical and Medical, Cathedral and University Organists, Conductors, Principals and Professors, of some of the greatest Musical Institutions, the Editors of the chief Musical Journals, and of every Teacher and Student who has attended the Course.

The following extracts are selected from amongst hundreds of similar spontaneous expressions of opinion :—

"The Course afforded me one of the MOST ENJOYABLE WEEKS I ever spent, the educational value of which I can never forget.—F. A. C."

"Your Course seems IDEAL in that it can be taken by teachers using different methods from your own. They must INEVITABLY BE BETTER TEACHERS afterwards.—F. B., L.R.A.M."

"You SOLVED, I might say, all my DIFFICULTIES, and I do not regret having travelled the thousand miles which I did, as the Course was worth it.—J. R."

"I have for many years been a keen reader, student, and teacher of music, but never in my experience have I thought anything so necessary to be said on the subject of singing and teaching, as that which you said (or revealed) in your recent delightful course. It is easy enough to define or explain a thing, it is another matter to make it understood.—A. E. R."

"I wish to say how much I enjoyed your holiday course. You score where others fail, in that you back up all you say or teach by demonstrations with your own or pupils' voices. I have attended a good many courses, but I can honestly say that yours BEATS THEM ALL, and easily too.—J. T. S., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M."

"Your excellent course has added greatly to my success as a choir-trainer and adjudicator. It has brought me new engagements this month. Your splendidly-designed charts are extremely helpful in gaining experience. My candid opinion is that it is impossible to get better instruction.—T. J. M., L.R.A.M., F.T.S.C."

For Syllabus and full particulars, address early application to :—

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE, 4, WIGMORE STUDIOS, 52, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A DEMONSTRATION LECTURE on "Up-to-date Methods of Teaching Voice Production and Enunciation to Girls and Boys,"

By MR. JAMES BATES

(Lecturer on Voice-Culture, Phonetics and Class Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, for the London Education Committee, the Tonic Sol-fa College, to the Kensington High School (G.P.D.S.T.) Student Teachers, and at the Roedean School, Brighton), will be given at

DUKE'S HALL, ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

On SATURDAY, JULY 10th, at 11 o'clock.

Chairman : MR. SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON, M.A., Mus. Bac.
(Organist and Choirmaster, Westminster Abbey).

Organist : DR. STANLEY MARCHANT, F.R.A.M.
(Sub-Organist, St. Paul's Cathedral).

Choir of 225 girls—singing-class pupils of the lecturer—from Francis Holland School, S.W.; Frgonal School, N.W.; Northampton School for Girls, "Queenswood," S.W.; St. Mary's College, W.; Winchester School for Girls; Wycombe High School; and 25 boys (London College for Choristers), will illustrate vocal practice recommended, and sing a selection of school songs by Sir H. Bishop, Dr. Walford Davies, Sir E. Elgar, H. Balfour Gardiner, Edward German, Handel, Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Sir Hubert Parry, Henry Purcell, Dr. Sweeting, Dr. Somervell, Geoffrey Shaw, Goring Thomas, and T. L. Vittoria.

Tickets (issued free to singing-class teachers and choir-boy trainers) can be had upon application, enclosing stamped addressed envelope, to Mr. James Bates, Royal Academy of Music, Marylebone Road, London, N.W. 1.

Particulars of Holiday Course of Lecture-Lessons to Teachers and Choir-trainers upon application to Mr. Bates as above.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS.

LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE and DECEMBER

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON Hon. Secretary.

County Borough of Huddersfield.

"MRS. SUNDERLAND" MUSICAL COMPETITIONS.

PRIZES FOR ORIGINAL MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

ADJUDICATOR ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, Esq., M.A.

UNACCOMPANIED CHORAL NUMBER FOR MALE VOICES.

1st Prize, £5 5s., and £5 towards cost of publication.
2nd Prize, £2 2s.

VIOLIN SOLO—1st Prize, £5 5s., and £5 towards cost of publication. 2nd Prize, £2 2s.

Compositions to be forwarded to the Secretary not later than July 1st.

For further particulars apply—
THOMAS THORP, Secretary, Technical College, Huddersfield.

BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 18TH TO 23RD, 1920.

GRAND PAVILION WINTER GARDENS.

£700 IN PRIZES.

SOLO, DUET, QUARTET, CHORAL, ORCHESTRAL,
AND SCHOOL CHOIR COMPETITIONS.

Syllabus now ready. Price, 3d. Post free, 4½d.

May be had on application from the Hon. Secretary,

LIONEL H. FRANCEYS, Empress Buildings, 91, Church St., Blackpool.

NATIONAL CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1895.

INCOR. 1900.

Under direction of National Conservatoire Corporation (Ltd.),
149, Oxford Street, London, W. 1.

For Musical Examination and Education.

Warden : PROFESSOR ALEXANDER PHIPPS, Mus. Bac.
Diploma and Local Examinations in July.

MR. TRAVERS ADAMS returns thanks for letters
Vocal Classes shortly resumed. Intending pupils will receive copy, gratis, of latest work, "Physical Development in Relation to Perfect Voice-Production." Apply, 158, Holland Park Avenue W. 11

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists.

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Copy of Testimonial from the renowned organist, Herbert F. Ellingford, Esq., Mus. Bac. (Oxon.), Organist of the Town Hall, Liverpool.

"I think your clever appliance for stretching the fingers is a most useful invention. Its regular use will help to maintain in a simple manner, facility and freedom of hand, wrist, and finger movements. It should be invaluable to organists, pianists, and stringed instrument players alike." HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

Send for full particulars and list of testimonials.

No earnest student should be without a Techniquer.

"Hand Development," post free, 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

CHARLES TREE.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON VOCAL EASE.

Mr. Tree wishes to point out the fact that numerous teachers are now realising the success of the "speech into song" method. It is infallible. This may appear to be a bold statement, but if teachers generally will work on these lines Great Britain will stand still higher in the singing world. But to study month after month, year after year, on the "camouflage" so prevalent is a real tragedy. Then look at the vast number of young people who are trying to drift into the vocal profession through the wrong advice of so-called vocal teachers. Ninety per cent. of these should be engaged in some business or other career. Let them study the voice as amateurs certainly, but as a recreation from their ordinary walks of life.

Mr. Tree's book on "How to acquire ease of voice" (5s.).

If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.

Concerts, Lectures, &c.: Address, 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.
THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.
THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1920.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best INTRODUCTORY
VOLUNTARY for the ORGAN, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, TE DEUM
(Chantwise), Harmonized Setting of the GUILD OFFICE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

FIRST-CLASS UNIVERSITY MAN,

Highest references.

DESIRES POSITION OF VISITING MASTER
IN HIGH-CLASS SCHOOL.

Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c. Pupil of Arthur de Greef, Granville Bantock, &c.

References from Josef Holbrooke, &c.

Only first-rate progressive institution entertained, and Midland preferred.

"S. B." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

CHARLES T. BATCHELOR (BARITONE).

Oratorio, Recitals, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
10, Roche Road, Norbury, S.W. 16.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN (VOICE SPECIALIST).

Singing, Elocution, and Breathing.

Write for free audition, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE :—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch," and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."
Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MISS BETTY HADDOW
SOPRANO.

Available for Oratorios, Concerts, Cantatas, &c.

For vacant dates, write, 74, Ollerton Road, New Southgate, N. 11.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS-BARITONE).

Address (temporary): 5, Clarence Place, Clapton Square, N.E.

MR. MAURICE VICCARS

BARITONE.

41, Arvon Road, Highbury, N. 5.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now
demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING

TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot,"
in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FIVE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

 The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WOLFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

G. HUBI-NEWCORBE

(LYRIC AUTHOR).

"Whisper and I shall hear" (Piccolomini), "Within your heart"
(Trötter), "Love's Devotion" (A. F. Tate), "Heart's Delight"
(Tosti), "A Summer Song" (Guy d'Hardelot), "I heard a Sweet Song," (Dorothy Foster), "Song of Gladness" (£100 Prize).

Adaptations and Translations, 1,200 Songs sold. 350 Adaptations.

Libretti for Cantatas, Operettas, Cycles, &c.

Of 350 Adaptations, not one failure to give great pleasure.

"OVERBURY," FURZE LANE, PURLEY, SURREY.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.); L.R.A.M.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (2) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (3) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (4) Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. Degrees.
- (5) Musical Appreciation.

For terms, lists of successes, &c., address—

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

DURHAM MUS. BAC.

SEPTEMBER, 1920.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

For "FIRST" and "FINAL" Examinations.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

LATEST SUCCESSES:

A.R.C.M., APRIL, 1920.

Paper Work	...	...	...	...	SEVEN.
Practical	...	...	...	...	FOUR.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.); L.R.A.M.,

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

A CORRESPONDENCE COURSE FOR TEACHERS

SPECIALLY ARRANGED BY

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING.

This Course is intended to serve as a guide to Teachers, either in their Class-Work, or in their private teaching.

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916),
and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-five. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SINGING, PIANO-PLAYING, AND AURAL
TRAINING. Dr. A. P. Alderson visits 60, Berners Street, W.,
every week for Private Lessons. Coaching also by Correspondence.
34, Knight's Park, Kingston-on-Thames.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES :—

- (1) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-20 ... 154 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-20 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 370 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT and CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGELICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MEMORY.—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, L.R.A.M., undertakes, by her method, to develop perfect musical memory. Course of Six Lessons, £3 3s. Lessons by correspondence if desired. 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL for the Public Schools. Choir School for King's College Chapel. Inclusive Fees 70 guineas, reduced to £20 for CHORISTERS, who follow the regular curriculum.

A TRIAL OF VOICES to fill vacancies in the Choir will be held on Tuesday, July 20.

Candidates must have a good ear and good voice, and should be between 9 and 12 years of age.

For particulars apply to The Dean.

Names to be sent in not later than July 12.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

There is a VACANCY in the CHOIR for an ALTO, either a Choral Scholar or Lay-Clerk. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year with certain allowances. The stipend offered to a Lay-Clerk is £140.

The COMPETITION will be held in July.

Applications to be sent in not later than July 12.

For further information apply to The Dean, King's College, Cambridge.

SOLO BOY REQUIRED, R.C. Church, Mayfair. Good Salary. Apply by letter to Vivian Stuart, Esq., 8, Phillimore Gardens, W. 8.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

There is a VACANCY in the Choir for an ALTO LAY-VICAR. Salary £200 per annum (minimum). Applications, stating age and experience and accompanied by three testimonials, to be sent to The Receiver-General, The Chapter Clerk's Office, The Sanctuary, Westminster Abbey, by June 10.

ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, TENBURY.

ALTO LAY-CLERK WANTED. Two Choral services (Cathedral type) daily during school term-time. Salary £80. Opportunity for other work. Vacancy through preferment. Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, accompanied by three recent testimonials, to the Rev. The Warden, not later than June 12.

ALTO AND TENOR, St. Stephen's Church (adjoining Sydenham Hill Station, S.E. & C.R.). Two Services Sunday, and Friday rehearsal. £16. Apply Organist, 80, West Hill, Sydenham, S.E. 26.

TENOR WANTED.—£12. For Church in Wandsworth district. Good reader. Apply, "F. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ARMAGH CATHEDRAL.—TENOR WANTED. Salary, £100. Light week-day duty. Leisure for additional employment. Apply, with testimonials and references, Chapter Clerk, Cathedral Close, Armagh.

ST. ANNE'S, Wandsworth.—WANTED, TENOR and BASS, good readers (Solos, if required). Salary, £12 per ann. S. H. Ralph, Organist, 10, Aspley Road, Wandsworth, S.W. 18.

TENOR and BASS WANTED for All Saints', Devonshire Road, South Lambeth. £12. Walter Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, West Norwood, S. 2.

TWO BASSES and a TENOR.—£15. For St. Mary's Church, West Kensington. Apply at the Church, Fridays, 8-9, or by letter, W. H. Cuthbert Domney, County Chambers Bath Road, Hounslow.

BASS REQUIRED at Effra Road Unitarian Church, Brixton. Good reader essential. Two Sunday services and Friday practice. Salary £15. Apply, Organist, 14, Daysbrook Road, S.W. 2.

WANTED, immediately.—ORGANIST and CHOIR LEADER for St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Truro, Nova Scotia, Canada. Salary, 750 dollars. Splendid opportunity for teaching. Large Class assured in Voice Production and Piano. Predecessor's annual income from teaching about 2,500 dollars. Address, M. Cumming, Chairman Music Committee, St. Andrew's Church, Truro, N.S., Canada.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, with good qualifications and references, required for Holy Trinity Church, Tulse Hill, S.W. 2. Apply, by letter, to the Vicar.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Wesleyan Church, Acton, W. 3. When writing state qualifications and other particulars to Secretary, 58, Birch Grove, Acton, W. 3.

WANTED, ORGANIST (voluntary), Unitarian Church, Avondale Road, Peckham. Apply to W. J. Cooley, 286, Lordship Lane, Dulwich, S.E. 22.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for West Bridgford Parish Church. Splendid opening for Teacher with Musical Degree. Delightful suburb, population 15,000. Applications, with testimonials and qualifications, to be addressed, The Rector, West Bridgford, Nottingham.

WANTED, ORGANIST, thorough musician. Apply, by letter, stating references and salary, Vicar, St. Paul's Vicarage, West Hartlepool.

ORGANIST

(CHURCH OF ENGLAND).

Late Organist and Choirmaster of Parish Church in Yorkshire, and now resident in London, is willing to act as voluntary assistant.

Write "G. E. S.," 24, Nottingham Place, W. 1.

MUSIC-MASTER REQUIRES POSITION in Public or Private School. Thoroughly experienced in Teaching of Pianoforte, Organ, and Voice-Production. Write, Victor H. Burraston, Coniston, Hayward's Road, Cheltenham.

WANTED immediately, CONDUCTOR for G.W.R. Old Oak Choir (mixed voices). Apply for particulars to Hon. Sec., A. Martin, 17, Foliot Street, Shepherd's Bush, W. 12.

NORTH WALES.—Good Musical connection for DISPOSAL, including Mastership in large Girls' School. Subjects: Piano, Singing, Harmony, &c. Nearest offer to £150 accepted. Address, "C. D. M.," c/o Novello & Co., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST open to deputise during August. Recitalist. "H. R.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ACCOMPLISHED MUSICIAN wishes to accompany a singer in practice. Coaching in interpretation of modern songs; hints on French, Italian and German diction. Terms, 5s. an hour. "S., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN, 800 pipes, 2 manuals, 20 stops, full-pedal compass, 3 composition pedals, electrically blown or by hand; suitable for church, chapel, or large room. Box 659, Advertiser, Leicester.

FOR SALE.—An Upright GRAND PIANO by John Brinsmead. Handsome case, inlaid panel; magnificent tone. Price 48 guineas. Apply, "B., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—A PIANO PEDAL ATTACHMENT, Pneumatic, R.C.O. pattern. Send particulars to W. A. Rudling, 30, West Street, Prittlewell.

PLEYEL DIGITORIUM, 2 $\frac{1}{8}$ octaves. Superbly made, mahogany, in well-made lined case for travelling. 10 guineas. 175, Clarence Gate Gardens, London, N.W.1.

PART-SONGS (equal voices) FOR SALE. Good condition. Enclose stamp for catalogue. Apply, Mr. Wilfrid Shaw, 4, Hawarden Avenue, Wallasey, Cheshire.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy descriptive Song, "THE BULL FIGHT" (Oakley). Compass A to E. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

TENORS should buy the Song, "FAIRER THAN THE FAIREST FAIR" (Oakley). Compass C to A. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

TE DEUM IN F. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN F. 3d. each. By A. Toase. Novello & Co., Ltd.

TO COMPOSERS AND MUSIC PUBLISHERS.

WANTED—SONGS AND BALLADS, humorous and sentimental, for publication in newspapers; composer or publisher to retain copyright; liberal fees paid. Send songs and state amount of fee required to "Grandidge" (Dept. T), 41, Corporation Street, Manchester.

HAROLD REEVES' OLD AND RARE MUSIC AND MUSICAL BOOKS.

CATALOGUE No. 20. Containing many interesting items. Instrumental Works by 18th Century Composers, Early English Organ Music, Harpsichord Music, Collections of Old Dances, some Wesley Items, a remarkable edition of "Thesaurus Musicus," Musical Manuscripts, a finely-bound copy of Vidal's rare work, "Les Instrumens à Archet," and much else.

CATALOGUE, No. 22. Miscellaneous Second-hand Music of all kinds. Full Orchestral Scores, Organ Music, Music for the Piano, Violin, and other instruments. A Selection of Psalmody and Hymnody, Oratorios, &c.

* * * Above Catalogues post free on application.

Call and inspect the unique stock displayed by HAROLD REEVES, at 210, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.C.2.
(Next to Princes Theatre). Phone: Gerrard 8398.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRS,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

JUST PUBLISHED.

By the author of "Orchestration," "A History of Music"
(with Charles Villiers Stanford), &c.

Choral Orchestration

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

WITH MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth, Price, 7s. 6d. net.

A practical text-book on the grounding in scoring compositions, especially anthems; a complete composition analysed bar by bar; musical difficulties considered; orchestral possibilities of each passage balanced against the other; orchestral execution explained.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY COMPANY.

DR. RALPH H.

BELLAIRS' Melodic and Rhythmic Primer FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

There is in existence a multitude of pianoforte tutors, all of which follow well-known and stereotyped lines, which are rather out of date in the light of modern educational developments.

The "MELODIC AND RHYTHMIC PRIMER," by Dr. Bellairs, breaks essentially new ground, by making a definite appeal to the sub-conscious as well as to the conscious mind of the musical beginner.

No dry-as-dust finger exercises or scale studies are employed. Against such, the pupil naturally rebels, and only negligible progress results.

The basis of music being melody, harmony, and rhythm, it is obvious that a correct educational plan must embrace all three.

Ear and imagination need training as well as hand and fingers, which have hitherto had the lion's share of attention.

The object of this "PRIMER" is to eliminate drudgery by stimulating interest from the very outset.

Published in 2 parts, each 2s. net. Also complete, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON:

ENOCH & SONS,

58, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.1.

Telegrams: ENOCOUSE, LONDON. Telephone: GERRARD, 5595.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

PRINCIPAL:

MR. A. McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

GUARANTEE COURSES—

A.R.C.O.
F.R.C.O.

L.R.A.M.
A.R.C.M.

Matric.
Mus. Bac.
B.A.

A.R.C.O. (Essay).
Art of Teaching.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Great Handel Festival

JUNE 19, 22, 24, 26.

CHOIR AND ORCHESTRA OF 4,000.

SOLO BAND:

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

(Principal Violin ... Mr. W. H. REED).

Musical Director and Organist, MR. WALTER W. HEDGCOCK
Conductor, SIR FREDERIC COWEN.

SATURDAY, JUNE 19th—12.30 p.m.

GENERAL REHEARSAL.

ARTISTS:

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

TUESDAY, JUNE 22nd—2.30 p.m.

"JUDAS MACCABÆUS."

ARTISTS:

MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MISS ESTA D'ARGO.
MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

THURSDAY, JUNE 24th—2.30 p.m.

"ISRAEL IN EGYPT" (SELECTION)

AND MISCELLANEOUS SELECTIONS.

ARTISTS:

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. FREDERICK RANALOW.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

SATURDAY, JUNE 26th—2.30 p.m.

"MESSIAH"

ARTISTS:

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

During the Festival special services of Express Trains will run to the Crystal Palace from London Bridge, Holborn Viaduct, and Victoria Stations. The Services will commence at 11 a.m., and continue at intervals, the journey occupying about 15 minutes. A similar series of Return Trains will run from the Crystal Palace to London Bridge, Holborn Viaduct, and Victoria during the afternoon and evening.

Reserved Seats ...	REHEARSAL DAY ...	5s. to £1 11s. 6d.
" " ...	FESTIVAL DAYS ...	10s. 6d. to £3 3s.
Unreserved " ...	REHEARSAL DAY ...	3s. 6d.
" " ...	FESTIVAL DAYS ...	6s.

All Tickets include admission to Crystal Palace and Entertainment Tax.

Obtainable from BOX OFFICE, CRYSTAL PALACE (Central Entrance, Crystal Palace Parade), Phone: Sydenham 2180; or Chief Theatre Ticket Agencies.

ADMISSION 2s. 6d., PLUS 6d. TAX.

HENRY JAMES BUCKLAND, General Manager.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College in April last:

FELLOW (F.T.C.L.).

Thomas Edwin Teasdale Griffiths, F.R.C.O.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Sylvia R. Cleaver, Myrddin Harries, Gwyneth D. Harris, Stanley Hull, Archibald Oliver, Florence Page, Ethel H. Philbrow.

ORGAN.—Clifford Cartwright, F.R.C.O., George Parker, F.R.C.O.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Enid M. Bishop, Frances E. Bocock, Lois R. Cremer, Eva Diamond, Alice M. Goff, Emlyn J. Jeremiah, Dorothy E. Lansdell, Rose Lewis, Mary McLellan, Gertrude M. Mackinlay, William H. Mills, Doris M. Morton, Irene M. Perossi, Clarice H. Sear, Amy Skinner, Dorothy G. Smith, Alice L. Warne.

ORGAN.—Reginald Cooper, A.R.C.O.

VIOLIN.—Gertrude T. Sherwin.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—(With Honours) Cicely M. Butler, Dorothy G. Eves, Nora Langham, Doris M. Symon, Florence C. West.

ORGAN.—William R. Davey, Sheila A. Foxley.

The following SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES were examined in the Dominions, South America, and India in 1919-20:

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Gladys L. Albiez, Barbara Allen, Muriel Archer, Fanny Arenson, May I. E. Bagley, Doris M. Bettesworth, Beatrice V. Briant, Phyllis M. Butcher, Grace Clement, Constance I. Coad, Alice M. Cobbleddick, Gladys Colville, Olive Cox, Phyllis A. Crow, Peter G. Cruse, Mabel Currie, Mrs. Hannah Curtis-Cody, Leila Davies, Nettie Dennington, Sophia De Waal, Frederick V. Dugmore, Olive H. Duncan, Sylvia M. Dunford, Roska Ebnetter, Una Etheridge, Mona F. Forsyth, Eva Friedman, Lilian G. Gaze, Enid S. Gillson, Lily Grant, Lily E. Hayes, Elizabeth J. Heintz, Gertrude F. A. Hesom, Frances Hinchey, Marie C. Hobbs, Doris M. Hodgson, Dorothy Hyam, Evelyn Jeffery, Sibyl Kaw, Hilda M. Lamb, Essie M. Lawson, Rachel Lewis, Margaret L. McDowell, Irene McGarry, Cecilia McLaughlin, Eileen McQuade, Ella Maher, Marjorie L. Malcolm, Eileen Mansfield, Dorothy Meares, Mary Mills, Vera M. Morgan, Evelyn L. Moses, Eva Mullan, Grace G. Mumford, Katie Nash, Martha Noonan, Ethel Norris, Violet A. O'Keeffe, Vera Parker, Ivy Pendlebury, Beryl Poulton, Phyllis M. Prins, Vera M. Pryce, Doris Purkis, Madeline N. Robbins, Hellen K. Rutter, Dorothy Ryan, Margie Shanly, Thelma Shaw, Emily H. Smith, Lilian Smith, Hannah Spiro, Gertrude L. Thatcher, Annie G. Thomas, Margaret Thomson, Phyllis M. Tookey, Henry G. Trener, Alma M. Urquhart, Mary L. Vaudeau, Nancy M. Walsh, Claude S. Wearne, Doris de V. Williams, Ellen Williams, Grace B. Williams, Hermione L. Woodward.

SINGING.—Veronica Berry, Constance Bridges, Eileen Byrne, Beatrice T. Brown, Myra C. Van der Voost.

VIOLIN.—Leila Greig, Doris E. Halsall, Daniel E. Holz.

ORGAN.—Edna F. Robinson.

ELOCUTION.—Ivy Christensen, Iris P. Flower, Dorothy Hearne, Harriet L. Lee, Ellie C. Wray.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

THEORY AND PRACTICE OF COMPOSITION.—Ethel M. Hastings-Sheridan, Margaret Heenan.

PIANOFORTE.—Rose Abrams, Emma F. T. Anderson, Mona G. Bailie, Ellen K. Ballinger, Beatrice L. Barber, Eleanor F. Beiling, Vera M. Billing, Sister Mary A. Bitscher, Rose Q. Blanks, Ida Bond, Verite Broad, Lilian M. Bradman, Edna Burke, Eileen Byrne, Tessie Byrne, Gwendoline K. Cartland, Jean Catto, Dorothy Clapham, Gladys Clarke, Dorothy Cleal, Nora B. Coalstad, Harriet Coleman, Mamie Conroy, Norma O. Cottrell, Ada Coultas, Catherine C. Crawford, Annie Cronwright, Evelyn Cross, Dana da Costa, Helen Dean, Dorothy Deane, Thelma A. Dinsdale, Mary Donald, Zillah Dooley, Catherine D. Duff, Mary E. Duke, Gertrude Dunn, Rose M. Edwards, Norman A. Elfverson, Edith M. England, Mabel B. Fallon, Mary Foulhy, Jessie Gell, Aileen M. Gleeson, Doris (Mary) Gilshenen, Noreen V. Green, Eileen M. Greene, Olive M. Griffin, Madge Grigg, Lily Grolman, Florence M. Grout, Ida L. Hall, Edith L. B. Halley, Phyllis C. Hardinge, Hilda E. Harries, Bernice E. Harvey, Mildred Harvey, Katie Hector, Shirley T. Henzell, Esme F. Hetherington, Lucy Holland, Agnes I. S. Ingham, Eileen Houlihan, Ivy Hume, Doris E. Hunnybun, Agnes I. S. Ingham, Helen H. Jack, Annie L. Jackson, Clare M. James, Eileen Johns, Marion I. Jolly, Annie H. Katz, Josephine Kelher, Mona Kelly, Veronica Kenniwell, Mary H. King, Gertrude Kruger, Edith M. Lall, Margaret K. Lassell, Marguerite E. Leech, Mona K. Lette, Maymie Loughnan, Doreen A. Lowther, Beatrice M. Luxton, Janet McAustin, Ethel E. McDonagh, Mary McDonald, Mary I. McDonald, May

(Continued on page 370.)

(Continued from page 369.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

McKeon, Regina McMahon, Theodora V. Madsen, Marion Maloney, Annie Martini, Madge Meaney, Grace Miller, Annie Mills, Alberta J. Muir, Bertha Muncaster, Esther Nathan, Adelaide Needham, Charlotte J. Newland, Dorothy Neylan, Constance M. Nulsen, Norah E. O'Brien, Maureen O'Connor, Mary O'Kane, Mary M. Oliver, Eileen O'Loughlin, Clarice P. Palmer, Ella Pearce, Edith M. Pearson, Mary W. Perrin, Vera D. Petersen, Fred E. Poetzsch, Meta M. Poulsen, Winifred G. Prowse, Aletheia D. Quinn, Lizzie Quirk, Doris B. Ramsay, Dorothy M. Riches, Miriam R. Riley, Edna F. Robinson, Audrey K. Rutter, Elsie M. Sellars, Ellie Sertori, Nora Shanahan, Isabella E. Shaw, Essie Shillidav, Dorothy H. Shircore, Hilda Simmons, Elva Skinner, Francis M. Slater, Dorothy Smith, Ella G. Stay, Margaret M. Stoddart, Beryl Sullivan, Ella Taylor, Leila Taylor, Ismay B. L. Tibbs, Constance E. Timm, Eileen Toohey, Eileen Travers, Doris E. Turton, Francis M. Van der Burgh, Daisy G. Verner, Elsie Walker, Wilfreda Ward, Eveline A. Waters, Freda W. Wesley, Gwendoline Williams, Kitty Williams, Nellie Williams, Ivy W. A. Willshire, Margaret J. Wilton, Olive M. Woodard, Bertha Zoeller.

SINGING.—Marion O. I. Ainslie, Lucretia J. Collard, Eileen M. Finlay, Ivy D. Haarhoff, Bertha I. Kennett, Doris Thomas, Constance E. Timm.

VIOLIN.—Hephzibah Bailey, Vera D. Fahey, Vera A. Foster, Esmé Reid.

VIOLONCELLO.—Marion O. I. Ainslie.

ELOCUTION.—George J. Absalom, Dorothy S. Black, Lilian B. Croft, Olive N. Gibbons, Edna M. Hutton, Dora Kantor, Eileen G. Laverty, Lavinia McIntyre, Vera M. Pitman, Dorris A. Read, Joan E. Salomon, Kate Shulman, Horace D. West, Rhoda M. Williams.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Lina E. Arias, Eunice L. Astbury, Hilda Balk (Hons.), Kate A. Baseby, Edna F. Bell, Jessie A. Benson (Hons.), Lettice H. Besanko, Lilian E. Bewes (Hons.), Albina Bini (Hons.), Kathleen M. Boyes, Helen McC. Boyne, Blandina Bremer, Queenie L. Brockman, Gertrude Bronsdon, Chrissie Brooks, Doris Brophy, Isabel H. Browne, Margaret Burnett (Hons.), Eileen Burns, Delia Carmody (Hons.), Amy S. Clark (Hons.), Catherine E. Cleary, Sarah L. Cohen, Grace Colclough, Winifred E. Cooper, Muriel A. Deane, Gladys M. de Grant, Annie A. Dehle, Jessie Dodd, Bertie Finlayson, Florence M. Fitzgerald, Thelma Forbes, Gladys M. Fox, Ethel A. Frye, Annie Gard, Victoria A. Gill (Hons.), Mildred F. Glover, Olive V. Gordon (Hons.), Noni Griffin (Hons.), Dorothy M. E. Hawker, Doris C. M. Hems (Hons.), Dorothy W. Henson, Jessie M. Hirst (Hons.), Ruby L. Hudson, Dulcie Jackson, Easther Jacobs (Hons.), Rebecca Javen, Gertrude Javett, Olive Jenkins, Reenie Jenkins, Alice O. Johnson, Fanny Kaplan, Eileen Kennedy (Hons.), Ruby E. A. Kerr (Hons.), Odie R. Kerr, Mary A. Kinzel, Norah M. Knight, Marjorie C. La Brooy, Ella Langley, Emily Leahy (Hons.), Elsie Lynch, Kathleen E. McCarthy (Hons.), Marie McMahon, Isobel F. Maxwell, Phyllis B. Morton, Annie Mustart, Ailsa L. Nicholls, Doris L. Narnst, Kathleen O'Brien, Millicent Paine, Dorothy Landau, Silla Parakh, Olga S. Parker, Ruby V. Paxton, Ella B. Petering (Hons.), Reabie V. Phoenix, Mildred Prosser, Diana T. Ratazzi (Hons.), Emmie Rope (Hons.), Ivy L. Rose (Hons.), Ethel Rowe, Barbara Simon, Marjory E. Sinclair, Maidie Slack, Gladys E. Smith (Hons.), Agnes Speirs, Claudia J. Sutherland, May W. Taylor, Gwendoline R. Thomson, Ruby H. Thomson, Veronica L. Toms, Phyllis M. Wakeford, Margaret M. Walsh, Gwin J. Waterworth, Annie D. Willcocks, Laura E. Woodman.

SINGING.—Muriel Archer, Nellie Barton, Minnetta A. Cleworth (Hons.), Gladys Colville (Hons.), Nellie Dowd, Enid S. Gillson (Hons.), Olive R. Handley, Myra Johnston (Hons.), Mollie Kennedy (Hons.), Eleanor Liddell (Hons.), Kathleen E. McCarthy (Hons.), Norah R. Rolfe.

VIOLIN.—Liliane Dudresil-Elie, Blodwyn Hill, Mary V. Thompson (Hons.).

EXAMINERS: Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D., Sir Frederic Cowen, Dr. W. Creser, Dawson Freer, Dr. H. A. Harding, Dr. E. F. Horner, C. Egerton Lowe, Albert Mallinson, Alfred Mistowski, Mus. B., S. Myerscough, Mus. B., Dr. C. W. Pearce, Charles Schilsky, and G. F. Vincent.

The next Diploma Examinations will take place in July next at the College in London and at certain Local Centres: last day of entry June 26

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

POT-POURRI

A CYCLE OF FRAGMENTS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

ON VERSES BY

ISOBEL SCOTT BREMNER

COMPOSED BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BROADWOOD
PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., Limited.

THE PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS OF

THE AMERICAN TONE-POET

ALBERT KÜSSNER

HELEN PITKIN writes:—

"I have received from the composer, Albert Küssner, a delightful pamphlet of three melodies, invitingly presented with the title 'Moon Moths' on its cover. The book is dedicated to his sister, Amalia Küssner, the remarkable young woman who has been depicting the beauties of royalty and of the first families in this country in miniature. The dedication reads simply 'To Amalia,' but the music says more. It idealizes her as clearly as her dainty brush does the great dames who sit to her to be immortalized, and there is a breath of spring, the lingering stringendos of passion, warm touches all through as though the composer were telling his tale in the green pastures under never a wintry moon. The themes are prose poems and easy to read; but, with all music of this kind, it requires talent in interpretation. I like 'Moon Moths.' I have played them so far in the noon-day sun. When I have imprisoned them in my brain I shall hear them as they may be best heard in the twilight of a southern moonrise."

MOON MOTHS, 3s. DAWN, 2s.

AT PARTING, 2s. HESITATION, 2s.

THE EVENING HOUR, 2s. MEMORIES, 2s.

BY CANDLE LIGHT, 1s. ENTREATY, 2s.

ETC., ETC., ETC.

At any Music Sellers.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS' RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVICK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSON.'

This adaptation has been made by Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., at the request of the LEAGUE OF ARTS, to whom it is dedicated. It is specially intended for the performance at the Dedication of the Cenotaph and similar ceremonies throughout the country.

WITH PROUD THANKSGIVING
CHORUS

BY

LAURENCE BINYON

AND

EDWARD ELGAR

Arranged from "For the Fallen" for S.A.T.B., with accompaniment for Military or Brass Band, or Organ or Pianoforte.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Tonic Sol-fa (in the Press).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JUNE 1 1920

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS

BY EDWIN EVANS

X.—RALPH VAUGHAN WILLIAMS (concluded)

The references to Vaughan Williams's earliest works which appeared in the first section of this article, and those made last month to such of his compositions as are, directly or indirectly, based upon folk-song, practically exhaust the list of his orchestral works, save for the one which is his masterpiece, the 'London' Symphony. Before passing to a consideration of that remarkable work, it is, however, desirable to mention his incidental music to 'The Wasps' of Aristophanes, written for a performance which took place at Cambridge in 1909. In the form of a suite, it is not unfamiliar in the concert-room, though scarcely performed with the frequency it deserves. Though quite unpretentious, and unaffected by Hellenistic or any other kind of learning, it is possible that this playful music really does reflect something of the mental attitude of an average Athenian citizen when stimulated by the witty irreverence of the father of comedy. It has even a touch of innuendo, not to speak of a reasonably free indulgence in colloquialism. That it is an outrageous anachronism is entirely in its favour. Imagine how dull the same theme could have been made by certain musicians possessing views or theories upon what is authentically Greek. It would be much worse than going to a Tudor expert for incidental music to 'The Merry Wives.' Happily the precedents set by Parry and others in similar circumstances were such as to afford Vaughan Williams the right guidance, if indeed he had need of it, which does not seem probable.

The time has come to speak of a work which forms a peak not only in Vaughan Williams's career, but in the annals of modern British music, the 'London' Symphony. It is significant that it should have come for the first time before the public at one of the four remarkable concerts given by the late F. B. Ellis, at Queen's Hall, in the spring of 1914, for this private venture, which would have deterred any of the professional concert-givers of the day, happens to have proved one of the turning-points in the movement with which these articles are concerned. Perhaps it is equally significant that the next opportunity for hearing it in London was provided by the enterprise of Mr. Adrian C. Boult, who had not then taken the place among our conductors which is now acknowledged to be his due. Finally, its recent repetition at Queen's Hall was due, not to the initiative of those organizations whose business it is to supply us with orchestral music, but to that of the newly formed British Music Society, which was enabled to perform this public service by the munificence of a private patron. Add to this that it is about to be published, not in the ordinary course of business enterprise, but under the auspices of the Carnegie Trust, that is to say, again under private patronage. After all allowance has been made for the difficulties, technical and financial, involved in giving to the world a work of such dimensions and importance, the mere relation of the circumstances is an indictment of the commercial side of our musical world, which cannot truthfully claim to have fulfilled its function in the community.

Between the various performances certain revisions took place, chiefly, but not exclusively, in the direction of compression. Even as it stands the work is lengthy, though there are many modern symphonies which contrive to say much less at even greater length, and this has not proved to be an enduring objection to their inclusion in the repertoire.

The effect which the Ellis concerts, with their catholic selection of new or unfamiliar works, had upon criticism at the time was that of raising once more the vexed and perennial question 'What is English music?' My own contribution to the discussion* being intimately associated with the first performance of the 'London' Symphony, I trust that I may plead extenuating circumstances for including in the present article those portions of it which appear relevant:

'Music is primarily the expression of an individual. It expresses a race only in the degree in which its creator is typical of that race. Vaughan Williams's music is often hailed as characteristically English, especially by those who are cosmopolitan enough to look at their countrymen, as it were, from the outside, and these are the best judges, as the stay-at-home Englishman's idea of himself is built up chiefly of catch phrases. Therefore Vaughan Williams must, in some way, be typical. It has nothing to do with externals, or his critics would not be so eager to seize upon the unfamiliar elements of his idiom and ascribe them conveniently to French influences, as they happen to know that he spent a few months in intimate association with Maurice Ravel. Moreover, the interpretation in music of mere English externals is quite another matter. In his very small manner, Edward German accomplished it fairly well; and who would claim to detect anything in common between Edward German and Vaughan Williams? The fact is that the Englishman tends to express himself outwardly in conventions, and it is these that a composer like German seizes upon, whilst Vaughan Williams expresses the Englishman within him. There is no screen of convention between him and his music.

* The Outlook, April 4, 1914.

'That in itself is, however, not enough. The inner personality must be in some measure typical, and that must be revealed by his music, if the general impression is justified. Here I am perhaps dealing with subtleties beyond the scope of musical criticism, but I distinctly feel in Vaughan Williams's music a type of personality which I believe to be so frequent in these islands as to be rightly considered national. It is a personality that is intellectually aristocratic—not to say fastidious—and biologically, if that word expresses my meaning, democratic. Using the word "caste" in a purely intellectual—and not a social—sense, it is a temperament that without compromising caste and, above all, without conscious condescension, can be sincerely and whole-heartedly of and with the people. Now that is a combination that I believe to be peculiarly English. The intellectual democrat of the Continent either condescends or becomes a vulgarian. It was so in the 18th century, and I do not believe that the French Revolution has made so great a change as it is credited with.

'All this is not so remote as it seems from a consideration of the "London" Symphony. That remarkable work is the expression, not of London, but of a Londoner. Its reflective side, which is overwhelmingly predominant, owes its most beautiful moments to its detachment from all that the title might imply on the material side. That is the composer's innate fastidiousness. But the frequent references to the bustling scene in which this inner reflective life has its being are handled with a sympathy so sincere that even occasional vulgarities are touched upon with affection. Add to that a certain diffident reserve that almost brings the flow of musical communicativeness to a premature stop, and you have the Englishman who feels deeply, but is embarrassed when he suddenly discovers that he has been showing it.'

The spacious forms of music are said to be passing out of fashion. This is not strictly true. The immense expansion of the art of music which has been taking place during the last half century has obviously had a stimulating effect upon the receptive faculties of the more enlightened sections of the international musical audience. Composers whose sympathies are buried in the past have failed to realise that, as an inevitable consequence of this, those listeners to whom symphonies are addressed have become capable of assuming, as a matter of course, much that formerly had to be told them explicitly. The long-winded discussion of a small group of themes, whose implications can be perceived almost before the close of the exposition, puts an unnecessary strain upon the patience of the modern listener, whose mind has become sufficiently alert to take such discussions as read. Many modern composers, conscious of this new development, curtail the length of their works by adopting elliptical methods, sometimes in the presentation of the thematic argument, often in the harmonic progress, and practically always in the recapitulation. Such works as still retain their large dimensions in the music of to-day can easily be divided into two classes: those which owe their length to methods of development which are rapidly becoming obsolete, and those which owe it to the wealth of material employed. The prodigality of invention in the latter case may result from the fruitfulness of the musical idea, or from the importance of the underlying poetic conception. In the best music the two causes operate together. It is to such influences as these, and not to mere musical discursiveness, that one must ascribe the length of Arnold Bax's Pianoforte Quintet which was performed recently, and of Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony. The poetic basis of the latter precluded brief statement. One might write a sonnet on the Pyramids, but the thoughts of the Londoner on the kaleidoscopic surroundings in which his life is spent cannot be so compressed, if their expression is to be adequate. Only the spacious forms of the symphony could supply a sufficient breadth of canvas to accommodate enough of the myriad evocations which the very name of London calls up, for the result to be commensurate with the source of inspiration. It is also doubtless due to the subject, as well as to Vaughan Williams's modern outlook, that these broad spaces are filled with a profusion of material, that the developments are rich in new incident, and that the recapitulations are curtailed, the formal balance being restored by an important Coda to the first movement, and by the Coda-like relation of the Finale to the whole. Much of the material is of purely incidental quality. Especially is this the case with such easily recognisable features as the Westminster Chimes, the Lavender Cry, and the frequent snatches of tunes having the jovial rhythm which, to the man of the London streets, is the quintessence of musical enjoyment. That some of these fragments should have even a Transatlantic twang, does not, in the days we live in, make them less relevant. But it is important to remember that all these suggestions are subordinate to the broad outline of the Symphony, which rests securely upon personal foundations, in thought and theme.

The Symphony has the orthodox four movements, and although there is some recurring material, their unusually close relation to each other is due to a far more subtle unity of conception than is usually conveyed by such recurrence. From that point of view it is only the connection of prologue and epilogue that has any formal importance. The Allegro, with its amazing wealth of suggestion, would have led a lesser musician to diffuseness. The fact that, in spite of the utmost apparent freedom in development, it remains a close knit symphonic movement would alone almost suffice to place Vaughan Williams among the foremost composers of his day, for it is precisely this power of concentration which is the mark of the elect.

The slow movement, from which we quote the following:

Lento.

pp Wind and Harp.

pp Str. con sordini.

Horn.

pp

pp Wind and Str.

is lyrical, and therefore much less complex. Its meditative reflections are carried to a nodal point, and then subside upon a viola solo, unaccompanied. The Scherzo has the bustling animation, the humour, and even some of the noises of the popular scene. An amusing incident is the passage of London youths equipped with mouth-organs. But we are reminded that the composer's attitude is subjective when he turns, so to speak, from his open window, in order to muse upon his theme in the quiet calm of a nocturne. The Finale is perhaps the most transparent movement of the whole, and from the listener's standpoint seems to clinch the matter under discussion far more effectively than the majority of modern symphonic conclusions.

An adverse fate seems to overhang the majority of Vaughan Williams's excursions into the field of chamber music. I have already mentioned the Quintet for pianoforte, violin, clarinet, violoncello, and horn, which dates from 1901 and was played at one of the Clinton concerts. It is no longer permitted to appear in the authoritative list of the composer's works. A Quintet in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, viola, violoncello, and bass which followed in 1904, is still included, but there are symptoms of its possible excision at the next overhauling of the list. The String Quartet of 1908 has been lost apparently beyond recall, and there remains only the Phantasy Quintet for two violins, two violas, and violoncello. This has had several performances, and has made a lasting impression on those who heard it, but I hesitate to trust my memory, and as the reason why the manuscript is not available at the moment is that there is a prospect of the work being shortly accessible in print, I cannot grieve over the inevitable lacuna in the present article. I must, however, content myself with saying that in my recollection it is one of the most characteristic works of its author, and one which makes lovers of chamber music regret that his contribution to their repertoire should not be more voluminous.*

Vaughan Williams does not seem at any time to have been much attracted by keyboard music. The list of his works does not include a single composition for pianoforte solo, and it is even more remarkable, considering his early experiences as an organist, that his first organ work should have made its appearance only last year. It consists of three preludes founded on Welsh hymn-tunes. The second and third of them are strikingly characteristic both of his harmonic method and of his line of musical thought, in all its simplicity. The opening bars of the third prelude, entitled 'Hyfrydol':

MANUAL. Moderato maestoso. Melody by R. H. PRICHARD (1811-87).

Gt. to Principal (with 16-ft.) coup. to Full Sw. without Reeds.

mf

PEDAL.

mf

* A quotation from the Phantasy Quintet is given in an article on Vaughan Williams by the Editor of Music and Letters which appeared in the second issue of that journal.

furnish a good example. The author of the tune, the Rev. Rowland Hugh Prichard, ministered at Bala, his birth-place, and acted as precentor at the annual Sasiwns y Bala.

In the opening section of this article, and again in writing of the 'London' Symphony, Vaughan Williams's position in our music has been so fully indicated that there remains little to add by way of epilogue. We have deprecated the tendency in some quarters to endow him with a kind of leadership to which he does not aspire. Apart from the danger which besets both those who bestow and those who accept such titular prominence, Vaughan Williams's personality is so pronounced that it is best appreciated as an isolated appearance. There is no musician who closely resembles or follows him. One might at most detect a certain affinity of outlook between his music and that of Gustav Holst, but the analogy which strikes one at a distance begins to fade in proximity, and familiarity with the works of both dispels all idea of a close comparison. There is nothing but good to come of this isolated position, for to-day, perhaps more than at any other time, we have need of strong uncompromising individualities. For all its urbanity that of Vaughan Williams is hewn in rock. The very absence of concession, either to the senses or to sentimental inclinations, which gives his music an aspect of austerity, also endows it with the quality of gaining immediate confidence, even when it does not please. It is the language of the plain-spoken man, who abhors subterfuge, and endeavours, not always with complete success, to state neither more nor less than what is in his mind. Men of that stamp have not been of frequent appearance in the history of music. So far as we can gauge the mentality of the past, the 16th century would appear to have been the most conducive to the deployment of such character in music. Probity then still retained much of the glamour that it had acquired in the Middle Ages, and the best musical works of that period have the quality of cathedrals. It is perhaps relevant to note that where we find the same love of 'honest building' we can generally also detect the same constructional methods, or at least derivatives from the same principles; and there are few modern composers in whom they can be so readily traced as in Vaughan Williams.

LIST OF WORKS

- 1895 Three Elizabethan Part-Songs (Joseph Williams).
 1896 Song—'Claribel' (Boosey).
 1898 Serenade for small orchestra (MS.).
 1902 Song—'Whither must I wander' (Boosey).
 1903 'Willow Wood' (Rossetti), for baritone solo, female voices, and orchestra (Stainer & Bell).
 „ Songs—{ 'Blackmore' } (Boosey).
 „ { 'Linden Lea' }
 „ { 'Orpheus with his Lute' } (Keith Prowse).
 „ { 'When I am Dead' }
 „ { 'If I were Queen' }
 „ { 'Boy Johnny' }
 „ { 'The Splendour Falls' } (Boosey).
 „ { 'Tears, Idle Tears' } „ { 'Winter's Willow' }

- 1903 'The House of Life' (six Sonnets of Rossetti) (Ashdown).
 „ 'Sound Sleep,' for three female voices (Novello).
 1904 Two Orchestral Impressions—'Harnham Down' and 'Boldrewood' (MS.).
 „ Quintet in C minor (MS.).
 „ Songs of Travel (seven songs, two vols.) (Boosey).
 „ Songs—{ 'Reveilleez-vous Piccarz' } French Folk-Songs (Boosey).
 „ { 'L'Amour de Moy' }
 1905 Symphonic Impression—'In the Fen Country' (MS.).
 „ Song—'Dreamland' (Boosey).
 1906 Heroic Elegy (MS.).
 „ 'Toward the Unknown Region,' for chorus and orchestra (Stainer & Bell).
 „ Norfolk Rhapsody No. 1, in E minor (MS.).
 1907 „ „ No. 2, in D minor (MS.).
 1908 Quartet in G minor (MS.).
 „ Folk-Songs of England. Parts II. & IV. (Novello).
 1903-9 Sea Symphony, for soli, chorus, and orchestra (Stainer & Bell).
 1908 Songs—{ 'Buonaparte' } (Boosey).
 „ { 'The sky above the roof' }
 1908-9 'On Wenlock Edge,' for solo, strings, and pianoforte (Boosey).
 1909 'The Wasps,' Overture (Bowes & Bowes).
 1910 'The Spanish Ladies' (Folk-Song) (Boosey).
 1910-11 Five Mystical Songs, for solo, chorus, and orchestra (also for baritone and men's chorus) (Stainer & Bell).
 1910 Fantasia for String Orchestra on a Theme by Tallis (MS.).
 1912 Fantasia on Christmas Carols, for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra (Stainer & Bell).
 1912-13 'London' Symphony (MS.). (To be printed for the Carnegie Trust.)
 1913 'O Praise the Lord.' Motet for double choir and semi-chorus (Stainer & Bell).
 „ Five Folk-Songs for unaccompanied chorus (Stainer & Bell).
 „ Fantasy Quintet (MS.).
 1914 'The lark ascending,' Romance for violin and orchestra (MS.).
 1911-14 Ballad-Opera, 'Hugh, the Drover' (MS., unfinished).
 1914 Four Hymns for tenor solo and string orchestra, or pianoforte and viola (Boosey).
 1919 Three Preludes for organ, founded on Welsh tunes (Stainer & Bell).
 „ Eight Traditional English Carols (Stainer & Bell).
 „ 'The Turtle Dove' (Folk-Song) (Curwen).
 1920 'O clap your hands.' Motet for chorus, brass, and organ (Stainer & Bell).

PART-SONGS AND MADRIGALS (NO DATE OF COMPOSITION ASCERTAINABLE)

- 'Fain would I change that note,' S.A.T.B. (Novello).
 'The Jolly Ploughboy,' Folk-Song, T.T.B.B. „
 'Come away, Death,' S.S.A.T.B. (Stainer & Bell).
 'Ward, the Pirate,' Folk-Song, T.T.B.B. (Curwen).
 'The Winter is gone,' Folk-Song, T.T.B.B. (Novello).
 'Mannin Veen,' Manx Folk-Song, S.A.T.B. (Curwen).
 'Love is a Sickness,' S.A.T.B. (Stainer & Bell).
 'Ring out your bells,' S.S.A.T.B. (Laudy).
 'Rest,' S.S.A.T.B. (Laudy).
 'English Hymnal' (tunes arranged).
 'Welcome Songs,' Purcell Edition, Part I. (Novello).
 Folk-Song Society Journal, Vol. 1, No. 8 (61 tunes, Eastern Counties, collected by Printers, Barnicott & Pearce).
 'Welcome Songs,' Purcell Edition, Part II. (Novello).

3rd Part of vol 2
 2141 in 4042.243.2

OVER-EXPRESSION

BY TOM S. WOTTON

Kufferath, in 'L'Art de Diriger,' relates how Hans Richter, when rehearsing Beethoven's C minor Symphony at Brussels, taught a lesson to the members of the orchestra. It was in regard to the opening theme of the slow movement, which is marked p dolce, no nuance being indicated till the f of the seventh bar, followed by the p of the eighth. The violas and violoncellos nevertheless proceeded to play it con espressione. When the contour rose, they introduced a crescendo; when it fell, a decrescendo. With rubatos and vibratos they bedecked it, and strove generally to express their artistic grace. Richter heard them patiently to the end, and then requested them to give the melody as Beethoven had marked it—piano, dolce. Nothing more! In other passages of the Symphony the Master had not been so chary with his indications. The omission of nuances from this particular theme did not arise from negligence, nor from a hope that the performers would supplement his instructions, but simply because he wished it to be played as directed. The orchestra learnt that the beauty of a melody, like that of the curve of a Grecian vase, may depend solely on purity of outline. As excrescences would destroy the charm of the latter, so it is with the former. Any attempt at over-expression defeated its own ends. Incidentally, they learnt also that to execute a passage with perfectly even tone and rhythm is far from easy. It requires well-trained artists, with thorough command of their instruments.

The doubtless honest attempts of the Brussels musicians to improve upon Beethoven may be paralleled at most concerts, the only variable factor being the amount of underlying honesty. And this over-expression is not confined to performers. Composers themselves are prone to indulge in it. Rimsky-Korsakov once admitted that in some passages of 'Mlada' he had employed three flutes when one would have been sufficient. In certain places three had seemed necessary—in Act 3 he obtains a curious effect with four—so, having them ready to his hand, he could not resist the temptation to use them elsewhere. Other composers may not be so frank, but there is not much doubt that many of them are guilty of similar over-expression, and it is not always confined to two extra flutes.

The origin of this tendency, whether in the direction of exaggerated nuances or unnecessary flutes or superfluous notes, probably is the idea that we of the present day possess emotions and feelings infinitely more complex and subtle than previous generations, and that this hypersensitiveness requires proportionately complex and subtle means of expression. But is this a fact? It is doubtful whether the brain-power of the modern scientist is one whit better than that of the old Greek philosophers. It may seem greater, but that is because he, thanks to his instruments, has all his senses multiplied a hundred-fold. He can see the invisible, hear the inaudible, weigh the imponderable, but his brain-power has not kept pace with his instruments, and in some respects may even be inferior to that of the sages of the past, in that the modern man is often strangely ignorant outside his special department of knowledge, while the ancient philosopher usually knew all there was to be known.

Is it not possible, even probable, that much the same holds good as regards our emotions? We are apt to consider our sensitiveness much greater than that of our ancestors, when, after all, it is merely our means of expression that have improved. The modern organist, seated before his four or five manuals, with his ranks of pipes warranted to imitate every known instrument except an organ, may possess sensations more complex than those of a certain Cantor of Leipsic, but does he? The modern composer, with his unlimited supply of flutes, may have a more musical soul than a Mozart or a Schubert, but has he? The modern pianist may have a nervous organization more highly developed than that of a Chopin, but the fact of performing on a modern grand pianoforte does not prove it.

That a musician needs a perfect instrument to express his ideas and emotions adequately, is of course true. But, having the perfect instrument, he has no more right to pretend that his sensations are on a level with it, than has an astronomer to pretend that his eyesight is on a level with the powers of his telescope. If the Brussels musicians had been armed only with the bow with which Corelli had to be content, they would not have been able even to play their theme in accordance with the simple indications. With the modern bow and modern technique they were able to carry out the directions explicitly—and more. It was this fatal facility of being able to do the more that misled them. In the same way, the modern composer is inclined to imagine that because he is able to add more notes to his chords and more flutes to his score, therefore he expresses his meaning better by so doing.

Parentetically, these extra notes and additional flutes are indirectly the cause of much inferior music being foisted on the public; and this for a purely mechanical reason—the time occupied in the writing of it. Mozart could copy out the score of the 'Don Juan' Overture in an evening. Had he been dissatisfied with the result, the absolute labour of writing out another overture would not have been a serious matter. But the writing of a modern work, with its crowded staves and innumerable accidentals, is a very serious matter for a busy man. Should divine discontent tempt him to be dissatisfied with his work, a human dislike to drudgery, combined with an inability to compress more than twenty-four hours into a day, would possibly induce him to resist the temptation. With a few perfunctory alterations, he is inclined to let the work stand. After all, the public may be in the same mood as he was when it was originally penned.

And even if he be not disturbed by artistic doubts, in order to complete his score he must work at it when he can find the time, not when inspiration jogs his elbow.

If he would only realise it, much of the complexity is due not to any particular complexity in himself or his subject, but to the fact that he possesses a nearly perfect vehicle of expression. And the irony is that often much of the complexity of the score is spurious. Half the modern 'effects'—the harp glissandos, the divided strings, the muted brass, the tricks on the percussion—are as much remplissage as the middle parts of a fortissimo in an Auber overture.

It is understandable that writers on musical matters should encourage the idea that the composer or performer is a creature of infinite complexity. It is difficult to wax poetical over the obvious, the mere technicalities of a musical work. It necessitates the lavish use of music-type, and demands a musical training perhaps more general amongst composers than amongst those who write of them. On the other hand, it is not difficult to indulge in a fine flow of language over the obscure: to discuss what may or may not have been in the composer's mind when he wrote his music, what its 'atmosphere' and 'poetic basis,' whether it smacks of Devonshire, Norfolk, or Nijni Novgorod. If there be no subtleties, the writer—chacun à son métier—will discover them, and the composer, in his turn, is flattered to learn that his music, like Lord Burleigh's nod, means such a devil of a lot.

Perhaps if the composer, or performer, or even the writer on music, were subjected to psychoanalysis, he would be surprised to find how much of his work originated in ideas not only other than what he fancied, but of a greater simplicity than he fondly imagined.

That music should tend to become more complicated, owing to improvements in our technique and instruments, is perhaps inevitable. That our ideas and emotions are more complex than those of our forebears, if not true, is at any rate debateable. But that the complexity of our scores is justified by a possible increase in the complexity of our emotions, or warranted by the improvements in our instruments, is another question, and one which perhaps most of us in our more logical moments would answer in the negative. In any case, whatever may be said as regards our emotions, there is no reason for supposing that our perceptions are keener than those of preceding generations. There must be a point beyond which the perceptions of the most abnormal individual refuse to register. To place on paper combinations that no human ear can grasp seems as futile as writing music that no human fingers can play. The Brussels musicians discovered that to play piano, dolce, required that each should have perfect command of his instrument. Might it be suggested that it requires a thorough master of his soul to compose piano, dolce?

THE SYMPHONIC WORKS OF W. H. BELL

By M. VAN SOMEREN-GODFERY
(Continued from May number, page 297)

The Symphony No. 2, in A, bears the date 'July, 1917—March, 1918,' and is dedicated to Theo. Wendt, the conductor of the Capetown Municipal Orchestra, who produced it in August, 1918. There have been two subsequent performances at Capetown, and in addition to these, the slow movement has been played as an excerpt.

Capetown audiences, who know their symphonies from Beethoven to Brahms thoroughly, had certainly been puzzled by the texture of the Symphonic Variations. Their performance evidently had its effect, for although Bell is still underrated as a symphonic composer, the second Symphony scored an immediate success, and there has been a spontaneous outburst of enthusiasm at every performance. At the plébiscite concert held at the end of last season this Symphony came second in vote-winning—much to the alarm of the conductor, as the orchestra was at that time so depleted by war exigencies and illness amongst its members, as to make a performance of such a heavily-scored work practically an impossibility. Wendt, in his programme-notes, suggests that the composer has gone back to Beethoven for his model. Certainly this work has much of the epic quality and grandeur of the fifth Symphony. It resembles it also in being largely evolved from one theme, and in the Scherzo leading into the Finale without a break.

It is laid out for a full orchestra—piccolo and two flutes (or three flutes), two oboes, cor anglais, three clarinets, bass clarinet, two bassoons, double-bassoon, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones, tuba, triangle, cymbals, harp, timpani, and strings; and is in the usual four movements.

The harp does not appear in the first movement, and the composer is most eclectic in his use of the percussion. Only the timpani are heard in the first two movements, the triangle is added in the Scherzo, and the cymbals are held in reserve till the Finale, where with the minimum of use they produce a maximum of effect.

A short introduction of eight bars, Poco adagio 3-2, commencing:

Ex. 1 (a).
Poco adagio.

Ob., Vl.
Celli, Bassi, Tuba. Cor., Viole.
f mf mf Timp.

leads into the Allegro moderato, 4-4. After a further ten bars, the first subject:

Ex. 2 (b).

which has already been hinted at, is given out by the brass. This really bears most of the weight of the Symphony, and therefore needs special attention. Subsidiary themes are evolved from it, and also a great part of the material for the next two movements.

Development of Ex. 2 immediately follows, and a short horn motif leads the movement into quintuple time with the phrase:

Ex. 3 (c).

allotted to the oboe. Much use is made of both of these. Some characteristic octave leaps for strings—a favourite device of the composer, which occurs to a notable extent in all the works under consideration—leads into 3-4 time, and the second subject, in E major, is given out on the horns over an octave-leaping passage on the lower strings.

This leads back into quintuple time, and further development of all the subjects. The Allegro ends fortissimo with a version of the theme (b) in augmentation on the whole of the brass.

The second movement, Poco adagio, 3-4, opens in F major with an introduction based on similar material to the opening of the first movement. A version of (b) appears also on the oboe, and is further used in the course of the movement. This leads to the main theme:

Ex. 4 (d).

a most beautiful melody for the strings which is clearly related to (b). It has a decidedly Celtic flavour, and its modal quality is accentuated by the harmonization of its cadences. The whole movement is constructed on more delicate lines than any of the others, and is well contrasted with them. It is not, however, without its climaxes, and there is a change to 9-8 in the centre section. The short horn solo immediately before the final cadence, with its high tenuto accompaniment for divisi strings, is indeed one of those moments in music which bring tears to the eyes by their sheer beauty.

B

The Scherzo, 2-2, follows, quite changing the atmosphere, and taking the key back to A minor. The subject:

Ex. 5 (e).

is announced at once with quite an original orchestral colour, the wood-wind being cunningly interwoven with a combination of muted and unmuted strings. A contrasted centre section is characterised by alternate bars of duple and triple time, the new theme being first given out as a horn solo. A return is made to the opening theme, and a bridge-passage built on the above horn solo leads into the Finale, Allegro vivace, 3-4, in A major. A special feature is the liberal use of the brass. Although a massive structure results, any feeling of turgidity is skilfully avoided.

This is perhaps the most intense work of the three, and has probably won its success in performance by obvious sincerity and sheer merit. There is no playing to the gallery, and in writing to please himself the composer has given of his very best.

(To be continued.)

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

(Continued from May number, page 310.)

BY HARVEY GRACE

II.—THE WEIMAR PERIOD (continued)

Like other composers who were also famous as players, Bach left a number of works in which the virtuoso is considered first, last, and almost all the time. But just as we have seen him rapidly drawing away from his contemporaries in the melodic and expressive power of his fugues, so we find him very soon leaving them far behind in the writing of bravura pieces. The toccatas and more showy fugues of Buxtehude, Froberger, Muffat, Pachelbel, and other early writers have little interest for us to-day, whereas Bach's best essays in the field are still among the most popular of recital items. Their superiority to other works of the period lies in the originality and musical value of their subject-matter, in the significance—sometimes even fire and passion—of the bravura passages, and, perhaps above all, in their continuity.

The chief works of the concert type clearly belong to the nine years Bach spent at Weimar. His fame as a player grew rapidly, and he seems to have made a tour every autumn, giving recitals at the various courts and large towns. No doubt each journey found him ready with one or two fresh pieces wherewith to astonish the natives. How completely he astonished them is shown by rhapsodies quoted by Spitta and others. Thus when Bach went to Cassel in 1714 to try the restored organ at the Court, he so amazed the Crown Prince by a pedal solo that a ring set with precious stones left the Royal finger for Bach's pocket. Spitta tells us that 'an intelligent admirer of art' describing the incident says that Bach's 'feet flew over the pedal-board as if they had wings; and the ponderous and ominous tones pierced the ear of the hearer like a flash of lightning or a clap of thunder; and if the skill of his feet alone earned him such a gift, what would the prince have given him had he used his hands as well?'

One of the best of these show pieces is the Prelude and Fugue in D major (vi., 10). Griepenkerl says the Prelude and Fugue were usually regarded as separate works, being found together only in a manuscript belonging to Nicolai. This appears to be the sole authority for their association. Although the fugue might well stand alone, the prelude seems to call for some kind of pendant. The striking Adagio with which it ends is clearly a link of the type we find elsewhere in works of this period. (See the Grave in the G major Prelude and Fugue discussed last month.) It is obviously no fit ending for the Prelude, though as a kind of embryonic slow movement between two brilliant ones it is highly effective. Griepenkerl tells us also that his own manuscript of the Prelude is marked Concertato, 'whence,' he adds, 'we may conclude that this composition was not used in Divine service.' The Prelude has a taste of the early French overture style in its opening mixture of pomp and brilliance, though we see the hand of Buxtehude in bars 13 and 14. A genuine Bach stroke—one of his most brilliant—is the scale of D following on the close in F sharp major. The interest of this splendid beginning is not well maintained by the Alla Breve. There is far too much mechanical use of a sequence that may have been fairly fresh in Bach's day, but which has long since become threadbare. The tamest parts of the movement are those based on a little figure :

which Bach is content to repeat in various keys. (Years later, when writing the big G minor, Bach used the figure again. It comes on the scene in bar 57, very modestly in the alto, in a kind of 'by the way' style :

But how much more resourceful is Bach's use of it! No longer made to stand alone and show its poverty, it now takes its place in the general discussion, and becomes a significant feature for nearly forty bars. It would be difficult to find a better example of the mature Bach's power of imparting significance to a scrap of commonplace.)

The Alla Breve calls for straightforward treatment, with a few changes of manual that suggest themselves. As we shall have used the reeds and mixtures in the opening, and shall require them for the Adagio, we might well restrict ourselves to diapasons for the body of the work. A good pace seems to be called for. Spitta says that the Alla Breve direction 'is not to be understood of the pace, but rather indicates only the style, which is strictly sustained.' I much prefer the unexpectedly racy remark of Matheson in his 'Grosse-General Bass Schule,' Hamburg, 1732, quoted by Pirro in his 'L'Orgue de Jean Sebastian Bach':

'It is not necessary to indicate the pace of an Alla Breve. The term alone serves to stir the most sluggish mind, and to loosen the stiffest fingers. It is as if one said to one's horse, "Gee up!"'

The Adagio is a dramatic interruption that leaves all similar bridge-passages of the period far behind. The sombre effect of the double pedal, the grinding discords, and the daring harmony, combine to produce a poignancy that is all the more startling from its position in the middle of a brilliant concert piece. It is a kind of memento mori.

The Fugue is often spoken of in exaggerated terms. Spitta's description of it as 'one of the most dazzlingly beautiful of all the master's organ works' is well known, and was so readily accepted in this country by the early Bachites that the movement has been allowed to put finer examples in the shade. Even Parry repeats Spitta's 'dazzling,' calls the fugue 'superb music,' and says that it 'shows the composer at a very high pitch of mastery.'

With due respect to these authorities, I venture to say that it is conspicuous for neither beauty nor mastery. It is too superficial to be beautiful, and in regard to both invention and construction it is mere child's play beside fugues which are generally agreed to be masterly. But we could ill spare a work so full of high spirits, and so unfailingly effective. It will always be a favourite with players if only for the sheer physical enjoyment it yields. It has also the unusual merit of sounding a good deal more difficult than it really is—though we may keep this dark! If our final scamper up the pedal-board leaves our hearers feeling like his Highness of Cassel, why break the spell?

It is hardly possible to play the D major too quickly, provided we do not sacrifice clearness. This last requirement depends so much upon prompt speech of the organ and favourable acoustics that we should not include the work in a programme without being sure of these two points. Clearly the final portion demands the use of full power, and the pedal passages are ruined by (say) a sluggish pedal 16-ft. reed. And if the building is so large and resonant that clearness can be obtained only by adopting a slow pace, we shall do well to substitute a broader example of Bach's work. It is odd that there should be such divergence of opinion as to the pace of this movement. Bridge and Higgs suggest $\text{♩} = 76$, Best and Hull $\text{♩} = 100$. Widor and Schweitzer give no figures, but say, 'Do not take the tempo too hastily, so that the piece may not be deprived of its majestic character.' But where is the majesty? If the work is not a brilliant scherzo, what is it? Spitta, who certainly did not underestimate the dignified side of Bach, says:

'This is a bravura piece from beginning to end. . . . In this whirling dance of notes, which becomes madder and madder towards the end, we can appreciate the truth of the words in the Necrology: "With his two feet he could perform on the pedals passages which would be enough to provoke many a skilled clavier-player with five fingers."'

In the face of this we can have no doubt that Bach made the pace as hot as his instruments would allow. If he played on a modern organ he would make it hotter still. Moreover, in settling points of this kind we have to remember that our conceptions of musical pace are much more pronounced than were those of our great-great-grandfathers. Our adagio is slower and our allegro quicker. On the whole, then, $\text{♩} = 100$ is a good pace, and if we can manage to get in a dozen more crotchets per minute so much the better.

Everybody knows that this fugue owes a good deal to Buxtehude, but the likeness is not in the subject, as is frequently stated. Even Parry makes a slip here. He says that the fugue is interesting historically, 'in consequence of the resemblance of the subject to one by Buxtehude in F.' Here is Buxtehude's subject:

Ex. 3.

There is some similarity of type, but no more. That Bach had the older man's work at the back of his mind, however, seems clear from this remarkable thematic coincidence that occurs later:

Ex. 4 (a)

BUXTEHUDE.

(b)

BACH.

And a reference to the Vivace of Buxtehude's Fugue in F sharp minor (especially bars 18, 19, 25-29, and 42-52) will show further reminiscences less exact as to notes, but unmistakable.

An interesting variant of the fugue exists. It will be found at the beginning of vol. iv. of Peters, and in vol. x. of the Augener edition. It is obviously an early form of the work, though Spitta thought otherwise. He says:

'It appears, moreover, that Bach afterwards clipped the too luxuriant growth of brilliant executive passages, and greatly condensed the whole, since it occurs also in a form thirty-nine bars shorter, which could scarcely have come from any hand but that of the composer himself.'

A comparison of the two versions shows the longer form to be the better in every respect. The chief difference is that bars 80-95, with their effective modulation to B major and C sharp minor, do not appear in the early sketch. A trifling change in the subject is all to the good. Bach first wrote the ending thus:

The later version of the ending:

is more emphatic, as the statement is clinched, instead of being allowed to fizzle out.

If we want to see how completely Bach was already improving on his models we have but to compare his D major Fugue with the F major work of Buxtehude. The Northern master hardly ever gets away from tonic and dominant, and is unable to maintain the animation with which he begins. At the end he tails off into a cadenza of conventional scale-passages. Bach not only sticks to his text, but becomes more and more exuberant as he develops it. And the ending drives the argument home in no uncertain fashion. It is an unique example of a platitude being delivered with such gusto and audacity as to take us by storm. On paper it is nothing. In its place at the close of the work, and played on a big organ, few things could be more emphatic.

A few years ago some eminent musicians amused themselves and us by adapting words to Bach's fugue subjects. Some themes (that of the 'little' E minor for example) seem in themselves very near to speech. I daresay most of us, when finishing the D major Fugue, have felt impelled to set words to the final pedal leap, and say, as Bach certainly seems to say:

And no doubt we have at least once in our lives got over-excited and added a further point to this excellent humoresque by making a wild shot and playing :

Another of these concert works that still holds its own is the Toccata and Fugue in D minor. It is far more imaginative than the work we have just been considering, and even more brilliant when it aims at that quality.

Like the D major fugue, it is less difficult than it sounds, so far as mere note playing is concerned. It calls, however, for a good deal in the way of interpretation, and the phrasing, especially in some of the rapid manual passages, needs thought. If these passages are played with the speed and power they seem to demand, we must take care they do not reach the ear as a meaningless scramble. We can guard against this by beginning them with some deliberation, making the design clear in the first few groups, and then increasing the pace, usually to the end, though it will often be a good plan to retard the closing notes. This method adds the touch of lucidity without which such passages often miss fire. Thus, the Prestissimo beginning in bar 3 should open thus :

The phrasing of the third group is even more important. It should be thus:

so that the chordal progression is clearly shown as a chain of suspensions :

and not common chords:

This point is so obvious that one is astonished at the number of players who apparently overlook it. The grouping should be kept up to the end so that the pedal D closes the cadenza, thus :

Widor and Schweitzer suggest the following grouping for the prestissimo, bars 22-27 :

At first glance, this seems far-fetched, but there is much to be said for it. It brings the passage into line with its predecessors, and makes it a good deal more than a prolonged diminished seventh. Moreover the chord of A in bar 27 is then the final note of a group, instead of being preceded by a kind of hiccup.

The fugue is a very sketchy example of the form, but an enjoyable piece of music, and the slenderness and simplicity of its first fifty bars make it an excellent foil to the tempestuous opening pages. Not less admirable is the way Bach begins at bar 85 to work back to the mood of the Toccata, with a climax and pause at bar 127 that says 'Here we are!' as plainly as can be. The registration of the fugue should be quiet until bar 85. Editors differ (or remain silent) as to whether the shakes should be with the tone or half-tone above. The former has an antique flavour that is effective, and it also avoids some ugly clashes. The arpeggio passages are better on two manuals, so as to produce an effect of contrast, or even of echo. As I have already pointed out, the rapid use of alternate keyboards was a popular means of obtaining variety in the early days of organ playing. Bach does not indicate such changes, it is true, but we must not argue too much from that fact. If he went touring with this piece, as seems certain, he probably found it convenient to leave the matter to be settled according to the capabilities of the various organs on which he played. We may adopt any plan that suits our instrument, so long as it brings us the right manual—preferably the Great—for the succeeding passage.

In bar 103 the duplication of the E at * is so weak that we may well wonder if the alto E is not a slip of the pen for G:

Opinions differ as to the manual for the final recitativo and presto. The Choir is apt to sound feeble; the full Swell is frequently confused, and moreover its use involves an awkward join when we go on to the Great for the slow chords. On the whole it seems better to play the passages on the full Great without 16-ft. (and perhaps without reeds), bringing on everything for the chords. A passage of this type for orchestra would not be given to the flutes, but to the strings (without double-basses), playing ff. If our Swell is slow of speech we should uncouple it for the recitativo and presto, drawing the coupler for the last three demisemiquavers in bars 130 and 136, and playing these notes deliberately so that they lead into the chords. What a magnificent stroke is the pedal-point at bars 132, 133, with its startling change from a second inversion in A minor to a first inversion in C!

Some players end the work mf or p—an anticlimax surely. If a quiet ending is desired, however, the registration suggested by Mr. Heathcote Statham* is worth consideration:

This Toccata is so much more fiery and imaginative than any other of Bach's works bearing the title that, as Pirro says,† we are justified in regarding it as programme music. As to the nature of the programme he says:

'The dazzling lightning, the clap of thunder, rumbling formidably in the repercussions of a long broken chord, above the crash of a profound pedal; the wind, then the hail: we are in a classical storm.'

This suggestion may shock some of us until we remind ourselves of Bach's fondness for descriptive writing. The man who did not hesitate to introduce equally frank pictorial effects into a setting of the Passion would have no scruples about writing an organ storm, though he may have hesitated to label it as such. And we must not condemn organ 'storms' too hastily, for most of the classical composers have given us bad weather on the orchestra. If anything, the advantage is with the organ, because it can produce a good specimen without putting us to the expense of engaging fifty or sixty players. At all events, there is piquancy in the thought that John Sebastian went a-touring with a Storm in his pocket, for all the world like a modern music-hall organist.

(To be continued.)

CONCERTS OF THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The arrangements for the visit to London of the New York Symphony Orchestra are now completed. As was announced in the May Musical Times, five concerts will be given—four at Queen's Hall, and one at the Royal Albert Hall.

The first concert, on the evening of June 14, will open with the 'Eroica' symphony. Mr. Albert Spalding will be the soloist in Saint-Saëns's Concerto in B minor, and the final item will be Ravel's Fragment Symphonique, 'Daphnis et Chloë.'

On the following evening two symphonies will be played—the 'Jupiter,' and 'From the New World.' The latter will be followed by a kindred work in John Powell's 'Rhapsodie Nègre' for pianoforte and orchestra, with the composer at the keyboard.

For June 16 a Wagner programme has been arranged—the 'Rienzi' Overture, Prelude to 'Lohengrin,' the Bacchanale from 'Tannhäuser' (Paris version), Prelude to Act 3 of 'The Mastersingers,' the 'Good Friday Spell' from 'Parsifal,' in Wilhelmj's violin solo arrangement (played by Mr. Albert Spalding), the Prelude and Finale from 'Tristan,' Siegfried's Rhine Journey, and the 'Ride of the Valkyries.'

The chief feature at the fourth concert will be Elgar's first Symphony—a work for which Mr. Damrosch has a special predilection. This performance comes happily at a time when the greatness of Elgar as a symphonic writer is at last being realised in this country. The programme includes also 'La Fileuse' from Fauré's Pelleas and Melisande, an extract from Ravel's 'Mother Goose,' and Moszkowski's Intermezzo and Perpetuum Mobile. Miss Mabel Garrison will sing.

The programme of the final concert (Sunday, June 20, at the Royal Albert Hall) has not yet been announced.

Those of us who may feel disposed to complain that the scheme as a whole is on too familiar lines should remind ourselves that the tour involves a formidable amount of travelling and a very heavy list of engagements of a social nature.

* 'The Organ and its Position in Musical Art.'

† 'L'Orgue de Jean-Sébastien Bach.'

In such circumstances it would be unfair to impose the additional strain and extra rehearsals that would be inevitable if more than one or two new or unfamiliar works were included. There, is, however, a special interest attached to well-known masterpieces seen through other eyes, and the interpretations of the 'Eroica' and 'Jupiter' at the hands of Mr. Damrosch and his fine band will no doubt be listened to with a keenness not always accorded to a novelty.

Interludes

By 'FESTE'

The approach of the Handel Festival has of course called forth from certain quarters the objections we have heard so often during the past twenty years. We are told that it is 'inartistic,' 'megalomania,' 'musical jumboism,' and so forth. Let me hasten to admit that I joined in the chorus of disapproval and shouted 'jumboism!' as loudly as anybody until I did what the objectors generally don't do—I went and heard it. Fortunately, my first visit happened to be that at which Cowen proved so conclusively that a huge chorus need not lack delicacy and expressive power, and I began to modify my views. After all, in this as in other matters, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. If a chorus of three thousand, or even of thirty thousand, can give us a performance in which its immense resources are so organized and directed as to produce fine and moving effects obtainable in no other way, it surely justifies its existence. That the Festivals of 1909 and 1912 did give us such effects must be admitted. And it should be borne in mind that the finest results were not necessarily in the direction of power. The pianissimo singing at its best moments was an unforgettable experience. It was like the gentle heaving of the sea in its quiet immensity and in its suggestion of latent power. We saw, for the first time, that three thousand people whispering are more thrilling than the same number singing full blast—a useful piece of knowledge. No chorus of normal size could have produced just that effect.

By the way, is the word 'jumboism' well chosen in this connection? The elephant has long had a high reputation for intelligence and adaptability. So far as mere activity is concerned, especially as regards covering the ground, we have reliable—even enthusiastic—testimony from hunters who have found it necessary to hurry away from him. Let Jumbo provide us with a synonym for bigness and weight, by all means, but not for slowness and lack of spirit and intelligence. 'Very well,' you say, 'I withdraw jumboism and substitute stodginess.' But stodginess is a quality found in small choirs as well as in large ones. Indeed we may say that like all the grosser faults in choral work, its absence or presence depends not upon the size of the choir but upon how far the teacher knows his job. Probably the Handel Festival in its old days was a stodgy meal, and therefore one to be shunned. But choralism to-day is a very different thing from that of a generation ago. We have dozens of chorus-masters who can make a choir of five hundred do things that our grandparents would have said were impossible. Even the acoustical problem is less formidable than we used to think. Who would have supposed that a choir of fifty thousand was a practical proposition? But Dr. Coward organized and conducted a little group consisting of 52,561 at Sheffield, on May 27, 1897, two thousand being school teachers and the rest children—'every one registered,' he proudly tells us in his 'Reminiscences.' All the accessories were to scale. Nine bands played the accompaniments; the conductor's stand was about thirty feet high; his baton was a piece of timber about nine feet long, with a little flag at the end; and the audience was very near the hundred thousand mark:

'The singing was worthy of the occasion. After the first piece had been sung, Dr. McNaught shouted up to me, "Bravo, Coward! You have quite upset all my calculations of how it could not be done." The same good judge later expressed his astonishment at the clearness of the runs in pieces like "Rule, Britannia."'

Here is another extract showing the surprising unanimity obtained:

'At the close of the demonstration, a high official who came to compliment me on the result remarked that I had been very wise in having only one big drum, as at the final rehearsal the previous day it was very disconcerting to hear the thuds of the many drums coming in one after another. I thanked him warmly for his welcome compliments, and said that I had noticed the defect and had taken such steps to remedy the fault that he would be surprised to hear that there were nine drums, and not one only, as he supposed.'

Dr. Coward and others too numerous to mention have proved that the modern choral technique can be exemplified with a choir of five hundred, and I believe the day will come when the same thing can be done with a body of five thousand. Sir Frederic Cowen was well on the way to prove it at the Handel Festival of 1912. The Festival of 1920 will of course suffer from the aftermath of the war, and will therefore hardly provide a real test. But let us put our prejudices aside and give it fair play. We rightly scoff at those whose chief interest is in the mere size of the choir: to object to the Festival on the same ground is quite as uncritical. Our sole concern is with the musical result. If that is fine, all the sneers about megalomania and jumboism are so much superior pose. Let us remember that a few years ago any composer or conductor of an orchestra exceeding about fifty players was attacked on the same score. Now we hear massed bands and orchestras without turning a hair. The question of proportion comes in, too. The power of the Handel Choir in the transept of the Palace is less of an assault on the ear than some of the orchestral climaxes we frequently hear at Queen's Hall. And the Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir at Æolian Hall a few days ago showed us that the fortissimo of even fifty voices can be an infliction. No choir or band can be too big or too small if it perform works suited to its size in an auditorium of the right area.

And the critics are not even consistent. They all admit that the singing of a crowd is a fine thing—indeed, they frequently lament that the average English crowd is so shy in lifting up its voice. Yet when it is proposed to call together four thousand of these shy folk for the sole purpose of getting them to sing, after careful preparation, some of the finest choral music ever written, we at once hear a chorus of advance sniffs. The idea is Victorian, suburban, philistine, stodgy, typically English in its inartistic wrongheadedness, and so forth. Surely we shall do well to regard it as a form of community singing!

It is sometimes urged that the preparation for the Festival absorbs the activities of many members of local choral societies for a few months and so retards progress, because the musical life of the community draws most of its nourishment from the activities of local centres. A yearly Handel Festival would certainly be undesirable, but a triennial gathering, with a high standard of performance, surely covers the loss, with a bit to spare. Moreover there is a social aspect that is worth noting. We all feel that one of the chief needs of to-day is the recovery of the community spirit—the ability to pull together—which we have lost to a great extent during the past two years. A bit of this spirit comes back every time a big gathering enjoys anything in common, whether it be an oratorio, an opera, or a football match. How much more is this the case when the enjoyment is active rather than passive! If ever Competitive Festivals and big choirs were needed they are to-day, and on this social ground alone we should wish the 1920 Handel Festival success.

We may reasonably ask, however, whether the time has not come for the inclusion of other than Handelian music. The ice was broken in 1909, when Mendelssohn shared the programme. The experiment was not entirely successful, because the Mendelssohn choral idiom is not as a rule best suited by performance on such a scale. There are many excellent works that simply cannot carry a big tonal weight. It is not a question of length so much as of texture and character. On the other hand there are some, both ancient and modern, that seem to call for a choral force limited only by practicability. Among big works there are the double chorus motets of Bach. 'Sing ye to the Lord' or 'The Spirit also helpeth us' would present no more difficulties to a Handel chorus of to-day than did 'Israel' to their predecessors of twenty years ago. There are also many detached choruses of Bach that would be ideal for a huge force: e.g., 'God goeth up,' 'It is the old decree,' the opening chorus of the Cantata 'A Stronghold sure,' and (best of all) the five-part unaccompanied 'Death, I do not fear thee.' Then there are plenty of native works, old and new, long and short. Gibbons alone could provide a fair list. Think, for example, of 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' and, on the secular side, 'What is our life?'—that most sombre of madrigals, which impresses us when sung even by a small choir, and would overwhelm us at the hands of a big one. And although perhaps the Tallis forty-part Motet is interesting chiefly as a curiosity, its performance by such a choir might easily make it something more. Then there are some fine unaccompanied Motets by Brahms, and the name of Cornelius will also occur in this connection.

I believe that most musicians who object to the Festival do so on the ground that we have suffered too much from the Handel obsession. 'Why do anything to perpetuate it?' they ask, 'especially to-day, when we are beginning to be aware of the excellence of so much of our native choral music of all periods?' The inclusion of music by other composers would answer this very reasonable objection. But we may scrap the obsession and yet retain the name—the handle, if I may say so. After all, the Mozart Society and the Bach Choir do not confine themselves to works by those composers. The Handel choir has good precedent for casting its net wider.

Some recent developments in choral writing have given us hints of possibilities undreamt of a generation ago. Why should not some of these be worked out by such bodies as the Handel choir? There is, I think, no Handelian example of what is now a choral commonplace—the vocal accompaniment of a solo. The Handel-Mendelssohn Festival of 1909 gave us a taste of the amazing results that a huge choir may obtain from the device. The effect of the pianissimo background to 'I waited for the Lord' was well worth the discomforts of the railway journey to the Palace.

Then there are the fascinating shifting colour effects brought about by humming and the use of vowel sounds instead of words. This is a department of choralism in which composers are going to experiment with profit. We have had some examples in which the device has been used incidentally, or as a background to words. Soon we shall have a good many in which it is more than a mere accessory. Before me lies a short work by Delius of a type that I believe will soon be fairly common. It consists of a couple of unaccompanied partsongs for S.A.T.T.B.B., with tenor solo. The soloist sings to the syllables 'luh,' 'lah,' 'la,' 'ha,' while the accompanying voices sing on 'uh' (as in 'love'), and there are directions as to the employment of a slight aspirate at repeated notes, and the first notes of slurred passages. The songs are written for the Oriana Choir, and it will be interesting to see how far this kind of thing is successful. So long as the Handel choir limits its activities to Handel it cuts itself off from these and other modern developments in choral technique. On the other hand, if it took a part in them it would give an enormous impetus to choralism. I can see our Holsts and Vaughan Williamses and Percy Graingers doing some astounding feats with a choir of four thousand to play with. They would probably give us such things as a stupendous melody sung by 2,500, with a vocal accompaniment provided by a picked five hundred; antiphony between four sections of a thousand apiece; a ground bass sung by all the men, with a superstructure for s.s.s.c.c.c. (the third contraltos perhaps helped out by a hundred tenors); eight-part male-voice choruses (imagine the whisper of such a choir!). I leave you to hit on a few more combinations; don't be afraid to think in continents. And if we regard such performances as community singing, why not extend the idea so as to include the audience? There would then be two choirs, one in the transept, and one in the orchestra. Each concert would include a group of songs with chorus. The trained choir would sing the verse, and the untrained (the audience) would roll out the chorus. In a word, if the Handel choir will enlarge its scope, and give us triennial concerts made up of one-sixth of Handel, one-sixth of Bach, and the remainder of miscellaneous choral works, from Tallis to Grainger, its future will be as popular as its past—and a good deal more exciting.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

IX.—ROBERT FAYRFAX

Although the best available account of the compositions of Fayrfax is that contributed by Mr. Godfrey E. P. Arkwright to the new edition of 'Grove,' yet Fayrfax's biography has been somewhat inadequately told. None of our musical historians have penetrated his career prior to the year 1502, when he is met with at St. Alban's, being then a Doctor of Music of Cambridge University. Anthony Wood says that Fayrfax was Organist or Informator Chori of the Abbey of St. Alban's in 1502, and that in his day he was 'in great renown and accounted the prime musician of the nation.' Probably the former statement rests on the entry under date March 28, 1502, in the Privy Purse Expenses of Queen Elizabeth of York, from which it appears that he received at St. Alban's the sum of twenty shillings 'for setting an Anthem of Our Lady and St. Elizabeth,' probably his 'Aeterne laudis lilium.' Yet from two entries in the recently published Calendar of Patent Rolls of Henry VII., 1494-1509, it is probable that Fayrfax was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1496, and possibly earlier.

Bishop Tanner says that this remarkable English musician was born at Bayford, in Hertfordshire, and this event may be placed as c. 1465 or 1466. He may have been a boy chorister in the Chapel Royal in 1480, but one thing is certain—he was a Gentleman of the King's Chapel in 1496. The fact of occupying this post may be taken as evidence of his musical skill in the last decade of the 15th century, and he probably studied under Gilbert Banaster (1478-86), Laurence Squire (1486-93), and William Neuark (1483-1509), who were in succession Masters of the Children of the Chapel Royal. Anyhow, in 1497, he was granted the free chapel of Snodhill in Herefordshire. The entry runs as follows: 1497, December 7, 'Grant to Robert Fairfax, one of the Gentlemen of the King's Chapel, of the free chapel in the Castle of Snodhill, in the diocese of Hereford, void by the death of Master Richard Jackson.'

Less than a year later, on November 16, 1498, another entry supplies the information that Fayrfax had resigned the chapelry, which was then given to Robert Couper. It is very probable that he surrendered this ecclesiastical benefice in order to take up the post of organist at St. Alban's Abbey, and if so, this occurred at the Christmastide of 1498.

As has been stated, Fayrfax was at St. Alban's in 1502, and, doubtless, from St. Alban's came the suggestion of the Albanus Mass, but evidently he must have been returned to London before the accession of King Henry VIII., as his name appears in the list of the Chapel Royal at the funeral of Queen Elizabeth of York on February 23, 1503, and again at the funeral of King Henry VII. in April, 1509. Two months later, on June 22, the new King, Henry VIII., granted him (with another) an annuity of £9 2s. 6d., and his name appears at the head of the singing men at the King's Coronation. In December, 1510, he was paid £7 17s. 4d. for the board and education of two of the Chapel Royal boys, William Alderson and Arthur Lovekin, King's scholars. The name of 'Mr. Doctor Fairfax' appears at the head of the Chapel Royal singers at the funeral of Prince Henry, on February 22, 1511. He surrendered a corrody in Stanley Monastery in 1513, which was given to John Fisher, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal (March 6, 1513). A new patent was made out for his annuity of £9 2s. 6d. on November 16, 1513; and, in December, he got 104 shillings for the two King's scholars.

Dr. Fayrfax must have been in high favour at Court, because, on September 10, 1514, he was appointed 'one of the poor knights of Windsor with 12d. a day.' On January 1, 1516, he was paid the large sum of £13 6s. 8d. for a book; on New Year's Day of the following year he got £20 'for a Book of Anthems'; on January 1, 1518, he was given £10 'for a prick-song book'; and on January 1, 1519, a similar sum 'for a balet-boke limned.' One of these four books is supposed, with good reason, to be the celebrated Fayrfax MS.

In the List of the Chapel at the Field of the Cloth of Gold in June, 1520, Fayrfax stands at the head of the Singing Men. This was his last public appearance. Mr. Arkwright cautiously states that his death 'probably took place before January 1, 1528,' but the actual date was Thursday, October 24, 1521. He desired to be buried at St. Alban's, and was interred in the presbytery of the Abbey, where a fine brass—long since disappeared—to the memory of Robert Fayrfax and Agnes, his wife, and their

Occasional Notes

When master plays the 'Forty-eight,'
Most melancholy is my state.
When he begins a Handel Suite
I make a bee-line for the street.
But though these writers send me hoppin'
I'm always in the mood for Choppin.
A loyal dog, I duly grouse
When people talk of playing Strauss; *
Stravinsky I consider run muck,
For Brahms and Schumann I've no stummuck,
And yet my ears are always open
For any little thing of Showpin.
But you should hear me howl 'Desist!'
When master has a cut at Liszt.
My taste in music, I concede,
Is very limited indeed.
The only kind that gives me no pang
(As master says) is that of Showpang.

III.

The first system of musical notation for 'The Rose Tree' consists of two staves. The upper staff is in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a common time signature (C). It contains two measures of music: the first measure has a quarter note G4, a quarter note A4, and a quarter note B4 beamed together; the second measure has a quarter note G4, a quarter note F#4, and a quarter note E4 beamed together. The lower staff is in bass clef with the same key signature and time signature. It contains two measures: the first measure has a half note D3, and the second measure has a half note D3.

Here too the idea is in the harmony. This is why those who seek melody and nothing else in Wagner's operas are quite incapable of understanding his music.

Harmony is based on accord worked out by harmonics; it is a product of nature, antecedent to the human race. Melody is a creation of man himself.

With this exception, the chapter devoted to harmony and the following chapters to the end of the first book of the 'Course of Musical Composition' are full of excellent things. Practically my only regret is the superfluous indications and nuances added on to ancient madrigals, indications perhaps necessary for the actual execution of the pieces, but very undesirable in a treatise which should sacrifice everything to purity of text. However, it is impossible to recommend too earnestly a careful reading of these chapters, for they contain much that is of the utmost utility and benefit.

—In the first book of the 'Course' we deal only with the elements of music; the second introduces us to the very heart of the subject—to musical composition in the strict meaning of the term. A masterly exposition shows us its genesis and also the split that took place in music: a symphonic current on the one hand, a dramatic current on the other.

This second book is devoted to every form of symphonic music; a third, still in preparation, will deal with the subject of dramatic music.

M. D'Indy is perfectly right in telling us that the study of harmony, counterpoint, and fugue, however useful, is only preparatory, and that, when this is done, the work of construction has still to be learnt, a result obtained only as the outcome of prolonged application. He is right in advocating respect for tradition, without which art is like a tree that has no roots, and he does well in blaming the search after originality at all costs, just as in the first book he deprecated the inconsiderate use of modulation, its aimless and profitless waste of effort. In this connection he quotes some admirable sentences from Ruskin.

'It is to symphonic forms,' M. D'Indy tells us, 'that we attribute first place, both in power and in importance—the place of honour, which from more or less avowable motives they were so long refused, both in musical schools and in the opinion of the public.'

'More or less avowable!' M. D'Indy can strike hard when he chooses.

The immortal trio—Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven—carried instrumental art to so high a level that it has resulted in illusion. Is it necessary to remind ourselves that in more ancient times instrumental music was used only in two ways: for dance airs and for voice accompaniment? The dance air produced the suite. The suite gave birth to the symphony,* where it has left traces of itself in the form of the minuet. The latter, by gradually accelerating its movement, has produced the scherzo.

The masterpieces of the three great classics have made us forget too readily that the human voice is the finest of all instruments. It is the inimitable, living, divine, even miraculous instrument; for no one understands how the two ligaments called the vocal cords, and the resonator called the larynx, are capable of producing it. Those who of recent times have been affecting the most profound scorn for ornamental singing, trills, vocalisations—though they were utilised by all the great composers of the past—ought rather to express wonder and amazement thereat. Berlioz ridiculed singers who succeed in playing on the larynx as one would play on a flute. What harm is there in that? Neither Handel, nor Sebastian Bach, nor Mozart, nor Beethoven, nor Weber, objected to florid singing. A curious thing to note is that Berlioz, in his lyrical comedies, also introduced vocalisations, though he treats them in a singularly unskilful manner.

Vocalisations are absent from the works of Richard Wagner, though he did employ the trill, or shake; and while the trills of Brunnehilde are very effective in the 'Valkyrie,' those in the duet with Siegfried, on her awakening, seem very strange to any in the audience who have not been sufficiently hypnotised by Wagnerian infatuation.

There is no need to conceal from ourselves the fact that, with the exception of a few special and comparatively restricted circles, the public prefer vocal to instrumental music. The cause of this is not to be found in more or less avowable reasons; it is nature herself that insists upon it, because the voice is the only natural instrument. It is even the one eternal instrument, so far as human things can be eternal. Instruments pass and have their day; the instrumental music of the 16th century is for the most part impossible of execution nowadays. But the human voice remains.

In the course of his work, M. D'Indy reverts to this idea; he insinuates that the love of gain may have something to do with the preference for theatrical form shown by certain composers. As the public has always evinced a marked predilection for this form, no wonder musicians instinctively turn to the kind of music that will enable them to earn their living; not every one has the good fortune to be born with a silver spoon in his mouth. All the same, there must be some other reason, for almost all composers have written for the theatre or have tried to do so. M. D'Indy himself has been attracted in this direction.

Love of gain was not the incentive which made Richard Wagner embark upon his colossal work, the 'Ring of the Nibelung,' under conditions of so exceptional a nature that he did not know if it would ever be produced.

Meyerbeer was possessed of a great fortune, the major portion of which was swallowed up in his musical works. In his memoirs, Duprez artlessly relates the fact that the gifted composer made every possible sacrifice to ensure the execution of his operas, while the famous singer profited by them.

Haydn wrote Italian operas in his youth. During his stay in London, when producing his finest symphonies for the Salomon concerts, he began an 'Orfeo' which he never finished, owing to the fact that the theatre at which it was to have been given, went bankrupt.

Mozart would still be Mozart, even if there remained nothing but his theatrical works.

The reason why Beethoven confined himself to the symphony and did not devote himself to the theatre is that the Opera of Vienna would not have it so. Beethoven had actually offered to bind himself to produce one work each year for five years.

No one can tell what would have happened if Beethoven's offer had not been refused, if he had acquired that theatrical experience which cannot be had apart from the theatre and which is evident in the second version of 'Fidelio,' when compared with the first 'Leonora.' Certain parts of 'Fidelio' are not inferior to any of his works: the famous 'Pistol' scene resembles nothing that had hitherto been given. Had Beethoven been able to realise his desires, the very direction in which the lyrical theatre was tending would probably have been changed.

* This word includes the orchestral symphony, the quartet, the sonata, &c.

Both Mendelssohn and Schumann tried the theatre. The failure of Schumann's 'Genevieve'—interesting as it was from a musical point of view, though anything but adapted for the theatre—was what determined his hostility to Meyerbeer; he could not understand how such music could be regarded as music, though he must have realised that the theatre has to accept art forms inadmissible elsewhere. The painting of stage scenery is different from painting on an easel. Wagner placed the purely musical, even symphonic, interest in the foreground; but success was achieved only as the result of pressure directed upon the public, the duration and intensity of which were such that nothing like it up to that time had been seen, or probably ever will be again.

Berlioz, after writing the following terrible sentence: 'Theatres are the disorderly houses of music, and the chaste Muse one drags therein cannot enter without shuddering,' treated thus his own Muse, and certainly the result was not always satisfactory. Nevertheless 'Les Troyens' is a superior work, though it was not smiled on by Fortune—that implacable queen who rules over battles and operas alike. Was not preference over it shown to a translation of Bellini's feeble 'Romeo,' with its loud fanfare of brasses, big drums and cymbals, for the occasion! A blush of shame rises to the cheek at the very thought. However, a notable failure rewarded this ill turn on the part of the then Imperial Academy of Music.

Richard Strauss, after becoming known to the public by symphonic poems, has revolutionised the musical world by extraordinary operas upon which I will not dwell, and thereby avoid irritating his admirers—for he has admirers. Did not one of them state that the fact of writing the song in one key and the accompaniment in another, was a matter of no importance whatsoever?

Before continuing, I must deal thoroughly with a side question which will necessitate a special chapter and carry us beyond the limits of this study. I am thinking of an evil that has long affected music, that first made itself felt in pianoforte music and is now threatening to extend its ravages, an evil from whose contagion M. D'Indy himself has not escaped.

(To be continued.)

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY'S CONGRESS BY ALFRED KALISCH

The first National Congress of the British Music Society took place in London during the week beginning May 3.

Its net results will no doubt be of great advantage to the Society itself, and not without influence, it is to be hoped, on musical life in general. Everything worked well, except for a few hitches at the provincial centres, to which several of the speakers alluded, and the scantiness of the audiences at the concerts. This scarcely surprised those who knew their musical London well, which brings us to the most serious criticism to be made. London is in reality not by any means the best place for a meeting of this kind, and May is probably the worst month in the year. London, again, is too full of distractions which affected, not only members of the Congress, but the public itself.

There is also another thing which may strike many observers unfamiliar with London journalism as anomalous. The promoters of the Congress no doubt hoped for much fuller notice in the London Press than they really obtained; but had the Congress taken place in a provincial city, the London papers would no doubt have sent down special correspondents who would have treated the proceedings fully. As it was, the doings of the Congress had to take their chance with murders, divorce cases, prize-fights, sport, politics, and many other happenings of a very crowded week.

The whole Congress may be regarded as a great personal success for Dr. Eaglefield Hull, who did wonders in performing a dozen men's work, both during the time of preparation and during the Congress itself.

It seems better to put on record the doings of the Congress under the three headings of Debates, Social Events, and Concerts, than to give a chronological account of the happenings day by day.

THE DEBATES

The first of the three discussions in connection with the Congress took place at Æolian Hall on Tuesday, May 4. The subject was 'The Possibilities of a World Standard Pitch.' The chair was taken by Colonel J. C. SOMERVILLE, the director of the Kneller Hall Army School of Music, who began by saying that he ought to appear in a white sheet as his Institution was mainly responsible for retaining the old high pitch. He pointed out that when the question of changing the Army pitch was first mooted the cost was estimated at £10,000. What it would be now nobody knew, but the cost would have to be borne by the officers. The War Office was naturally at the moment disinclined to consider anything involving expense.

SIR HENRY WOOD, who wrote a letter regretting inability to be present, sent the orchestral tuning machine that he had used for many years. The pitch is 435.4 vibrations per second at a temperature of 59 degrees Fahrenheit. He also expressed regret at the high pitch of the Albert Hall organ.

LORD SHAFTESBURY replied that it was not the Royal Choral Society but the Royal Albert Hall Company which was responsible for the pitch of the organ.

MR. H. K. MOORE, speaking as a pianoforte manufacturer, advocated the pitch A 435, or the diapason normal. He stated that it was immaterial whether A or C was used as the starting-point for tuners as long so the tuning was well done.

DR. EAGLEFIELD HULL, the REV. DR. E. H. FELLOWES, PROF. DONALD TOVEY, and MR. HERMAN KLEIN also took part in the discussion.

At the close two Resolutions were adopted. The first urged that every possible effort should be made to spread a wider knowledge of the divergencies of existing pitches, and to secure uniformity in the future from manufacturers and performers. The second expressed the opinion that the Queen's Hall Orchestral pitch, that is to say A 435.4 at 59 degrees Fahrenheit, should be universally adopted, and that every effort should be made to induce the Government to recognise the wastage and inconvenience caused by the discrepancy between concert orchestras and military bands.

Though not so practical, the second discussion—which took place in the same hall on the following day, and had for its subject 'The Municipalisation of Music'—was fuller of human interest.

LORD DONERAILE, the Mayor of Westminster, presided.

MR. BERNARD SHAW urged the importance of music subsidised by municipal money, but declared himself wholly averse to the ordinary commercial view of the matter. In his view, there should be a competent symphony orchestra and an opera theatre in every centre of population, and no child should be brought up without free access to the best music. As some people would fear that the subsidising of music by municipalities would mean an increase in the rates, they must, he said, be prepared with arguments to prove that artistic culture was a very paying thing in the long run. A community brought up with chances of acquiring artistic intelligence was more likely to produce useful citizens who were less expense to the community than others who were trained only to appreciate lower forms of pleasure.

MR. DAN GODFREY, Director of Music at Bournemouth, painted a gloomy picture of the present state of municipal music, and deplored the abandonment of the Bath Orchestra, the oldest in the country, dating from the beginning of the 18th century. He referred to the fact that the Bournemouth Municipality was levying from £5,000 to £6,000 a year in entertainment tax, and hoped that a strong expression of opinion from the Congress might induce the Government to make a rebate in the case of educational concerts. After dwelling on the grievance caused by the competition of Army bands, he pointed to the formation of the Birmingham City Orchestra, and a project of the same kind for the City of Liverpool, as more hopeful signs.

DR. ARTHUR SOMERVELL spoke of the encouraging results of education in the secondary schools, which were tending to produce audiences.

MR. H. C. COLLES criticised the quotation from Shakespeare in the Congress programme: 'This will prove a brave kingdom to me where I shall have my music for nothing.' On this basis, he urged, no progress could possibly be made.

The discussion was continued by DR. EAGLEFIELD HULL, M. VLADIMIR ROSING, MR. HERBERT THOMPSON, and MR. APPLEBY MATTHEWS, the last two of whom spoke of the efforts of municipal music at Leeds and Birmingham respectively.

In conclusion, DR. C. B. ROTHAM moved a resolution pledging the members of the Congress to use all their power to offer every assistance to Municipal bodies in their respective areas. This was carried.

SOCIAL EVENTS

The Congress was inaugurated by a brilliant reception given by Lord and Lady Howard de Walden at Seaford House.

The second event was a reception held on Wednesday afternoon, May 5, at the Mansion House, by the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress, when Sir Henry Hadow delivered an address on the growth of music in England from the earliest stages, and pointed out what lessons for the future might be learned from the story of its evolution.

The Congress closed with a banquet at the Wharnccliffe Rooms of the Great Central Hotel on Thursday, May 6, to which over two hundred guests sat down. It was a representative gathering from all parts of the country.

The banquet was notable for two innovations. First of all, after dinner there was an interval of half an hour for conversation before the speeches began. Secondly, it was decided to reverse the order of the toasts, and to begin with Dr. Eaglefield Hull's speech proposing the health of the Chairman. He gave a brief summary of the results of the discussions on 'Pitch' and 'Municipal Music,' and referred to the financial position of the Society and the needs of the Fund. He pointed out that Lord Howard de Walden's offer of a contribution of £5,000, if £10,000 was collected by the end of the year, was really a bet that the Society could not collect the rest of the money, and that the Society had taken the bet. Mr. Gordon Selfridge, who had originally promised £100, had now pledged himself to pay £500 under similar conditions.

LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN, in reply, confessed that the new arrangement had somewhat puzzled him, because it had compelled him to play, to a certain extent, the part of prophet, and to express appreciation of the brilliant speeches that were about to be delivered. Referring to the remarks which they expected to hear from Sir Thomas Beecham, he said that he now looked upon Sir Thomas as a fine old reactionary, who would derive benefit by coming to some progressive body such as they were. He frankly preferred the Beecham of the old days, who was an ardent revolutionary and performed works at Queen's Hall that no one had ever heard before and that no one was ever likely to hear again. He himself looked back with affectionate memories to those old days, when the scanty audiences increased the sonority of the hall. The smallness of the audiences at those concerts of British music used to surprise him. He could not make out why the British public at large had so little curiosity about British music, as he had always found plenty to excite his curiosity in the strange doings of his fellow countrymen in all walks of life, and his own desire for knowledge extended to his fellow Britishers' doings in the sphere of music. He never knew why every Britisher did not feel the same.

SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, in his speech, undertook the rôle of mentor to British composers of opera, and he told them plainly that one of the reasons why the long expected British School of Opera had not yet come into existence, as it ought to have done, was that British composers stayed away from the opera houses and thus had no real inner knowledge of the technique of operatic composition, which could only be gained by familiarity with the nightly traffic of the operatic stage. He further confessed that the arguments in favour of Municipal music had not converted him. He said that English Municipalities had shown themselves incompetent in the everyday affairs of life. Only a few of them knew how to keep the streets clean. How on earth, he asked, could it be expected that they could manage music in any advantageous way? State aid, he said, was even worse, and he pointed to the shocking example of the Paris Opéra, which he described as the scorn of all right-minded artistic people and the home of every form of artistic nastiness.

Other speakers were SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE and MR. PHILIP GUEDAÏA.

Another speech which deserves record in this place was that made at the concert on Thursday afternoon by MR. BERNARD SHAW, who really appeared to apologise for Mr. William Murdoch's inability to play the solos put down for him owing to the regretted illness of his wife. Referring to the 'bet' made by Lord Howard de Walden, in characteristic Shavian vein he said that his Lordship had come to the conclusion that he would not give any more money to artistic purposes, because he was the only Peer who did that sort of thing, and was tired of having the finger of scorn pointed at him by brother members of the Upper House for such a reason. But he might console himself with the fact, said Mr. Shaw, that he was the only Peer with whom a really artistic person could afford to be seen. However, he (Mr. Shaw) was not proud; he didn't mind what Peer he shook hands with. In appealing for contributions to the Fund, he dwelt on the moralising effects of music, and told the audience of his only experience as a patron of the Arts, when he spent a little money in helping to turn a wife-beater into a drummer. The gentleman in question found beating the drum gave much greater scope to his artistic faculties than beating his wife, and became a model husband and an estimable citizen.

The subject for discussion on Thursday, May 6, was 'The Needs of Music in Britain and how the British Music Society can best meet them.'

DR. H. P. ALLEN, who presided, said at the outset that it would be best to divide the question into four sections, viz.: (1.) Education; (2.) The British Music Society's opportunities for bringing those interested in music into touch with the practice of music; (3.) Co-operation between various musical bodies; and (4.) Decentralization. The discussion ranged over a wide field.

MR. CECIL H. BATESON (North Lancs.) spoke of the system in force at Manchester, by means of which musical training was made accessible to a hundred thousand children, and referred to the Municipal Orchestra at Burnley, which was in receipt of a grant of £300 per annum. He urged the establishment of a Clef Club, i.e., a branch of the B.M.S., in every community.

PROF. DONALD TOVEY spoke of the state of music at Edinburgh, so far as it concerned him. He was, he said, on strike for a 'forty-eight hour day,' for he had an unholy number of lectures to give. He then dwelt on the relationship between University music and Municipal music.

In response to a request from the Chairman, DR. RALPH DUNSTAN spoke of his work at the London Training Colleges of Westminster and Southlands, where, during his career, he has had six thousand budding teachers under his care. He emphasised the deplorable fact that sight-singing ability had declined rapidly in the last twenty years—by seventy-five per cent., in fact. He told the meeting that his results were borne out by the experiences of a well-known gentleman connected with the music publishing trade. He paid a tribute to the services of Sir Frederick Bridge in bringing this matter before the Congress.

SIR HENRY HADOW then proposed a resolution, which was carried nem. con., 'That this Society pledges itself to do all in its power to help in the improvement of Musical Education in this country, particularly in elementary, preparatory, secondary, and public schools.'

MR. BERNARD SHAW next spoke of the duty of the individual to help musical enterprise, and related a story of the foundation of a small orchestra in an unmusical place through the efforts of one man.

MR. DAN GODFREY explained his plans for arousing 'musical appreciation' at Bournemouth. The question of country and village music was next discussed by various speakers, and MR. J. M. MCTAVISH, Secretary of the Workers' Education Association, approached the question from the point of view of the masses, and dwelt on the importance of Folk-Song and the need for lectures on Appreciation. Ultimately the following resolution was passed: 'That this meeting of the British Music Society pledges itself to do all in its power to understand and develop the opportunities for performance and appreciation of music throughout the country.'

THE CHAIRMAN then suggested that the two remaining sections of the subject should be discussed together. MR. WALTER P. WEEKES (Plymouth) spoke against the municipalisation of music, and MR. DEE urged the necessity for co-operation between the British Music Society and the publishers.

THE CHAIRMAN and MR. ADRIAN C. BOULT dwelt on the advantages of decentralization, or the making of a larger number of places musically self-sufficing.

MR. HERBERT THOMPSON (Leeds) extolled the work done by Competition Festivals, and the value of the criticisms of the adjudicators.

THE CONCERTS

The first in importance and second in chronological order of the concerts was that given on Tuesday evening, at Queen's Hall, and conducted by Mr. Albert Coates. As a matter of history it should be recorded that Strauss's 'Heldenleben' had been put into the programme, but a protest was made, headed by Prof. Granville Bantock, as a result of which Scriabin's 'Poème de l'Extase' was substituted. Miss Agnes Nicholls sang the 'Romance' from Berlioz's 'Faust,' Bantock's 'Wilderness' and Ravel's 'Ma Mère l'Oye' Suite were also included in the programme. None of these things, however, nor Elgar's 'In the South' Overture, call for any notice here; but the first production of the new (third version) of Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony was an event of first-class importance which alone should have sufficed to crowd Queen's Hall. As already remarked, it did not. Future generations may read with astonishment that this work was written in 1910, but was played only for the fourth time on this occasion, and that it has but just now attained the dignity of print. The 'London' Symphony—unless all competent judges are mistaken—is destined to rank as one of the significant British works of its generation. Whatever Dr. Vaughan Williams writes is the result of deep thought and earnest aspiration, and is inspired by true love of beauty. The 'London' Symphony is not programme music in the strict sense, but it has a certain kinship in its poetical significance with Delius's 'Paris,' which is programme music. It is a record of impressions with comparatively little descriptive music: the only approaches to realism are in the Scherzo, which is brilliantly written, and though this movement at first hearing makes the strongest appeal, the beauty and depth of the slow movement will probably make a more lasting impression. To those who do not know it well it seems a little long. The finest passage in the work is the close, where the sudden dying down of the music, suggesting the impression of a great multitude slowly sinking to rest, bespeak the soul of a poet. The London Symphony Orchestra played the work very finely.

The other concerts contained very little that was new, and therefore a brief record will suffice.

The Quartet of Mr. Armstrong Gibbs, played at the Seaford House reception, again greatly impressed its hearers as the work of a composer of undoubted personality. The London String Quartet played at the concert on Wednesday evening at Æolian Hall, when the programme included McEwen's Threnody Quartet, which was an interesting contrast to the other large work in the programme—Frank Bridge's 'Bologna' Quartet—both in emotional content and in workmanship.

The great feature of the concert on Thursday was the singing of the Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir. It is a remarkably fine body of voices, with all the typical Yorkshire qualities of brilliancy, solidity, and sonority; the latter was almost too great for Æolian Hall. The two items in which the singers most distinguished themselves were perhaps 'Feasting, I watch,' by Elgar, in which they displayed fine musicianship, and Holst's 'The Home-coming,' in which their technique and mastery of comic, almost grotesque, effects were exceedingly good.

The inability of Mr. Murdoch to play his solos was a great disappointment, especially as all had been looking forward to making a first acquaintance with the pianoforte works of Mr. Baines, the young Yorkshire composer of whom such great accounts had been heard.

For convenience of record the full programmes of the concerts, as well as of the two recitals of Church music, are appended:

MONDAY, MAY 3, AT 8.30 P.M., SEAFORD HOUSE, BELGRAVE SQUARE. RECEPTION OF THE MEMBERS BY THE LORD AND LADY HOWARD DE WALDEN. THE PHILHARMONIC STRING QUARTET: MR. FREDERICK HOLDING, MR. RAYMOND JEREMY, MR. THOMAS PEATFIELD, MR. CEDRIC SHARPE.

Quartet	...	...	...	...	Armstrong Gibbs
Trio for Oboe, Violoncello, and Voice	...	...	...	...	Cyril Scott
Mr. Goossens, Mr. Cedric Sharpe, and Miss Astra Desmond.
Fantasy Quartet	...	...	...	...	Holbrooke
Quartet	...	...	...	...	Howells

TUESDAY, MAY 4, CHURCH MUSIC, 3.15 P.M., AT WESTMINSTER ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL. DIRECTOR OF MUSIC, DR. R. R. TERRY.

Magnificat	...	...	...	Mundy
Anthems—(a) 'The Blessed Virgin Mary'	...	...	...	Peter Phillips
(b) Hymn for Five Voices	...	...	...	Tallis
(c) 'Te Lucis'	...	...	...	Byrd
(d) Nunc Dimittis (six voices)	...	...	...	Charles Wood

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL, AT 4 P.M., DIRECTOR OF MUSIC, MR. E. T. COOK.

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis	...	...	...	Causton, in Mode 1
Anthems—(a) 'Justorum Animæ'	...	...	...	Byrd
(b) 'In manus tuas'	...	...	...	Tallis
Organ music—(a) Rhapsody No. 3	...	...	...	Howells
(b) Choral Prelude	...	...	...	Charles Wood
(c) Rhapsody	...	...	...	Harvey Grace

TUESDAY, MAY 4, AT 8 P.M., QUEEN'S HALL. THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. CONDUCTOR, MR. ALBERT COATES.

Overture	...	...	...	Elgar
Romance from 'Faust'	...	...	...	Berlioz
Miss Agnes Nicholls
'A London Symphony' (new version)	...	...	...	Vaughan Williams
'Ma Mere l'Oye'	...	...	...	Maurice Ravel
Air from 'Christ in the Wilderness'	...	...	...	Bantock
Miss Agnes Nicholls
'Poem of Ecstasy'	...	...	...	Scriabin
Violin Solo—Mr. W. H. Reed

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, AT 8.15 P.M., ÆOLIAN HALL. CHAMBER MUSIC. THE LONDON STRING QUARTET: MR. JAMES LEVEY, MR. THOMAS W. PETRE, MR. H. WALDO WARNER, MR. C. WARWICK EVANS.

'Bologna' Quartet	...	...	...	Frank Bridge
'On Wenlock Edge'	...	...	...	Vaughan Williams
Mr. Gervase Elwes and the L.S.Q.
(a) 'The Lonely Shepherd'	...	...	...	Spaight
(b) 'By the Tarn'	...	...	...	Goossens
(c) Folk-Song	...	...	...	Waldo Warner
Songs by ...	...	...	...	Aiken, Ley, and Quilter
Threnody Quartet	...	...	...	McEwen

THURSDAY, MAY 6, AT 3.15 P.M., ÆOLIAN HALL. VIOLIN, PIANOFORTE, AND CHORAL RECITAL.

(a) 'Feasting I watch'	...	...	...	Elgar
(b) 'It's oh! to be a wild wind'	...	...	...	Elgar
(c) 'O Mariners, out of the sunlight'	...	...	...	Coleridge-Taylor

The Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir.

Conductor: Mr. Irving Silverwood.

Sonata in C minor (Op. 30, No. 2)	...	...	...	Beethoven
Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. William Murdoch.

(a) 'The Home-coming'	...	...	...	Holst
(b) 'Lucifer in Starlight'	...	...	...	Bantock

The Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir.

PIANOFORTE SOLOS—(a) Rhapsody	...	...	...	John Ireland
(b) 'Paradise Garden'	...	...	...	William Baines
(c) 'Fireflies'	...	...	...	Frank Bridge

Mr. William Murdoch.

'Hymn before Action'	...	...	...	Walford Davies
'Storm Joy'	...	...	...	"

The Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir.

Sonata (Op. 82)	...	...	...	Elgar
Mr. Albert Sammons and Mr. William Murdoch.

(a) 'My love's like a red, red rose'	...	...	...	Bantock
(b) Réveille!	...	...	...	Elgar

* Mr. Murdoch was not able to play these solos.

[Photo. by

Sydney J. Loeb.]

Among the most prominent figures at the British Music Society Congress was Mr. Bernard Shaw, who delivered entertaining speeches on behalf of the Society's funds and the Municipalisation of music. Our photograph was taken at Bayreuth. As will be seen, 'G. B. S.' was caught speaking. The words of the great at supreme crises have always some kind of interest, so we are glad the photographer recorded this utterance. Here it is: 'Have you got me lighted properly?'

We have received some particulars of a concert tour in Jamaica undertaken by Mr. Josef Holbrooke. At Mandeville, on March 22, a combined recital was given by Mr. Holbrooke, Mr. Vasco Akeroyd (violin), and Madame Stedman (vocalist). Pianoforte recitals were arranged at Port Antonio, Port Maria, St. Ann's Bay, and Montego Bay during April, with Mr. W. C. Spooner (vocalist) assisting. According to programme the tour was to cover Trinidad, Bridgetown (Barbados), and Bermuda during May, with the following as a constant programme: Violin Sonatas by Ireland and Strauss, pianoforte works by Scott, Bax, and Holbrooke, violin solos by Dale and Glazounov.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

The principal orchestral event which has taken place since the last issue, was the Philharmonic Concert on April 9, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. It was comparatively uneventful, but Rachmaninov's E minor Symphony is well worth hearing. Though it is not much more than twenty years old, it already dates; but it remains a brilliant and effective specimen of a modern symphony of its own period.

Miss Marguerite Nielka sang the Monologue and Air 'O toi qui prolongeas' from Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Tauris' with considerable dignity of style, and Madame Suggia's playing of Lalo's Violoncello Concerto and some movements from the unaccompanied Suite of Bach satisfied the most fastidious critics.

The second of the concerts of the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra (the New Symphony Orchestra), conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, on May 11, included a very effectively scored Rhapsody for Orchestra, 'Over the hills,' by Percy E. Fletcher. It was conducted by the composer, and its genial presentment of Bank Holiday impressions pleased the audience very much.

At the same concert, the young Serbian violinist, Yovanovitch Bratza, delighted the audience in Tchaikovsky's Concerto. There is no doubt that this boy has enormous gifts, but he requires some severe training.

How urgent is this need was shown still more conclusively when he played at Dame Melba's Concert at the Albert Hall. His misreading of a little Minuet of Mozart was almost tragic, though he played his other pieces very well. The Melba Concert in question, on May 22, was a great event. Dame Melba sang as beautifully as ever. Once or twice her very high notes were not quite what they used to be years ago, but otherwise it was not possible to detect a flaw in her vocal armour. Of course encores were plentiful.

Mr. Tom Burke made his re-appearance at the same concert, and secured the greatest effect in an Aria from 'La Forza del Destino.' It was generally noticed that his middle notes have gained in power, though possibly at the sacrifice of some of their beauty, and his phrasing showed a considerable advance on his last year's work. Needless to say, he too aroused tremendous enthusiasm.

On the following Sunday, May 9, when Dame Clara Butt filled the Albert Hall, a feature of the programme which distinguished it from many other Clara Butt concerts was that she sang an unusual number of songs in lighter vein, and sang them with consummate skill. There are probably few, if any, singers living who could make small things so effective in so large a space.

The number of vocal recitals has been more than ever bewildering, and first in chronological order to be mentioned is that given by Miss Flora Woodman at Queen's Hall on April 21. It is a long time since she has challenged criticism in so serious a way, but the fluency of her florid singing and her unaffected sincerity of expression vindicated her right to do so. It must be a long time since 'Bel Raggio' was heard at a London concert, yet this old battle horse of the prime donne of a past generation is still capable of some lively caracoles.

At a recital on the following day, at Æolian Hall, Miss Mignon Nevada sang very charmingly. Her reading of Ernest Maurel's 'Si mon rival' was unexpectedly dramatic. The programme also included an Arietta from Puccini's new one-act opera, 'Gianni Schicchi,' which was new to London—a very taking trifle, but made up of scraps from the composer's earlier works. The first appearance of the Indian tenor, Ali Khan, gorgeously robed in scarlet and gold, was interesting. He has a warm voice and sings with fervour.

One of the best singers heard here for some time is Mr. Cecil Fanning, the American baritone. He has a beautiful voice and exceptional command of tone-colour, with a diction so clear that every word can be heard at the back of the hall. In addition to this, he has exceptional interpretative gifts. He was unfortunately very nervous at his first recital, especially at the beginning, so that those who only heard the early part of his programme, as was the case with several of the critics, were hardly able to gain a fair impression.

Madame Calvé gave her last recital on May 1. The only thing demanding special record is her singing of some Pyrenean folk-songs.

Mr. Gerald Cooper is a tasteful vocalist, who gave his first recital on May 1. He received excellent help from a group of madrigal singers.

CHAMBER MUSIC

There has been an unusual amount of interesting new chamber music. The re-appearance of the Bohemian String Quartet was very welcome. The extraordinary vitality of these players, their amazing wealth of tone, which yet never suggests an attempt to imitate the orchestra, and the wonderful balance of their ensemble always give us something to think about. It is a mistake, too, to imagine that they can play only Czech music; though of course the music of Dvorák, Suk, and Smetana brings out their finest qualities. Their playing on May 12 of Elgar's Quartet, which they had specially studied with the composer, was remarkably interesting, for they made us see the work from a new angle. Some of the mystic aloofness which we are wont to associate with it was perhaps missing, but in compensation we had more warm human feeling, especially in the slow movement, and there was an unusual brilliancy about the Finale.

At the same concert we had Arnold Bax's Pianoforte Quintet, which had only once before been played in London—at an afternoon event given by the Music Club, on the day following a particularly unpleasant air-raid and with lively anticipations of another, in 1917, when it was perhaps not possible to form an unbiassed judgment. It is certainly a very remarkable work, perhaps destined to be remembered longer than any of its native contemporaries. In spite of its complexity, its structure is logical and finely proportioned. It is full of melody, and a storehouse of new and legitimate effects. The idiom may be described either as Stravinsky-ised Celtic folk-song or Hibernianised Russian. In any case, whichever view we adopt, it is a very fascinating blend of East and West. It is strange that we should have had to wait so long for a second performance, and it will not be creditable to British music if we have to wait as long for another. Probably one of the reasons for the delay has been the fact that it is not accessible except in manuscript, an omission which ought soon to be rectified. The whole performance was full of life and imagination, and Miss Fanny Davies's help at the pianoforte was very valuable. She played at all the five concerts given by the Bohemian Quartet.

Another new British chamber work which has not attracted quite the attention it deserved is Mr. Cyril Scott's Pianoforte Trio, which was given by the Misses Harrison, with the composer at the pianoforte, on April 24. Mr. Cyril Scott remains faithful to his idiom with a devotion which occasionally seems to interrupt the free flow of his modern ideas. It would be more effective if he did not cling to it quite so persistently. The Trio disproves the theory that Mr. Scott has forgotten how to be cheerful; but at the same time it does give the impression now and then that he is a little ashamed of himself that he has allowed his music to become merry.

At his so-called 'Chamber Orchestral Concert' on April 27, Mr. Arthur Bliss introduced a Pianoforte Quintet of his own, and at the same concert we heard Stravinsky's 'Ragtime' for a combination of instruments so curious that it deserves detailed mention. The instruments concerned are two violins, viola, double-bass, flute, clarinet, horn, cornet, trombone, percussion, and cymbalum. It is quite a good joke, but for Stravinsky to indulge in such diversions seems a waste of time for a man who can write music like that of 'Petroushka.' At the same time the extraordinary cleverness with which the unusual combination is used is undeniable. The absence of the violoncello to bridge the gulf between the viola and double-bass, and the contrast between the old-world cymbalum and the modern sounding brass, give ample scope to Stravinsky's powers of parody.

Mr. Boris Levenson's second concert of his compositions took place at Æolian Hall on April 29. His Quartet in B flat has the same qualities of fluent ease and good workmanship which distinguish his other compositions, and also more depth and originality. The Scherzando was particularly attractive. His 'Lyric pieces for Violoncello' and his 'Fantasies on Russian Folk-songs for String Quartet and Pianoforte' also deserve mention because of the same qualities.

THE VIOLINISTS

The greatest sensation of the musical season so far has been the first appearance of Jascha Heifetz. It deserves mention also for a reason which may become historical, that this is the first time an artist has been well-known to a large public before appearing in person in this country. I heard one lady say after the concert: 'He is quite as good as his records,' the kind of remark which would have been unthinkable a few years ago. The number of Heifetz gramophone records sold in this country before the concert is said to have been seventy thousand, a figure which gives food for thought.

At his first concert he played nothing which gave any opportunity of judging his real powers as an interpreter, and it is only possible to say, negatively, that he did nothing meretricious or that could offend fastidious taste. When he has played works like Mendelssohn's Concerto, Bach's 'Chaconne,' and César Franck's Sonata, which are included in his future programmes, we shall have some certainty on this point, but there is no doubt that as a master of technique he has seen now at the age of nineteen few living rivals.

His ease is astonishing, and the way in which even in most difficult passages he never scrapes or scratches is all but unparalleled. His tone is strong and pure, and, if the analogy may be used, like that of a high soprano rather than that of a mezzo-soprano. The comparison with Dame Melba, which more than one writer has made, is singularly apt.

M. Achille Rivarde has made a very welcome re-appearance, and the breadth of dignity and authority in his style will always command admiration.

The number of violinists now before the public who would some years ago have been sensational is very large, and many of them have been giving recitals. As, however, all are familiar, and they have not introduced anything new, it would be superfluous to mention them in detail, but the names of Miss D'Aranyi and M. Hubermann must not be withheld.

The same may be said of pianists, but Mr. Lamond's Beethoven recital on May 9 deserves record. Of native pianists who are coming to the front, special mention should be made of Miss Chilton Griffin, Mr. Anderson Tyrer, and Miss Isabel Gray. The latter's playing of a French programme on May 5 showed her to be equally at home in the old masters as in the new. Her playing of Grovlez's 'Almanac les Images' revealed a quite unusual power of musical characterization. The pieces themselves are unusually clever, and the composer manages to be humorous in his music at the pianoforte without indulging in extreme dissonances. The most popular of the pieces was one called 'The Huntsman,' but that entitled 'The Wise Donkeys' is perhaps the most original.

TWO VIEWS OF 'NATIONAL OPERA'

DINNER TO MR. ALBERT COATES

On Thursday, April 22, the Music Club gave a dinner to Mr. Albert Coates at the Hyde Park Hotel, with Lord Burnham in the chair.

Many musicians distinguished in all branches, to the number of about two hundred, sat down to dinner, and though after-dinner oratory does not generally call for permanent record, the speeches delivered by Mr. Albert Coates and Sir Thomas Beecham deserve to be remembered.

Incidentally Mr. Coates mentioned the fact that this was the anniversary of his return to England after his adventures with the Bolsheviks, and he briefly summarised his experiences in the interval. He deplored the fact that in spite of all the great resources of Covent Garden and the outstanding talent of the Company there, they had done nothing more 'national' than to perform 'Parsifal' in English. He impressed on British composers the need for the formation of a National School of Opera on the model of that which had grown up in the last century in Russia. Musically it was based on Russian idiom of national folk-song and national dances; and the heroes of the operas were familiar figures of national legends and national history. England, he contended, had a storehouse of subjects equally rich, and the national musical idiom was equally well adapted to become the basis of a school of national opera.

Sir Thomas Beecham, in proposing the toast 'National Opera,' took the opposite view. He rightly pointed out that there was much loose thought and speaking on the subject, and when we referred to 'National Opera' we meant two different things, and it was time the air was cleared. Some of us meant opera of the kind suggested by Mr. Coates, others simply meant opera written by native composers in native idiom, whatever the subject of the opera. He maintained that for England the latter was the only hope of salvation. The whole nature of our civilization was not such as to promise any results of permanent value from following the example of the Russian composers, and Sir Thomas went on to describe the differences between the two nations in this respect. He was very severe on those who have condemned 'A Village Romeo and Juliet' on the ground that it is not opera. What qualities, he asked, essential to opera did it lack? It was 'national' because it was music of the kind which no country but this could produce. He pointed to the example of Shakespeare, who—apart from his historical plays, which after all were not the fine flower of his genius—had sought his subjects all over the world, and from the literature of all countries, and had yet remained the most English of all the poets. Thus, he said, English composers could choose their subjects from the planet Mars, and an opera written on such a subject, provided it had English characteristics, would be national English opera. The School of English or British Opera had of course not yet been founded, but he was confident that we should have it before long. He made a rapid survey of operatic conditions of all other countries, and said that he feared the number of people interested in music—or, as he put it, amid much laughter, 'interfering in music'—to be found in this country was much larger than anywhere else, and quoted opinions of how authorities in other countries thought the future of music lay in this country. Incidentally, he took the opportunity of elucidating his relations with the Press, and of solemnly and 'officially' holding out the olive branch to the critics. Later in the evening he suited the action to the word by leaving his seat and joining a group of well-known musical critics.

A. K.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

A welcome feature of the present day, and one significant of the democratic times in which we live, is the steadily growing recognition of the value of music both as a pleasant relaxation from the daily routine and as a means of promoting good-fellowship amongst those who have to be continually rubbing shoulders with each other. It is all to the good when members of a big firm, irrespective of position, meet together for a weekly music-making. It will be an excellent thing for the growth of music in this country, and to the mutual advantage of both employers and employed, when every factory and business establishment has its own Musical Society.

The Novello Choir, consisting of members of the staff and their friends, and conducted by Mr. Harold Brooke, one of the directors of the firm, is, however, no new thing. It has been in existence for fourteen years, a fact which is perhaps not surprising when we remember that it was founded by such a keen and accomplished choralist as the late Dr. McNaught.

At its concert at the Central Hall, Westminster, on May 8, the choir soon made it evident that it had worked hard and well in the preparation of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and Parry's delightful 'Pied Piper of Hamelin.' The singing was admirable throughout, and the choralists were successfully piloted by their conductor through the not infrequent intricacies to be met with in these two works. It is true that in the more strenuous passages the over-exuberance of the orchestra, backed up by the eccentric acoustical qualities of the hall, occasionally succeeded in bringing about the temporary eclipse of the choir. In the quieter portions, however, and in the frequent snatches of unaccompanied singing, the singers showed what excellent work they are capable of doing. One felt at these moments that it was a pity they did not let themselves be heard in some unaccompanied items.

The large audience—which, it was clear, included many friends of the performers—was very appreciative of a most attractive programme. In addition to the work of the choir—which also included Elgar's arrangement of the National Anthem as the opening number—Miss Winifred Small played brilliantly in two movements from Mackenzie's 'Pibroch' Suite, and a group of solos, Mr. Joseph Farrington sang 'O ruddier than the cherry,' and contributed an exceptionally fine reading of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Eleanore,' and an air from 'Pagliacci' was given by the young operatic tenor, Mr. Frank Webster.

Miss Marguerite Swale was at the pianoforte, the organ was in the safe hands of Mr. John E. West, and the orchestra—which, it should be mentioned, gave an exhilarating performance of Balfour Gardiner's 'Overture to a Comedy'—was led by Mr. W. H. Reed.

G. G.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

OPENING OF THE ROYAL OPERA SEASON :

THE CARL ROSA SEASON AT THE LYCEUM

To all intents and purposes there has been no cessation in the business of opera-giving throughout the month. By the end of the musical year the amount of opera-giving to be counted up will be enormous. Never has so much opera been heard in London of late years, and never in my recollection has so much of it been in the vernacular. I do not fear that there has been too much opera in English, for the simple reason that there is an immense amount of way to be made up, and also the natural corollary to opera in English is English opera. There can be no doubt that such will be the end of it all, and a better end one could not desire. It is one of the cases in which history may well repeat itself, and give us again the days when the opera heard in English in this country was English opera and nothing else. How and why a change came is another story, which may be re-told some day; for the present the fact remains that there has been a remarkable amount of opera and that there is more to come.

ROYAL OPERA SEASON

In the first place I must record that the Royal Opera opened its doors once again on May 10. The alterations to the interior of the house were not the only changes that marked the undertaking. Its official title has now become 'Royal Opera, Covent Garden : Proprietors, The Grand Opera Syndicate, Ltd. : Lessees, The Sir Thomas Beecham Opera Co., Ltd., under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham.' This means that the Grand Opera Syndicate which has served London so well in the past stands aside, in a measure, in favour of Sir Thomas Beecham. A new name of 'International' has been found for the season, and the policy is the representation of grand opera in French, Italian, and English by artists belonging to the countries in which those languages are used—and to any other. Though the term is new, the practice is not, and the presence even of British artists at the Royal Opera is no new thing. But I shall never cease to acclaim those who consider the number should be greater. Provided the singers possess the necessary high qualification for the Royal Opera there is no reason why they should not appear.

As a matter of fact the British singer down to the time of writing has held his own by sheer force of excellence. The foreign visitors so far have not revealed any distinctive qualities. Those who appeared during the first week of the season emphasised the fact that the choice of artists from abroad had not been so carefully made as in the past. No one of distinction has as yet appeared; the palm has been borne by Great Britain. The opening performance of Puccini's 'La Bohème' re-introduced Madame Kousnietzoff—now styled Kousnezova—who appeared in pre-war days and charmed us with her good looks and clear voice. She did so again on this occasion, though hardly by the light and shade she employed. Mr. Tom Burke made his reappearance to sing Rudolpho, which he did as before, since he is at his best in Italian music whose phraseology suits his methods. There were some newcomers, e.g., Signor Ernesto Badini, the Marcellino, and Signor Concetto Paterna, the Schünard, neither of whom seemed particularly well-suited for these parts. The Musetta was Miss Madeline Collins, whose third appearance in opera it was—a fact somewhat too apparent for the patrons of the Royal Opera. M. Cotreuil, who makes a welcome return to London, was a wholly sympathetic Colline, and Mr. Herbert Langley—as in the English representations—doubled Benoit and Alcindoro. Sir Thomas Beecham conducted, but this is not one of the operas he can get through with satisfactory results. For the second night Puccini's 'La Tosca' was put on. Madame Edvina resumed her part of Floria with all her wonted weight. The Cavaradossi was M. Ansseau, the Belgian tenor, who made a successful appearance last year. He sang this part for the first time in London, and made much of it. A very notable impersonation of Scarpia was given by M. Maguenat, whom one is glad to see again. It was the refinement of cruelty, emphasised by his great powers as an actor. The conductor was Signor Gaetano Bavagnoli, who is new. He is essentially a modern conductor, and his reading of the score had many fresh touches. The following evening brought a revival of Bizet's first opera 'I Pescatori di Perle.' In spite of some good music, although it is wholly un-Bizetian in style, the work has never taken with the London public. Mapleson tried it, Harris tried it, and even a Tetrizzini could not make it 'go.' Its fortune is hardly likely to change now. The Leila on this occasion was a singer new to London, Signora Graziella Pareto, whom Madame Edvina is credited with 'discovering.' She has an excellent soprano voice, flexible and sweet; but her method of using it is against her. Her upper notes, which might well be round and clear, are hard and shrill as the outcome of a way of attacking them without sufficient breath-pressure. The part of Nadir showed Mr. Tom Burke in something differing from his previous efforts, and rather exposed the want of variety of colour in his voice, his singing being otherwise good. Signor Badini and Mr. Edmund Burke also appeared, and Sir Thomas Beecham conducted with full sympathy. The mounting was good and the chorus strong, although I did not hear the unanimity of pitch I should have liked to notice.

The following night provided what so far has been the best representation. The work was Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' which may or may not be called an opera, according to the point of view. My view is that it is not an opera but an uncommonly clever musical illustration of the Maeterlinck drama. The characters have little to sing; the action and the music are both in the orchestra. But what those on the stage had to do they did with great distinction. Madame Edvina was the Mélisande, and well expressed the characteristics of that somewhat irritating young female. M. Maguenat performed a veritable feat by appearing as Pelléas. It was a wonderful performance, and revealed the pliancy of the art as cultivated in France. There was no hint of the Scarpia of the two nights before; nothing but the boyish thoughtlessness. Another French artist, Madame Jacqueline Royer, who made her first appearance in London, displayed sound methods and a pleasing, well-managed voice as Geneviève. M. Cotreuil was entirely in the picture as Golaud, and M. Huberdeau was the aged Arkel. Mr. Percy Pitt conducted ably, and the representation was a triumph for the French artists. Incidentally, it showed us what an immense amount there is to be done before we shall get performances by British artists that are 'the equal of any Continental town.'

But that there is no lack of material among the British was very well illustrated the next night, when 'La Bohème' was repeated, for the Rodolfo was taken by Mr. Joseph Hislop, a Scottish tenor from Stockholm. He has a genuine tenor voice of excellent quality, and sings in thoroughly good style. Here is another example of a good British voice whose owner has had the benefit of Continental experience. Mr. Hislop should do much, not only for himself but in the direction of raising the level of the representations at the Royal Opera, which so far have not been on a very high plane. I should add that at this performance Miss Ellinger gave us an improved Musetta and M. Dinh Gilly was the Marcellino. The first week closed with a revival of Donizetti's comic opera, 'Don Pasquale.' Whatever its merits may be it is unsuited to Covent Garden in these days. It was well done in its way, for the cast was all Italian, and the Italians have a pleasant habit of keeping their national masterpieces in their repertoire. Every one of the numerous Italian touring companies has 'Don Pasquale' on tap, so that the task of giving it in London was not heavy. Signor Paterna made an excellent Don, showing full possession of all the quaint movements and gestures proper to the part. Signora Pareto was the Norina, Signor Badini Malatesta, and Signor Govoni Ernesto. Signor Bavagnoli conducted, revelling in the tone of the British brass without considering the question of proportion. The performance was greatly enjoyed by those who understood Italian.

The last of the productions I can record is that of Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly,' given in Italian. This introduced a new exponent of the part in Signora Gilda Dalla Rizza. She is a temperamental person with some powerful high notes not altogether free from vibrato in excess, almost amounting to tremolo. She is a good actress, and was able to give us a version of the familiar part that had considerable freshness. Chance also enabled us to hear Mr. Hislop in this opera, for Mr. Riccardo Martin, who had been

UNACCOMPANIED PART-SONG FOR FOUR VOICES.

Poem by F. WYVILLE HOME.

Composed by JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante con licenza e ben legato.

p poco poco

SOPRANO.
Life had not heard of Love, Nor dream'd in sleep there-of;

ALTO.
Life had not heard of Love, Nor dream'd in sleep there - of;

TENOR.
Life had not heard of Love, Nor dream'd in sleep there - of;

BASS.
Life had not heard of Love; . . . The Andante con licenza e ben legato. ♩ = circa 76.

PIANO.
(For practice only.)

p poco poco

ten.

The Soul . . with - in him lay Un - wa - ken'd night and day.

ten.

The Soul with - in him lay Un - wa - ken'd night and day.

ten.

The Soul with - in . . him lay Un - wa . . ken'd night and day.

ten.

Soul . . with - in him lay Un - wa - ken'd night and day.

Copyright, 1920, by Novello and Company, Limited.

pp (without accent.)

Sweet is the sleep that is dream

pp (without accent.)

Sweet is the sleep, ... the sleep that is

pp (without accent.)

Sweet is the sleep, ... the sleep . .

pp (without accent.)

Sweet is the sleep . .

pp

slent. poco rit.

. less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

dream - less, sweet is the sleep . . that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

that is dream - less, . . sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

that is dream - less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

This Supplement is part also of the June issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 1½d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 143.

MORECAMBE—May 6-9.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The twenty-fourth Festival was held amid new surroundings in the Tower Buildings, whose theatre is somewhat smaller than the Winter Gardens Pavilion (unavailable now), the scene of so many great choral festivals in the past. The acoustic of the newer premises is hardly so good, nor its marshalling accommodation so spacious; but these were only minor defects in comparison with the too prevalent slackness in management. The Festival machine has been 'jacked up' so long that its engine needs overhaul, and a freer application of lubricant would ease its running. Time was needlessly lost at the commencement of Saturday evening's concert, although the judges were in place on the stroke of time; nowadays telephonic communication between platform stewards and adjudicators' box is indispensable.

No Festival held this year can hope for any approach to pre-war enthusiasms either on the stage or in the auditorium. If Morecambe is to regain anything like its old position its friends must secure some drastic reconstruction.

What is to be said of a selection committee that prescribes for choral singing by children under sixteen years of age such words:

I go before my darling,
Follow thou to the bower in the close alley;
There we will go together,
Sweetly kiss each other,
And like two wantons,
Dally, dally, dally.

This was one of old Thomas Morley's canzonets for two voices. Shades of Howson and Gorton!

Proceedings on the final day opened with the singing of Brahms's 'Queen of Heaven' Motet and Schumann's five-part 'Forest Fay' by seven female-voice choirs, in which the highest standard of the day was revealed. Pre-war standards necessitated not less than 90 to 95 per cent. if choirs were to survive preliminary rounds; here the Lancaster and Blackpool Orpheus Choirs reached 87 per cent. and 85 per cent. respectively, and during the day this level was only reached again on one occasion, so it is evident that considerable leeway has yet to be made up.

The male-voice competition witnessed the reappearance of Mr. Fred Lord and his Barnoldswick singers—who that heard it will ever forget his reading of Bantock's 'Tyger' ten years or more since at Blackpool?—and new choirs from Rochdale and, most significant of all, Crossley's Motor Works Choir from Manchester.

Brahms's Alto Rhapsody choral part (why only a portion used, one wonders), and Hathaway's setting of Keats's 'It keeps eternal whisperings around desolate shores,' were the preliminary tests from which Barnoldswick, Mr. J. S. Warburton's Blackpool men, Crossley's Motor Works, and Habergham emerged.

Brahms was uniformly sung too fast. To start where they did (p. 12 Novello score) was unwise, because the proper contrast of atmosphere, the transition from mental storm and stress of the solo portion to the calm and resignation of the choral close could not be established. Choirs were not required to provide their own soloist with whom they could have rehearsed. Miss Sybil Cropper (of Kendal) has a beautiful voice, and sang with each choir in turn as it appeared, the later choirs naturally having more knowledge of her style and reading than the earlier ones. Hers was rather an unhappy position: she sang seven times in succession under as many conductors, and emerged with greater credit than any other participant. The acting accompanist was Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland. He is the president of the Festival, and also acted as an adjudicator. Incidentally one may question the wisdom of such procedure, unless in cases of serious emergency. It was soon evident that Mr. Fuller-Maitland's tempi were not in accord with those of some of the conductors, and Mr. E. Hitchon, of Habergham, especially adopted a much slower rate, perhaps over-slow, but nearer the ideal than any other. Mr. Maitland ignored this, and instinctively urged the speed. Miss Cropper entered at his rate, and ultimately Mr. Hitchon stopped the singing and asked, 'Are you playing to my beat or am I to sing to yours?' In a longish experience of Festivals I do not recall anything comparable to this. Strict justice, I suppose, would have called for a fresh start, but they turned back a few bars and finished in rather excited manner. The official accompanist, Mr. E. B. North, was on the premises, I believe, and ought to have been utilised. Probably he has accompanied this work more frequently than anybody else in public performances; but, apart from this, it is for the conductor alone to dictate the tempo of his reading. He stands or falls by his own deliberate choice, and is judged accordingly. Mr. Hitchon was at great pains to indicate in the prelude bars on p. 11 his desire for a slower rate of movement. I write in complete ignorance of the marks awarded. When Dr. Bairstow assembled the joint forces for a rehearsal at a combined performance (which I did not hear) there was again a slighter, but still pronounced, difference of idea in the rate of movement. I cannot think this will be the last occasion on which this work will be utilised at such Festivals, so one would urge that:

- (a) Choirs should provide their own soloist;
- (b) The closing phrases of the solo portion (at least) be sung, and this performance be judged solely on its merits, without prejudice to the choral singing;
- (c) That an accompanist be secured who has had ample experience of public performances of the work, and who can play it orchestrally—so far as a pianoforte admits;

(d) That if there is an orchestral class, the accompaniment be prescribed as a test-piece, and the joint forces utilised in united performance, after a full rehearsal.

In the Challenge Shield class for mixed-voice choirs there was included a setting of the 'Witches' Sabbath' from Ben Jonson's 'Masque of Queens,' specially written for the occasion by Mr. Leslie Heward, who I learned was 'discovered' either at Morecambe or Carlisle some years since by Mr. S. H. Nicholson in an ear-test competition. Mr. Nicholson interested himself in the youth, and now he is at the Royal Academy. I believe that in choral music this is the first-fruits, and with some appropriateness its first hearing was at Morecambe. Before discussing it one may express a personal opinion that its introduction at this Festival was inopportune. Choirs cannot re-start where they left off in 1914; Heward's technique demands that of 1914, and it was simply not forthcoming. It is an elaborate exploitation of the grotesque, of the macabre. Necessarily there is much that is merely mechanical, and its imaginative grip is not possible within the limits of pure music. There is no continuous certainty of touch, but a couple of dazzlingly illuminative flashes: that in the stanza beginning 'The moon is red,' and later 'Fire above, fire below . . . go! go!' His chords often are weird and strange—some choirs made them more so! Lancaster was more musically correct, but unimaginative; Sale and District (Manchester) less correct, but powerfully imaginative in the two passages I note. Query? If a composer conceives an imaginative effect in terms of certain notes (and only those notes), and a choir sings them but fails of the effect, whilst another choir fails to sing them but gets the effect despite that fact—which counts most, the composer's view or the adjudicator's award? If the latter, then what's the use of notes which are only approximate means to an end? Does not 'music' mean the infallible attainment of imaginative results from the unerring use of certain means? I enjoyed hearing Lancaster, Barrow, Blackpool Orpheus, and Sale sing this hazardous music, but it had no emotional thrills, and I can understand choirs abstaining from participation in such a work at this juncture.

When Mr. Heward conducted a joint performance of his work after thirty minutes' steady rehearsal, he took it quite slowly, and the two imaginative effects which one choir gave us in the afternoon quite missed fire. A choral enthusiast asked one of the conductors in terse Lancashire fashion, 'What do you make of the Witches' Sabbath.' Owt or nowt?' To which the reply came back, with comparable brevity, 'A toss-up'! And so it is.

Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a Northern land' made one weep, so powerfully emotional was the singing by Keighley Vocal Union. I am a keen modernist, but Elgar of 1896 had then secrets which are hidden from some who are thought to have made him and others look quite (I think the word is) 'feeble.'

The following is a summary of the tests and results in the principal choral classes:

Female-Voice Choirs (not more than thirty-six voices).—Tests: Six-part song, 'Queen of the night' (Brahms) and 'The forest fay' (Schumann). 1st, Mr. Aldous's Choir, Lancaster; 2nd, Blackpool Orpheus; 3rd, Barrow Madrigal Society.

Male-Voice Choirs (not more than thirty voices).—Tests: 'Stars of the summer night' (C. E. Miller) and 'Tars' song' (Hatton). 1st, Millom Male-Voice Choir; 2nd, Greengates Musical Union; 3rd, Barrowford Co-operative Glee Union.

Mixed-Voice Choirs (not more than thirty-six voices).—Tests: 'With wreaths of rose and laurel' (Cobbold) and 'My love dwelt in a Northern land' (Elgar). 1st, Keighley Vocal Union; 2nd, Penrith Choir; 3rd, Skipton Road P.M., Colne.

Male-Voice Choirs (not more than forty voices).—Tests: 'It keeps eternal whisperings' (Hathaway), chorus part of Alto Rhapsody (Brahms), 'Arm thee' (Walford Davies), and 'United are we' (Brahms). 1st, Crossley Motor Male-Voice Choir, Gorton (Mr. Walter Harris); 2nd, Habergham Glee Union (Mr. Ernest Hitchon); 3rd, Barnoldswick Glee Union (Mr. Fred Lord); 4th, Blackpool Male-Voice Choir (Mr. James Warburton).

Mixed-Voice Choirs (not more than sixty voices).—Tests: Choral Ballad, 'The Witches' Sabbath' (Leslie Heward), 'Happy streams' (Rootham), and 'Light of my soul' (Pearsall). 1st, Sale and District Musical Society (Mr. Alfred Higson); 2nd, Blackpool Orpheus (Mr. J. S. Warburton); 3rd, Barrow Madrigal Society (Mrs. T. M. Bourne); 4th, Mr. J. W. Aldous's Choir.

The adjudicators were Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Mr. S. H. Nicholson, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland, and Mr. E. Bennett North.

GREENOCK.—April 23, 24.

This Festival seems to have gained the attention of the neighbourhood, for entries were satisfactory, audiences numerous, and the proceedings were watched with close interest. Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt had plenty to say in commendation of the singing, especially that of the female-voice choirs. Mr. Thorpe Davie's choir was only better than the Greenock Festival Choir (Mr. J. Calder) by the margin of 187 marks to 185, and both gave exquisite performances of Vaughan Williams's 'Sound sleep.' In the class for local female voice choirs the prize went to Greenock High Grade School Ladies' Choir (Mr. Cathbert Foster). In the mixed-voice class Greenock Festival Choir carried off the challenge trophy and Greenock Male-Voice Choir (Mr. A. J. Gourley) was first among the men's choirs. George Square Congregational (Mr. Robert F. Lyle) and Mount Park U.F. Church (Mr. Robert Campbell) showed the best idea of anthem singing in three classes. The following were the prize-winners in the junior choral competition—Greenock Co-operative Society No. 2 choir (Mr. John B. Law), Greenock Higher Grade School (Miss Lena M. Mayhew), Cartburn School (Miss Agnes MacCallum), and St. James's U.F. Sabbath Schools, Paisley (Miss A. Craig). There were eight classes for vocal solos.

WHARFEDALE (ILKLEY).—April 29, 30, May 1.

This Festival has shown steady growth since its inauguration fourteen years ago. It continued during the war and this year has made a marked advance in nearly every respect, the only notable exception being that the support given by junior choirs has not kept pace with the rest. Dr. Brewer, who adjudicated throughout, found a great deal to praise in the highest terms. One of the 'finds' of the Festival was the astonishing talent of two Huddersfield violinists, Jane Marcus (age thirteen) and Jessie M. Hinchcliffe (age eleven). In the course of three days all sorts of musical effort came under review, from pianoforte and string quintets to Girls' Club Choirs. Space only permits of record of the chief choral results. These were as follows: Elementary School Choirs, (open class).—1st, Holycroft Boys' Council School, Keighley (Mr. W. H. Whitaker); 2nd, Victoria Road Council School, Morley (Mr. Edgar Varley). Public Secondary Schools (two classes).—1st prizes to Bradford Girls' Grammar School (Mr. A. T. Akeroyd) in each case. Village Choral Societies.—1st, Ilkley Vocal Society (Mr. Akeroyd). Female-Voice Choirs.—1st, Bingley Training College (Miss C. M. Boggis). Male Voice Choirs.—(eleven entries) 1st, Todmorden Male-Voice Choir (Mr. Harold Lees); 2nd, Gledholt Male Choir (Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes). Mixed-Voice Choirs.—(eight entries) 1st, Gledholt Vocal Union (Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes); 2nd, Thornton Vocal Union (Mr. J. Barker).

THE MIDLAND FESTIVAL, BIRMINGHAM. May 10 to 15.

No one expected this meeting to be at all brilliant, for the reason that travelling difficulties had put a stop to the prize-choir and orchestral classes. Thus we expected the gilt to be off the gingerbread, and as the test-pieces were all British none of us (not even myself, who refuse to falter in my belief in native musicianship, even after an experience like the present) looked to find a normal quantity of ginger in the mixture. But we certainly did not anticipate finding that, far from being twice-baked, which is the process with biscuit-making, the matter was scarcely half-baked. I refer to the public attitude towards the Festival, which was an attitude of indifference, no persons attending except such as were apparently connected with the competitors.

This last adverse condition of the present Festival is so serious that on no account must it recur. Only those classes should be run publicly that are likely to interest the public—honours sections in solo performance, &c. I am of opinion that so far as public performance is concerned this Midland Festival should resolve itself into a series of lengthy concerts at which final adjudications would be made on the work of the two or three best entrants in the various classes.

The first three days of the competitions were quite seriously disappointing. Only in the violin solo classes was any notable ability discovered. There were many good solo singers, as might be expected from among about two hundred candidates, and some of the children's dances were pretty. Organists and chamber music associations displayed courage, but during these three days the public revealed nothing but a unanimity of absence. Competition after competition followed on to empty halls, and as few rooms in the kingdom are more depressing than Birmingham Town Hall and the Large Theatre of the Midland Institute when occupied by no more than fifteen to twenty persons, it is not surprising that a sensitive critic should feel that something of deep-rooted character was amiss.

And something was indeed fatally amiss, namely, the music set for tests. Where this was interesting for the listener, it was either too difficult for the classes or too abstruse for the type of student represented by the entrants, and where it was not too difficult it was for the most part too uninteresting for one to listen to in repetition. The errors of the selection committee call for criticism, because they worked in so many ways against whatever public success might have been made by the Festival. I therefore mention briefly a few of these errors:

- (1.) The 17th century 'Voluntary in D minor' of John Blow is not the class of music to stimulate the technique or excite the imagination of Elementary Grade organ students.
- (2.) The ambitious 'Pæan' of Basil Harwood is a virtuoso piece. The only competitor who could play it on this occasion was a man who had used it previously for his F.R.C.O.
- (3.) 18th century violin music by English composers may be, and often is, music of Handelian genius, but it is not the music on which musicianship is to be built up. William Babel's Sonata in B flat was set in the Elementary Grade; Arne's in E minor, J. Humphries' in D minor, and John Collett's in A were set in other grades.
- (4.) Walker's Violin Sonata in A minor, Op. 8, is too uniformly Brahms-like in its romanticism to be a fair test for players under eighteen.

- (5.) Holbrooke's Fantasie Sonata for 'cello, Op. 19, is infinitely beyond the powers of students under eighteen.
- (6.) Howell's Pianoforte Quartet in A minor, Op. 21, demands the most gifted virtuoso in every part.
- (7.) Songs which for a generation have been the stock material of concert singers are unsuitable for tests, e.g., Wallace's 'Freebooter Songs.' Those which are comparative failures are also unsuitable, e.g., Elgar's 'The River,' and those in which the composer has falsified the poetry are harmful, as Cyril Scott's 'My Captain.'
- (8.) The charm and fancy of Hatton, Sullivan, Sterndale Bennett, &c., cannot withstand the rough and tumble of Competition Festival conditions. The inclusion of 'Woo thou thy snowflake' from 'Ivanhoe' carried error to the point of farcical comedy.

The very important classes in chamber music drew each one entry. We shall shortly have proof whether or no the Midlands have but one advanced 'cello student, because very soon the Midland Institute School of Music examinations take place. If at these a number of gifted 'cellists appear, then we shall know that the Holbrooke Sonata by its great difficulty killed the class for 'cello and pianoforte at the Festival.

The folk-dance classes were a success. They showed vitality, unbounded promise, and considerable attainment. For two reasons—the first that future Midland Festivals may be made attractive to children, the other that the spirit of music in general (creative, appreciative, and interpretative) may be stimulated—this section of the Festival scheme should be cultivated.

The elocution classes were well entered. Here the test-pieces varied from stock recitation items (the equivalent in the elocutionary world of 'The Enchantress' in the vocal) to Shakespeare sonnets. Few of the competitors intimated that they had any idea that reciting is a form of uttering poetry. Like the average competing choir, they regarded words as pins for the fixing of 'effects.' This is wrong, as the judge said, and it is time that local teachers of elocution understood that it is wrong.

The pianoforte and solo singing classes were splendidly filled. Elgar's 'The River' was sung sixty times, and Mackenzie's 'Ritornello' was played thirty times. Many singers and pianists performed their pieces like poetically-minded artists, for which, in the pianoforte classes, the romantic charm of many of the tests (Ireland's 'Island spell,' Fenny's 'In early Spring,' Austin's 'Tone Stanza,' No. 1, Scott's 'Water Wagtail') was responsible. Few, if any, of the pianists, however, did any good with the Elizabethan pieces. Twenty-three young musicians had to prepare Farnaby's 'Rosasolis,' and twenty-four Byrd's 'The carman's whistle,' all of whom should have been busy with the E minor from the '48,' Book I., or the B minor.

The various Midland choirs sang moderately well according to established competitive rules and customs.

The most striking individual successes were in the solo violin classes. Several candidates had talent, and one something more. This last was a girl of fifteen (Marjorie Astbury), whose playing of the slow movement of the Elgar Concerto was of the highest possible order of art. This child is the great 'discovery' of the fourth Midland Festival.

The week ended in beauty and brilliance, for which consummation are to be thanked, first, William Fenney's chorus for female voices, 'The flower fairies,' and, secondly, Wesley's 'Sing aloud with gladness.' This anthem was superbly sung by the Coventry Choral Society, Dr. H. P. Allen conducting. SYDNEY GREW.

We give below particulars of the tests, entries, and results to the chief competitions:

CHILDREN'S COUNTRY DANCES.

The tests were 'Haste to the wedding,' 'If all the world were paper,' and an own-choice piece. No fewer than twenty teams entered. The best of them was St. Thomas's School, No. 2 team (Miss Frances Edmunds), whose own-choice was 'Newcastle,' and the second Dartmouth Street Girls' School, 1st team (Miss G. E. Hayes), who gave 'Chelsea Reach.' The other teams were:—Church of England Girls' School Team, Moseley (Miss A. Lambourne); Charles Arthur Street Council School Team, Nethells (Miss E. Reece); Edgbaston Church College, B. Team (Miss Winifred Gregson); St. Thomas's School, No. 1 Team (Miss Frances Edmunds); 'The Blossoms' Team, Raddle Barn Lane Girls' School, Selly Oak (Miss H. M. Wates); Norton Street Girls' School Team (Miss G. M. Dumelow); 'The Elves' Team, Raddle Barn Lane Girls' School, Selly Oak (Miss G. Taylor); King Edward's High School for Girls, A. Team (Miss Ailsa M. Jaques); Fentham Road Council School Team, Erdington (Miss V. E. Kay); 'The Maybells' Team, Raddle Barn Lane Girls' School, Selly Oak (Miss H. M. Wates); Clifton Road Girls' School Team, Balsall Heath (Miss E. M. Willcocks); Dixon Road Girls' School Team (Miss N. B. Perry); Edgbaston Church College, A. Team (Miss Winifred Gregson); Grove Lane Council School Team, Handsworth (Miss L. Evans); 'The Brownies' Team, Raddle Barn Lane School, Selly Oak (Miss G. Taylor); Dartmouth Street Girls' School, 2nd Team (Miss G. E. Hayes); Kings Heath Girls' School, Country Dance Team (Miss M. Wheeler); Ryland Road School Junior Team, Erdington (Miss M. E. Cope).

The favourites among the teams' own selections were 'Hunsdon House,' 'Chelsea Reach,' and 'Newcastle.'

Competitions for Morris Dances and Country Dances by Working Girls' Clubs brought respectively two and six entries, the winners being Oozell Street (Miss Jaques) and St. Jude's, Hill Street (Miss Florence Ireland).

CHILDREN'S MORRIS DANCES.

Girls' Teams (ages nine to sixteen).

Tests: 'Blue-eyed stranger' and an individual choice (in every case 'Rigs o' Marlowe').

1st, St. Thomas's School, No. 2 Team, Birmingham (Miss Frances Edmunds); Raddle Barn Lane Girls' School, Selly Oak (Miss H. M. Wates); King Edward's High School for Girls, B Team, Birmingham (Miss Ailsa M. Jaques); St. Thomas's School, No. 1 Team, Birmingham (Miss Frances Edmunds); 2nd, King Edward's High School for Girls, C Team, Birmingham (Miss Ailsa M. Jaques); Raddle Barn Lane Girls' School, Selly Oak (Miss H. M. Wates).

There were also classes for country dancing by children under nine, boys' Morris dancing, and country and Morris dancing by adults. The Birmingham Branch of the English Folk-Dance Society sent two teams of country dancers, under Miss H. Tuttiatt, who were unopposed. Six teams of adults gave elementary country dances, the prize going to a Coventry team (Miss Elsie H. Evans).

CHILDREN'S CHOIRS.

The 'Mary Wakefield' Open Class.

No fewer than thirty-seven schools entered in this class, which was held in three divisions—girls' choirs, boys' choirs, and mixed choirs. The tests were Havergal Brian's 'Summer has come' and Stanford's 'Meg Merrilies,' both written for two parts.

Mixed Choirs.

1st, Wolverhampton Higher Grade School (Mr. J. West). Other competing choirs were:—Grove Lane School, Handsworth (Mr. John A. Toy); Floodgate Street School, Birmingham (Mr. G. H. Llewellyn); Birmingham Royal Institution for the Blind (Mr. Harry E. Platt); Asbury

Wesleyan Band of Hope Choir, Handsworth (Mr. Watkin Gabb); Stirchley Co-operative Junior Choir (Mr. W. E. Leech); City Road School, Birmingham (Mr. Walter Wakerley); Holy Trinity School Choir, West Bromwich (Miss Benbow); Shenley Fields School, Northfield (Mr. W. Bowers); Hebrew School Choir, Birmingham (Mr. E. Green); Spon Lane School, West Bromwich (Miss W. M. Caddick); Holy Trinity C. E. School, Handsworth (Mr. P. G. Haskell); Boulton Road School, Handsworth (Mr. H. R. Sheppard); Barford Road School, Birmingham (Mr. C. F. Stone).

Boys' Choirs.

1st, Lodge Estate, West Bromwich (Mr. James Phillips). Other competing choirs were Greet's Green, West Bromwich (Mr. G. H. Woodward), and Station Road School, Harborne (Mr. S. C. Espley).

Girls' Choirs.

1st, St. Paul's College Junior Choir, Edgbaston (Rev. R. Eaton); 2nd, Dixon Road Girls' School, Birmingham (Miss N. B. Perry). Other competing choirs were:—St. George's Girls' School, Birmingham (Miss F. E. Taylor); Jenkins Street Girls' School, Small Heath (Miss F. H. E. Pallett); Immanuel School, Birmingham (Miss Nye); St. Matthias's School, Birmingham (Miss E. Green); Lyng Girls' Elementary School, West Bromwich (Miss Edith Scott); Calthorpe High School Choir, Edgbaston (Madame Marguerite Gell); Bingley Street Girls' School, Wolverhampton (Miss E. Sanders); Moseley Girls' College Junior Choir (Mr. Horace Shepherd); Golden Hillock Road Girls' School, Sparkhill (Miss Florence Ellis); St. Paul's Girls' School, Birmingham (Mrs. I. Frost); Fox Street Girls' School, Birmingham (Miss M. Taylor); Alma Street Girls' School, Aston (Miss Mabel L. Barkham); St. Joseph's Convent High School, Coventry (Miss Alice McGowan); Lodge Estate Girls' School, West Bromwich (Miss E. M. Collett); Beeches Road Girls' School, West Bromwich (Miss Alice E. George); Greet's Green Girls' School, West Bromwich (Miss E. Hancox); Norton Street Girls' School, Birmingham (Miss G. Morris); Dorsett Road Girls' School, Darlaston (Miss Millner).

The competitions for children's choirs also included the following:

Secondary School Choirs, Midland Counties (Girls).—Tests: 'Ye spotted snakes' (Havergal Brian) and 'The fairie's song' (Bishop), both for four parts unaccompanied. Six entries. 1st, St. Paul's College, Edgbaston (Rev. Robert Eaton); 2nd, West Bromwich Girls' Secondary School (Mr. G. W. Shepherd).

Secondary School Choirs, Midland Counties (Boys).—Tests: 'Song of the scythes' (Nicholson) and 'In these delightful, pleasant groves' (Parcell). Three entries. 1st, St. Phillip's Grammar School, Edgbaston (Mr. O. H. Dillon).

Smaller Elementary Schools, Midland Counties.—One entry. St. Catherine's R.C. Girls' School, Birmingham (Miss T. Gilhooly).

Cantata Class, for public Elementary Schools in Birmingham.—The test was Nicholson's 'Childe Allen-a-Dale.' Ten choirs competed in three divisions—girls, boys, and mixed. The winners were respectively Station Road School, Aston (Miss R. S. Locker); College Road School, Moseley (Mr. D. M. Hopkins); and Boulton Road School, Handsworth (Mr. H. R. Sheppard).

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS Open.

Tests: 'Flower fairies' (Fenney) for six parts, unaccompanied, and 'Good morrow, fair ladies of the May' (Morley).

1st, Madame Marguerite Gell's Ladies' Choir (Madame Marguerite Gell); 'Les Chanteuses' Ladies' Choir, Kettering (Miss Elsie Riddle); Handsworth Ladies' Choir (Mr. William Bennett); Netherton Female-Voice Choir (Mr. Leonard Richards); Mr. W. E. Robinson's Ladies' Choir (Y.W.C.A.) (Mr. W. E. Robinson).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Open).

Tests: 'Father of heroes' (Lovatt) and 'The Reveille' (Elgar).

The Coventry Musical Club (Mr. John Chapman); Clydebank (Mr. James D. Fleming); 2nd, Blackheath (Mr. Ernest Parkes); 1st, Stourbridge Institute (Mr. G. Harry Woodall); Cradley Heath, Old Hill and District (Mr. A. Hickman); Leamington (Mr. Geoffrey Gibbs); Wolseley (Mr. W. E. Robinson); Armstrong-Siddeley Choir, Coventry.

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS (Open).

Tests: 'Sing aloud with gladness' (S. Wesley), 'The dance of the sword' (H. Priestley Smith), and 'Hark, hear ye not' (Bateson).

1st, Coventry Choral Society (Mr. John Potter); Willenhall Mixed-Voice Choir (Mr. Edward Dunton); Netherton Mixed-Voice Choir (Mr. Leonard Richards); Coventry Co-operative Choir (Mr. Alfred Petty).

OTHER CHORAL COMPETITIONS.

Church and Chapel Choirs (four entries).—1st, St. Anne's, Moseley (Mr. Herbert E. Knott).

Choirs of Work-people—Six Men's Choirs: 1st, Cheslyn Hay (Mr. E. Amphlett). Seven Girls' Choirs: 1st, Rookery Road, Handsworth, Evening School (Mr. W. Bennett). Four Mixed Choirs: 1st, Mr. W. Bennett's Choir, Handsworth.

Midland Counties Competitions.—Four Male-Voice Choirs: 1st, Wolverhampton Apollo (Mr. H. Underwood). Four Female-Voice Choirs: 1st, Madame Marguerite Gell's Choir. Two Mixed Choirs: 1st, Ten Acres and Stirchley Co-operative (Mr. W. E. Leech).

SOLO-SINGING.

Miss Gladys Morris (soprano), Miss Faulkner (mezzo-soprano), Miss Rhoda H. Rollason (contralto), Mr. C. Hill (tenor), Mr. F. Lester (baritone), Mr. E. G. Hughes (bass), Miss Lilian Rogers and Miss May Kendrick (sight-reading).

The adjudicators were:—Dr. H. P. Allen, Dr. W. H. Harris, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Mr. Arthur Catterall, Mr. Frederick Dawson, Madame Gleeson-White, Madame Edith Hands, Madame Agnes Larkcom, Mr. Daniel Price, Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, Mr. T. H. Smith, Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, and Mr. R. T. Rundle Milliken.

COLERAINE—May 11, 12, 13.

Mr. H. Orsmond Anderton adjudicated at this successful Festival, which brought 127 entries. Eighteen choral contests were held. In the school sections the chief prize-winners were the Hon. Irish Society's School, Mark Street National School (Portrush), Ballyveely, Cullycapple, Ballymoney Model School, and Killowen. The adult choral contests resulted as follows: Ladies' Choirs: Coleraine Y.W.C.A. Rural Church Choirs: Aghadowey Presbyterian. Town Church Choirs: Killowen Church, Coleraine. Mixed-Voice Choirs: Ballymena (tests: German's 'Sleeping' and Bantock's 'The Leprehaun'). Male-Voice Choirs: Coleraine (tests: Elgar's 'Feasting I watch' and Bantock's 'Boot and Saddle').

AYRSHIRE (KILMARNOCK).—Revived on April 23 and 24, after six years of waiting, this Festival attracted fair entries and good audiences. There were sixteen choral classes. Stewarton Public School (Mr. T. G. Philip) and Ayr Academy (Mr. Frederick Ely) won the chief prizes in the school singing contests. Kilmarnock Equitable Co-operative Society (Mr. R. C. McCrone) and—in the 'novice' class—Beith Choral Society (Mr. Alex Emslie) did some excellent work. The principal choral prizes were won by Ayr Burgh Choir (Mr. Ely) and Clydebank Male-Voice Choir (Mr. J. D. Fleming). The former was the only competitor in the open class. The tests were Marson's 'The nymphs and shepherds danced' and Elgar's 'Go, song of mine.' Dr. Brewer adjudicated.

GLASGOW.

A special interest attaches to the Glasgow Festival (April 29 to May 9) as celebrating the tenth anniversary of the institution of the Festival movement in the city. In Mr. H. S. Robertson's very apt 'Foreword' in the souvenir programme, a short history of the Festival is given, and we may be allowed to quote the tribute paid to the late Dr. W. G. McNaught:

Dr. McNaught was the first adjudicator, and he had his work cut out for him. At the time we thought he overstressed the academic side. Now we see that he was right. The thing had to be put on the rails before it could be made to go.

It was at the 1918 Festival that the Co-operative Junior Choirs astounded Dr. McNaught by their subtlety and finesse in Colin Taylor's difficult and elusive, 'If there were dreams to sell,' probably the finest achievement by junior singers anywhere. This was Dr. McNaught's last Glasgow Festival—indeed, one of his last Festivals—he died a few months later, to the deep regret of all music-lovers. He took a paternal pride in the Glasgow Festival, and looked to it to lead the whole country.

It may be mentioned that it was largely the result of long talks with Dr. McNaught, and his gift of Festival literature, that led directly to the convening of the first meeting at which it was decided to institute the Festival movement at Glasgow.

Regarding this year's Festival it may be recorded that the high standard of past years was fully maintained. This was chiefly notable in the Junior Choir Classes. For the first time elocution was included in the scheme, and the name of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson as adjudicator possibly accounts for the large number of entries. There were some remarkably good performances, but the adjudicator very properly pointed out that the true purpose of this side of the Festival was more to secure thoroughly good reading than a more or less artificial success through dramatic gesture—that the spirit of the piece should be revealed without the adventitious aids of dress or exaggerated action.

In the children's Action-song Classes Mr. Ernest Newman urged teachers to exercise the utmost care in the selection of music and to eschew all songs savouring of the music-hall or revue. The new Solo Class for boy vocalists brought forward only seven entries, and in view of the importance of devoting much-needed attention to the training of boys' voices (we have not the tradition of the Cathedral choir in Scotland) larger entries will no doubt be forthcoming at future Festivals. In adjudicating this class Prof. Walford Davies deplored the want of naturalness in some of the renderings, and warned the boys against adopting the grimaces and 'platform manner' of many adult singers. His strong criticism will surely be remembered. The singing of the junior choirs as already indicated again astonished both adjudicators and audiences, although the former took objection to some of the test-pieces as not being perfectly suitable for choristers under seventeen years of age. For some of the senior choirs the test-pieces so abounded in chromaticism as to make Prof. Davies 'long for a common chord.' Many among the audience had similar longings, and doubtless next year's selection committee will bear this in mind. It is possible to find unexceptionable tests in the wide range of choral music. As a specimen of music thankless alike to choirs, audiences, and adjudicators, the selection for the Premier Female-Voice Choir Class may be instanced. The instrumental classes have not yet come into their own, but the entries give hope for the future. The Brass Quartet Class, included for the first time this year, produced five entries, and the remarkably fine performance of G. W. Martin's 'Haste ye, soft gales,' by the Clydesdale Trombone Quartet, earned warm praise from Mr. Granville Bantock, who adjudicated in this class. The test-pieces in the Folk-song Classes were drawn chiefly from Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's Hebridean collection, and Mr. Newman described the renderings as being unsurpassable by any other Festival. The closing session of the Festival was devoted to the Premier Choral Classes, and of these the 'thrills' were given by the William Morris Female-Voice Choir, the Glasgow Orpheus Male-Voice Choir, and the Glasgow Orpheus Choir. The last-mentioned was the only entry to the Premier Challenge Class for mixed-voice choirs, and their performance was largely an exhibition. Their magnificent singing of the 'Hallelujah Chorus' from 'Messiah' will long be remembered. One can imagine that a perfect performance of, say, 'The Dream of Gerontius' is possible with the combined forces of the Orpheus Choir and the Scottish Orchestra. The Festival closed with the singing of three Scottish songs by the massed choirs and the entire audience which packed every inch of space in St. Andrew's Hall, a performance so thrilling as to justify Mr. Ernest Newman's remark that it revealed the soul of a nation. The working of this great music-making was as smooth as that of a well-oiled machine—thanks to the organizing skill of the committee charged with this all important duty.

We append a list of the prize-winners in the chief choral classes:

SCHOOL CHOIRS.

Open Challenge Class.—Eight entries. 1st, Ayr Academy (Mr. Frederic Ely); 2nd, Queen's Park Higher Grade School (Mr. T. H. Allwood).

Higher Grade Class.—One entry. Dumbarton Academy (Mr. Albert Adams).

Senior Class.—Thirteen entries. 1st, Onslow Drive Public School (Miss Marie S. Irving); 2nd, John Street Higher Grade, No. 1 (Mr. Andrew Brown).

Junior Class.—Twenty entries. 1st, Knoxland School, Dumbarton (Mr. John Lithgow); 2nd, Lairdsland School, Kirkintilloch (Miss Jessie C. Fulton).

Infant Class.—Three entries. 1st, Adelphi Terrace Public School (Miss Hetty Martin); 2nd, Oatlands Public School (Miss J. Scrymgeour).

'Special School' Class.—One entry. Percy Street (Miss L. Monteagle).

CHILDREN'S ACTION-SONGS.

Senior Class.—Eight entries. 1st, Bridgeton Day Industrial School (Miss Margaret McGinty); 2nd, Kinning Park Co-operative Junior Choir (Miss Helen A. Wilson).

Junior Class.—Two entries. 1st, Bridgeton Day Industrial School (Miss Margaret McGinty).

Singing Games.—Eleven entries. 1st, Bridgeton (Miss McGinty); 2nd, (equal), Yoker Public School, No. 1 (Miss Emily E. Broad) and Adelphi Terrace Public School (Miss Hetty Martin).

JUNIOR CHOIRS.

Premier Challenge Class.—Four entries. 1st, St. George Co-operative (Mr. William Wilson); 2nd, Vale of Leven Co-operative (Mr. William Nisbet).

Open Challenge Class.—Two entries. 1st, Dumbarton Equitable Co-operative (Mr. Albert Adams).

Scottish Challenge Class.—Six entries. 1st, William Morris Junior Choir (Miss May E. Carruthers); 2nd, Eastern Co-operative (Mr. William Millar).

Church Class.—Eleven entries. 1st (equal), Tron U.F. (Mr. John Brown) and Trinity U.F. Sabbath School (Mr. A. Mitchell).

Boys' Class.—One entry. Dumbarton Academy (Mr. A. Adams).

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Premier Challenge Class.—Four entries. 1st, William Morris Choir (Mr. W. Robertson); 2nd, Vale of Leven Co-operative (Mr. W. Nisbet).

Open Challenge Class.—Six entries. 1st, Miss Bond Stevens's Choir; 2nd, Dumbarton Equitable Co-operative (Mr. A. Adams).

Scottish Challenge Class.—Four entries. 1st, Paisley Lyric Choir (Mr. C. Rennie); 2nd, Henderson U.F., Kilmarnock (Mr. R. C. McCrone).

Class C.—Nine entries. 1st, Eastern Co-operative (Mr. W. Millar); 2nd, Miss Annie Jeffrey's Choir.

Industrial Challenge Class.—Four entries. 1st, The Wier Choir (Mr. W. Nisbet); 2nd, Singer Choir (Mr. W. Robertson).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Open Challenge Class.—Seven entries. 1st, Glasgow Orpheus Choir (Mr. Hugh S. Robertson); 2nd, Ossian Male Choir (Mr. A. D. Archibald).

Scottish Challenge Class.—Three entries. 1st, Denny Brothers Male-Voice Choir, Dumbarton (Mr. David Curtis); 2nd, G. & S.W. Railway (Mr. James Simpson, Jun.).

Class C.—Six entries. 1st, Greenock Male Choir (Mr. A. J. Gourlay); 2nd, Airdrie and District Philharmonic (Mr. John Horne).

Industrial Challenge Class.—One entry. Albion Works (Mr. C. Rennie).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Premier Challenge Class.—One entry. Glasgow Orpheus (Mr. Hugh S. Robertson).

Open Challenge Class.—Six entries. 1st, William Morris Choir (Mr. W. Robertson); 2nd, Mr. Thorpe Davie's Choir.

Scottish Challenge Class.—Three entries. 1st, Dumbarton Choral Union (Mr. A. Adams); 2nd, Clydebank Union U.F. (Mr. J. D. Fleming).

Class C.—Eight entries. 1st, High Street U.F., Dumbarton (Mr. Robert A. Reid); 2nd, Fairfield Choir (Mr. James Moncrieff).

Industrial Challenge Class.—Two entries. 1st, The Weir Choir (Mr. W. Nisbet).

CHURCH CHOIRS.

Open Challenge Class.—Two entries. 1st, Clydebank Union U.F. (Mr. J. D. Fleming).

Scottish Challenge Class.—Two entries. 1st, High Street U.F., Dumbarton (Mr. Robert A. Reid).

Class C.—Four entries. 1st, Larkhall Parish Church (Miss Florence Griffiths); 2nd, Livingstone Memorial U.F., Blantyre (Mr. Charles C. Wilson).

NORTH NOTTS.

These competitions were revived at Retford on April 21 and 22, and on May 8, the first two days being allotted to vocal classes for children, village choirs, and other choral societies, and the third day to children's singing games, country- and sword-dancing. The number of classes was reduced, but the entries were numerous and the attendances of the public gratifying.

On the children's day twenty-three schools competed, the chief prizes being won by Retford County High School, Bawtry (Miss F. Stride), West Retford (Miss Brown), and Wakingham (Miss M. E. Dodds). Seven village choirs came forward, the best being Ranskill, Bawtry, and Tuxford in three classes. The open choral competitions produced fifteen entries. Retford Choral Union (Mr. T. Hercy Denman) were the winners out of five female-voice choirs, and were beaten by Doncaster Co-operative Choir in the class for choral societies. Among choirs from large villages, Ranskill (Mr. A. Morrison) was the winner. A class for amateur conductors brought seven entrants. In the choral classes Mr. Geoffrey Shaw adjudicated. Folk-dance competitions were judged by Mrs. Wyllie Kettlewell. Workop Lincoln Street Council School, Retford Council School Girls, Retford National School Girls, Bawtry Girl Guides, and Mr. Denman's Retford team carried off the prizes. An object-lesson in sword-dancing was given by the well-known dancers from Handsworth.

STRATFORD (EAST LONDON).—(April 24-May 1.)

This elaborate and highly-organized Festival, now in its thirty-eighth year, was again carried out successfully. The number of entries made, as usual, an extraordinary total. The choral classes were well supported, with a few exceptions, male-voice choirs in particular being either scarce in the neighbourhood or chary of publicity. School choirs and Working Girls' Clubs came forward in plenty. In our January number we gave a short description of the syllabus and a list of the adjudicators. Below are brief particulars of the principal competitions and their results. Special mention is due to the conspicuous successes of Mansfield House Choral Society, trained by Mr. C. Ernest Coward, a son of the well-known Sheffield choir-trainer.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS (GIRLS).

Challenge Shield Class.

: 'The Dance' (Elgar), a three-part piece chosen by the choir, and a sight-test.

- South Park, Ilford (Mr. J. R. Dealey).
Harrow Green, Leytonstone (Miss Nellie Russell).
Kensington Avenue, East Ham (Miss I. M. Genower).
3rd. Balaam Street, Plaistow (Miss A. M. Bland).
Vicarage Lane, East Ham (Miss R. M. Bale).
1st.* Silvertown School (Miss B. Gawn).
Also sang 'Beauteous Morn' (Edward German).
Cave Road, East Ham (Miss E. Hadgraft).
1st.* Newport Road, Leyton (Miss T. G. Brown).
Also sang 'Rest thee on 'is mossy pillow' (Henry Smart).
Hilda Road, Canning Town (Miss J. Fowler).

* Equal 1st.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS (BOYS).

Tests: 'O happy fair' (Shield), a three-part piece chosen by the choir, and a sight-test.

- Park School, Stratford (Mr. C. Beal).
Crown Road, South Tottenham (Mr. Horace Nudds).
1st. Central Park Road, East Ham (Mr. A. E. Cummins).
Also sang 'Lift thine eyes' (Mendelssohn).
2nd. Beckton Road, Canning Town (Mr. W. H. Dodd).
Also sang 'Robin Adair' (Percy E. Fletcher).
Grange Road, Plaistow (Mr. J. Moon).

GIRLS' CLUBS.

Tests: 'Memory' (Hugh S. Robertson), and a two-part piece chosen by the choir.

- 1st. Kensington Avenue Junior 'Old Girls' Association, East Ham (Miss I. M. Genower).
Also sang 'Twelve by the clock' (C. H. Lloyd).
Water Lane Evening School (Miss E. M. Hoy).
Newport Road Junior Commercial Institute Choir (Mr. John Fairfax).
2nd. Kirkdale Evening School, Leytonstone (Mr. G. F. Haslock).
Also sang 'The rainbow' (C. Vincent).
Holy Trinity, Canning Town, G.F.S. Club Choir (Mrs. Rushby Smith).

OTHER JUNIOR CLASSES.

Girls' Choirs (new competition for the Mary Wakefield Challenge Medallion, given by the Association of Musical Competition Festivals). Tests: 'The babes in the wood' (Percy Buck) and 'Daffodils and violets' (R. Bernard Elliott). Two entries. 1st, St. Angela's High School, Forest Gate (Mrs. Harrison).

Boys' Choirs. Tests: 'A March landscape' (Stanford) and a piece chosen by the choir. Three entries. 1st, Holy Trinity, Canning Town (Mrs. Rushby Smith).

Choirs from Sunday Schools, &c. One entry. Holy Trinity, Canning Town (Mrs. Rushby Smith).

Girls' Choirs (Challenge Shield Class). Tests: 'The flowers are coming' (G. Bernard Gilbert) and 'The cloud' (Percy E. Fletcher). Two entries. 1st, East Ham Secondary School (Mr. G. Day Winter).

CHORAL SOCIETIES (East London and Essex).

Tests: 'Here a pretty baby lies' (Percy Gordon).

'Full fathom five' (Charles Wood).

- 1st. Mansfield House Choral Society (Mr. C. Ernest Coward).

Ilford Labour Party Orchestral and Choral Society (Mr. Frederick Taylor).

Choir of the Popular Oratorio Concerts (Mr. G. Day Winter).

CHORAL SOCIETIES (Open Class).

Tests: 'The witch' (Stanford) and 'O snatch me swift' (Callcott).

- 1st. Mansfield House Choral Society (Mr. C. E. Coward).
Choir of the Popular Oratorio Concerts (Mr. G. Day Winter).

OTHER SENIOR CHORAL CLASSES.

Ladies' Choirs (previous first and second prize-winners). Tests: 'The desire' (Colin Taylor) and 'Whither' (Hamish MacCunn). One entry. Holy Trinity G.F.S., Canning Town (Mrs. Rushby Smith).

Ladies' Choirs (New Open Class). Tests: 'Slumber song' (Rebikoff) and 'The Galway piper' (Percy E. Fletcher). Four entries. 1st, Mansfield House Choral Society (Mr. C. E. Coward).

Men's Choirs (Open Class). Tests: 'Night' (Julius Harrison) and 'After many a dusty mile' (Elgar). One entry. Glow-worms Glee Party, Alexandra Park (Mr. F. Bridge).

Church Choirs (mixed-voices). Tests: 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' (S. S. Wesley) and 'City of God' to tune 'Richmond' (Haweis-Webbe). Two entries. 1st, Plashet Park Congregational (Mr. W. G. Davie).

Small Choral Societies. Tests: 'The willow song' (H. Ernest Nichol) and 'We have fed our sea' (Granville Bantock). One entry. Grays Glee Party (Mr. Frank Wall).

ORCHESTRAL CLASSES.

School Bands (Open Class). Test: Minuet from the 'Jupiter' Symphony (Mozart). Three entries. 1st, Metropolitan Academy of Music, Forest Gate Branch (Madame May Masters).

School Bands (New Class). Test: Selection of old Country Dance-tunes (Percy E. Fletcher). Two entries. 1st, Uphall School, Ilford (Mr. Gerald G. Pratt).

String Orchestras (Open Class). Test: Entr'acte from 'Rosamunde' (Schubert). Two entries. 1st, Metropolitan Academy of Music Intermediate Orchestra (Madame May Masters).

WIRRAL AND EDDISBURY.—April 29 to May 1.

This Festival was formed in 1911, and having been partially suspended during the war was revived, with unequivocal success, this year. There were good attendances, over eight hundred children and adults taking part. The adjudicator was Dr. R. R. Terry. The first day was devoted to mixed and male-voice quartets, both events being won by parties from Christleton. On the children's day the most important competitions were won by Chester Road Council School (Miss E. Lithgoe), Birkenhead Institute (Mr. G. D. Kermod), and John Street Council School, Ellesmere Port (Mr. T. R. Bradley). There were eight competitions for adult choirs. That open to all mixed choirs in the area was won by New Ferry (Rev. H. Lowry). Ellesmere Port sent the best Female-Voice Choir, with Mr. J. Weedall as conductor. Saughall Male-Voice Choir (Mr. E. Robinson) was the best in its class, as was Christ Church G.F.S., Chester (Miss B. M. Bennett). Saughall was best in sight-singing.

ESKDALE.—May 11.

Revived after a lapse of six years this Festival, styled a 'tournament of song,' brought satisfactory entries and good results. The chief prizes in the junior sections went to Hackness (novice schools), Guisborough, Glaisdale (action-songs), Pickering Wesleyan, Cliff Street Girls (junior country dance), and Aislaby No. 1 team (sword-dance). The successful adult choirs included Ruswarp and Sneaton Choral Society, Goathland, Fylingdales and Sleights Choral Society. The adjudicators were Dr. Somervell and Mr. T. J. Hoggett.

BELFAST.—April 21 to 24.

Owing to an increased number of entries it was found necessary to hold this year's Festival in the Large Hall, the Minor Hall, and the Band Room. Dr. R. R. Terry, Mr. Dan Price, and Mr. R. J. Forbes adjudicated. Choral entries numbered seventy, and among them the commercial class was particularly flourishing. The poorest choral entries came from the National Schools, a disappointing feature but not one to be wondered at owing to the crowded state of the school curriculum and the prevalence of infantile diseases. The vocal solo entries were satisfactory, but showed a slight falling-off in numbers probably owing to the introduction of a compulsory sight-test. The standard was high, however, and Mr. Price said there were many lovely voices and plenty of temperament. Mr. Forbes found that want of technique was the most noticeable feature in the pianoforte playing of seventy pianists. String playing and chamber-music playing showed an increased support and an improved standard. Dr. Terry was also pleased with the progress of choirs since last year, especially in the male-voice section. Queen's Island (1st) and the Workman & Clark Choir (2nd) sang exceptionally well. In the class for small mixed choirs there were four entries and a good competition, the winners being St. Anne's Glee Choir (Rev. C. R. C. Olden) with ninety-nine marks.

DUBLIN FEIS CEOL.

The twenty-fourth annual Feis Ceoil was held from May 3 to 8, and though the number of competitors showed a falling off since last year, yet (writes our correspondent) the standard was well maintained. The pianoforte seems to hold its own in popularity, as the entries in three classes were 19, 52, and 40. Soprano soloists also seem to prevail, as no less than 46 entered the lists, and 29 mezzos. The choral entries were few, and there was but one appearance for string orchestra and for small orchestra. It is sad to record a notable falling off in the number of native players on the Uilleann pipes, as only three competed. Native traditional fiddlers made a better show, though the honours fell to the ladies. The concluding Feis concerts on May 8—two performances—can only be described as a symposium of enthusiasm. Crowded audiences (with fond relations and admirers) thronged the Antient Concert Rooms and vigorously applauded the prize-winners. The adjudicators were Dr. Terry, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Catterall.

MANCHESTER.

At the annual Music Festival for Girls' Secondary Schools, held in Whitworth Hall on May 8, six choirs from as many Girls' High Schools competed for the Miss Gregg Challenge Bowl. Each choir sang a two-part song, 'The echoing green,' by John Ireland, a unison song of own-choice, and a unison sight-test from the Staff. The first prize was won by Stockport (Miss E. A. Ingham), who sang Dunhill's 'Sea horses'; the second prize went to Harpurhey (Miss Pilling), who sang Sterndale Bennett's 'May dew.' The other competing choirs were: Fairfield (Miss Clague); Macclesfield (Mr. C. Seal); Whalley Range (Miss E. F. Jepson); and Sale (Miss L. Gillam). Dr. Thomas Keighley adjudicated.

NEWCASTLE.—June 19—26.

A favourable report is to hand of the prospects of this 'North of England Musical Tournament.' The number of entries under various heads are as follows:—School classes, 45; pianoforte, 219; string and chamber music, 92; organ, 7; vocal solo, 201; choirs, 19; folk-dancing, 90; elocution and reading, 121; brass bands, 15; total 809. Last year's total was 569. A report of the competition will be given in our issue for August.

Twenty competitions are reported in the present issue. Over a dozen others, of which no information has reached us, took place during the closing week of April and the early weeks of May. We are forced to hold over our reports of festivals at Portsmouth, Chatham, and the People's Palace (E. London).

OTHER COMPETITIONS.

PETERSFIELD MUSICAL FESTIVAL—April 20-22. The chief aim of this Festival is combined singing, the element of competition being introduced for purposes of grading. A musical propaganda is also carried on largely through the work of Mr. Percy Whitehead and Mr. Steuart Wilson, in the form of lectures on conducting, sight-singing, and kindred subjects. The works sung by the combined choir of two hundred voices on this occasion (with accompaniment by the Petersfield String Orchestra) were Purcell's 'Soul of the World' and Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin.' The programmes also included concertos of Bach and Mozart. The conductors were Mr. Adrian C. Boulton, Mr. G. Holst, and Mr. Whitehead.

DOVE AND CHURNET VALLEYS.—Uttoxeter was chosen as this year's meeting place, the Festival having visited Denstone, Ashbourne, and Cheadle in previous years. The entries exceeded anticipation, and Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, the adjudicator, heard some good singing. The following were the chief results:—Elementary Schools, Ashbourne; Church and Chapel Choirs, Mayfield (also in sight-singing); Female-Voice Choirs, 1st, Rocester; 2nd, Mayfield; Village Choral Societies, Clifton; Male-Voice Choirs, Ashbourne Cecilia; Mixed-Voice Choirs from places of over a thousand inhabitants, 1st, Ashbourne Cecilia (also in sight-singing); 2nd, Mayfield.

DORSET CHORAL ASSOCIATION.—On May 6 this organization resumed activity at Wimborne. Nine choirs entered, the Minster Choir being particularly good in Bach's 'Come and thank Him.' The Earl of Shaftesbury presided at the evening session and himself contributed three songs to the programme. The adjudicator was Mr. T. J. Crawford, who in addition to judging gave addresses on Choral Technique in the afternoon and evening. It is hoped by next year to get the local competitions taken up in all parts of the county, with the finals held at Weymouth.

FIFE.—This Festival of over twenty classes was held at Kirkcaldy on April 24. Prof. Granville Bantock and Mr. Cullen adjudicating. The chief prizes for junior choirs were won by Balcurnie School Senior Choir (Mr. John Ross) and Pathhead and Sinclair Town Co-operative Choir (Mr. W. L. Stephenson). In the adult sections Levens Musical Association (Mr. Harrison Cooper), and St. Brycedale (Mr. Harrison Cooper) were the winners. In other classes Mr. Harrison Cooper's Female-Voice Choir and Rosyth Royal Dockyard Male Choir (Mr. David Davies) gained the first prizes.

SOUTH SOMERSET.—A notable part was played in this Festival (held on May 11 and 12) by the Yeovil Choral Society, which, under the direction of Mr. B. B. Swaffield, won the first prizes in the open mixed-voice competition, the madrigal class, and the female-voice and male-voice sections. The Norton-sub-Hamdon Choir (Miss Trask) was also prominent, being unbeaten in three competitions. The most successful children's choirs were those of Ilminster Girls' Grammar School and North Perrott.

SLIGO FEIS CEOL.—This annual three-day Festival, held on April 7, 8, and 9, proved the most successful on record. The syllabus provided for solo work of many and various kinds, and only in a minor degree for choral singing. The chief choral successes were won by Sligo Ladies' Choir (Mr. Mark Franklin), Strandhill National School Choir (Miss Nan Wynne), and Carrowmore Choir (Mr. M. J. Harte).

CO-OPERATIVE CHORAL ASSOCIATION (MIDLAND SECTION).—The junior Festival was held at Mansfield recently, Mr. Walter J. Bunney adjudicating. Long Eaton (Mr. Woolley) was first in the choral section, Derby (Mr. T. H. Bennett) second, and Peterborough (Mr. W. J. Roberts) third. There were also classes for solo and duet singing.

O Lord, my trust

COMPOSED BY

KING HALL.

78. Above all praise Mendelssohn 11d.
 58. Almighty and everlasting Smith 11d.
 145. Ditto A. M. Richardson 11d.
 122. Almighty God, Who hast Ford 11d.
 20. And I saw another Angel Stanford 2d.
 24. Arise, O Jerusalem Oliver King 11d.
 36. Arise, O Lord ... G. F. Cobb 11d.
 126. Ditto Hervey 11d.
 168. Arise, ye people ... W. Hayes 11d.
 60. Ave Maria ... Arcadelt 11d.
 48. Ave Verum ... J. White 11d.
 90. Awake up, my glory ... F. Iliffe 11d.
 177. Be not Thou far from me Hird 11d.
 193. Behold, God is my ... Stainer 11d.
 165. Behold, O God C. Macpherson 11d.
 117. Ditto G. C. Martin 2d.
 195. Behold the Lord ... Thorne 11d.
 30. Beloved, if God so loved Barnby 11d.
 35. Beloved, let us love G. F. Cobb 11d.
 70. Beloved, now are we E. H. Thorne 11d.
 260. Beside Thy cradle ... J. S. Bach 11d.
 104. Blessed are they S. S. Wesley 11d.
 185. Blessed be the Lord Ouseley 11d.
 125. Blessed be Thou, O Lord Lloyd 11d.
 143. Blessed is He ... A. H. Brewer 11d.
 9. Ditto B. Luard-Selby 11d.
 199. Ditto Verrinder 11d.
 26. Blessed is the man ... Oliver King 11d.
 194. Ditto J. Stainer 11d.
 207. Blessed Lord ... C. Lee Williams 11d.
 228. Bow down Thine ear A. H. Brewer 11d.
 98. Bread of the world John E. West 2d.
 167. Break forth ... J. S. Bach 11d.
 17. Christ is not entered E. Faning 11d.
 59. Come, let us worship Palestrina 11d.
 102. Come unto Me ... H. Hiles 2d.
 40. Ditto M. Kingstons 11d.
 173. Come, ye blessed ... Barnby 11d.
 108. Deliver me, O Lord J. Stainer 11d.
 164. Deliver us, O Lord Batten 11d.
 127. Except the Lord F. H. Cowen 11d.
 135. Father of all ... Tye 11d.
 239. Father of Heaven ... Williams 11d.
 25. For it became Him Oliver King 11d.
 81. For our offences Mendelssohn 11d.
 179. Forth from the dark ... Hook 11d.
 91. Fret not thyself ... F. Iliffe 11d.
 60. Give ear unto my prayer Arcadelt 11d.
 114. Give rest, O Christ ... Arranged 11d.
 38. God so loved the world Kingston 11d.
 1. God, Who is rich in mercy Garrett 11d.
 227. Good King Wenceslas (arr.) Ross 2d.
 223. Grant, O Lord ... J. Booth 11d.
 11. Grant, we beseech Thee J. Booth 11d.
 205. Ditto C. Lee Williams 11d.
 141. Hark, hark my soul Oliver King 11d.
 147. Hasten Thee, O God J. Hopkins 11d.
 47. Have mercy upon me J. White 11d.
 210. He that soweth ... B. B. Calkin 11d.
 130. Hide me under the shadow West 11d.
 123. Hide not Thou Thy face Farrant 11d.
 213. Ho! ye that thirst ... C. Tye 11d.
 107. Holy, Holy, Holy ... F. Cellier 11d.
 124. How dreadful is this place Monk 11d.
 163. How still and peaceful ... C. Tye 11d.
 111. I am not worthy C. Lee Williams 3d.
 170. I am Thine, O save me Wesley 11d.
 82. I heard a Voice G. M. Garrett 11d.
 86. Ditto ... A. Gray 11d.
 157. Ditto C. V. Stanford 11d.
 92. I look for the Lord ... F. Iliffe 11d.
 54. I will arise ... Ch. Wood 11d.
 42. I will go forth ... H. Blair 11d.
 189. I will go to the altar ... Reay 11d.
 131. I will go unto the altar H. Gadsby 2d.
 230. I will lay me down in B. Smith 11d.
 156. Ditto ... Williams 11d.
 8. I will magnify Thee Luard-Selby 11d.
 37. I will wash my hands A. D. Culley 11d.
 85. If any man sin Thos. Adams 11d.
 103. If any man sin ... H. Hiles 11d.
 21. If thou shalt confess C. V. Stanford 2d.
 215. In life's gay morn ... C. Tye 11d.
 18. In this was manifested C. H. Lloyd 3d.
 233. Ditto ... F. E. Gladstone 2d.
 155. Is it nothing to you ... Ouseley 11d.
 206. It is high time ... Williams 11d.
 22. It is of the Lord's mercies Thorne 11d.
 56. Jesu, Saviour, I am Thine Steane 11d.
 46. Jesu, Who from Thy F. C. Wood 3d.
 64. Jesu, Word of God J. White 11d.
 48. Jesus said unto the people Stainer 11d.
 186. Judge me, O God ... Ouseley 11d.
 208. Judge nothing before Williams 11d.
 61. Lead me, Lord ... S. S. Wesley 11d.
 116. Let my prayer be set forth Martin 11d.
 166. Ditto C. Macpherson 11d.
 118. Let my prayer come up Purcell 11d.
 80. Let our hearts be Mendelssohn 11d.
 139. Let the wicked forsake his Goss 11d.
 32. Let the words of my mouth Blair 11d.
 117. Let Thy hand be ... G. C. Martin 2d.
 65. Let us come boldly C. H. Lloyd 11d.
 209. Let your moderation Williams 11d.
 137. Lift up the everlasting gates Tye 11d.
 224. Lighten our darkness J. Booth 11d.
 219. Like as the hart ... Novello 11d.
 161. Lo! from the hills ... Williams 11d.
 120. Lo, the day of rest Elliot Button 11d.
 19. Lo, the Winter is past H. Gadsby 3d.
 142. Lord God Almighty Verdonek 11d.
 93. Lord, I call upon Thee F. Iliffe 11d.
 100. Lord, in thankful love Schubert 11d.
 79. Lord, on our offences Mendelssohn 11d.
 128. Lord, we beseech Thee Batten 11d.
 149. Lord, we pray Thee Chambers 11d.
 154. Love not the world Ouseley 11d.
 102. Master, what shall I do Bowes 11d.
 60. Mercy and truth A. Sullivan 2d.
 176. Mine eyes are ever Hamilton 11d.
 212. Mock not God's Name C. Tye 11d.
 94. My song shall be of mercy F. Iliffe 11d.
 232. Now thank we all our God Bach 11d.
 73. O Day-spring ... J. Stainer 11d.
 148. O do well unto Thy servant West 11d.
 75. O Emmanuel ... J. Stainer 11d.
 146. O God, forasmuch as Richardson 11d.
 136. O God of Bethel ... Tye 11d.
 162. O God, our help C. Lee Williams 11d.
 23. O God, Whose nature ... A. Gray 11d.
 214. O happy is the man ... C. Tye 11d.
 119. O hearken Thou ... A. Sullivan 11d.
 72. O Key of David ... J. Stainer 11d.
 74. O King and Desire ... J. Stainer 11d.
 70. O Lord and Ruler ... J. Stainer 11d.
 53. O Lord, correct me J. Coward 11d.
 67. O Lord, give ear W. H. Cummings 2d.
 133. O Lord, give Thy Holy Tallis 11d.
 113. O Lord, grant the King Child 2d.
 138. O Lord, increase my faith Gibbons 11d.
 159. C. Lord, my God C. Lee Williams 2d.
 13. O Lord, my trust ... King Hall 11d.
 15. O Lord, rebuke me not H. Lahee 11d.
 132. O Lord, we beseech Thee Shaw 2d.
 57. O Lord, Who hast Igoulden 11d.
 188. O Lord, who sleepest Thou Reay 11d.
 33. O most merciful ... J. W. Elliott 11d.
 225. Ditto ... E. Bullock 11d.
 89. O Perfect Love H. Elliot Button 11d.
 112. Ditto ... C. L. Naylor 2d.
 43. O praise God ... H. Blair 11d.
 174. O praise the Lord, all ye Barnby 11d.
 203. O praise the Lord F. Champneys 11d.
 71. O Root of Jesse ... J. Stainer 11d.
 104. O Saving Victim ... J. Stainer 2d.
 218. Ditto A. W. Wilson 11d.
 171. O send out Thy light ... Armes 11d.
 84. Ditto ... J. B. Calkin 2d.
 231. O thou Sword of the M. B. Foster 11d.
 69. O Wisdom ... J. Stainer 11d.
 95. O worship the Lord ... F. Iliffe 11d.
 196. Ditto E. H. Thorne 11d.
 178. O ye priests of the Lord Hird 11d.
 39. O ye that love the Lord Elliott 11d.
 44. Ditto S. Coleridge-Taylor 11d.
 217. Our Father which art ... Phillips 11d.
 7. Our soul on God G. M. Garrett 11d.
 45. Ponder my words, O Lord Culley 11d.
 3. Praised be the Lord daily Calkin 11d.
 105. Prevent us, O Lord A. H. Brewer 11d.
 174. Rejoice greatly ... Woodward 11d.
 145. Rejoice in the Lord ... Calkin 11d.
 187. Ditto ... Reay 11d.
 76. Rejoice, O ye people Mendelssohn 11d.
 144. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem King 11d.
 200. Remember, Lord ... Verrinder 11d.
 153. Reave your heart ... Ouseley 11d.
 226. Save us, O Lord ... Hugh Blair 11d.
 129. Seek the Lord H. Elliot Button 11d.
 201. Seek ye the Lord ... Verrinder 11d.
 49. Shew me Thy ways J. V. Roberts 3d.
 115. Sing to the Lord ... Tye 11d.
 220. Spirit of mercy H. A. Chambers 11d.
 55. Teach me Thy way Gladstone 11d.
 190. The Angel of the Lord ... A. Gray 11d.
 4. The Gentiles shall come Reay 11d.
 111. The great day of the Lord Martin 11d.
 2. The Harvest truly ... Pearson 2d.
 216. The Heavenly Word Williams 3d.
 150. The joy of our heart ... Foster 11d.
 202. The Light hath shined Verrinder 11d.
 181. The Lord hath been Macfarren 11d.
 198. The Lord hath brought us Thorne 11d.
 27. The Lord is in His Holy Elliott 11d.
 197. Ditto E. H. Thorne 11d.
 96. The Lord is King ... F. Iliffe 11d.
 88. The Lord is high ... Cummings 11d.
 31. The Lord is the True God Barnby 3d.
 50. The Lord opened the doors F. C. Woods 11d.
 33. The Lord redeemeth J. B. Calkin 11d.
 191. The Love of God ... Reay 11d.
 184. The pains of hell ... Monk 11d.
 52. The path of the just J. V. Roberts 11d.
 101. The Peace of God J. Rheinberger 11d.
 124. The pillars of the earth Tours 11d.
 134. The righteous souls ... Skeats 11d.
 41. The Sacrifices of God ... H. Blair 11d.
 152. The Salvation of the Ouseley 11d.
 34. Ditto ... Vincent 11d.
 169. The Souls of the righteous Hall 11d.
 37. The steps of a good man F. Cambridge 3d.
 222. There is a green hill ... Gounod 3d.
 66. These are they which ... J. Goss 11d.
 180. These have left a name Hook 11d.
 192. This is the day ... Reay 11d.
 211. Thou didst turn Thy face Attwood 11d.
 77. Thou, Lord, our Mendelssohn 11d.
 28. Thou shalt shew me the A. Gray 11d.
 16. To Thee do I lift up my soul Hall 11d.
 19. Try me, O God ... C. Wood 11d.
 106. Turn Thee again ... A. Sullivan 11d.
 158. Turn Thy face C. Lee Williams 2d.
 51. Watch ye and pray G. R. Vicars 2d.
 172. We wait for Thy loving Armes 11d.
 182. Ditto ... Macfarren 11d.
 2. When my soul fainted J. F. Bridge 11d.
 63. Wherever shall a ... Alcock 11d.
 183. While all things were Macfarren 11d.
 106. While we have time H. W. Parker 3d.
 6. Who are we, O Lord C. H. Lloyd 11d.
 68. Whom have we in heaven Elvey 2d.
 151. Ditto ... Ouseley 2d.
 110. Whom the Lord C. Macpherson 3d.
 121. Why art thou so heavy Gibbons 11d.
 109. Why art thou so C. Macpherson 11d.
 221. With all Thy Hosts A. W. Wilson 11d.
 97. Worship and praise ... F. Iliffe 11d.

(To be continued.)

Lord, my trust is in Thy mercy

SUITABLE FOR TRINITY-TIDE OR GENERAL USE.

Psalin xlii. 5, 6.

Composed by KING HALL.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; AND NOVELLO, EWER AND CO., NEW YORK.

VOICE. SOPRANO OR TENOR SOLO.
Andante tranquillo.
p

O Lord, my trust is in Thy mer - cy,

ORGAN.
103
Andante tranquillo.
p

cres.

and my heart is joy - ful in Thy sal - va

cres.

tion.
CHORUS.
SOPRANO.
p

O Lord, my trust is in Thy mer - cy, . . and my heart is joy - ful in cres.

ALTO.
p

O Lord, my trust is in Thy mer - cy, . . and my heart is joy - ful in cres.

TENOR.
p

O Lord, my trust is in Thy mer - cy, . . and my heart is joy - ful in cres.

BASS.
p

O Lord, my trust is in Thy mer - cy, . . and my heart is joy - ful in cres.

O LORD, MY TRUST IS IN THY MERCY.

The musical score is written for a vocal soloist and a piano accompaniment. The key signature has two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is common time (C). The score is divided into several systems. The vocal part begins with the lyrics "I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will Thy sal - va - tion." followed by "sing of the Lord, . . . be - cause He hath dealt so lov - ing - ly, so lov - ing - ly with me." and then repeats "I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will". The piano accompaniment provides harmonic support, with dynamics ranging from p (piano) to mf (mezzo-forte). The score includes various musical notations such as notes, rests, and slurs.

I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will
Thy sal - va - tion.
Thy sal - va - tion.
Thy sal - va - tion.
Thy sal - va - tion.
sing of the Lord, . . . be - cause He hath dealt so lov - ing - ly, so lov - ing - ly with me.
I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will
I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will
I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will
I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will
I will sing of the Lord, . . . I will

O LORD, MY TRUST IS IN THY MERCY.

dim.

sing of the Lord, . . be - cause He hath dealt so lov - ing - ly with

dim.

sing of the Lord, be - cause He hath dealt . . so lov - ing - ly with

dim.

sing of the Lord, be - cause He hath dealt . . so lov - ing - ly with

dim.

sing of the Lord, be - cause He hath dealt so lov - ing - ly with me. O Lord, my trust is in Thy mer - cy. O Lord, my

SOLO. p

p

me. O Lord, my

p

me. O Lord, my

p

me. O Lord, my

CHORUS. p

O Lord, my

p

O Lord, my

p

O Lord, my

p

O Lord, my

cres. dim.

trust is in Thy mer - cy, Thy mer - cy.

cres. dim.

trust is in Thy mer - cy, Thy mer - cy.

cres. dim.

trust is in Thy mer - cy, Thy mer - cy.

cres. dim.

trust is in Thy mer - cy, Thy mer - cy.

cres. dim.

trust is in Thy mer - cy, Thy mer - cy.

a tempo.
p 'Twixt Li - ly and Vi - o - let mp The Soul and Love first

a tempo.
p 'Twixt Li - ly and Vi - o - let mp The Soul . . and Love first

a tempo.
p 'Twixt Li - ly and Vi - o - let mp The Soul . . and Love first a tempo. cres. poco a poco.

p 'Twixt Li - ly and Vi - o - let The Soul . . . and Love first

a tempo.
p cres. poco a poco.

mf met; They drank de - light full deep, f Till joy . . was crown'd with sleep, p

mf met; They drank de - light full deep, f Till joy, joy . . was crown'd with sleep, p

mf met; They drank de - light full deep, f Till joy . . was crown'd with sleep, p

mf met; They drank de - light full deep, f Till . . joy . . was crown'd with sleep. p

mf f p

poco rit. ten. a tempo. pp

crown'd with sleep. Sweet is the sleep that is dream . . .

poco rit. ten. a tempo. pp crown'd with sleep. Sweet is the sleep, . . . the sleep that is

poco rit. ten. a tempo. pp

crown'd with sleep. Sweet is the sleep, . . . the sleep . .

poco rit. ten. a tempo. pp

Sweet is the sleep . .

poco rit. ten. a tempo. pp

ten.

slent. poco rit.

less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

dream - less, sweet . . . is the sleep . . that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

that is dream - less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

that is dream - less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. poco rit.

a tempo, poco più animato.

Time, who lets no - - - thing rest, Lured Life on some new quest;

a tempo, poco più animato.

Time, who lets no - thing rest, Lured Life on some new quest;

a tempo, poco più animato.

Time, who lets no - thing rest, Lured Life on some new quest;

a tempo poco più animato.

Time, who lets no-thing rest, Lured Life on some new quest; The

The Soul . . flew far and wide, But Love, but Love lay down and died. . .

The Soul flew far and wide, But Love, but Love lay down, lay

The Soul flew far . . and wide, But Love, but Love lay down and died. . .

Soul . . flew far and wide, But Love lay down and died. . .

a tempo. pp

Sweet is the sleep that is dream

dim. a tempo. pp

down and died. Sweet is the sleep, the sleep that is a tempo. pp

Sweet is the sleep, the sleep that is pp a tempo.

pp a tempo. pp

slent. rit.

less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. rit.

dream - less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. rit.

dream - less, sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. rit.

Sweet is the sleep that is dream - less.

slent. rit.

announced to reappear, was indisposed. Mr. Hislop did well, though his language sounded stranger than usual for the simple fact that it was the Swedish tongue, with which I cannot claim to be familiar. It did not interfere with his singing, which was of the order that shows him capable of sweet and expressive tone. Madame Bérat, most famous of Mothers in 'Louise,' appeared as Suzuki, and showed greater familiarity with the music than with shosi of Butterfly's house. M. Dinh Gilly was the Consul, and for some strange reason did not sing it as well as he did in English. Signor Bavagnoli conducted, but indicated no great familiarity with the score, of which he gave only a perfunctory version.

SURREY SEASON ENDS

Having accomplished something in the way of a record by continuing for fifteen weeks, the Fairbairn-Miln season at the Surrey Theatre came to an end on May 15. It has served definitely to establish the fact that the public appreciates the bringing of opera into its midst. When the difficulties of giving opera in this country are remembered, the results of the Surrey season become something to be noted. As it is impossible to recruit casts from the schools of music, since no practical teaching of opera is given there, the manager has to rely on his own judgment, and throw a singer on to the stage to sink or swim. Mr. Fairbairn has brought to light more than one British singer who will be heard again, and has moreover made known to the world the fact that the British composer can write opera. To be more explicit: in Miss Maryan Elmar, Miss Mabel Corran, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Andrew Shanks alone, he has a quartet capable of very effective representation of opera, and in Mr. Gatty's 'The Tempest' we have a worthy work. The closing weeks of the season were marked by the production of Gluck's 'Orpheus' and Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly.' The Gluck was put on the stage in a highly appreciative fashion, not the least effective point being the placing of the orchestra behind the scenes. This helped considerably in creating atmosphere. Miss Irene Ainsley appeared (at short notice) as Orpheus, Miss Elmar was the Euridice, and Miss Frances Hall, Amor. Mr. W. H. Kerridge directed the performance, which was well received by the Surrey audience. The repute of 'Madama Butterfly' had evidently preceded it, for the house was packed to the ceiling. With the aid of Miss Clara Simons, who has sung the part many times with the Carl Rosa Company, and of Miss Antoinette Fairbairn as Suzuki, Mr. Lyon Mackie as Pinkerton, and Mr. Andrew Shanks as the Consul, with some well-judged playing from the orchestra under the hand of Mr. Herbert Ferrers, the performance went thoroughly well, and was received with enthusiasm. Mr. Gatty's 'The Tempest' was given several times with increasing appreciation before the close of a season whose record in face of difficulties has altogether been highly creditable to those who carried it out and to those who supported it.

PAVLOVA BALLET AT DRURY LANE

Madame Pavlova's season of ballet at Drury Lane has been well-supported. The programmes have been varied each week, and have made known several unfamiliar examples. They have also afforded a very fine insight into the art of this delightful dancer. Among the numbers have been part of Tchaikovsky's 'Sleeping Beauty,' and the 'Walpurgis Night' ballet from Gounod's 'Faust,' now so rarely seen. It was to the benefit of provincial opera-goers that at one time it was regularly performed after the opera by the Moody-Manners Company, though in London it is equally regularly omitted. Madame Pavlova appeared in the Tchaikovsky and Mlle. Karalli in the Gounod. The next change introduced a comic ballet, entitled 'The Magic Flute,' in which Mlle. Butsova excelled. It was followed by an illustration of some Chopin numbers entitled 'Autumn Leaves,' notable for some particularly elegant dancing by Madame Pavlova and for some remarkably beautiful dresses representing the autumn leaves. The Elysian Fields scene from Gluck's 'Orpheus' was given in ballet form, providing yet another aspect of the art of Madame Pavlova, the bill including, from a musical point of view, one of the most attractive numbers in the repertoire in the shape of an Eastern piece entitled 'La Peri,' with music by M. Paul Dukas, a composer of whom we do not hear enough. At each performance the divertissements have been quite a feature, Madame Pavlova's contributions in the shape of a fascinating illustration of a Beethoven Rondo, a 'Scène Dansante,' 'La Nuit' and the 'Gavotte Pavlova' supplying a very full representation of the extent and variety of the art of dancing as expounded by this organization in general and Madame Pavlova in particular.

Choral Notes and News

BY W. MCNAUGHT

The rehearsals for the Handel Festival seem to have made a promising start. The first meeting of the London contingent took place at Westminster Chapel on May 10, under Sir Frederic Cowen's direction. Some three thousand singers attended. There are many new members in the body, and the addition of fresh tone was very noticeable. Some fine choral effects appear to have been obtained, the pianissimos of this huge choir making a deep impression on the listeners. The work in rehearsal was 'Judas Maccabæus.' At the close of the evening session the conductor declared that he had never known a more satisfactory first rehearsal for the Handel Festival. On the first four Friday evenings in June the rehearsals of the amateur section of the orchestra are to be held at the Crystal Palace, under the direction of Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock. The only alteration in the programme of the Festival (as published in our issue for April, page 253) is the substitution of the Overture to the 'Occasional Oratorio' for the Overture to 'Athaliah.'

The Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir introduced a new excitement into London music for a few days during last month. The choir was brought up to sing at a concert of the British Music Society, and afterwards appeared at the Palladium. Its resonant tone (albeit somewhat hard in the fortissimo of the tenors), its fine drill, and its grip of expression were very stimulating. The first quality in the singing was cleverness, and choral cleverness is sufficiently rare in our southern regions to be refreshing when it does appear, even to those who are fully aware that it is not the ultimate goal in choral work and that the typical northern choir has other and more refined faculties in its grasp. It is well known that the school from which these faculties spring is the Competition Festival, which has built great things out of the helpful material of northern voices. But a writer in the Daily Telegraph—a paper that is noted for its support of the competition movement—has been led by the singing of the Holme Valley Choir into wrongly estimating the tendencies of the competitive idea. 'Here is a choir from the region of competitive festivals'—he thinks: 'Its singing tends towards trickery. Therefore the competitive festivals put a premium on trickery.' He writes:

'Briefly, this choir appears to be a direct product of the Competition Festival, to be a living example of the artistic dangers of that movement. One may congratulate Mr. Silverwood and his choir upon their efficiency—an efficiency that implies much keenness and discipline. But efficiency alone will not make music, even if it wins points in competition. This anxiety to make "points" only resulted yesterday in an exaggeration (chiefly dynamic) that was at times startling. The strident opening of Elgar's "Feasting I watch" was a case in point; for here was a reflective and dignified poem not merely misunderstood but destroyed.'

Without casting any doubt on his critical judgment of the singing, one may question the moral he draws from it.

If the Holme Valley Choir was as bad as he says—('here a crescendo without meaning, there a decrescendo, commas in the text inflated into semi-colons and full-stops')—then it was a living example, not of the dangers of the competition movement, but of the dangers it strives to overcome. There are so many people without experience of our Festivals who are ready to seize upon any opportunity for criticising them, that a somewhat misleading opinion published with the full authority of the Daily Telegraph's musical staff should not pass unnoticed. If the competition movement were in the hands of unimaginative people, and were left to develop on sporting lines, there would be a danger that mere cleverness and ear-tickling display would 'win points' from the sporting and musically-blind referees. But the movement is, happily, better shepherded. Its artistic utility is in the hands, not of secretaries and committees, but of adjudicators; and it is not complimentary to the eminent musicians—men susceptible to every refinement in music and its interpretation—who have set the standard at competitions for the last thirty years, to accuse them of such narrowness as to exalt technical display. With any adjudicator worth his salt, as most of them are, a too strident opening in 'Feasting I watch' would count as a fault and lead to a 'loss of points.' One would have thought this obvious. It is hardly fair to saddle the competition movement with the existence of errors it strives to check.

The same writer strengthens these very arguments in a later notice of the Birmingham Festival. He says:

'There is still, however, a very noticeable effort on the part of conductors to pay more respect to the letter than to the spirit, but in such adjudicators as Dr. Hugh P. Allen, Mr. Frederick Dawson, Mr. Daniel Price, and Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, the candidates had, on Saturday, wise and sympathetic counsellors.'

That is, there is a tendency to err, but competition checks it.

It often happens at choral rehearsals that a conductor, by way of experiment, will lay down his baton and launch his choir on a chorus or part-song without any guidance. Anyone who has witnessed such a test will remember the looseness and inertness of the singing. Time is kept, but rhythm falters and unity is dissolved. Yet recently a choir sang in London, publicly, without a conductor, and kept a crisp rhythm and as much unity as could be desired. It was no experiment in their case, but a pathetic necessity, for the singers were blind, and came from the Royal College for the Blind at Norwood. One could not help wondering, while listening to them, whether there was real cause for the usual lifelessness of uncondensed singing, or whether it was only the result of mental habit. A lesson can be drawn from the blind people's necessity. It could only be beneficial to a choir to practise uncondensed singing until it had learnt to secure rhythm and unity from within itself—in fairly simple and continuous music, of course. A choir so trained would be more ready to master subtleties of interpretation than if it had never dispensed with the conductor's beat.

Stanford's 'The Voyage of Maeldune' opened the programme of the Royal Choral Society's concert at the Albert Hall on April 24. A work of power and imagination, and full of stimulating music for choral singers, it was heard with real enjoyment and some wonder at its comparative neglect in choral programmes. The composer conducted a performance that helped to set forth the fine qualities of the music, and in which Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Herbert Brown made efficient use of their abilities. Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet' were also given, and Elgar's 'Sea Pictures,' under Sir Frederick Bridge. Mr. Hubert Bath conducted his orchestral tone-poem, 'The Visions of Hannele,' and the programme concluded with Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' with the composer conducting. In this brilliant work the choir was able to make good use of its tone-power.

Oxford House Choral Society gave Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' at Queen's Hall, on April 27, and sang this noble music with the beauty of tone and expression that these singers have long commanded under Mr. Cuthbert Kelly's direction. Miss Flora Mann was the soloist. Parry's choral songs 'Jerusalem' and 'England' were also in the programme, and the Excelsior Boys' Choir made its customary appearance with folk-songs.

'The death of Minnehaha' was performed by the Central London Choral and Orchestral Society at Central Hall on April 29, Mr. David J. Thomas conducting and Miss Mabel Manson and Mr. Reginald Johnson being the soloists. An interesting diversion was provided by Miss Gwendolen Coleridge-Taylor with recitations.

On May 11, the Langham Choral Society, a body of seven hundred voices formed chiefly from the telephone service, gave an alert performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' at Queen's Hall, under Mr. Hugh Marleyn's direction.

COLCHESTER.—The season of the Colchester and District Musical Society came to an end on April 29 with a performance of 'St. Paul' at the Moot Hall. Both choir and orchestra earned great praise under the direction of Mr. W. F. Kingdom.

Craven Arms.—'Samson' was chosen by the Craven Arms and District Choral Society for its nineteenth concert on May 4. Under the Rev. W. M. D. Latouche the choir sang with vigour and precision. An orchestra, chiefly drawn from Ludlow, provided the accompaniments, assisted at the pianoforte by Mr. F. E. Bastick, organist of Ludlow Parish Church.

DOVER.—A large audience attended the concert given by the Choral Union on April 21 to commemorate the second anniversary of the Zeebrugge-Ostend action. The programme appropriately included Stanford's 'The Revenge' and 'Last Post,' and a new work by the conductor, Mr. H. J. Taylor, entitled 'Sea-girt England,' written for unaccompanied voices.

EALING.—On May 1 and 3 the Ealing Philharmonic Society gave a concert version of 'Carmen' under the direction of Mr. E. Victor Williams. The chorus singing was notably bright and effective, and the solo parts were excellently sung by Miss Winifred Kennard, Miss Irene Ainsley, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. George Baker.

HANLEY.—Mr. Hamilton Hartly and Mr. John James have been appointed conductors of the North Staffordshire District Choral Society for the next season.

HERTFORD.—An admirable performance of 'Elijah' was given by the East Herts Musical Society on May 6, under the direction of Dr. W. J. Comley. The solo parts were taken by Miss Cynthia Harris, Miss Evelyn Pull, Mr. John Collett, and Mr. Graham Smart.

LEEDS.—The Leeds New Choral Society, of which Mr. H. Matthias Turton is founder and conductor, gave a concert at the Town Hall on April 28, by which evidence was afforded of its continued artistic progress. Elgar's 'King Olaf,' and Stanford's 'The Revenge' were given with thoroughness and great vitality of expression. An orchestra played the accompaniments, and added Weber's 'Oberon' Overture.

NORWICH.—On May 6 the Norwich Choral Society, conducted by Dr. Bates, gave Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' and part of Handel's Coronation Anthem which was intended to celebrate the anniversary of the King's accession.

RIPON.—The Choral Society gave musical performances in Holy Trinity Church and the Wesleyan Chapel on April 23 and 28. The choir and orchestra of a hundred and twenty very creditably performed a difficult and ambitious programme that included Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' choruses from the 'Hymn of Praise,' Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' Bach's 'I wrestle and pray,' and Cornelius's 'The surrender of the soul.' Mr. P. R. Pfaff conducted.

ULVERSTON.—The concert edition of 'Faust' was given on April 16 by the Choral Society with full orchestral accompaniment. Mr. E. Telfer conducted.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Pianist would like to meet with number of players, stringed instruments preferred, for practice of classical and modern music. Would also play with amateur orchestra. Manchester district.—'Alceste,' c/o Musical Times.

Good amateur string players required for symphony orchestra, and to co-operate with choral Society. Short test required. Rehearsals Wednesday evenings, near Liverpool Street.—J. H. CHISHAM, 30, Broke Road, Dalston, E. 8.

Pianist (male) wishes to join other men in practice of classical chamber music. Ealing or Acton.—H. S., 45, Myrtle Road, Acton, W. 3.

Flautist (not a beginner) desires co-operation with pianist and small party, locally. Not too advanced. Evenings. Mr. M. MATHEW, 97, Cromwell Road, Wimbledon.

Gentleman, higher public school teacher, wishes to join any London band as violinist (amateur).—A. FROSTIG, 12, Essex Road, Acton, W. 3.

Thoroughly experienced Viola player (lady) would give services in orchestra and chamber music concerts, &c., for expenses.—'Viola,' c/o Musical Times.

Experienced pianist desires to meet competent violinist, 'cellist, and viola player (preferably G.E.R. season-ticket holders) for study and enjoyment of classical quartets. Broxbourne and Bishops Stortford district.—H. G. B., c/o Musical Times.

Young pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for study of classical trios, or would join violinist alone. Any evening after 7.—J. W. SINCLAIR, 65, September Road, Tuebrook, Liverpool.

Quintet party want practice-room containing a good piano, in a private house, hall, or school, within two miles of G.P.O., for use once a week (not Saturday or Sunday) from 5-8 p.m. In return free recitals would be given.—B. B. H. W., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to join chamber music party. Most evenings free.—Miss D. E. L. TREVOR, c/o 'The Homestead,' Rawlings Road, Bearwood, Smethwick, near Birmingham.

Young lady pianist desires to join trio or quartet for practice of good music.—V., 108, Norbury Crescent—Norbury, S.W.

Violinist (amateur) required to complete trio for chamber music practice.—Apply to Mr. C. W. SCOTT, B.A., 2, Buxton Road, Thornton Heath; or to Mr. A. WEBEL, 133, Langdale Road, Thornton Heath.

Violinist and 'cellist (male), good sight-readers, wanted to join flautist and pianist in weekly practice. Good-class miscellaneous music. Fine practice room and all music found. Muswell Hill district.—F. H., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist desires to join quartet, violinist and 'cellist. Good music.—GEORGE DAY, 10, Little Oak Road, Aston, Birmingham.

Birmingham amateur orchestra requires deputy leading violin and 'cello. Also oboe and horn. Central practices, Fridays.—Apply to Secretary, Stafford House, The Retreat, Aston Manor, Birmingham.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist. Classical and modern music. Margate and Cliftonville district. Most evenings free.—'Allandale,' c/o Musical Times.

DR. R. R. TERRY AND 'THE CRYES OF LONDON'

In the Queen of March 27 and April 3, Dr. R. R. Terry filled six columns with complaints as to Sir Frederick Bridge's edition of the Deering, Weekles, and Gibbons 'Cryes of London,' recently published by Messrs. Novello. He gave numerous music-type illustrations, and altogether managed to produce an impression that the edition was bristling with errors. Sir Frederick replied in the issue of May 8, but his letter was too brief to do more than deal with two or three of the points raised. Dr. Terry's rejoinder—two columns—followed in the same number.

Since the correspondence appeared we have consulted the original manuscripts, and find that in all but a few cases Sir Frederick Bridge's edition is correct. In the space at our disposal we are able to deal only with the points that can be set forth briefly and with a minimum of music-type.

First we repeat Sir Frederick's remark that the editions were prepared for performance, rather than for library or museum. This, it seems to us, fully justifies some slight modifications both of text and music. For example, Deering wrote:

Ex. 1.

Sprats two-pence a peck, two-pence a peck, two-pence a peck.

Sir Frederick reproduces it thus:

Ex. 2.

Sprats two-pence a peck, two-pence a peck, two-pence a peck.

We do not think Dr. Terry will find many musicians joining him in holding up shocked hands at vandalism of this excellent type. He says that 'the Elizabethans would quite naturally (without altering the values of any of the notes) have sung :

Twōpēnce ā peck.'

It may be so. But until Georgians are clever enough to emulate Elizabethans in what certainly appears to be a difficult feat, we hope editors will be as considerate as Sir Frederick has been in this case. Moreover, as our readers will hardly need reminding, musical notation was in Deering's time a very limited affair. No doubt Deering thought of the cry as it is noted by Sir Frederick Bridge—a method that reproduces natural speech as nearly as possible—but his means of putting it on paper were only approximate.

Here is another example of Dr. Terry's pedantic regard for the text, regardless of practicability. Deering wrote a pair of cries for (male) alto voice, the second of which involved the alto's singing down to :

As the alto part in choral societies is now almost invariably sung by women, Sir Frederick gives the passage to the tenor, and hands over the following cry, consisting of the same notes, to the bass—a commonsense procedure which involves a slight alteration of the time-value of a couple of notes and the insertion of a crotchet rest. Dr. Terry objects, but we fancy contraltos will be grateful.

A dire offence is perpetrated on page 11. Dr. Terry says :

'The crier is calling "Ripe respass" [sic; the MS. has "raspise"]. As every student of Herrick and old English knows, "respass" was the old word for raspberry. Instead of giving the cry as in the original MS., the Editor alters "respass" to "raspberries," thus involving alteration of the composer's notes as well.'

If this edition had been prepared for the use of students of Herrick and old English, Sir Frederick's alteration would no doubt have been indefensible.

Here is another example of a very reasonable modernisation of text :

There is surely no point in the retention of the old text here. Dr. Terry is not consistent. He says elsewhere :

'The Weelkes cries open with "Ny oisters." The obsolete word "ny," when applied to food, means "fresh" as opposed to "stale." In that sense the Editor is no doubt justified in translating it as "new."'

Exactly; and is there any less justification for sweep = soope, and raspberries = raspise?

Yet another case, of hair-splitting. The MS. has :

The Editor changes this to :

This is duly objected to by Dr. Terry.

It seems incredible that a critic in these busy days (when paper is so short, too!) should be at pains to print a long list of such quibbles in the guise of a review.

Dr. Terry makes a more serious charge when he accuses Sir Frederick of substituting, on page 7 of the Weelkes, eight bars of 20th-century harmony in five-parts for 16th-century harmony in four-parts. But Sir Frederick has done nothing of the kind. His copyist at the British Museum found that the Weelkes MS. (Add. MSS. 18936-9) was marked 'of V. voy,'—i.e., for five voices. But the MS. contained only four parts. Another MS. (Add. MSS. 37402-6), however, also contained four parts, somewhat different. The Editor, we think, committed no crime in collating the two MSS., and so producing music 'of V. voy.' The result is sufficiently primitive for most ears, and we must confess our surprise that one so familiar with the subject as Dr. Terry should have regarded the passage as a mere Wardour Street imitation. At the same time we think it a pity Sir Frederick did not make it clear in his preface or by a foot-note that the passage was the result of a collation of two MSS. The second of the MSS., by the way, is evidently unknown to Dr. Terry. In his rejoinder to Sir Frederick he says the MS. 'does not appear in the catalogue.' We advise Dr. Terry to look again; he will find it in No. 3.

We willingly admit the justice of the complaint that the compressed score of the Deering work has not been so arranged as to make it convenient for pianoforte players. Sir Frederick has been so practical in other respects that it is a pity he was so literal and inconvenient in this.

Lack of space prevents our going further into detail. We end by pointing out that Dr. Terry made thirty-two charges of departure from the MS. These have been carefully investigated, and we find that in only two instances is Dr. Terry right; a few others are obvious misprints which have now been corrected, and in several there is room for more than one opinion—as is inevitable in such matters. The great bulk of the thirty-two complaints are of the puerile type we have shown above.

Not often do we find so much smoke (eight columns of the Queen!) with so little fire.

PARRY MEMORIAL FUND.

The committee of the above fund asks us to insert the following :

The appeal issued through a letter to the Press early in the year for a permanent memorial to Sir Hubert Parry to be placed in Gloucester Cathedral has met with wide response. The Prince of Wales before leaving England expressed his wish to be associated with it, and sent a donation. The list of subscribers includes the names of many prominent musicians and amateurs of music, business houses and musical societies. Among these last are Messrs. Novello, the proprietors of Musical Opinion, the Bristol Madrigal Society, the Bristol Musical Club, and the Gloucester Orpheus Society. It is felt, however, that there must be many other individuals and societies, particularly choral societies, who would wish to take part in a national memorial to the man whose art has enriched their musical resources to an incalculable extent. The fund is being kept open for a time in order to give fuller opportunity for this, and to allow of the response of music-lovers abroad and in the Overseas Dominions.

The Dean of Gloucester has expressed a wish that the memorial in the Cathedral should be simple. The committee of the Parry Memorial Fund is in complete accord, and is only desirous that it should be as representative as possible of the many-sided interests which engaged Sir Hubert Parry's sympathies throughout his life. With this in view donations, even of the smallest amount, will be welcomed. They should be sent to the hon. treasurer, the Hon. Norah Dawnay, 29, Oxford Square, London, W. 2.

[Photo. by

W. H. Rabington, Sheffield]

We are glad to reproduce a photograph of the Sterndale Bennett Memorial Tablet, erected in Sheffield Parish Church by musicians who co-operated in the Festival at the composer's centenary, April 13 and 14, 1916.

JOHN FIELD'S VIOLIN DISCOVERED IN FINLAND

It is interesting to learn that a genuine Stainer violin, which was once the property of the famous English (or Irish) pianist and composer, John Field, has come to light at Helsingfors, the capital of Finland. The violin, which is now the property of Dr. Hermann Friedmann, has been submitted to the most searching tests, and no doubt of its genuineness is entertained by such well-known experts as M. Anton Sitt and M. Antti Niklander.

Dr. Friedmann himself has carried his researches into the history of the instrument backward through many generations. Not a few Stainer instruments, now almost rarer than Stradivaris, found their way into Austrian monasteries, and when towards the end of the 18th century these religious houses were dissolved, the precious violins were eagerly purchased by the cognoscenti in England.

Dr. Friedmann's instrument was, it appears, brought to Petrograd from England in 1804 by the celebrated John Field. From him it passed into the hands of Alexander Villoing, the pianoforte teacher of the brothers Nikolai and Anton Rubinstein. Villoing was one of Russia's greatest connoisseurs and collectors of old instruments, and the Stainer violin in question, which was industriously played at Villoing's chamber music evenings, was known and highly valued in the most distinguished musical circles at Petrograd during the first half of the 19th century.

The instrument was later presented as a gift to a distinguished contributor to Vilhoing's musical evenings, M. Alexander Bogdanoff, conductor of the orchestra of the Imperial Ballet. M. Bogdanoff had been a favourite pupil of the great Henri Vieuxtemps at the Paris Conservatoire. After his death, the violin was sold by his heirs to the music firm of Westerlund, at Helsingfors, from whom it was purchased by Dr. Friedmann. It bears the inscription 'Jacobus Stainer, in Absam, prope Oenipontum, 1676,' and is now being played by Mlle. Beatrice Friedmann, a pupil of Anton Sitt. Connoisseurs express their admiration for the pleasing form and beautiful lines of the instrument, as well as for its mellow and noble tone.

THE RATIONALE OF CUTS AND ADAPTATIONS

BY SYDNEY GREW

What are we to do with our classical sonatas, symphonies, concertos, oratorios, cantatas, operas, and the rest? Play one or two of them in the whole once in a decade, and so establish them as curiosities? Select a few examples of each type, play these so often as to make them tiresome, and get thereby a false idea of what they stand for? Or play them in careful selection and judicious curtailment, and by that means build up a good and full repertory and make ourselves acquainted practically with the phases of art these works represent? I think the latter.

As things stand to-day, our practical public knowledge of the classics is at once an insult to the masters and an indictment of ourselves. We are familiar with about six symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, with three or four concertos, with one or two 'serenades' or divertissements, and at the most with some dozen other miscellaneous works. Of Schubert we know the B minor Symphony and the 'Rosamunde' music. Our stock repertory of pianoforte classics is confined to a few Beethoven sonatas. We are ignorant of Bach and Handel, for the few pieces of theirs which we play are as nothing among the many hundreds of equal value which they composed. We are as unacquainted with the minor classics of the 17th and 18th centuries as we are with the other side of the moon. We have lost sight of the innumerable wonders and beauties of the Italian and French writers of opera. Rameau and Gluck have departed. Lassus, Palestrina, and our own Elizabethans are as remote from our public as are Oriental musicians. Such a state of affairs reflects discredit on ourselves. It proves us unworthy of our heritage.

We probably all agree to-day that the present has greater claims on us than the past, and that if circumstances compel a choice it is modern art that must benefit. Not even Bach and Beethoven have claims superior to the claims of living composers. The eternal order is, Man, know thyself, and it can be obeyed in full only by knowing of the present, which is formed by living man. But it is none the less a vital fact that the present, and we of the present, are formed of the past, and that we know and understand ourselves only out of adequate knowledge of what has made us. We must use our heritage. And since our heritage represents an embarrassment of riches, we must use it wisely. Time is short. It is very crowded with contemporaneity. We must abbreviate our possessions, make a sensible selection from our riches. Time is quite free enough for us to do this.

How is the selection to be made? Commonsense gives the answer it gave a hundred years ago in the analogous case of literature, and which it gives to-day in the playing of Shakespeare.

Chaucer had no public life until Cowden Clarke, Wordsworth, and others began to select 'the beauties' of that poet and make these clear to modern minds. The old English dramatists were unknown until Charles Lamb published them in the form of extracts and selections. The modern actor adapts Shakespeare to the modern stage. When he plays 'Hamlet' in its entirety he fills six or seven hours, provides a long interval for refreshments, and announces the fact as something of a curiosity. A library edition of 'Hamlet' marked so as to show the acting version of Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson is a maze of lines and zigzags; scenes are cut out or reduced to brief points of dialogue, passages are transposed, action is made to take the place of speech, and so on.

I consider that we musicians may do the same with our old classical music. We have six hundred years of great music behind us. Our ignorance is so great that we regard certain centuries as musically barren. We look on 'Sumer is icumin in' as a solitary flower blossoming in a desert, which is foolish.

Time being short and crowded, we must obviously economise both time and material. We must pack the one and simplify the other. In the matter of symphonies we have either to contract movements or to eliminate movements.

I do not see how we can, in general, shorten a movement. I do not see, moreover, that contraction is particularly necessary. The classical form is, after all, rather brief. The sections are concise and relatively well filled. They are strictly balanced, every part paralleled by a responsive part elsewhere in the movement. The principle of completeness demands that phrase should be answered by phrase. I feel that any movement taken up for performance should be played in full. As to repeats, these, if sectional, should be cut out, but if phraseological they should be played. Phraseological repeats are usually written as repeats merely for the sake of economy in writing. In their parallels they are written out in full with varied treatment. Perhaps in movements made up of a theme with variations an occasional variation may be dropped, but such shortening will always be entirely individual. There is no reason why all the repeats in the Minuet and Trio should not be cut out. When, however, the composer has directed certain sections to be played senza ripetizione, I think we should in general play the repeats he has marked. There is usually some special reason for his departure from custom. In Finales where the music moves in 8- or 16-bar phrases, each marked for immediate repeat, we must be guided in this matter first by the manner in which the composer treats the passage in the responsive section, and, secondly, by the speed and character of the music: swift movement and lightness of effect often compel us to play the repeats. One thing is certain as to the matter of repeats: their inclusion or elimination must be consistent and scientific. The result must be logical. We may often shorten the slow introductions to first movements. Sometimes we discard these altogether. It often happens that these have but little emotional significance for us of to-day.

I fail to see any reason (historical, architectural, or æsthetic) why we should not frequently perform detached movements or any two adjacent movements. In nine out of every ten symphonies up to the time of the 'Eroica,' each movement is a complete thing. It has no inner connection with its companions. Its relation to the whole is governed by a law external to the principle operating within itself. In the old days songs were often interpolated between the movements (as dances used to be given between the acts of a tragedy). The composers themselves had little sense of what we nowadays call the 'subjective cyclic continuity' of their symphonic works. When they wished two movements to be continuous in effect they extended the cadence of one, or else after its full close they followed on with a phrase which pointed by means of a half-close into the immediate sequel.

I consider that in from fifty to seventy-five of the finer pre-Beethoven symphonies we might perform (a) many detached movements, (b) many first movements plus the following Adagios, (c) not a few Adagios plus Minuets, and (d) at times the Minuets plus the Finales. I have no doubt there are symphonies where we could begin with the Adagio or elide the Minuet.

The rule to guide us is modern practice. What our living composers do with their own works we can do with classical works which otherwise must in the nature of things remain unperformed. May I venture the statement that in certain early works of Haydn and Mozart, I have (for personal pleasure) cut out the middle of the slow movement, and filled the space with a shortened version of the Minuet, playing the third section of the slow movement after the interpolation? I hesitate to name the works in which I have done this; but I assure the reader that the effect has sometimes been charming, and that it has never shocked other than the extreme purist. Unsophisticated listeners have never suspected the sacrilege.

As to concertos, divertissements, and the like, where 'form' is relatively free, I consider we may do with these exactly as we choose. The only thing to consider is the fruit of our actions.

I consider also that we are at liberty to modify the orchestration of all orchestral music anterior to Weber and Wagner (who to-day uses the pronunciation of Shakespeare: 'Swate air the ooses of advair-sit'?), and to do anything else that may tend to confirm the modern significance of old music—the only respect in which it can have value to-day.

Finally I consider that we are at liberty to extract movements from various works and to mould and fashion them into suites, as Bantock has done with some of our Elizabethan compositions, Sir Henry Wood with the organ trios of Bach, and as some of our younger composers are doing at the present moment.

Half a loaf is better than no bread, especially if the other half happens to have dried up. Such pianists as Lamond satisfy our desires absolutely when they extract a Scherzo movement from a Beethoven sonata and treat it as an independent composition. Gervase Elwes gives us all we want when he presents on the concert-platform a Bach aria from a cantata we do not know even by name. Such artists please and satisfy us because they have been guided by wisdom; but the organist who, for instance, cuts the Fantasia from the G minor Fugue or the Prelude from the D major Fugue, does not similarly please us for the reason that he has not been guided by wisdom—he has truncated a lovely body. His act results in mutilation, as an act that would remove one of the twin towers of a cathedral. The coming generation should be very busily occupied in the task of selection and adaption from the enormous stores of the classics. I think the masters would approve of their work far more than of our present neglect and ignorance.

VOCAL VIRTUOSI OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

BY CLAUDE TREVOR

There is no doubt that during the 18th century the Italian public exhibited an extraordinary passion for opera, in which also the greatest care and interest were taken by those who governed the numerous States into which Italy was then divided. We cannot say if, as has been often affirmed, the love of theatrical performances was fostered and encouraged in order to distract the masses from too much discussion of political events. Be this as it may, there remains no doubt as to the energy with which opera was nourished and promoted. Not only was this the case in the capitals of the States alluded to, but also in towns of second, third, and even less importance, in which latter, from time to time, were to be heard the most celebrated singers of the period, often engaged at very great expense. We call particular attention to the singers, on whom greater interest was centred than in the operas in which they appeared.

It may at once be said that the Italian virtuosi of the 18th century reached a perfection quite unknown in these days, and almost unbelievable were there not some carefully preserved musical evidence by which to verify the extraordinary technical excellence to which singers attained in their art. In a recently-inspected Miserere by Filippo Dentice the difficulty of some of the vocal passages is such as would strike terror into the soul of even the greatest singers of our time; and below is given a passage in an air sung by the famous Lucrezia Agujari, which was written down at the time by Mozart, and is also mentioned in a letter from Leopold Mozart, his father, written to his sister, dated from Bologna, March 20, 1770:

At Parma, Signora Agujari, nicknamed Bastardina or Bastardella,* invited us to dinner and sang us three pieces. I could not have believed that she could reach the C in altissimo, but our ears convinced us of the fact. The passage that Wolfgang jotted down was sung with less volume than her middle tones, like the sound of the flute on the organ. Trills, runs, she executed just as Wolfgang has transcribed them, note by note. Besides all this she has a beautiful contralto voice extending to Sol.* She is not handsome or plain, but has a wild look in her eyes, like people who are subject to convulsions, and she is lame of one foot. Her conduct is good, so she has consequently a good reputation.

Here is the famous passage alluded to:

The majority of the virtuosi were trained in the splendid schools of singing [flourishing in the chief centres of Italy: the famous school directed by Mazzochi, at Rome; the four at Venice (the Pietà, Mendicanti, Incurabili, and Ospedaletto); that at Florence, founded about 1715 by Francesco Redi, from which came so many vocalists of the first rank; and the Naples School, which, though last to be mentioned, was by no means least in importance. Heading the list of teachers was the famous Porpora, who gave to the musical world an immense number of celebrities.

Though it may cause many to smile when reading of the vagaries and pretensions of the vocalists of the 18th century, it must be remembered that they were not only singers, but were deep students of harmony, counterpoint, and composition. Frequently they were supplied with only the skeleton, so to speak, of a composition, which they were expected to fill in with fiorture, &c., of their own invention. Many also proved themselves composers

* She was the natural child of a nobleman, and was always spoken of and announced on the bills, &c., as Bastardina or Bastardella. Born at Ferrara (1743), she received instruction in a convent from the Abbé Lambertini, and first appeared at Florence in 1764. She surpassed all in her wonderful execution and range of voice. Sacchini heard her sing up to B⁷ in altissimo, and said she had two good octaves below. In 1775 she sang at some concerts for which she received, for performing two songs, the unheard-of amount, for those days, of £100 per night. She died at Parma on May 18, 1783.

* Presumably

of very considerable talent. All things considered, the indulgence—and, perhaps, exaggerated enthusiasm—they excited is thus in some measure explained, if not altogether justified. Wherever they sang, sonnets by the most eminent writers were composed in their honour, ladies wore the miniature of the castrato most in vogue, while many duels were fought on account of the prima donne of the season. Hence it is scarcely to be wondered at that the singers became more and more convinced of their importance, and overbearing in their demeanour.

Sovereigns, princes, dignitaries of the Church headed the list of their most extravagant admirers. To name but one instance, Louis XV. of France heaped the most valuable gifts on Caffarelli—a coach, jewels, snuff-boxes in gold inlaid with precious stones and bearing the sovereign's own effigy, being amongst the items bestowed. The famous singer amassed an immense fortune, and over the entrance to the superb palace he built for his occupation was inscribed the words, Amphion Thebas, ego domum. Farinelli was depicted as a god among the clouds in many engravings, and eulogised by scores of poets. He became so influential at the Spanish Court as to give rise to the story that by the power of his talent he cured Philip V. of a nervous disorder and greatly alleviated the distress of Ferdinand IV. If these stories are not entirely true, there is no doubt that his intimacy at the Spanish Court caused him to mix himself up with the politics of the country, and it was ultimately intimated to him that his absence would be more appreciated than his company. This great Neapolitan artist was a pupil of Porpora, after which he studied with Bernacchi, of Bologna. The public throughout Europe was crazy over the purity of his shake, which he could execute from pianissimo to fortissimo, returning to the former and prolonging its duration almost indefinitely. When singing in London in 'Artaserse,' by Hasse, a lady present with the Court could not contain herself, exclaiming, 'There is but one God and one Farinelli.' Many were the cases where enthusiasm for the famous singers of the epoch caused members of the audience to be seized with convulsions and others to faint. Another very famous singer of the large band of sopranisti was Carestino, who, according to one authority, was summoned to London by Handel to sing in some of his operas. As to the female artists, it is well known that for a long period they were excluded from taking part in theatrical performances, the rôles of women being sustained by the castrati. As soon, however, as the former were admitted to their proper place in opera they rapidly acquired renown. A small volume would be required for an entire list of the virtuosi, male and female, of vocal art of the 18th century. I have here called attention to only a few of the most famous.

At the luncheon-hour concert given by the Music in War-time Committee at Central Hall, on April 27. Sir Homewood Crawford, the chairman, referred to the work accomplished by the Committee during the war. He stated that they had given a total of 5,000 concerts in hospitals, camps, and other war centres, and had distributed upwards of £25,000 in fees and expenses to musical artists to whom the war had brought disaster. Although peace had been declared, it was obvious that a great number of musicians were still unable to resume their places in the ranks of the profession. Sir Homewood appealed for funds to enable the work to be continued until the help was no longer called for. Donations may be sent to the hon. secretary, Mr. W. G. Rothery, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.-7.

THE SECULAR MUSIC OF ANCIENT EGYPT

BY JEFFREY PULVER

We could hardly imagine a country so intellectual and so poetic as Ancient Egypt—a land where the arts and sciences were so highly developed from so remote a period—to have been without music. Religion and philosophy were not, in the earlier ages of Egyptian civilisation, the professions of the priests alone. Every degree of society was imbued with an idealism and an optimism that must have made of the mind a fertile field for the cultivation of the liberal arts. The stately processions connected with the different religious ceremonies, and the high plane of the poetry used for the same purpose, must prove the existence of a musical excellence in keeping with their dignity and beauty. The magnificent proportions of the buildings and the elevation from which the Egyptians viewed life and death must show how wide was the range of their thought, both practically and idealistically. They were, from the earliest times, characterised by an intense love of home, of the beautiful in sound, and of the noble in pictorial representation. The music of such a people was not only the handmaiden of religion, but also the mistress of pleasure.

The ranking of Ancient Egypt with the musical nations of the West is not of great age. A mistaken passage in Diodorus Siculus and the absence of tangible remains, were long the reasons for thinking the Nile valley to have been utterly unmusical. It was not until the discoveries of James Bruce in the 18th century that attention was directed to the matter. The harps found represented on the tombs of Thebes placed an entirely different complexion on the subject. Since then, research and excavation have brought to light the most amazing evidences of musical greatness in the land of the Pharaohs; and the illustrations of musical instruments given in the works of Wilkinson, Champollion, Lepsius, &c., are sufficiently wonderful to awaken our interest and admiration to-day. It is difficult for us even to imagine the remoteness of the period under consideration. A retrograde step of five hundred years only brings us to a time when music in Europe was in a very primitive state; a stretch of a millennium takes us only as far back as Alfred harping in the camp of the Danes. It requires a prodigious effort of the imagination to take the mind back four or five thousand years. Only two thousand years ago the Briton was a painted savage taking from the Roman his first lessons in the art of living. Yet, at the age when Greece was giving the first promise of her future greatness in art, the Twelfth Dynasty of Egyptian kings was well under way, accompanied by a musical culture that is, to us, astonishing. Moreover, civilisation did not grow up suddenly, and the art of the Fourth and Fifth Dynasties must have been preceded by a long period of anterior development. Even times of decadence must be reckoned with, and so we must suppose that the birth of Egyptian culture took place at a period that is lost in the mists of a past whose remoteness the modern mind can barely realise.

Whether the earliest culture of the Nile emanated from an indigenous folk, or from an Asiatic source, I must not attempt to decide in this place. Where eminent Egyptologists go warily, I shall take care not to walk at all. Suffice it to know that with the earliest historical kings of Egypt begins a record of culture, which by the Fourth Dynasty produced works that still baffle the world by their stupendous scale and artistic excellence. It is as Wilkinson says: 'How far, then, do we find the Egyptians surpassed the Greeks at this early period in the science of music! Indeed, long before the lyre was known in Greece, the Egyptians had attained the highest degree of perfection in the form of their stringed instruments; on which no improvement was found necessary, even at a time when their skill was so great, that Greek sages visited Egypt to study music, among the other sciences, for which it was renowned.' And quite apart from the marvels exhibited by their musical instruments, are those of the tools they must have possessed for their manufacture.

Because the ancient Egyptian had a perfect passion for leaving the most exact pictorial representations of almost everything he used in domestic and ceremonial life, information concerning his instruments is comparatively plentiful. Nearly every kind of stringed (plucked) instrument, many wind instruments, and much percussion are to be found portrayed on the walls of tombs and other buildings. Indeed, as Loret says, 'there is scarcely a necropolis in which one does not meet with pictures of musical scenes.' Moreover, several examples of their instruments have been found in tombs, some of them in quite good condition. We shall see later that there is nothing to give us any idea as to the harmonic system used by the dwellers on the Nile, but a close study of the instruments, and especially of the flutes, may afford much valuable information on this point. The harp, the lyre, and the three-stringed guitar were in very common use from the earliest periods of Egyptian history, and the pictures of these, besides the specimens preserved in many European museums, prove to what a high state of artistic perfection such instruments had attained. In addition to the noble harps copied by Bruce, the frescoes at Thebes contain many other instruments, such as wind-instruments with reed-mouthpieces, simple and double pipes or flutes, and percussion. These would date from the Nineteenth Dynasty. It is a remarkable circumstance, however, that in all this array of instruments of music, there is no suggestion anywhere of a bowed instrument or of a bow; there can remain no doubt that this method of playing was of Middle-Asian origin.

'All classes of society in Egypt,' says Maspero, 'were from an early period imbued with the love of luxury, and with a taste for the beautiful.' They were of an easy-going and simple disposition, fond of banquetting, and of anything likely to provide harmless pleasure. Egyptian literature abounds in passages in which the people are exhorted to be happy. That wonderful composition—'The Lay of the Harper'—translated by Rawlinson in his 'Ancient Egypt,' shows a diversity of thought, a dignity and depth of feeling, that exhibit the plane upon which the accompanying music must have stood. In it the audience is enjoined to rejoice with music and song, until the day came 'which loveth silence.' But while on earth the Egyptians are told to ... make thy day happy.

Let there be songs with the music of the harp before thee.

Let song and music be before thy face
And leave behind thee all evil cares.

Bearing these exhortations in mind, everyone, from the king to the labourer, cultivated music in one way or another. The rulers generally employed orchestras, and men and women of noble families occupied positions in them. Of course the social status of music varied at different periods, and in no Dynasty was it entirely absent. In the 'Old Empire' there were three 'superintendents' of the 'Royal singing,' two of them being singers themselves. It was their vaunt that they 'daily rejoice the heart of the King with beautiful songs, and fulfil every wish of the King by their beautiful singing.' Their position at Court was very high, and they were known as 'relatives of the king.' Under the 'New Empire' we still find two 'singers to Pharaoh' and a 'superintendent of the singers to Pharaoh.' This royal musical director stood at the head of his profession in Egypt. And just as the nobles of Tudor England maintained a set of musicians for Chapel and Chamber, so did the great ones of the Nile retain singers, instrumentalists, and dancers, the last-named accompanying themselves on the three-stringed guitar. Blind vocalists, singing to the harp, were common; indeed, this seems to have been the recognised occupation of the sightless in Egypt. No banquet was complete without music;—'. . . the party was enlivened by the sound of music; and a band consisting of the harp, lyre, guitar, tambourine, double and single pipes, flute, and other instruments, played the favourite airs and songs of the country. Nor was it deemed unbecoming the dignity of a priest to admit musicians to his house, or to take pleasure in witnessing the dance' (Wilkinson).

The monuments show us representations of men singing at their work, and the folk-song must have been fully developed. Rawlinson gives the text of a harvest-song in which the oxen are exhorted to thresh the corn for their own consumption, while Davies in 'Der El-Gebrāwī (ii. Pl. VIII.) shows a song of the bearers of a carrying-chair, who assure their master that the chair is lighter when he is in it than when it is empty. Where numbers of workers were employed, such songs were generally given by a single voice, and the refrain sung by a chorus. Boatmen, as is common in most countries, sang a constantly repeated song of monotonous character. In Harris Papyrus No. 500 (British Museum) is the 'Song of Antuf'—a love song to the accompaniment of the harp. And thus every occasion upon which music could be used was provided for. Martial music was supplied by drums and straight trumpets. Dancing was a favourite pastime, and from Pyramid times onwards the Egyptians loved to watch men and women dance accompanied by pipes, flutes, lyres, guitars, and castanets. The commonest method of beating time was by clapping the hands, though a small drum or tambourine was often used. A dancer accompanying herself on the guitar is shown by Wilkinson (ii. 301).

It would be absurd to suppose that no foreign influence made itself felt from time to time. All the Dynasties were not purely Egyptian, and many of those that were enjoyed or suffered the influence of neighbouring states. We must not forget that Sinai was a possession of the Egyptian kings already in the First Dynasty, and, as Petrie says, 'contains monuments down to the Twentieth Dynasty.' The Nile valley was invaded by the Libyans in the Seventh, by the Amu or Asiatics in the Ninth, and again in the Fourteenth Dynasty; but in their case no great influence was exercised, because the new-comers could boast of no higher culture and thus 'had no knowledge to impart' (Petrie, ii. 145-6). The kings of the Eighteenth Dynasty married Babylonian princesses, and much intercourse between these two ancient countries went on. We can only suppose that they influenced each other to a very considerable extent, especially in the arts. How far the invention of some of the Egyptian instruments of music was Asiatic, it would be difficult to say with certainty; but there can be no doubt that the Egyptian craftsmen improved even the borrowed instruments (see also my article, 'Twixt Euphrates and Tigris,' Monthly Musical Record, August, 1914).

Egypt's musical history begins, like that of Greece, in the mists of sacred legend. It will be sufficient to mention that the invention of the harmonic science was attributed to the god Tehuti or Thoth, who presided over learning. He was supposed to have constructed instruments of music and to have promulgated the laws of harmony. But different periods did not adhere strictly to one legend. In the Temple at Dakkeh is a picture representing the fire-god Ptah playing on a harp; and Osiris was also looked upon as the patron deity of song. Still, one deduction may be allowed us; and that is, if the origin of Egyptian music was so remotely placed as to be attributed to the deities, we may take it for granted that the cultivation of the art was old enough for its beginnings to have been forgotten. A mace-head of the Dynasty 'o' (Petrie's king Nar-Mer, the ninth of the Dynasty, B.C. c. 4800) shows a representation of a dance of captives. Menes, the first king of the First Dynasty, 'was the first that brought in a delicate and sumptuous way of living' (Diodorus Siculus, i. 45, Booth's translation), and under his régime we find the first (B.C. 4400) historical records of Egyptian art. But it was with the Fourth Dynasty that the first great period of Egyptian culture began, extending through the Fifth and Sixth Dynasties, a state of affairs favoured by the great progress made in the use of metals. Memphis, already then famous as the best school of singing, furnishes many fine representations of instruments. In the Pyramid of Gizeh (Tomb 90) there are illustrated a large number of musical scenes, showing, among others, two harpers with large bow-shaped, six-stringed harps, and three flute-players (two playing obliquely and one directly). These are reproduced in Lepsius, iii. 36. It was, indeed, the Fourth Dynasty that made Egypt famous. This was the age of Pyramid-builders and that of the models upon which the Saïte period worked. And yet this musical activity took place five and a half millennia ago! The Fifth Dynasty was more priestly in character than the preceding ones, but there are still many pieces of evidence to show the existence of much secular music. A bas-relief in the tomb of Ptah-hotep, a nobleman who lived at Sakkara, represents a party feasting and playing upon flutes, harps, &c. Lepsius's work contains some splendid illustrations of the instruments of this period. In iii. 52 we see two large, bow-shaped harps, played kneeling, with the instrument resting upon the performer's shoulder, and different forms of pipes. Further illustrations, reproducing the work on the Pyramid of Saqara (Tomb 16, Lepsius, iii. 61a), the Pyramid of Gizeh (Tomb 26, Lepsius, iii. 74a and 74c), show various harps, flutes, pipes, &c. Plate 74a, in particular, is exceedingly interesting, since it exhibits a group of eight flautists, playing ensemble, one of them standing in a listening attitude as soloist or conductor. With the advent of the Sixth Dynasty, the cult of art became much more general, but lower in quality. We see, as Petrie says, 'the regular effect of the diffusion and cheapening of works which were formerly a rare luxury.' Still, the early kings were vigorous, and industrial progress had its inevitable effect upon the arts. The failure of this Dynasty was followed by a long period of confusion, and the first era of Egyptian art and music came to a close after a decadence as rapid as its rise (B.C. c. 3300). The succeeding Memphite Dynasties are not deserving of detailed consideration; they were, at best, only noticeable for rude imitation.

(To be continued.)

Church and Organ Music

THE ENGLISH CHAPEL ROYAL AT THE FIELD OF CLOTH OF GOLD

JUNE 10-24, 1520

FOUR HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY

Just four hundred years ago, in June, 1520, took place the historic meeting between King Henry VIII. and King Francis of France in the valley midway between the towns of Guisnes and Ardres, at the memorable Field of Cloth of Gold,* the Val Doré of that period, but ever since to be known as 'Champ du Drap d'Or.' When Henry set out for France (June 4) he was accompanied by his Chapel, that is, the Chapel Royal, and there is a piquant entry on the King's Book of Payments: 'To Mr. Cornish for the diets of ten children of the Chapel at 2d. a day for 62 days at the King's journey to Calais, from May 29 to July 22, 103s. 4d.' From official sources we learn that the full strength of the Chapel Royal, clerks, gentlemen, children, and others, with Dr. Robert Fayrfax, at the head of the singing men, under the control of the Master, William Cornish, were present in attendance on the English monarch, to give due eclat to the solemnity. Cornish was given carte blanche as to the devising of the pageants presented at the Field of Cloth of Gold, and he personally directed all the music performed during the fortnight's pageantry from June 10 to June 24, 1520.

The following is the official list of Clerks and Gentlemen of the Chapel who took part in the celebrations:

Dean: DR. JOHN CLERK
Subdean: ROGER NORTON

Master of the Children: William Cornish; William Toft, Thomas Hall, William Blackden, Richard Elys (Clerks); Robert Fayrfax, John Lloyd, John Sudborough, Robert Penne, John Wever, John Fisher, William Daubeney, Thomas Farthing, Henry Stephenson, Robert Hawkins, Davy Burton, John Giles, Thomas Bury, John Tyll, William Coleman, Thomas Cheyney, William Hogeskyne, Robert Jones, William Crane (Gentlemen of the Chapel),

ROBERT COTES, Gospeller,
JOHN WHETWOOD, Pisteller,

William Rothwell, John Bunting, Nicholas Horncliff, William Lambe, and Geoffrey Wright.

* Prof. Pollard points out that the popular translation, 'Field of the Cloth of Gold' is erroneous, as cloth of gold is a material like velvet, and one does not talk about 'a coat of the velvet.' (Henry VIII., 1905.)

The final episode in this gorgeous display of chivalry was the Solemn High Mass sung by Cardinal Wolsey, Papal Legate, on Sunday, June 24. In an improvised Chapel erected on the field, 'a fathom and a half high on pillars,' the Mass of Thanksgiving was duly celebrated. The English Bishops acted as Deacon and Subdeacon, while the Archbishop of Canterbury had a seat 'round the altar near the French Bishops.' The English Chapel Royal proceeded processional and sang Tierce, after which Cardinal Wolsey and his suite changed their dress. The Legate and the attending ministers were robed in rich vestments borrowed from Westminster Abbey, and at mid-day High Mass de Trinitate was sung, the Introit being sung by the English and French chanters alternately.

In the official account we read that by mutual arrangement, 'whenever the French organist played, the French chanters sang, and whenever the English organist played, the English Chapel Royal sang.'

Pierre Mouton played the Kyrie, after which the English organist accompanied the Gloria in excelsis, which was intoned by Wolsey. Then followed the Credo, 'sung by the French, with the King's band of cors de sackbutes and fifes,' after which the Sanctus was sung by the English, and the Agnus Dei by the French. Michelet tells us that the Cardinal of Bourbon presented the Book of Gospels for the French king to kiss, but he politely offered it to King Henry, who also declined. At the Pax the same ceremony was proffered, but the two monarchs acted as before, solving the punctilio by kissing each other.

At the conclusion of Mass, several Motets were sung, after which the Benediction was given by the English Legate, followed by a Latin oration on the blessings of peace, by Master Richard Pace, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, London.

The singing of the English Chapel Royal at the Field of Cloth of Gold elicited the highest admiration, and no wonder, as Sagudino had written a few years previously, 'Mass was sung by His Majesty's choir, whose voices were more divine than human; never heard such counter-basses.' W. H. G. F.

SEFTON CHURCH

The fine old church at Sefton, near Liverpool, is especially remarkable for its great antiquity and architectural interest in a diocese which possesses few picturesque old churches and only two ancient rood-screens. Sefton Church has one of these (c. 1500), which is now to be used as a support for forty-two pipes of the pedal organ, laid horizontally. It is a happy and unexpected circumstance that an anonymous donor has given carte blanche in the matter of expense for the organ (originally built by Hill) to be rebuilt and enlarged on modern principles by Messrs. Harrison, of Durham. New mechanical blowing will permit of heavy-pressure reeds and pneumatic action, and the new disposition of the pipes will open up a better view of the Buldey Chapel and of the general interior, in which pilgrims from Liverpool and elsewhere find refreshment in studying the details of the old building with its Philip and Mary Blandell Chapel, Jacobean pulpit, Anne reredos, its sixteen choir-stalls, carved bench-ends, old brasses, and other attractions to which the new organ will be an important addition. And there will be few musical visitors who will fail to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of A. L. Peace by a visit to his last resting place in the quiet churchyard under the shadow of the ancient spire. It is remarkable in a district so near to a great city that its pastoral and agricultural features remain apparently unaltered through the changing generations. In old days Sefton was famous for its 'mock' corporation, elected annually. It met at the 'Punch Bowl,' just outside the church, where the 'regalia' was kept, and every year a Mayor, Aldermen, and Bailiffs were elected, with a number of honorary appointments which included a 'Poet Laureate,' a 'Window Peeper,' a 'Translator of Modern Languages' who knew none but his own, and a 'Pedestrian Ambassador to the Court of Russia.' This amusing Corporation assembled every Sunday and went in state to the 'Cathedral,' as they styled the old church, and afterwards dined sumptuously in the good old way. And yet with all their fooling and cavalcades the members have left a record of charitable doings, as well as of unswerving allegiance to church and state occasionally expressed in dutiful addresses to the King. It would not be surprising to hear that the donor of the new organ is a descendant of one of these loyal Sefton worthies of old time. W. A. R.

FESTIVAL SERVICE AT LINCOLN CATHEDRAL

Lincoln Cathedral was crowded on May 5, when a Festival Musical Service was held. Dr. G. J. Bennett conducted a large choir, drawn chiefly from the local musical Societies, and there was an orchestra of fifty-eight, including players from London, Manchester, Sheffield, Nottingham, &c. Dr. A. W. Wilson, organist of Manchester Cathedral, was at the organ. The chief work was Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' in which the solos were sung by Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. J. B. Render, and Mr. C. Woodward. The programme included also Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Beethoven's fifth Symphony, and Karg-Elert's organ improvisation on 'Nun danket alle Gott.' The performances throughout were on a high level, and the event seems to have been regarded as a kind of temporary substitute for the famous Triennial Festival.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE ALFRED J. EYRE

It is proposed to erect an organ case in the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Upper Norwood, as a memorial to the late well-known Church musician, who was organist at St. John's for thirty-eight years. His many old friends and pupils are invited to send their contributions to Mr. George Howse, 42, Auckland Road, Upper Norwood.

A very successful series of organ recitals has been given at Northampton Parish Church during the past season, some features in connection with which are worth placing on record. The large Church has been generally full, and on several occasions hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Queues have formed up regularly, the first-comers arriving well over an hour before the recitals were timed to begin. No printed programmes have been used, the items being announced by one of the clergy, who read also a brief descriptive note provided by the recitalist. The music played has been a judicious blend of standard organ works and transcriptions. The appreciation of the public has been unmistakably shown in the collections, which have averaged £16. Dr. A. C. Tysoe, the organist of the Church, has given the bulk of the recitals, with a few visiting players, among these being Mr. Bernard Johnson and Mr. Alfred Hollins.

Two notable oratorio performances have lately taken place at Aberdeen. On March 23 the Bach Choir sang the 'St. Matthew' Passion in St. Ninian's Parish Church, with Miss Helen Anderton, Mr. John Vine, and Mr. William Hayle as soloists. Mr. H. A. Bennett, sub-organist of York Minster, played the organ, and Miss Eileen Atkins the pianoforte. Mr. Willan Swainson conducted. On April 13 Mr. Swainson conducted a performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' by the Queen's Cross Choir. The soloists were Miss Margaret Inverarity, Miss Chrissie Moir, Mr. Forbes Rae, and Mr. Fred Burnett. The accompaniments were played by Mr. Alex. Conter (organ), Miss Eileen Atkins (pianoforte), and Miss Gladys Kirby (drums). At Broomwood Road Wesleyan Church, Battersea, on May 1, 'Messiah' was well sung by an augmented choir of eighty. The soloists were Miss Bessie Lang, Miss Beatrice Ashton, Mr. Leonard Lovesey, and Mr. Samuel Dyson. Mrs. J. M. Inskip, organist and choir director, conducted, and Mr. Allan Brown was at the organ. This is the second oratorio performance at Broomwood Road this season, 'Elijah' having been sung in December.

The new organ at Yeovil Parish Church was opened on April 20, when Dr. W. G. Alcock gave two recitals, his programmes including the Fugue from Reubke's Sonata, Franck's Choral No. 3, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D, and works by Parry, Hollins, Guilmant, Liszt, Lemare, Rheinberger, &c. The instrument has been built by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, and is a three manual with twenty-seven stops.

The seven hundredth anniversary of Salisbury Cathedral will be celebrated on June 24. A service of Thanksgiving will be held on that day, with a choir of two hundred and full orchestra. The music will include Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody,' Elgar's Imperial March, Stanford's Te Deum in B flat, and an anthem specially written for the occasion by Dr. W. G. Alcock.

A correspondent sends us a cutting from a Yokohama paper, from which we learn that a large congregation attended Evensong on Palm Sunday, when an augmented choir gave a good performance of Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary.' The congregation joined heartily in the hymns. Mr. S. E. Unite conducted, and Mr. A. R. Catto accompanied on the organ.

The City Temple Choral Society wound up a successful season's work on April 28 with a performance of Parts 2 and 3 of 'Messiah.' The soloists were Miss Florence Mellors, Miss Elsa Cameron, Mr. Leonard Lovesey, and Mr. Samuel Dyson. Mr. Allan Brown conducted, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ.

The organ at All Saints', Southampton, has been restored by Mr. James Ivey, a local builder, and was re-opened on Ascension Day. Mr. L. Ladbroke gave a recital, his programme including Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Best's 'Sit Laus Plena,' Bonnet's 'Caprice Héroïque' and 'Elfes,' and pieces by Glazounov and Stcherbatchev.

We have received the book of programmes of organ recitals now being given by Dr. Harold Darke at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on Mondays, at 1 o'clock. This list of works is the best of answers to those who think that the répertoire of the organ is poor. The present series of recitals continue until July 26.

Mr. Martin Shaw is announced to give lectures at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on the Saturdays in June, at 3. His subject is 'The New Spirit in Church Music.' Musical illustrations will be sung. No tickets are required.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (four recitals)—Harmonies du Soir, Karg-Elert; Pean, Harwood; Introduction and Passacaglia, Bellerby; Larghetto, Wesley; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger.
Mr. James Downie, New Kilpatrick Parish Church, Bearsden—Concerto in D minor, Handel; Introduction and Allegro, Haydn; Coronach, Barratt; Rondeau, Couperin.
Mr. Norman Collie, Stoke Newington Parish Church—Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; Arabesque in E, Debussy; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Suite in F, Corelli.
Mr. Gustav Rhodes, Christchurch, Turn-Teplitz, Bohemia (two recitals)—Dorian Toccata, Fantasia, and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Ciaccona, Pachelbel; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; Intermezzo, Rheinberger; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, and Finale from Sonata Op. 42, Guilmant.
Dr. Thomas Keighley, Albion Church, Ashton-under-Lyne (two recitals)—Sonatas Nos. 4 and 6, Mendelssohn; Five Movements from Suite in E, Bach.
Mr. T. Newbould, St. Paul's, King's Cross—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Legend, Harvey Grace; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.
Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Bridal March, Parry; Overture in C, Adams; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach.

Mr. Arthur S. Warrell, Brislington Parish Church—Overture in 'Otho'; Preludes on two old Irish tunes, Stanford; Lament, Harvey Grace; Finale (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Maestoso, A.D. 1620, MacDowell; Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Berceuse, Vierne; March for a Church Festival, Best.

Dr. William H. Speer, St. Barnabas', Tunbridge Wells—Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Slow movement (from new Sonata), Speer; Concerto in B flat, Handel; March of the Crusaders, Liszt.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Arcadian Idyll, Lemare; Choral and Menuet, and March on 'Adoro Te,' Boëllmann; Three Chorale Studies, Karg-Elert; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge.

Mr. D. Henry Maxfield, St. John's, Altrincham—Allegretto and Romanza, Wolstenholme; Maestoso, Ravanello.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Sonatas Nos. 1 and 3, Mendelssohn; 'Short' Fugue in G minor, Bach; Idyll, 'The Sea,' Herbert A. Smith.

Mr. H. J. Timothy, St. Vedast Foster (five recitals)—Concerto in F, Handel; Postlude, Luard-Selby; Variations on 'O Filii et Filiae,' West; Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Moderato in C minor, W. Y. Hurlstone; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; 'Dream Children,' Elgar.

Mr. W. W. Starmer, St. Barnabas', Tunbridge Wells—Concerto in D minor, Stanley; A Song of Joy, The Angelus, and Fantasia in D minor, W. W. Starmer.

Mr. Harold W. Rhodes, St. John's, Torquay—Intermezzo in B minor, Rhodes; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Basso Ostinato, Arensky; Choral No. 3, Franck; Epinikion, Cyril B. Rootham.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Holy Trinity Church, Ashby-de-la-Zouch—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Variations, Bonnet; Dithyramb, Harwood; Grand Chœur, Gigout.

Mr. C. St. Ervan Johns, Town Hall Assembly Room, Newport, Mon.—Variations de Concert, Bonnet; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Dithyramb, Harwood.

Mr. Albert Orton, 'Colintreve,' Southampton—Prelude in C (9), Bach; Caprice Héroïque, Bonnet. Newport Parish Church, Isle of Wight—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Air and Variations, Finale, and Fugue, Smart.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Rhapsody No. 3, Howells; Andante and Fugue from Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Musette, Lemare.

Mr. Ernest J. Turner, Trinity Presbyterian Church, Bromley, Kent—Evening Song, Bairdston; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (three recitals)—Barcarolle, Sterndale Bennett; Sursum Corda, Elgar; March, Silas.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Central Hall, Westminster (four recitals)—Allegro moderato e serio (Sonata No. 1), Mendelssohn; Pastorale 'The Infant Jesus,' and Concert Study, Yon; Overture to the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,'

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach; Canon in A minor, Schumann; Absoute, Gigout; Fantasia on an Easter Plainsong Melody, Healey Willan.

Mr. John Lomas, St. John's Territet—Fourth Concerto, Handel; Fantasia Sonata, Rheinberger.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (eight recitals)—Pean, Harwood; Basso Ostinato, Arensky; Scherzetto and Elegie, Vierne; Scherzo in G minor, Bossi; Fugue on 'Bach,' Liszt; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Nocturne in D flat, and Scherzo, Bairdston; Rhapsody No. 2, Howells; Sonata and Festival Toccata, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Preludium (Sonata in E flat minor), Rheinberger. St. Laurence Jewry—Evening Song, Bairdston; Prelude in E flat, Bach; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Grand Chœur in E flat, Guilmant.

Mr. Percy V. Colley, United Methodist Church, Liverpool, S.—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Grand Solemn March, Smart.

Mr. Allan Brown, Trinity Congregational Church, High Wycombe—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Fugue, Reubke; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.
 Mr. Ernest H. Smith, Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool—Fugue in D minor, Bach; 'Rock of Ages,' E. H. Smith; Sursum Corda and Alla Marcia, John Ireland.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Harry H. Cooke, organist and choirmaster, St. Nicholas Parish Church, Wallasey, Cheshire.
 Mr. E. G. Laycock, organist and choirmaster, Wesleyan Church, Bideford.
 Dr. Henry T. Pringuer, organist and choirmaster, Lyndhurst Parish Church.

New Music

BY WILLIAM CHILD

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The writing of short pieces is a test from which comparatively few composers come with flying colours. A successful album leaf must confine itself strictly to the business in hand—the expression of a single emotion or idea. Like its literary counterpart, the lyric, it must get under way at once, say its say, and end. The conventional methods of development, which in a long work too often tide a composer over his barren moments, are of no service here. In John Gerrard Williams's 'Pot-Pourri: a Cycle of Fragments' (Novello) we have a set of short pieces which are unusually successful examples of the form. There are nine of them, each named after a flower or herb, and each prefaced by a neatly-turned verse by Isobel Scott Bremner. They well express the little programme set forth at the head of the page, but like all good descriptive pieces lose little or nothing when considered apart from their bases. The idiom is modern, but free from extravagance. Mr. Williams makes liberal use of the delicate sonorities arising from shifting harmonies over a bass, and therefore calls for varied and delicate touch and skill in the management of the pedal. The pieces are not unduly difficult, the requirements being taste and fancy rather than an advanced technique. I have given up the idea of expressing a preference for any particular one, after hesitating between 'Cassia,' with its delicate bell effects, the quietly gay 'Roses' (a perfect little waltz), the arabesques of 'Musk,' and the wistful final piece, 'Pot-Pourri,' with its quaint diatonic harmony. It is a rare and refreshing experience in reviewing to come across a set of so many as nine pieces with no disappointing page. I don't know if Mr. Williams ever feels disposed to write sonatas or other big works. If he does, I hope he will resist the temptation so long as he can work the lyrical vein with such results as we find here. A good word is due to the gracefully-designed cover and the lay-out of the album as a whole. The large page and the rather small, but beautifully clear type, are novel and pleasing.

'101 Original Studies for the Pianoforte'—the title calls to mind youthful struggles with Czerny. But there is no copyright in a number, and here is a brand new set of '101' from the pen of G. H. Clutsam (Metzler & Co.). Czerny and I parted company a good many years ago, and I have no copy at hand for reference, but my impression is that his collection left a good deal to be desired in the matter of grading. It had an uncomfortable way of giving the young pupil a hard nut before he could comfortably crack it, making amends by something unexpectedly easy from time to time as he got on towards the hundred and oneth. The musical interest was so slight that the brevity of the items was something to be thankful for. Mr. Clutsam leaves Czerny far behind in several respects. In the first place he writes music. Many of the Studies, even the most elementary, are pleasing to play and hear. Plenty of pieces published for recreative purposes are less attractive than lots of these purely technical essays. The average length is a good deal greater than that in the Czerny set, many of the later examples being full-blown, well-developed pieces. Mr. Clutsam is so well known as an authority on modern harmony that we are not surprised to find the advanced numbers of these Studies giving the player plenty to do with his head as well as with his fingers. The work is in four books, and is well graded as to difficulty, ranging from elementary up to the less difficult of Chopin's Studies. They are to be had with either English or Continental fingering. Mr. Clutsam has given us an educational work of real excellence.

ORGAN MUSIC

Of the four new numbers in Novello's 'Original Compositions' only one may be said to break fresh ground. It is a Postlude, 'In Memoriam,' by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and was written for the service held in the Temple Church on March 19, 1919, in commemoration of those connected with the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music who fell in the war. The piece is appropriately simple, and very expressive, especially in its main subject, where the effect is due chiefly to the syncopation and irregular rhythm. The final section is in the major, and consists of a broad hymn-like theme, with violins ad lib. This earnest little work would serve well as a voluntary, or as one of the serious items in a recital. It is only moderately difficult, and can be made effective on two manuals, with little registration. Very much more on the beaten track is T. J. Morgan's Fantasia on the Welsh tune, 'Twrgwyn.' Mr. Morgan relies largely on the alternation of big chords and florid passages—a recipe that suits the genius of the instrument so well that composers are not always careful to see that the actual material is quite fresh. Page 6 of this Fantasia, for example, is startlingly like Léfébure-Wély's well-known Offertoire in F. The best part of the work is the fugato section. The Fantasia is easy to play, and gives a good deal of effect in return for little trouble. Welsh congregations and others familiar with the tune will be glad to hear it. The remaining two numbers are by Mr. Hollins, and are of the type we have come to expect from his facile pen. The Minuet in A flat has a flowing tune, several, in fact, with an accompaniment sometimes pleasantly contrapuntal, sometimes harmonic, the latter inclined to be over luscious for those of us who like at least a touch of austerity in organ music. It is not very difficult, but requires neat handling. A composer who is luscious in a Minuet, will hardly be anything else in a piece of wedding music, so we open Mr. Hollins's 'Epithalamium' knowing what to expect. All the elements of popularity are there—the melody in the tenor, repeated in the treble against a background of rich chords, with an introduction consisting of a series of sliding dominant sevenths and ninths. It is easy to play, and one can easily imagine audiences revelling in it.

SONGS

A daily paper recently contained an article drawing a vivid picture of a composer with a portfolio full of songs for which he could find no publisher. One got the impression that owing to shortage of paper and engravers, the publication of songs was at a standstill. As a matter of fact the case is too much the reverse. There is a steady flood of new songs, good, bad, and indifferent, and unfortunately the two latter types almost hide the first from view. I have space to mention only a few of the stack waiting notice, so I draw attention to one or two of the small proportion of good ones.

Martin Shaw has in an unusual degree the knack of vigorous, straightforward writing; and as he manages to hit on good and unhackneyed words, his songs have a bracing quality not too common in this department of music. Three excellent examples of his work come from Messrs. Curwen: 'A Stave of Roaring Tim,' 'Heffle Cuckoo Fair,' and 'The Eggshell.' The first is a rousing song of the vagabond type, the words by George Mederith—a poet not often set to music. For 'Heffle Cuckoo Fair' the composer has gone to Kipling, with delightful results. Sung—and played—with the right pace and lightness, this song ought to bring the house down. One would have thought it impossible to give us anything fresh in the way of a pianoforte reproduction of the call of the cuckoo, but Mr. Shaw does it here in the introduction. 'The Eggshell' is a grimly breezy sea-song, with words by Kipling. Like 'Roaring Tim,' it would suit a vigorous baritone. The effectiveness of these songs is due in no small measure to their having the directness and expressive qualities of folk-song. In one or two others of Mr. Shaw's recent songs, however, there are signs that he is rather too easily using the little clichés from which folk-song is no more free than is the royalty ballad. The only difference is that of the two conventions it is the better. But it is a convention none the less. We want to reproduce the spirit of folk-song, not the letter. With the former we get life and originality; the latter is merely imitative, and imitations are apt to be anything but vital.

Peter Warlock continues to produce some of the best of modern native songs. His 'Love for Love' and 'Sweet Content' (Winthrop Rogers) are well up to the standard of his former efforts. The first is a delicious setting of some quaint words from a Harleian MS., for high or low voice; the second is yet another version of Dekker's well-known poem.

Letters to the Editor

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS IN THE EARLY CHURCH

SIR,—I was interested in Mr. Clement Antrobus Harris's article on this subject. The Psalms would undoubtedly be accompanied at first by the lyre or kithara, for the word 'psalm' means a hymn or song (sacred or secular), accompanied by one of these instruments played with the fingers, harpwise. A kitharode was the same kind of composition, but played with a plectrum. Each had an instrumental prelude, analogous to the pianoforte prelude that introduces any modern song.

At various times there arose prejudices against instruments, just as nearer our own times we have the Calvinists at Geneva prohibiting all instrumental music for ninety years, the Scotch Church abolishing the organ, &c. I doubt if there was at any time a universal banishment of instruments. But when the lyre and kithara were prohibited, the prelude and interludes were missing; and as these were integral parts of the psalm, their place was taken by the antiphon, a sort of vocal prelude to the psalm about to be sung.

The lyre was an instrument of seven to nine or more strings: its form is so well-known that no description is necessary. For instance, the pedals of my grand pianoforte are supported in a lyre-shaped frame. The kithara was simply an enlarged and more powerful kind of lyre, mostly played with a plectrum. One frequently sees it on statues. It was to the lyre exactly what the grand pianoforte of to-day is to the upright, or the harpsichord of our forefathers to the spinet. At Bradfield College I accompanied the choruses of the Greek plays with lyres played harpwise: the boys could not manage the plectrum.

Mr. Harris makes the remarkable statement that the kithara had frets. The neck was unknown to—or at any rate unused by—the Greeks, from whom the early Church derived its music. The Egyptian nefer, a more ancient instrument than the lyre, had a neck like a banjo, but I have seen no evidence of frets.

When the organ (or hydraulus) was introduced, it did not accompany the voices, but was used only for interludes down to the time of the Reformation. The hydraulus appears as late as the year 826 A.D., when Ludwig the Pious had one placed in his palace at Aix. The Eastern Church seems never to have overcome its prejudice against the use of instruments. It is more conservative than its younger rival the Church of Rome. When studying its music with a priest of the Greek Uniat Church I asked him why they used no organ. I knew perfectly well, but wanted to see what reason he would give. 'We have no place for it in our liturgy,' he replied; 'we sing the whole time'—which showed that it never occurred to him that the organ could be used with the voices, but only in intervals, of which there were none in his liturgy.

By the way, for a long period the organ was spoken of in the plural, while the singular was reserved for the vocal organum. This has frequently led to misunderstandings on the part of historians, who translate cum organo as 'with the organ,' whereas it should be 'with the (vocal) organum.'

To this day the Spanish speak of los organos when mentioning the instrument, and canto de organo when referring to unaccompanied singing in parts. The word organo here is of course the mediæval organum; the word organos the mediæval organi; the player, for instance, was pulsator organorum, not organi. This distinction is not found in the earliest allusions to the instrument, where both organ and hydraulus are named organum. I think the distinction between the singular and plural begins about the 10th century: it led eventually to the English expression 'a pair of organs,' and the French 'les orgues.' But I have trespassed on your space too long.—Yours, &c.,

C. F. ARDY WILLIAMS.

Myrtle Cottage, Milford-on-Sea.

THE SYMPHONY AND THE KINEMA

SIR,—The article by Mr. Sydney Grew in your May issue under the above heading calls for some comment. The gist of Mr. Grew's argument seems to be summed up in the sentence 'The cinema is a compound of pictorial art and dramatic art, both of which clash with music.'

Dramatic art, plus music, combine to form the art of opera. Mr. Grew has no objection to opera, I imagine. He has no objection to sitting in an opera house, watching the actions of the performers while listening to the music they produce. But what he does seem to object to is to sit in a kinema and watch the actions of some people while certain other people (whom he cannot see) produce the music. But why? No answer seems forthcoming.

When I was at Cairo last spring, I attended the performance of several operas, the dramatic part of which was contributed by the kinema, while the music was rendered by a large body of singers and an orchestra behind the screen. The performances were magnificent. Never have I heard music sung with more dramatic power, and never have I seen opera so well acted. Here, certainly, is a case in which pictorial and dramatic art combined never clashed with the music.

Mr. Grew's argument therefore leaves me cold.—Yours, &c.,

F. DARWIN FOX.

111, Lansdowne Road, W. II,
May 1, 1920.

ORGAN RECITALS AT BRISTOL.

SIR,—The writer of the Bristol notes in your issue for May states that St. Mary Redcliff is the only place at Bristol where organ recitals are regularly given.

It would be an injustice to the organists of St. Stephen's and St. Thomas's Churches to allow such a statement to pass unchallenged. In the former Church the fifty-second recital of a Thursday dinner-hour series was given to-day. During the past half-year various organists have played programmes at St. Thomas's on the first and third Mondays of each month, alternating with St. Mary Redcliff's second and fourth.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR G. COLBORN.

Stapleton, Bristol,
May 6, 1920.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of June, 1860:

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The sixth season of the Crystal Palace was fitly inaugurated, on the 4th of last month, by a musical festival in honour of Mendelssohn, upon the same colossal scale as marked the performances at the late Handel Festival. The oratorio performed was 'Elijah,' which was selected for the inauguration of a statue of Mendelssohn. The orchestra, consisting of about 3,000 performers, were not so effective in the rendering of the choral passages of this oratorio as they were in the broader music and more familiar Handelian choruses . . . and there was an evident want of enthusiasm in the audience. The music of 'Elijah' is of a more complicated and florid character than any that has hitherto been attempted by the colossal orchestra, and though the grander parts of the choruses were brought out with most telling effect, there was a cloudiness and apparent unsteadiness in the delicate passages . . . In the soprano music Mdlle. Parepa sang with considerable vigour, but was not particularly effective at any time. Madame Dolby was encored, as usual, in that exquisite air, 'O rest in the Lord,' and most truly did she deserve the compliment. Mr. Sims Reeves was also encored in the concluding air, 'Then shall the righteous shine,' which he sang with immense energy . . . After the conclusion of the oratorio, there was a simultaneous movement towards the statue of Mendelssohn, and the fountains also gave forth their volumes of water for the first time this season . . . The number of visitors was as follows:—Admissions on payment, 8,698; by season tickets, 8,494; total, 17,192.

THE SISTERS FERNI (VIOLINISTES).—The journals of St. Petersburg and Moscow agree in describing the immense success of the young violinists, Virginia and Carolina Ferni, of Como, who, after having established a European reputation, have recently gathered laurels and roubles in the cities of the Czar. They will, after completing their Russian and Polish campaign, and fulfilling various engagements in Germany, proceed to Nice, where a villa has been erected for their family, and where they purpose retiring from the public exercise of their profession, after a visit to London the ensuing spring, where they cannot fail to excite the greatest admiration.

TO CLERGYMEN AND OTHERS.—An Organist of some years' standing is in want of an appointment. It is hoped this will meet the eye of some in want of a good man. Address, Musicus, 4, Amherst Terrace, West Hackney. (N.E.)

NOW READY, Nos. 1 & 2, price 3d. each, of the Second Edition of Mr. T. REES EVANS' TIME AND TUNE, an easy course of instruction in Singing. This work is adopted by the Chedale Association for Promoting Choral Music. J. Alfred Novello, 69, Dean Street, Soho, & 35, Poultry.

MOTHER, DEAR, THE BATTLE'S OVER, by LOWRY. Revised edition. Price 2s.

THE LAND WE LIVE IN. Composed by SHIELD. The words altered to suit the present time; with new symphonies, accompaniments, and ad lib. chorus by A. MULLEN. Price 2s.

CHANGE-RINGING

At the meeting of the Musical Association on March 9, Mr. J. F. R. Stainer said that the art of change-ringing was purely English in origin and development, and its practice was still almost entirely confined to this country. It seemed to have been regarded in the past as a mechanical exercise beneath the notice of musicians. Yet we all recognized the beauty of 'the music of the bells,' and a very little reflection would show that the degree of musical effect obtainable on a number of bells must largely depend on the order in which they were sounded, and the method by which that order was varied. How was change-ringing managed? What was the history of it?

It could not be traced further back than the early part of the 17th century. The Ancient Society of College Youths, our premier association of bell-ringers, claimed to have been founded in 1637, and in 1668 a member of that Society, Mr. Fabian Stedman, published the first book on the subject, under the title of 'Tintinnalogia: or the Art of Ringing.' The earliest change-ringing seemed to have been on five bells only, any additional bells employed keeping their places unaltered throughout. Only single changes were attempted, that is to say, only one pair of bells changed places at a time, and these single changes were made only after every 'whole-pull,' so that each change was sounded twice. But the modern system of 'half-pull' change-ringing with multiple changes had evidently come into use before Stedman's book was published. Having explained the meaning of the terms 'whole-pull' and 'half-pull,' Mr. Stainer went on to say that in change-ringing a bell never moved more than one place backwards or forwards at a time, on account of the difficulty of keeping a bell, especially a heavy bell, balanced mouth upwards for any length of time. Control of the bell, so that it might be put in motion at the right moment without undue effort, required that it should be balanced, and not allowed to fall back upon the stay for support.

The lecturer described in detail different changes, the 'Hunting course,' the 'Grandsire,' and 'Stedman' methods, &c. Touches or peals on five bells were called 'Doubles,' those on seven bells were called 'Triples,' on nine, 'Caters,' and on eleven 'Cinques.' Touches or peals on an even number of bells—six, eight, ten, or twelve—were called Minor, Major, Royal, and Maximus respectively. Some of the various touches were illustrated on hand-bells by four members of the Ancient Society of College Youths from St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. Stainer concluded by remarking that the merit of a composition was judged by the symmetry of its parts, and the character of the changes introduced. Some changes had a much more pleasing effect than others. The practical side of change-ringing was best studied in the belfry. There alone could the management and control of the bell be learned, and the faculty known as 'rope sight' be acquired, by which a ringer found his way through the maze of changes. Even to those without the time or inclination to fit themselves for taking part in a peal, change-ringing offered a wide field of study and research, and presented many interesting problems, especially in connection with the composition of peals and the proof of their truth or falsity, and the working out of new and untried methods of ringing.

Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, M.P., who occupied the chair, expressed thanks to Mr. Stainer for an interesting lecture on an unhackneyed subject, and there was a discussion in which several bell-ringers took part.

HATIKVAH ('THE HOPE')

THE ZIONISTS' NATIONAL SONG

BY ARTHUR M. FRIEDLÄNDER

Apropos the recent declaration of a British Mandate for Palestine and the great enthusiasm that has greeted its announcement, the following account of the Zionists' National Song should prove of more than passing interest. Regarding the author of the words of this Song, the Jewish Encyclopædia states:

'Herz Naphtali Imber. Austrian Hebrew poet. Born at Zleezov, Galicia, in 1856. Obtained his reputation by the mastery of Hebrew verse displayed in his two books of collected poems, "Barkai" (1877-99). His most famous poem is "Ha-Tikvah," in which the Zionist hope is expressed with great force, and which has been practically adopted as the national anthem of the Zionists.'

Regarding the music of the Song, I am strongly of opinion that its origin is to be found in an ancient melody which is sung to a portion of the 'Hallel' Psalm cxvii. by the Sephardim or Spanish and Portuguese Jews. This melody is also widely known among the Ashkenazim or Jews of Northern Europe as a table hymn, and is sung to Psalm cxxvi. when grace is said after meals. It was on such an occasion that I first heard the version of this melody which has become known as 'Hatikvah.' For this reason also I attach much weight in support of my opinion as to its origin. The English translation of the Hebrew words of this Psalm, first verse, is 'When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like unto them that dream.' How appropriate would the melody sung to this Psalm be for the Zionists' National Song! Space will not permit of a detailed analysis of the music of the Northern and Peninsular Jews, but it should be stated that with very few exceptions it differs to a great extent from that of the Jews of Northern Europe. Being desirous of ascertaining how they became acquainted with the original melody, I consulted the Very Rev. Haham Dr. Gaster, the eminent Orientalist, and elicited from him the opinion that when the Spanish Jews (known in the East as the Franks) migrated northwards through Turkey, they carried the melody with them. In my article 'Notes on Facts and Theories relating to Jewish Music,' which appeared in the Musical Times of January, 1914, I quoted the Rabbi Francis L. Cohen as having stated that 'the Jewish melodies of Northern Europe must evidently be perfectly original, and derived from the Oriental home of the Israelite.' There is the possibility that the ancient melody was known by the Jews of Northern Europe prior to the migration of the Franks. But assuming that Dr. Gaster's opinion is correct, there can be hardly any doubt as to the antiquity of the melody in its original form, and therefore my theory regarding the origin of the Zionist's National Song is also correct.

For the purpose of proving my theory I give the following illustrations. That marked (A) is the ancient version which is to be found in 'Ancient Melodies of the Liturgy of the Spanish and Portuguese Jews,' by De Sola and Aguilar, 1858. That marked (B) is the Zionists' National Song:

PSALM CXVII.

(A) 1st SECTION.

Andante.

Ha - la - lu es a - dô - noi kol gô - yim;
O praise the Lord all ye na - tions;
shab - be - chu - hu Kol ho - um - mim.
laud him all ye peo - ples.

2nd SECTION.

Ki - go - var 'o - lei - nu chas - do vë - e.
For his lov - ing - kind - ness is high - ly o - ver us; and the mes a - dô noi le 'ô lom Ha - la - lu - yoh!
truth of the Lord en - dureth for ever. Praise ye the Lord.

THE ZIONISTS' NATIONAL SONG.

(B) 1st SECTION.

Andante.

Kol ôd ba - lei - vov pe - ni -
While co - er yet un - changed with - in his
- mo né - fesh ye - hu - di hô - my - breast, The in - most heart of Is - rael.
- yo ul - fa - â - seimiz - roch ko - di - yearns, And seek - ing still the bor - ders of . . the
- mo 'a yin lê - tsi - yôn tsô - fi -
East His lov - ing . . gaze . . to Zi - on

2nd SECTION.

- yo ôd lô ov - dô sik - vo - sei - nu hat - turns, So long our hope will nev - er die, Yea - tik - vo han - nô - sho - no ges - felt, lo - this our hope, through a - ges - felt, lo - shuv le - ê - rets a - vô sei - nu lo -
Back to our father's land to fly, . . sei - nu lo -
'vi boh do - vid cho - no - Da - vid dwell.

It will not require much musical ability to see the striking similarity which exists in these illustrations. Particularly is this noticeable in those marked 1st Section; and there are points common to those marked 2nd Section. Attention should be given to the beginning and ending of these latter portions, also to the repetition of the 1st Section and part of the 2nd Section of the Zionists' National Song.

A rendering of the poem into English verse has been made by Mrs. Redcliffe Salaman, and I have been favoured with her permission to quote the first verse in the above illustration.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

In connection with the Special Training Course for Teachers, the following lectures are being given during the summer term: On the 'Evolution of Music from Bach to the present day,' by Mr. Frederick Corder; on matters connected with pianoforte teaching, by Mr. Oscar Beringer and Mr. Tobias Matthay; on the 'Art and practice of choir-training and conducting,' by Mr. Henry Beauchamp; and upon 'Aural training and musical appreciation,' by Mr. Stewart Macpherson.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BATH

The Bath Pump Room Festival was held during the last week of April, and proved an unqualified success. The artists were Mesdames Edna Thornton and Guilhermina Suggia, Misses Myra Hess and Sylvia Nelis, and Messrs. Arthur de Greef, Bronislaw Huberman, and Peter Dawson. Mr. G. B. Robinson, the musical director, conducted for the greater part of the week, but on Saturday Mr. Albert Coates was the conductor, with an orchestra augmented to forty members.

After the evening concert on Saturday, Alderman Cedric Chivers gave a supper at the Grand Pump Room Hotel in honour of Mr. Coates.

BIRMINGHAM

The local musical season practically ends with the month of May, but concerts have been less numerous of late, although sustaining high-class programmes. Special mention has to be made of the excellence of the concerti da camera as given by the Catterall String Quartet, under the auspices of the Birmingham Chamber Concerts Society, the two splendid concerts organized by Mr. Appleby Matthews at the Futurist Theatre, and those of the Birmingham String Quartet and the Arthur Hytch String Quartet.

The last of the Catterall concerts was given at the Royal Society of Artists' Exhibition Room on April 21, when the programme included Mozart's Quartet in E flat, Josef Holbrooke's 'Two Impressions' for String Quartet ('Belgium, 1915' and 'Russian Dance'), and Dvorák's Quartet in F, Op. 96. Outstanding excellences of this splendid organization of string players are their perfect unanimity, rhythmical phrasing, and rich tone-quality.

The last concert of the Birmingham String Quartet took place on April 22, also at the Royal Society of Artists' Room, the artistic personnel comprising Mr. Percival Hodgson (first violin), Mr. Charles W. Bye (second violin), Mr. Paul Beard (viola), and Miss Joan Willis (violinocello). This combination of artists ranks high in the musical profession, and hearers were certainly deeply impressed by their absorbing and artistic interpretations of Schubert's Quartet in A minor, Ravel's remarkable Quartet in F major, and Tchaikovsky's captivating and melodious Quartet, Op. 11, in D major.

The Arthur Hytch String Quartet (Messrs. Arthur Hytch, Frank Cantell, Harold Mills, and Frederick Bye) is entirely a local organization, but has already shown an ensemble denoting careful study and artistic perception. The second—and last—concert of these players was given at the Midland Institute on April 27, when the programme included Elgar's beautiful String Quartet.

The last of the Mathew Stevenson orchestral concerts, given at the Town Hall on April 15, attracted a packed audience of enthusiastic Wagnerians. It was the greatest success Mr. Stevenson has yet achieved. Everyone present seemed delighted with the programme, while the impressive playing of the orchestra showed remarkable progress and a perfect understanding between the conductor and his forces. The orchestral pieces included the 'Mastersingers' Overture, the Prelude to 'Lohengrin,' the 'Siegfried Idyll,' the Prelude to Act 3 of the 'Mastersingers,' the 'Good Friday' music from 'Parsifal,' and the 'Love Duet' from 'Tristan and Isolde,' delivered by Mr. Frank Mullings and Miss Rosina Buckman. Mr. Frank Mullings also contributed three songs—'Adrift,' by Bantock, 'Love Song,' by Brahms, and Schubert's 'Erl King,' in which he was accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Walter Randall with perfect art.

A Chappell 'Ballad' concert at the Town Hall, on April 19, brought Madame d'Alvarez, Miss Carmen Hill, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Miss Margaret Cooper, and Mr. Frederic Lamond before a delighted audience. The Queen's Hall Light Orchestra played under the direction of Mr. Alick Maclean.

At the last Appleby Matthews Sunday Orchestral Concert at the Futurist Theatre, on April 25, the popular and energetic conductor was presented by his admirers with a silver-mounted ebony baton as a token of esteem and in appreciation of the splendid work done by him during an uninterrupted season that had continued from September 7, 1919.

The controversial question respecting the formation and position of the City Orchestra was fully entered into at a meeting of the committee elected to discuss the arrangements. Mr. Appleby Matthews, the appointed conductor, submitted a scheme providing a series of concerts in the city beginning in the early autumn. The orchestra will be mainly drawn from local sources. There are to be forty-eight concerts (six of which will be symphony concerts on Wednesdays), eight Saturday evening concerts, and thirty-four Sunday concerts. Mr. Appleby Matthews was also requested to prepare a scheme for giving concerts with the Municipal Orchestra in the courts and alleys of the slum districts of the city. At a subsequent meeting of the committee Mr. Appleby Matthews was appointed Director of Music in addition to his post of conductor. In this capacity he will have entire responsibility for and charge of the scheme adopted by the committee at its former meeting.

A pianoforte recital was given at the Royal Society of Artists' Room on May 5, by Miss Freda Cahill, a new pianist who displayed considerable interpretative gifts.

A new musical organization, the Edgbaston Amateur String Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Carl Zimmer, held its first concert at the Five Ways King Edward's School on April 28. The soloists were Mrs. Carl Zimmer (violin), Miss Nancie Bashford (pianoforte), and Mr. J. Bierman (vocalist). The orchestra comprises twenty-five instrumentalists, who have evidently been well schooled, judging from the pleasing ensemble they attained in Mozart's Serenade, 'Two Melodies' by Grieg, a Larghetto by Elgar, and other pieces.

BOURNEMOUTH

A season full of strenuous activity backed up by genuine enthusiasm has now reached its close, the curtain being rung down upon a very vigorous conclusion amid the congratulatory acclamations of the regular habitués of the Winter Gardens concerts.

It may be said with perfect justice that the past series of Symphony Concerts has been fully equal to any that have gone before; in fact, the opinion is practically unanimous that in some respects an advance has been made.

Of Mr. Dan Godfrey's rare ability as conductor and general manager and of his unrivalled skill as an organizer of every type of concert it is rather late in the day to speak; Bournemouth musicians, at any rate, are thoroughly awake to his unique qualities, even though perhaps not fully aware how indispensable such qualities are to the well-being of a town whose chief claim to a peculiar attractiveness lies in the sustained efficiency of its permanent Orchestra.

Nor must it be forgotten that it is to the foresight and courage of the municipal authorities of Bournemouth that we are indebted for this great public musical service—a fact that rather puts to shame the recent scoffings of a well-known English conductor and impresario at (as he maintained) the complete failure of municipalities to forward in any way the interests of musical art.

Regarding the members of the Orchestra, at least it can be said that none has failed to give of his very best. Many are exceedingly artistic performers, a circumstance with which we are acquainted by reason of the numerous solo passages whose fine effectiveness remains in our recollection. The performances of the band as a whole have been worthy of the highest commendation, and the somewhat lighter work which it will now enjoy during the summer months will come as a respite that is certainly its due.

Mention must be made of the last four concerts of the season. On April 15 the most imposing work in the programme was the magnificent E minor Symphony of Brahms, which, despite the apparent necessity for an increased number of strings, has never before been heard to greater advantage here. Other important and effective compositions performed at these final concerts were Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Humperdinck's Overture to 'Hansel and Gretel,' Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony—a splendid performance, the slow movement being particularly beautiful—and, in lighter vein, a 'Concert Valse' by Glazounov and a quaint little trifle, entitled 'Danse des Quadrupèdes,' by Miss Bruno d'Arba.

A novelty here was the tone-poem 'Serbia,' by Edric Cundell, which was conducted by the composer at the twenty-seventh concert. The music reveals promise, and as this effective composition is the work of one who is still a student, we shall look forward to further productions from his pen with considerable interest.

Bournemouth was delighted to welcome its old musical friend, Sir Charles Stanford, at the twenty-eighth concert. This distinguished musician conducted two of his own works—an Irish Concertino for violin and violoncello (first time here), and the Irish Rhapsody No. 4. The new work does not reveal the composer in quite his most genial aspect, although it is conceived in his customary scholarly vein. The Irish Rhapsody is a noble piece of music that should be in the repertoire of every orchestra.

Miss Rhoda Backhouse and Mr. Ivor James were the solo performers in the Concertino, their playing being of an exceedingly musicianly order. The soloists at the remaining concerts were Miss Anne Godfrey, who was a little too inclined to turn the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto into a virtuoso display piece; Miss Craigie Ross, well known in local circles, who successfully introduced to Bournemouth Liapounov's 'Rhapsody on Ukrainian Themes' for pianoforte and orchestra, and whose playing revealed all the artistry that has come to be associated with her; and Mr. Herbert Fryer, whose performance of the Schumann Pianoforte Concerto was efficient, though hardly so inspiring as other performances we have heard by this extremely capable pianist.

BRISTOL

One of the chief features of the past month has been the visit of Mr. Frederic Lamond, whose beautiful work at the pianoforte in a Beethoven programme gave all music-lovers a memorable evening at Victoria Rooms on April 12.

West Bristol Choral Society of about seventy voices, with a small orchestra, gave Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter' and Hubert Bath's 'Shon Maclean' with considerable success at Victoria Rooms on April 14. Under Mr. Charles Read's guidance, the choral and orchestral forces showed that they had carefully rehearsed these interesting works. Mrs. Charles Read and Mr. Montague Hook were the soloists.

Cotham Grove Choral Society—another choir of about seventy voices that is doing good work in its district—at its second concert on April 15 presented Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion,' with several excellent local principals. The conductor, Mr. F. G. Taylor, should be pleased with the recognition that these performances evoked.

Bristol Choral Society closed its season at Colston Hall on April 17 with a splendid performance of Gounod's 'Faust.' The principals were Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Gertrude Higgs, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, Mr. Robert Radford, and Mr. Charles Knowles. The whole opera went with a magnificent swing; it was a presentation both vocally and instrumentally that could rarely be excelled. Mr. Riseley and his famous choir, with the chief singers, came in for quite an ovation at the close. The programme provided a glorious close to a most delightful musical season. We fear, however, it has not been a profitable one, despite the huge attendances. Next season's prices are to be raised to meet the increased cost.

Miss Rébé Hillier, a young and full-toned contralto trained by Madame Minadieu, of Birmingham, who sang successfully at the Cecilian Society's concert recently, gave her first song recital on April 21 at Victoria Rooms. She was assisted by Mr. Leonard G. Dennis on the violoncello and Mr. Herbert Parsons at the pianoforte. Notable additions to Miss Violet Vanbrugh's recital at Colston Hall on April 23 were the pianoforte playing of Mr. William G. James—an Australian pianist of distinction—and the violoncello playing of Miss Alice Elieson, who also sang several of John Alden Carpenter's Chinese songs.

The organ recitals at St. Mary Redcliff during the month have again drawn very large attendances. Among the executants have been Mr. Harold A. Jeboult, a well-known Taunton organist, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham, of Alexandra Palace, London. The latter included several well-known choral preludes in his programme. Mr. Ralph Morgan, the St. Mary's organist, deserves all praise for valuable spade work consistently maintained. Mr. A. G. Colborn, at St. Stephen's, has also given enjoyable organ recitals, drawing upon American works for one interesting programme.

There was a great meeting of local supporters of Mr. George Riseley at the Art Gallery on April 29, when the Lord Mayor took the chair and presented the veteran, on behalf of his grateful fellow-citizens, with a thousand guineas and an address in celebration of his jubilee of musical work in the city.

Perhaps the chief delight of the month was the playing of a Chopin programme by Pachmann at Colston Hall on April 30, before a very large audience, who gave him the warmest of welcomes.

CORNWALL

A Musical Society has been formed for West Cornwall to encourage amateurs and afford opportunities for improvement—desiderata at present almost entirely non-existent in this district. Organized by Mrs. H. Rich (Redruth), Miss M. L. Wright (Tuckingmill), the Rev. W. W. Bickford (St. Day), and Dr. C. Rivers (Redruth), its membership is not confined to performers, but is open to all amateurs in the wider acceptance of the term. It is intended to give a number of concerts each year, available for subscribers and hon. members. The first of these took place at Redruth on May 6. Redruth Choral Society sang a chorus by Elgar, 'The Dance,' selections from 'Samson and Delilah' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater,' also Mozart's 'Hail, mighty Neptune.' Brahms's Sonata in G for violin and pianoforte, Frank Bridge's 'Three Miniatures' for pianoforte trio, and a cycle of songs by John Ireland were also in the programme.

Another Musical Society has been formed at Chacewater, for which Comrades of the War are primarily responsible. A choir has been organized and trained by the Rev. W. W. Bickford, who came many miles in all weathers for the purpose, and included in his curriculum voice-production, sight-reading, ear-training, and glee singing. The season closed with a concert on April 22, when the principal numbers were 'You stole my love,' 'In harbour green,' and 'I live not where I love,' by Geoffrey Shaw.

There can be few localities in Cornwall without a male choir, for every month new ones spring up and old ones are resuscitated. Mr. A. J. Whale has formed a large choir in the scattered district around Blackwater, and has, moreover, established an orchestra under the leadership of Mr. E. A. Oats. These choral and orchestral forces gave a concert on May 6 at St. Agnes. Mousehole Male Choir (Mr. Fred Roach) made its first appearance on April 24, after re-organization, and sang 'By Babylon's wave' and 'The destruction of Gaza' (De Rille), and several part-songs.

The reputation of Bodmin Male Choir was considerably advanced by its singing on April 14 of choruses and part-songs, including 'Strike the lyre' (Cooke), 'The long day closes' (Sullivan), 'In absence' (Abt), and 'Sweet and low' (Barnby). Blend and expression were alike excellent. Songs were sung by Madame Maria Yelland. Truro People's Palace Male Choir (conductor, Major Gill) and the town band (Mr. L. Abram) combined in a programme of choral and instrumental items on April 18.

News is to hand of a Ladies' Choir at the high-lying village of Callington, where Mrs. Prosser Thomas's excellent training resulted in a thoroughly enjoyable performance of Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater' on April 25.

A chamber concert—pianoforte and violoncello—was given at Helston on May 1 by Mr. Stanley Wilson and Miss Dorothy Thuell, with vocal solos by Miss Ruth Hosken.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The indoor concert season at Coventry is practically at an end, and the advent of the Corporation summer concerts—which are given in Naul's Mill Park each week-end by the leading military bands, assisted by vocalists—is awaited with interest. The preliminary list shows that the customary standard of high-class military band music will be maintained. Special alfresco musical arrangements are in progress in connection with the civic reception to be accorded Prince Albert on his visit to Coventry, which takes place on June 11.

Coventry Choral Society gave its annual concert in the Empire Theatre on April 20, Mr. John Potter conducting. The principal choral works heard were 'The Mad Fire-rider' (Hugo Wolf), 'The Dance of the Sword' (Priestley-Smith), and 'The Sea-shell' (Coleridge-Taylor). Stanford's 'Corydon, arise,' and 'Out of the Silence' (Cyril Jenkins) were also performed. Miss Olive Sturges sang the 'Prayer' from 'Tosca,' 'Je suis Titania,' and a number of ballads. Mr. Arthur Catterall's reading of the Andante and Finale from the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto aroused enthusiasm. Miss Florence Hanson was accompanist, and also contributed pianoforte compositions of Debussy and Cyril Scott.

Bridge's choral ballad 'The Flag of England' was a timely and appropriate selection at a miscellaneous concert given by the Coventry Philharmonic Society within a week of St. George's Day. Excerpts from 'Hiawatha' and 'A Tale of Old Japan' (Coleridge-Taylor), and 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean' (Hubert Bath), completed the vocal side of the programme, which was conducted by Mr. Charles Matthews. Miss C. M. Gibbs (pianoforte), Miss Constance Flinn (violin), and Mr. W. Hill (violoncello) collaborated in a masterly interpretation of Schubert's Scherzo in D minor, the Finale from the Trio in D minor (Mendelssohn), and 'Ave Maris Stella' (Grieg).

At Leamington the fifth Corporation concert took place in the Town Hall on April 15, when the London Trio provided an interesting programme. The members of the trio—Miss Amina Goodwin (pianoforte), M. Louis Pecska (violin), and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse (violoncello)—also contributed solos.

Leamington Orchestral Society gave a second subscription concert in the Town Hall on April 17, when Mr. Walter Warren conducted a programme which included Symphony No. 4 (second and third movements) (Dvorák), 'Suite de Concert' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'Prometheus' Overture (Beethoven), 'Lyric Suite' (Grieg), and 'Shepherd's Hey' (Percy Grainger). The vocalist was Miss Dora Labbette.

Revived in post-war conditions by Mr. Lionel Wiggins, Leamington Choral Society gave its first concert on April 22. 'The Crusaders' (Gade) was sung with Miss Mary Foster, Mr. W. Heseltine, and Mr. John Huntingdon as soloists, and an orchestral accompaniment (directed by Mr. Walter Warren); numerous part-songs were also heard.

The sixth and final Corporation concert took place on May 13, when Miss Gertrude Peppercorn gave a pianoforte recital at the Town Hall.

DEVON

Honiton Choral Society has made a fresh beginning with Mr. Lancelot Holden, of Exeter, as its new conductor. Supported by an orchestra of twenty players, led by Miss Martin, the Society, on April 13, gave Stanford's 'The Revenge' with vigour and taste, and has never sung better. The orchestra also played a set of waltzes by Coleridge-Taylor. The season was successfully closed at Budleigh Salterton on the same date, when the Musical Society effectively performed Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' with orchestral accompaniment. The principals were Madame Isabel Hickson, Mr. Ward Kennedy, and Mr. Walter Belgrove. The conductor, Mr. Hugh Fowler, was made the recipient of a presentation baton.

At a concert at Exeter, on April 30, the male choir, conducted by Mr. W. J. Cotton, sang 'The Roundelay' (Beale), 'Down in a flow'ry vale' (Festa), 'The image of the rose' (Reichardt), 'Father of heroes' (Callcott), and other pieces by Caldecott. The Isca Glee Singers sang quartets by Elliot Button ('The keel row') and Bishop ('Sleep, gentle lady').

With the idea of forming a Choral Union for Exmouth parish, the choirs of Holy Trinity and St. Andrew's amalgamated on May 2, and performed Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus,' conducted by Mr. F. Morley, with Mr. F. G. Bradford at the organ.

Barnstaple Male Choir is fulfilling a long-felt want in this town, where musical intelligence is of a high standard. Trained by Mr. Alfred Long, the organization has steadily advanced in its art, and has already given several concerts. On May 6 the singers performed very well in a programme comprising Walford Davies's 'Hymn before action,' 'The little sandman' (West), 'Martyrs of the arena' (De Rille), and H. J. Edwards's charming piece, 'Give me thy heart.' The Barnstaple Musical Society, of which Dr. H. J. Edwards is conductor, brought its season to a close on May 10 with a brilliant performance of 'Elijah.' Dr. Edwards had a good grip of his forces and of the work, and the choir sang very finely in spite of two accidents. The orchestra was led by Mr. Percy Parish, and the principal vocalists were Miss Hilda Stowar, Miss May Keene, Mr. Ward Kennedy, and Mr. Charles Knowles.

Exeter Oratorio Society, being still without a hall, was again permitted to give performances in the Cathedral, and for the Spring Festival on May 5 the works selected were Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria,' Mackenzie's 'Procession of the Ark' (from 'The Rose of Sharon'), and 'Elijah.' Mr. Allan Allen conducted the first two numbers, and Dr. Edwards the Mendelssohn work. We have heard this choiring better than on this occasion. Again, while the strings of the band (led by Mr. A. J. James) played well, the brass was painfully loud and out of tune with the organ. The latter instrument was skilfully played by Dr. Ernest Bullock.

Touring Devon with Miss Violet Vanbrugh in April, Miss Alice Elieson and Mr. William G. James played Böellmann's Sonata, Op. 40, for violoncello and pianoforte. Miss Elieson's violoncello solos (by Squire and Popper) were excellent in every way, and much more enjoyable than her singing, for it was impossible to follow her reading of two Chinese tone-poems by John Alden Carpenter, 'The Odalisque' and 'To a young gentleman.' Mr. James's playing of three pieces by Debussy (Prelude, 'Danse de la Poupée,' and Arabesque No. 2), and Liszt's 'Rakoczy March' was quite good, though his expression was somewhat obvious. An effort was made on May 3 to inaugurate chamber concerts, but Mr. George East (violin) and Mr. Douglas Durston (pianoforte)—two young musicians of high aim and good attainments—did not meet with the support they deserved. Their readings of sonatas by César Franck and Grieg (G major) were truly enjoyable. Mr. Durston's solos included Cyril Scott's 'Danse Nègre,' Percy Fletcher's 'Little Sabots,' and a Ballade (G minor) by Brahms. Mr. East played an Idylle by Coleridge-Taylor and 'Petite Chanson' by Albert Sammons. Miss Sarah Smith contributed some interesting songs with temperament and artistic insight.

Plymouth Y.M.C.A. has formed a complete string orchestra among its members, which Mr. George Briggs has brought to a high standard. Its first concert, on May 5, included some of the incidental music to 'The Merchant of Venice,' by Frederick Rosse—Intermezzo ('Portia'), Oriental March, and 'March of the Doges'—Percy Fletcher's 'Woodland Pictures,' a 'Petite Suite de Concert' by Coleridge-Taylor, and three light pieces by Reginald Somerville. Violin solos were played by Mrs. Hall Parlbly, and violoncello solos by Miss Thelma Reiss-Smith.

A novelty played by M. Francis de Bourignon at a pianoforte recital at Exeter on April 30 was 'L'Almanach aux images,' by G. Grovlez, a suite of four numbers. The music is inspired by poems by Tristan Klingsor. The first, 'Les Marionnettes,' describes the spasmodic movements of puppets; the second is a witty hunting song; the third, 'Petites Litanies de Jésus,' is naive and mystic; and the fourth, 'Les Anes,' is an attempt to show that donkeys must be taken seriously, and are wrongly considered absurd, for they have their sentimental side, and, according to Scripture, have taken part in glorious events. It was not possible to find in this last number all the composer vouched for, but the suite was distinctly attractive. The programme also included music by John Ireland and Debussy, and opened with a Prelude and Fugue by Bach.

To members of Torquay and District Organists' Association, Dr. Ernest Bullock, organist of Exeter Cathedral, lectured on April 28, on the general aspects and difficulties in the life of a professional musician. He stated that all should have a great sense of a message to deliver, and urged the advancement of music by British composers. The Rev. R. Moreton Pritchard lectured on Chopin at Torquay on May 5, and Mr. Walter L. Twinning played several waltzes, nocturnes, and mazurkas, the Ballade in C minor, and the Sonata in B flat minor.

Mr. A. H. Griffiths gave an organ recital in St. Paul's Church, Stonehouse, Plymouth, on April 25.

DUBLIN

An Irish Society of Composers has recently been formed with the object of promoting the interests of composers resident in Ireland, or of Irish descent, by means of concerts, lectures, and debates, the formation of a chamber music society, the establishment of a local publishing house, and the introduction into concert programmes of suitable items by Irish composers. The hon. president is Prof. Robert O'Dwyer, who has for coadjutors Mr. Michael Kavanagh (hon. secretary) and Mr. E. J. Taylor (hon. treasurer). The offices are at 13, Fleet Street, Dublin. Already the Society has enrolled a goodly membership, and great hopes are entertained of its successful future.

On April 23 there was a distribution of prizes at the Royal Irish Academy of Music (Westland Row) in the Lecture Hall of Leinster House, on which occasion the Most Rev. Dr. Bernard, Provost of Trinity College, delivered an interesting address on the state of music in Ireland. Evidently the Provost imagined that the Academy had been only fifty or sixty years in existence, but its records go back to the year 1848, that is, seventy-two years ago. The prize-winners gave a very creditable display, and the string orchestra, under Prof. Esposito, brightened the proceedings considerably. Dr. Bernard paid a well-merited tribute to the late Dr. Charles Marchant, whose loss to the organ school was keenly felt.

Nothing can more forcibly testify to the perennial popularity of Gilbert and Sullivan opera than the crowded houses which greeted the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company during a three weeks' season at the Gaiety Theatre that terminated with 'The Mikado' on April 24.

On April 27 at the Antient Concert Rooms a violin and pianoforte recital was given by Messrs. Albert Sammons and William Murdoch. This music-making was a venture by Mr. John Mundy, and achieved the success it so well deserved. To Dublin music-lovers it was a real treat to hear such fine artists.

Two organ recitals given during Feis week at St. Patrick's Cathedral by Mr. W. E. Hopkins, the brilliant sub-organist, were well attended and much appreciated. Mr. Hopkins showed much judgment in his selections.

Yet another Irish musical organization is announced. Launched on May 10, and formally inaugurated on May 17, it is to be known as the Irish Musical League, and has for its objects the cultivation of a high standard of music, the foundation of an Irish Symphony Orchestra, and propaganda with a view to the realisation of the demand for the building of two or three good concert halls at Dublin. The chairman is Mr. Dermot O'Brien, and the hon. secretary is Capt. F. J. Romanes. The head offices are to be at Dublin, with branches at Belfast and Cork.

If both of the new Irish musical organizations took up the subject of raising the status—and salaries—of organists, it would be so much to the good. Recently advertisements have appeared with the tempting lure of £40 to £60 a year for parish organists, and a Cathedral vacancy was announced at a pittance of £70 a year.

The conversion of the Antient Concert Rooms into a picture-house is a sign of the times. During the war it was used as a warehouse, but it was the venue of this year's Feis Ceoil (reported in the Competition Festival Recora). Now it is to be known as the Palace Cinema Theatre, and the inaugural performance took place on May 12. An excellent orchestra is provided, under the direction of Mr. John Mundy.

Verdi's noble 'Requiem' was given at Woodbrook, on May 19, by the Æolian Musical Society, under the capable and resourceful baton of Mr. F. H. Weaving.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT

The Chappell Ballad Concert in the Philharmonic Hall on April 20 was a quite delightful example of its kind, and sustained by attractive personalities in Madame d'Alvarez, Miss Carmen Hill, Mr. Ben Davies, Miss Margaret Cooper, and Mr. Frederic Lamond, with the Queen's Hall Light Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Alick Maclean, a combination whose crown is the fine brass and wood-wind departments. Mr. Liddle was an accompanist beyond excelling, and Dr. A. W. Pollitt provided some effective organ backgrounds.

The Crane Hall musical Wednesday afternoons have again provided a notable feature in a rapidly waning season. The programmes and performances have been kept at a very high level by players who have included such outstanding artists as Mr. Anderson Tyrer and Mr. Edward Isaacs, pianists whose masterly technical equipments are governed by high qualities of heart and mind. Another player, Miss Alma de Seyfried, also showed skill and taste, especially in Debussy's 'Poissons d'Or' and as pianist in a new combination, the Manchester Ladies' Trio, Miss Dorothy Crewe again exhibited fine executive qualities and feeling, although the distinctly dominant partner in Tchaikovsky's Trio, Op. 50, in which her associates—Miss Jo Lamb (violin) and Miss Kathleen Moorhouse (violinello)—combined in an interesting performance. Another violinist whose playing found favour was Miss Constance le Mesurier. The singers included Miss Marie Brunskill, Miss Jean Alexander, Miss Marion Browning, Miss Bertha Lester, Mr. Watcyn Dodd, and Mr. Randolph Giles, who sang Hatton's fine bass song, 'Revenge,' extremely well.

The accompanists, who well deserve an approving line, were Mr. G. J. Freeman and Mr. A. E. Workman.

Male-voice choirs of the calibre of the St. Helen's Glee Club are rare and welcome visitors, and on April 14 this organization, under its conductor Dr. S. B. Siddall's forceful if occasionally eccentric beat, sang with power and also delicacy of tone in Elgar's delightful 'It's oh, to be a wild wind' and 'Feasting I watch.' The Glee Club also supported Miss Enid Cruickshank in her expressive singing of Brahms's Rhapsody for alto solo, with pianoforte accompaniment played by Mr. Arthur Dicks. But the well-trained and responsive singers were best heard in such unaccompanied items as J. W. Elliott's 'The Enraged Schoolmaster' (solo by Dr. Siddall), Erskine's 'In praise of Tobacco,' and Wainwright's 'Life's a bumper,' old-time friends which take some displacing in old-time affections.

There may be an explanation for the fewness of male-voice choirs and glee-clubs, but it would seem that too little use is being made of abundant material and that opportunities for cultivating one of the most enjoyable recreations in life are being disregarded. It is more difficult to explain the fewness of female choral societies. There is, however, at least one notable organization in the Liverpool Ladies' Choir, which has long been kept in great efficiency by the ability and enthusiasm of its founder and directress, Madame Fanny de Boufflers. She has made her Ladies' Choir a 'nest of singing birds,' and the concert they gave at Crane Hall on May 6, with the assistance of the Liverpool Vocalists' Union of male voices, was a stimulating example of what can be done with material ready to hand, if well trained and well directed. Led by Mr. T. Rimmer, the band and choir were over a hundred strong.

Under the able direction of Mr. J. E. Matthews, the Oxtan and Claughton Orchestral Society, a large combination of amateur and professional players, at its concert in Birkenhead Town Hall on May 15 very fully sustained its reputation in a programme that included the 'Meistersingers' Overture, the 'Unfinished' Symphony, and the accompaniment to Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, in which the solo part was cleanly and cleverly played by Miss Edith Byrom, a young Liverpool pianist who is fulfilling her early promise of distinction. The vocalist was Miss May Williams, a contralto favourably heard in 'My heart is weary' and Elgar's 'In Haven.'

At the annual general meeting of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, held on May 18, the chairman, Mr. J. H. Kenion, presented a highly satisfactory report of the past season, which was very successful both musically and financially. Reference was made to the splendid orchestral performances by a band second to none, and to the merits of the choir, trained by Dr. Pollitt. For the first time in the Society's history, two ladies, Mrs. Wilfred Heyworth and Miss Julia M. Oakshott, have been elected members of the committee.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Passing in mental review the orchestral music of the past winter, the 'L'Extase' and 'Divine Poem' of Scriabin stand forth in the symphonic music very much as the twin peaks of the Langdale Pikes dominate the scene as one gazes westward across Windermere Lake. Their rugged grandeur and bold outline arrest the eye to the exclusion of loftier heights. The 'Divine Poem' has not for me, as for some, the vastness of the sea—the illimitable horizon, the heave and swell of many waters (Wagner nearly always produces that impression on my mind)—but it has elemental grandeur of another order. The swirling currents of its themes, laden with mystery, romance, legend, man's strife with nature and his alternations of despair and triumph, and the sublimity of ultimate accomplishment, all swept along with the impressive breadth and majesty of some vast river flood—a Nile or Mississippi: such seem to me its outstanding characteristics, producing the sense of communion with tremendous natural forces working silently but irresistibly to a destined climax. Coates had played it at Liverpool and Bradford in the same week, so Manchester got a new work played with the ease of comparative familiarity by one who is to Scriabin as Richter was to Wagner, that furnished the real artistic culmination of the season.

In concerted music a similar distinction attaches to the first performance here (March 20) by Mr. Felix Salmond of Elgar's new Violoncello Concerto. Both soloist and conductor had worked together elsewhere earlier in the week, and had evidently drunk deep at the well of Elgarian inspiration. I do not think it is so eloquent of the composer's genius as are the Symphonies or the Violin Concerto. It struck me as having close affinity of style and message with the recent chamber works; nowhere else are we made to realise so surely the almost unique power of Elgar's reticence of manner in the expression of deep emotion. His hearers feel that here is not an affectation of control. Galsworthy and Maselfield have the same secret of understatement. In the Parliamentary debate on the War Graves question Asquith in his few sentences exhibited the same power. The profuse, the expansive personality never cuts so deep as this quiet intensity when soul speaks to soul about some grief or happiness too big, too full for words. Anyone studying the sixty bars or so of the slow movement, or, better still, the tranquillo about thirty bars from the end of the work, will be left in no doubt as to this supreme quality in Elgar's work. Opinions will differ as to his solution of the recurring problem of violoncello solo with orchestral accompaniment, but there can be only one view amongst sensitive hearers as to the emotional content of the work or the player's sensibility in this respect. When the artist feels his Elgar he can grip his audience as in a vice.

With no spring season of opera in prospect, the spate of Manchester music, running bank high and even overflowing a few weeks ago, has now sunk to not much more than a trickle, and were it not for the provision of noon-time programmes, of which I wrote last month, the river-bed would be quite dry. One of the distinguished performances at the Tuesday mid-day series has been of Brahms's Piano-forte Quartet, with Mrs. John Bridge associated with her husband and Messrs. Park and Hock. This number proved quite an ideal work for assimilation on such an occasion. Sound judgment in the choice of chamber-music for these affairs will win many adherents, and feed the regular series of quartet concerts.

Years ago Berlioz was unknown here; Hallé cured that. When Richter came, Liszt was very little known, and 'not to like Liszt' was almost a hall-mark of Manchester musicianship. Richter laboured steadily to remove this reproach, and succeeded. Probably no fine composer in recent times has been so reviled as Max Reger, and again a small band of Manchester men and women have striven to remove any apprehensions which may exist here. Mr. Samuel Langford, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Merrick, and the Edith Robinson Quartet, are to be remembered, for on various occasions, and especially on April 30, the above-named Quartet gave a fine performance of a really big Reger work. Such readings win gradually a sympathetic understanding, and service thus rendered is invaluable in establishing a composer's reputation.

The annual concert of the Ancoats and Salford Girls' Institute Choirs, conducted by Miss Say Ashworth, gave an unwonted freshness to local musical experiences. To hear tiny tots in short socks sing Elgar's Bavarian Highland 'Dance' or Walford Davies's setting of Blake's 'How sweet is the shepherd's lot,' with a small orchestra (the latter had been specially orchestrated for this occasion), and remember their recent home surroundings, with parents 'at the war' or 'on munitions,' made one realise the priceless blessedness of such work as Miss Ashworth is doing—something far beyond any particular degree of expertness that may be attained. Wonderful, that with such C-3 material any B category results could be reached! Mr. A. L. Camden conducted a small orchestra drawn from Hallé players in orchestral miniatures by Sibelius, Lully, Grainger, and Délibes.

Since 1899 the students at Mr. Albert Cross's School of Music have performed operas in the spring-time. There was a necessary suspension in 1916, but a resumption took place in May with Goring Thomas's 'The Golden Web,' the plot of which is laid about 1750, and deals with the trafficking in marriages without licenses by disreputable clerics at the tavern of 'The Golden Web' in the precincts of the old Fleet Prison. It is a comedy opera with many piquant touches and amiable, tuneful music. The opening was quite tentative, but soon matters warmed up, Messrs. F. E. Smeaton, Jenson, Chesters Thompson, and Fenton, and Misses Walmsley and Fish giving highly satisfactory performances. In the dialogue work there was quite a marked colloquial tendency, which, though laughable and almost enjoyable in 'amateur operatics,' should find no place in student efforts. The orchestral playing was on a much higher level than anything I have yet heard on similar occasions.

The choir conducted by Mr. Alfred Higson from Sale and District (Manchester suburbs) was successful at Morecambe Festival. This organization had been able to 'carry on' during the war, and to find outlets for choral singing which kept its members in something like reasonable practice. Always in the first flight, they have now attained a leading position, and will perhaps bear aloft the Manchester flag in future years, as did the Manchester Orpheus Male-Voice Choir.

More promising still was the emergence of a men's choir from Crossley's motor car works. This should encourage the formation of choral bodies at many big establishments. South-East Lancashire is far behind the Clyde in this respect.

Manchester City Council has made a capital move in appointing a musical adviser to its education committee in the person of Dr. Walter Carroll. For many years he has been on the staff of the Manchester Royal College of Music, and since 1893 has taught harmony there. The new post offers wide opportunities for encouraging musical development amongst the young, and he has resigned old positions to devote his time and energies to the direction of the musical training of selected teachers and generally supervising the musical instruction of school children. A few facts: In seventy-two out of three hundred and fifty schools the children are encouraged in musical appreciation; eighteen hundred out of three thousand five hundred teachers are attending lectures and demonstrations. I have seen at close quarters the preparatory work amongst student-teachers, and can testify to its quality. Here surely is a potential factor in the creation of a generation of music-lovers to come. I want to see Manchester folk getting busy with an educational competitive musical festival as a contribution in the same direction.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE AND DISTRICT

On April 16 the Armstrong College Dramatic Society gave a performance of Euripides' 'Electra' before the Classical Association. The music for the chorus was written by Mr. W. G. Whittaker, who accompanied on the pianoforte. The atmosphere of the ancient modes was cleverly realised, without the music being in any way archaic.

The last meeting for the season of the Newcastle and District Church Musicians' Union was held on April 17 in one of the local parish churches, when Dr. J. E. Hutchinson delivered a lecture on modern organ music. The illustrations, drawn from the works of Cyril Scott, John Ireland, Elgar, Debussy, Boëllmann, Franck, and Widor, were admirably performed by the lecturer.

Pachmann visited the town on April 21, and gave a Chopin recital. Unfortunately, owing to lack of a suitable concert-hall, performances of this description have to be held in theatres or cinemas, necessitating their taking place in the afternoon, when many music-lovers are otherwise engaged. The Queen's Hall Light Orchestra gave a programme on the following afternoon that included Eric Coates's 'Summer Days' Suite, Sibelius's 'Valse Triste,' Nicolai's 'Merry Wives' Overture, and Liszt's Piano-forte Concerto No. 1, in E flat, with Mr. Frederic Lamond as soloist. Mr. Alick Maclean conducted.

On Sunday, April 25, the Newcastle Philharmonic Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. E. L. Bainton, performed Schubert's Symphony in C, the 'Mastersingers' Overture, Borodin's 'Danse Polovstienne' ('Prince Igor'), and Haydn's Violoncello Concerto, Mr. Carl Fuchs being the soloist in the last-named work. The vocalist was Mr. William Hendry, who sang 'The Organ-grinder's' songs from Elgar's 'Starlight Express.'

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union gave an interesting recital in the Cathedral on April 28, when the choral items were Bach's Motet, 'Be not afraid,' Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm, S. S. Wesley's 'Let us lift up our heart,' and Elgar's 'Go, song of mine.' All were finely sung. Mr. Herbert Parker, with the assistance of a semi-chorus, gave a beautiful interpretation of Bach's Cantata No. 158, 'May peace be unto thee,' singing also the solo in the Wesley anthem, and two numbers from Vaughan Williams's 'Five Mystical Songs' for baritone. Welcome additions to the programme were the violin solos of Mr. Arthur Catterall, who played the Andante from Elgar's Violin Concerto, and Tartini's Sonata in G minor, with exquisite taste. The artistic organ accompaniment of Mr. W. Ellis should not pass without notice, while Mr. W. G. Whittaker directed with his accustomed skill.

The Durham Amateur Operatic Society performed the 'Gondoliers' during Easter Week, under the conductorship of Mr. C. B. Maude.

The Carlisle Choral Society gave a concert on April 17, the programme including Bach's 'Be not afraid,' and a concert-version of Gounod's 'Faust.'

The Blackheath Branch of the British Music Society gave a concert of Arnold Bax's pianoforte and vocal works on April 28, at 10, St. German's Place, London, S.E.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

In connection with the 'Little Movement' at Nottingham an interesting song and pianoforte recital was given on April 21, by Miss Helen Rootham and Mr. Eric Paul May. Miss Rootham relied mainly on traditional and Old English airs, such as 'O Death, rock me to sleep,' the authorship of which is credited to Anne Boleyn. An appropriate simplicity of style distinguished the vocalist's contributions. Mr. May bracketed two strongly contrasting numbers, Ilynsky's 'Berceuse' in G flat and Schumann's 'Faschings-schwank aus Wien.' Other items were Debussy's 'Jumbo's Lullaby' and 'Danse,' also the short but striking impressionistic sketch, 'The Punch and Judy Show,' of Goossens. The 'International Celebrity' subscription concerts ended on April 27 with a recital by Pachmann, who has been a frequent visitor to Nottingham of late years, and has established an intimacy with local audiences. It would be superfluous to review a Pachmann programme. The famous pianist was exceptionally generous in the matter of additional pieces, and his audience extremely enthusiastic.

A lack in concert-giving has been atoned for by musical fare in the local theatres. The week beginning April 19 found Messenger's sparkling 'Monsieur Beaucaire' at the Theatre Royal, with Miss Sara Melita as Lady Mary Carlyle. During the same week Mr. John Ridding's Opera Company visited the Grand Theatre, when an interesting feature was a first presentation of a hitherto unperformed opera by Vincent Wallace, entitled 'A Daughter of the Nile,' that attracted a large audience and was well received. Like so many operas it labours under the disadvantage of a feeble libretto, and although having some tuneful numbers, these are by no means striking or original. With better mounting and an augmented chorus it should, however, attain popularity. 'Chu Chin Chow' has just reached Nottingham: of its music little need be said. Visitors to the Empire during the week commencing May 10 must have been somewhat startled when they recognised Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony figuring as a number in the revue 'Joy Bells.' It is highly desirable that the public taste should be educated, but one wonders if much education is accomplished by the prancing and posing of a 'beauty chorus' to the strains of the 'Unfinished.'

A very pleasing feature of the Mansfield War Memorial Week was the concert given on April 25 by the Mansfield Symphony Orchestra and the Mansfield Choral Union. The orchestra, under Mr. F. H. Jessop, has but recently been formed, and made a successful début. The programme included Prelude in C sharp minor (Rachmaninoff), 'Valse Triste' (Sibelius), and the Prelude from 'Lohengrin.' The Choral Union, with orchestral accompaniment, distinguished itself in a good interpretation of Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' the principals being Miss Ethel Housley, Mr. Arthur Severn, Mr. Hedley Blythe, and the Rev. H. L. Marsh.

Miss Grace Burrows's orchestral concert in aid of the blind at Leicester was given on April 15 before a large audience, and realised a substantial sum. In Bach's Concerto for two flutes, pianoforte, and string orchestra, the solo parts were admirably played by Mr. Frank Dyson and Mrs. Ackroyd (flutes), and Mr. Ben Burrows (pianoforte). The orchestra gave a good account of itself in the first three movements of the 'Jupiter' Symphony (Mozart) and Grainger's 'Mock Morris.' Much appreciation was shown for the pianoforte solos of Miss Gertrude Hopkins, who revealed a nice sense of rhythm and feeling for style in César Franck's 'Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue,' and some Chopin contributions. Madame Constance Hardcastle sang with her customary good taste Verdi's 'Caro Nome' and Henschel's 'Spring.'

PORTSMOUTH

Music at Portsmouth is making giant strides; the best that can be produced is being demanded by a large public. The Philharmonic Society in its early days found difficulty in getting audiences to listen to good music. Two concerts per season were the maximum output, and it is recorded that on one occasion the Society had to organize a café chantant to replenish its coffers. Since the war, however, a brighter day has dawned, the recent progress of the Society having been remarkable.

The thirty-fourth season has just closed, and both musically and financially it has been a success. Instead of two, five subscription concerts were given. These comprised three promenade concerts—soloists, M. Benno Moiseiwitsch, Mr. John Coates, and Miss Margaret Cooper—and two choral concerts, at the first of which Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' was performed, the programme of the second concert consisting of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Macpherson's 'By the waters of Babylon,' and Guilmant's Organ Symphony in D minor. Dr. Charles Macpherson conducted his own work, and Dr. W. G. Alcock played the organ solo in the Symphony. At each concert the Town Hall was crowded, and, as indicated above, the financial statement shows a balance of £368 to be carried forward to next season. A repeat performance of 'Hiawatha' raised £72 for the Mayor's Hospital Maintenance Fund.

The hon. secretaries (Mr. T. Archard and Mr. L. F. Glanville) in their report of last season's work, state that the honorary members' list is now so full (numbering four hundred and forty) that subscribers' tickets have to be issued for every available seat. The Town Hall with its seating accommodation of just over two thousand had proved to be too small, and during the season it was found necessary to institute a waiting list of those who wished to become subscribers. That this list has already attained considerable proportions proves that the Society is fulfilling a popular local demand for the best music. Many applicants for membership of the choir have had to be refused owing to lack of accommodation at the Town Hall. The high standard that has reacted so favourably has been largely achieved by the efforts of the popular conductor, Mr. Hugh Burry. At the annual meeting of the Society, on May 4, Mr. Burry was re-elected hon. conductor, Mr. T. Archard (who has been one of the secretaries for thirty years) was appointed chorus secretary, Mr. L. Broadbridge orchestral secretary and assistant chorus-master, and Mr. L. F. Glanville organizing secretary. Two ladies were elected on the committee for the first time.

Next season Bach's Mass in B minor and Berlioz's 'Faust' are down for performance, and for the promenade concerts Mr. Frederic Lamond, Mr. Edmund Burke, and Miss Carmen Hill have been engaged.

Music is playing a great part in the education of the children of the town. From April 26 to April 30 the Young Citizens' Welfare Association held a festival at the Town Hall, when twenty-six choirs entered the choral competitions. There were also three band and orchestral entries, while fifty-six pianists and forty-eight soloists took part in individual competitions. The adjudicator in the vocal events was Mr. Harvey Grace, and Dr. H. G. Ley allotted the awards in the pianoforte and violin classes. The prize-winners contributed an excellent programme at a concert held in the Town Hall on May 14.

A new choral society has been organized this season in the North End district, and is winning its way under the direction of its hon. conductor, Mr. Ernest C. Birch. The hon. secretary is Mr. R. P. Dommett. The Society's initial effort was Edward German's 'Merrie England,' and on April 29, at their second concert, the singers were heard in the same composer's 'A Princess from Kensington,' and miscellaneous items.

Under the auspices of the Portsmouth branch of the Music Teachers' Association, which numbers upwards of fifty members, Mr. Steuart Wilson gave an entertaining lecture on 'Song' at the Girls' High School on May 8.

SOUTH WALES

Rich and varied programmes have recently been presented to music-lovers in South Wales.

On April 24, Mr. Herbert Ware promoted a chamber concert at the Cardiff Y.M.C.A. Assembly Hall, with Messrs. Sammons and Murdoch as exponents of John Ireland's Sonata No. 2, Brahms's Sonata in D minor, and César Franck's Sonata.

On April 29, Mrs. John Lewis successfully organized a chamber concert at the Lesser Town Hall, Pontypridd. To this lady the greatest praise is due for her unflagging efforts to maintain these concerts single-handed, regardless of time and expense, during the past quarter of a century. On this occasion she brought down Miss May Mukle (violinello), Miss Mary Foster (vocalist), and Miss Enid Lewis (pianoforte). Miss Mukle gave Saint-Saëns's Concerto in A minor, Grieg's Sonata in A minor, Valentini's Sonata in E, and two dainty pieces of her own composition.

Earlier in the month of April, Mr. E. T. Davies, of Merthyr, organized a chamber concert at Tydvil Hall, at which the London String Quartet appeared. The programme comprised Beethoven's Quartet in C minor, Debussy's Quartet in G minor, Op. 10, H. Waldo-Warner's Folk-Song Phantasy Quartet, Frank Bridge's 'Londonderry Air,' and Percy Grainger's 'Molly on the Shore.' The audience greatly appreciated the almost faultless playing.

The great event of April was the series of four concerts constituting the South Wales Musical Festival. The inaugural concert was held on April 18 at the Theatre Royal, Barry, under the conductorship of Mr. Tom Jones, and the much-discussed Welsh National Orchestra made its début, with Mr. Lionel Falkman as leader. Miss Carrie Tubb was the soloist. The concert was mainly orchestral, and consisted of the 'Egmont' Overture, Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, the 'Peer Gynt' Suite, the 'Oberon' Overture, German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' and Berlioz's 'Marche Hongroise.' The orchestra gave a sympathetic accompaniment to Miss Carrie Tubb's dramatic reading of Weber's 'Softly sighs.' The orchestra, though by no means perfect, fully justified its existence.

The second concert was held on April 19 at the Albert Hall, Swansea, by the Swansea and District Royal Male-Voice Choir, assisted by the National Orchestra, and proved an unequivocal success. The conductor was Mr. L. R. Bowen, the soloists being Master Ritchie Evans, Messrs. W. Glynn and M. L. James, and Mr. Purcell Jones (violinello). The programme included Maunder's 'The Martyrs,' Mr. Hopkin Evans's 'Brythonic' Overture, and Mr. Purcell Jones played brilliantly his own 'Welsh Rhapsody.'

The third concert of the series was held at Gwyn Hall, Neath, on April 20, by the Neath Choral Society and the National Orchestra. Mr. T. Hopkin Evans conducted, and the singer was Mr. Tom Burke. Many of the works were presented to a Welsh audience for the first time, and a fairly complete list may be interesting. The choral section consisted of Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' 'On Himalay' (Bantock), 'News from Whydah' (Gardiner), 'Crowns of Golden Light' (T. Hopkin Evans), and Fanning's 'Song of the Vikings.' The orchestral items were the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, the conductor's 'Brythonic' Overture, 'Solemn Melody' (Walford Davies), Debussy's 'L'après-midi,' Ballade in A minor (Bantock), Jarnefelt's 'Prælium,' Scriabin's 'Réverie,' and Holbrook's 'Souvenir de Printemps.' The concert as a whole reached a high level, and the audience was keenly appreciative.

The fourth concert, held at Newport on April 22, brought the Festival to a close. The Newport Choral Society, under the baton of Mr. Arthur Sims—one of the ablest and most unassuming of conductors—assisted by the National Orchestra, secured a veritable triumph in a magnificent performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.'

As recorded above, the Welsh National Orchestra has not only come into being, but has been launched on its career. Its satisfactory performances give hope for its future. The financial question of the permanent support of the organization is a matter still to be determined, but it is confidently hoped that substantial aid will be forthcoming. In any case the National scheme should wield an inspiring influence in the formation of small orchestras in towns and villages throughout the Principality, thus fostering the study of instrumental playing.

On April 17 Mr. Ben Davies, assisted by Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Marie Novello, and Mr. Albert Sammons, gave a matinée concert at the Empire, Cardiff. The last of the International Celebrity Concerts of the season was held at the same hall on May 1, with Pachmann as the sole artist.

Merthyr Musical Society, under the baton of Dr. D. C. Williams, held its first concert of this year on April 26 at Merthyr Drill Hall, when the chief works performed were Mozart's 'Requiem' and Sir Hubert Parry's 'Song of Darkness and Light.' The soloists were Misses Caroline Hatchard and Elsie Chambers, and Messrs. John Watkyn and David Hughes. The leader of the orchestra was Mr. Maney, of the London Symphony Orchestra. The concert was highly successful.

On May 2, at the Theatre Royal, Barry, the annual concert of the Barry Male-Voice Choir was held, under the conductorship of Mr. D. J. Thomas. The orchestra was augmented for the occasion, and the artists were Miss C. Hatchard, Mr. S. Coltham, and Mr. D. Brazell. 'The Martyrs' (Maunder), and Mr. David Jenkins's 'The Galley Slave,' were adequately interpreted.

Blaenavon and District Choral Society, directed by Mr. E. Barson, gave a fine reading of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' on May 11. Miss Nanette Evans contributed Paganini's Violin Concerto in D.

Musical Notes from Europe

ROME

The month of April has seen the presentation of two important works at the Augusteo, one from the pen of the master of the Sistine Chapel choir, Don Lorenzo Perosi, and the other from that of his brother, Signor Marciano Perosi. Lorenzo Perosi's oratorio 'The Massacre of the Innocents' ('La Strage degli Innocenti') is not a perfectly new work, but it had never been heard at Rome, and the interest therefore was equal to that occasioned by a new composition; while the thronged house, which received with prolonged applause the three presentations of the oratorio, testified to the continued public idolatry of Perosi, if the phrase may be allowed. That it is no exaggeration is proved also by the criticisms, unanimous in their praise, that indeed sometimes approach the ridiculous—e.g., the following phrase of one of the morning papers, where the writer, apropos the concluding words of the libretto, says: 'Blessed are the pure in heart, because one day they will go to Heaven, and be able to enjoy themselves for all eternity listening to the music of "La Strage degli Innocenti."' Such praise always does more harm than good, and candour insists that Perosi's work is not without blemish, and that it sometimes falls short of effectiveness.

The libretto follows the Evangelical narration of the massacre, and includes the lament of Jeremiah, 'A voice in Rama,' concluding with the Epiphany hymn, and the text 'Blessed are the pure in heart,' &c.

The production, under the care of Maestro Molinari, was worthy of all praise. Insistent demands were made for 'Il maestro, Il maestro—Perosi, Perosi,' but Perosi did not vouchsafe to show himself. Perhaps he was a little sore over an unpleasant incident that somewhat marred his brother's concert on the preceding Sunday.

Marciano Perosi's symphonic vocal poem, 'Night and Day,' written for soprano, choir, and orchestra, is in two parts, and has as subject the victory of Light over Darkness. The work had already been produced in Germany and Austria, where it created a great impression. It lost nothing by its production at the Augusteo, but an unfortunate incident spoiled the harmony of the occasion. Hardly had the performance begun when a disgruntled auditor raised the cry of 'plagiarist,' referring to certain overt Wagnerian passages. At once there succeeded the usual hubbub—protests, shouts of 'turn him out,' &c.—in fact, the disturbance was only quelled when this publicist had been shown the door. The incident was of little importance, and did not seriously affect the success of the production. There was not the slightest justification for the legend that was current, 'Perosi hooted at the Augusteo,' but no doubt the uncivil reflection made on his brother determined Don Lorenzo's absence from the presentation of his own oratorio.

LEONARD PEYTON.

The 'Ecole Normale de Musique' of Paris (1, Place Maiesherbes) offers a special course of higher instruction in music for foreign students, to be held from May 29 to July 4. M. Cortôt is to lecture on the evolution of harmony.

Miscellaneous

'The Reign of Patti' is the title given by Mr. Herman Klein to his forthcoming biography of the great singer who died last September. It has been for some time in the press, and will be published this month in New York by the Century Company, whose summer catalogue describes it as 'the authorized biography of Adelina Patti.' It is dedicated to her husband, Baron Cederström, with whose aid the author completed the final details of a task that has occupied most of his leisure time since 1914. The illustrations extend over the entire range of the famous diva's repertory, and include reproductions of several little-known early photographs of her in operatic costume.

An excellent concert was given by the Maidstone Orchestral Society on April 26, under the direction of Mr. Frederick Cole. The orchestra of ninety performers gave Bizet's 'Patrie' Overture, Grieg's Norwegian melody (for strings), Beethoven's fifth Symphony, the 'Casse-Noisette' Suite, Debussy's 'Danse Sacrée' and 'Danse Profane' (with Mr. J. T. Cockerill as harpist), and the 'Rienzi' Overture.

The Glastonbury Players have arranged a season at the 'Old Vic' from May 31 to June 9, with Mr. C. Kennedy Scott as conductor. The repertory comprises Boughton's 'The Immortal Hour,' the masque 'Venus and Adonis' by John Blow, and a programme of choral ballets and dances. These include a little ballet entitled 'The Wickedness of Dancing,' arranged to Byrd's variations in 'O Mistress Mine.'

CONTENTS

	Page
Modern British Composers—X. Ralph Vaughan Williams (concluded). By Edwin Evans ...	371
Over-Expression. By Tom S. Wotton ...	375
The Symphonic Works of W. H. Bell (continued). By M. van Someren-Godfery ...	376
The Organ Works of Bach.—II. The Weimar Period (continued). By Harvey Grace ...	377
Concerts of the New York Symphony Orchestra ...	381
Interludes. By 'Feste' ...	382
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. IX.—Robert Fayrfax. By W. H. Grattan Flood ...	384
Occasional Notes ...	385
The Ideas of M. Vincent D'Indy (continued). By C. Saint-Saëns ...	385
British Music Society's Congress. By Alfred Kalisch ...	387
Mr. G. Bernard Shaw. Photograph by Sydney J. Loeb ...	390
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch ...	391
The Novello Choir ...	393
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett ...	393
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught... ..	401
Chamber Music for Amateurs ...	403
Dr. R. R. Terry and 'The Cryes of London' ...	403
Parry Memorial Fund ...	404
Sterndale Bennett Memorial Tablet at Sheffield ...	405
John Field's Violin discovered in Finland ...	405
The Rationale of Cuts and Adaptations. By Sydney Grew ...	405
Vocal Virtuosi of the 18th Century. By Claude Trevor ...	407
Secular Music of Ancient Egypt. By Jeffrey Pulver ...	408
Church and Organ Music ...	410
The English Chapel Royal at the Field of Cloth of Gold ...	410
New Music. By William Child ...	413
Letters to the Editor ...	414
Sixty Years Ago ...	414
Change-Ringing ...	415
Hatikvah ('The Hope'). By Arthur M. Friedländer ...	415
Music in the Provinces ...	416
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	423
Miscellaneous ...	424

MUSIC:

'Three Sleeps.' Unaccompanied Part-Song for Four Voices. By JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS ...	395
---	-----

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. 'O Lord, my trust.' Anthem for Trinitytide. By King Hall.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ALCOCK, W. G.—"And I heard a great voice." Anthem. 1s.

ANDERSON, GRAHAM.—"O Sing unto the Lord" (Psalm 98). Anthem. 6d.

BACON, R. C., and ALAN STEPHENSON.—Preces and Responses. 2d.

HANDEL.—"Your tuneful voice my tale would tell." Air from "Semele." 1s.

— "Oh! that I on wings could rise." Recit. and Air from "Theodora." 1s.

— "The raptured soul." Recit. and Air from "Theodora." 1s.

HILL, CONSTANCE.—"Twilight." Two-part Song. (S.A.) 3d.

HOLBROOKE, J.—Selection from "Dylan." Arranged for Brass Band, by J. WESTON NICHOLL. 32s.

JOHNSON, J. ST. A.—A selection from "The Glorious Dead." Cantata for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. 2s. 6d.

LOVE, J. VERNON.—Two Chants. 1½d.

NORTH, J. W. ALLEN.—Twelve settings of the Kyrie and Gloria. Complete. 1s. Also in Four Parts: Nos. 1, 2; 3-5, 3d. each. Nos. 6-8; 9-12, and Monotone, 4d. each.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN, (NEW SERIES):

No. 65. Postlude. (Violins ad lib., 3d.)

A. C. MACKENZIE. 1s. od.

No. 66. Fantasia on Hymn Tune "Twrgwyn."

T. J. MORGAN. 1s. 6d.

No. 67. Minuet.

A. HOLLINS. 1s. 6d.

No. 68. Epithalamium.

A. HOLLINS. 1s. 6d.

No. 69. Three Short Pieces: Arietta, Elegy, Melody. S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR. 1s. 6d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 336) contains the following music in both notations:—"Irish Lullaby." Union Song with Three-part Chorus ad lib. "Water Sprites' Dance." Union Song. Arranged by EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. 1½d.

SCHUBERT, F.—"Serenade." (Schwanengesang, No. 4.) (No. 60, Organ Arrangements. Edited by JOHN E. WEST.) 1s.

TAYLOR, J. C. C.—Song from "Cynthia's Revels." 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

No. 2321. "Nymphs and Shepherds." Four-part Song. PURCELL. Arranged by W. McNAUGHT. 1½d.

No. 2322. "Ursula Dancing." (Four Pictures, No. 4.) Two-part Song. ETHEL BOYCE. 1½d.

TROWELL, ARNOLD.—Quintet. For Pianoforte, Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello. 20s.

TYSOE, A. C.—"Love Divine, all loves excelling." Hymn. (No. 970, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

WARNEFORD, H. L.—"There is a Fountain filled with blood." Hymn and Tune "Hermione." 1d.

WILLIAMS, J. G.—"Pot-Pourri." A cycle of fragments, For Pianoforte Solo. 3s.

— "Three Sleeps." Four-part Song. (No. 928, The Musical Times.) 1½d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ARCADELT, J.—“Ave Maria.” (“O Lord, most Holy.”) Arranged for S.S.A.A. by E. H. GEER. 10 cents (4d.).

GRIMSON, S. B., and CECIL FORSYTH.—Modern Violin Playing. $1.50 (6s.).

HOUSELY, H.—“The Nativity.” Sacred Cantata. For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. $1.50 (6s.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—“An Island Fable.” Cantata. For Children's Voices. 50 cents (2s.).

—“Little Billee.” Cantata. For Male Voices. 50 cents (2s.).

—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. In E flat. 25 cents (1s.).

WYATT, E. W.—“Sun of my soul.” Vesper Hymn. 10 cents (4d.).

YOUNG, F. H.—Te Deum laudamus. In E flat 25 cents (1s.).

DANCING.—GENTLEMAN, with years' teaching experience, is now concluding arrangements for conducting LONDON and SUBURBAN CLASSES, commencing Autumn, and wishes to hear from Principals of MUSICAL COLLEGES, &c., including, or contemplating the inclusion of this subject in their Syllabuses. “Alpha,” c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

TENOR and BASS REQUIRED, Church in W.C. district. Moderate music. £10. Apply. R. W. Ready, Valmar, Crichton Road, Carshalton.

OBOE, FOR SALE.—Beautiful instrument. Accept £25. Holland, Fairstowe, Ilkley.

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC at Public School; R.C.M.; Oxford University and Cathedral experience; will deputise August and September in return for FURNISHED HOUSE. “Magister,” c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1, not later than FRIDAY, JUNE 18 (FIRST POST).

CYRIL SCOTT

NEW

Transcriptions for Organ

BY

PURCELL J. MANSFIELD.

PRICE NET.
s. d.

Passacaglia - - - - 2 0

(Pastoral Suite, No. 5).

The Wild Hills of Clare

All through the Night

(From “British Melodies”
for the Pianoforte).

2 0

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR

FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

(Op. 84).

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

QUARTET

FOR STRINGS

(Op. 83)

SCORE PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.
PARTS EIGHT SHILLINGS

SONATA

FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

(Op. 82).

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CONCERTO

IN E MINOR

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 85).

ARRANGEMENT FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire only.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."
 —Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR WHITSUNTIDE

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, in E	3d.
BENEDICTUS, in E	2d.
BENEDICTUS and JUBILATE, in E	3d.
CANTATE DOMINO, in E and D	} 4d.
DEUS MISEREATUR, in E
COMMUNION SERVICE, in E	6d.

ANTHEMS.

IF YE LOVE ME—Two Voices	3d.
I WILL MAGNIFY THEE	4d.
I WAS GLAD—(Festival)	4d.
TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
O HOW AMIABLE—Soprano Solo and Chorus	4d.
THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD	3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE VOICE.

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

BY

GEORGE HENSCHEL.

IN TWO PARTS.

	s.	d.
PART 1. High Voice	2	6
" Medium Voice	2	6
" Low Voice	2	6
PART 2. High Voice	2	6
" Medium Voice	2	6
" Low Voice	2	6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S Sunday School Anniversary Music ANTHEMS.

*Sun of my Soul	J. H. ADAMS
†Thine for ever	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
†I love to hear the story	MYLES B. FOSTER
†Lord, Thy children guide and keep	J. H. MAUNDER
†Hosanna we sing	JOHN E. WEST

Price Threepence each.

† Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d. each.

* Tonic Sol-fa, price 2d.

HYMNS AND TUNES.

No.	SET I.
1.	Come, children, on and forward GEORGE C. MARTIN
2.	For the freshness of the morning LADY EUAN-SMITH
3.	I love to hear the story FREDERIC CLAY
4.	Come, O come! in pious lays J. STAINER
5.	Thine for ever! God of Love W. C. HARVEY
6.	Jesu, Whom Thy children love H. ELLIOT BUTTON
7.	Sweetly o'er the meadows fair F. A. CHALLINOR
8.	Would you gain the best in life C. J. MAY
9.	On our way rejoicing WALTER B. GILBERT
10.	Now the daylight goes away J. ADCOCK

SET II.

1.	Again the morn of gladness J. STAINER
2.	The Angels' Song ALBERTO RANDEGGER
3.	Forward, Christian children ALFRED MOFFAT
4.	The Golden Shore J. STAINER
5.	Saviour, blessed Saviour JOHN E. WEST
6.	Enter with thanksgiving F. H. COWEN
7.	Man shall not live by bread J. VARLEY ROBERTS
8.	Stars, that on your wondrous way J. STAINER
9.	The day is past and over JOSEPH BARNEY
10.	God will take care of you FRANCES R. HAVÉRGAL

SET III.

1.	We march, we march, to victory JOSEPH BARNEY
2.	Hark! hark! the organ loudly peals GEORGE J. BENNETT
3.	O what can little hands do H. ELLIOT BUTTON
4.	While the sun is shining T. ADAMS
5.	I love to hear the story H. J. GAUNTLETT
6.	The roseate hues of early dawn A. SULLIVAN
7.	Lord, Thy children guide and keep A. S. COOPER
8.	In our work and in our play F. WESTLAKE
9.	The Beautiful Land J. STAINER
10.	Gentle Jesus, meek and mild J. STAINER

SET IV.

1.	The boys and girls of England J. STAINER
2.	The crown is waiting J. STAINER
3.	The City of Light E. J. TROUP
4.	He dwells among the lilies LADY EUAN-SMITH
5.	God is in Heaven! Can He hear H. ELLIOT BUTTON
6.	The Good Shepherd J. STAINER
7.	A little kingdom I possess R. S. NEWMAN
8.	Raise your standard, brothers E. J. TROUP
9.	Flowers ALBERTO RANDEGGER
10.	Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me HORATIO PARKER

Both Notations, price Fourpence per Set.

Words only, 5s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EDITED BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

THE CRYES OF LONDON

HUMOROUS FANCY

THREE SETTINGS FOR S.A.T.B. BY

(1) RICHARD DEERING, (2) ORLANDO GIBBONS,
AND
(3) THOMAS WHEELKES.

NOS. 1 AND 2, PRICE 6d. EACH; NO. 3, PRICE 4d.

String Parts may be had on hire.

The Daily Telegraph says:

"... What Sir Frederick Bridge doesn't know about the great madrigal period in English music is surely not worth knowing. . . . Once more he puts us all in his debt by the publication of 'The Cryes of London.' . . . Perhaps the most attractive of the three is Richard Deering's: 'Have ye any wood to cleave?' Sung by a bass voice to a beautiful tune, it is one of the many delightful details that make up this patch-work composition. The variety of songs and cryes is bewildering."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Frederick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

G. RICORDI & Co.,

265, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

THE LARGEST OPERATIC PUBLISHERS IN THE WORLD.

Opera is the one form of Musical Art which is in the ascendancy.

No MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL is complete without a VOCAL OPERATIC SECTION.

ARIAS FROM OPERAS	ARIAS FROM OPERAS	ARIAS FROM OPERAS are included in Programmes	are sung by	are of	all	taught in
ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.	THE GREAT VOCALISTS.	MUSIC COLLEGES & SCHOOLS.

THE BEST AND MOST POPULAR OPERATIC ARIAS ARE PUBLISHED BY
G. RICORDI & CO.

OPERA COMPANIES	OPERATIC SELECTIONS	THE PEOPLE are enthusiastic are	are being	about OPERA, and those Local doing excellent business	played everywhere by all	Professors who do not recog-
EVERYWHERE.	THE LEADING ORCHESTRAS.	nize this are behind the times.

No Artist's Répertoire is Complete which does not contain these Celebrated Numbers.

OPERATIC ARIAS for Women's Voices.

Snicidio. La Gioconda	Ponchielli
Sì me chiamano Mimi—Mimi's Song. La Bohème	Puccini
Musetta's Waltz Song. La Bohème	Puccini
Mimi's Farewell. La Bohème	Puccini
Vissi d'arte—The prayer. Tosca	Puccini
Un bel di vedremo—One fine day. Madama Butterfly	Puccini
O Don Fatale—O Fatal Gift. Don Carlo	Verdi
Ritorna Vincitor. Aida	Verdi
O Patria Mia. Aida	Verdi
The Willow Song. Salce. Othello	Verdi
Ave Maria. Othello	Verdi
L'Altra Notte. Mefistofele	Boito
La Voce di Donna. Gioconda	Ponchielli
Mia Piccirella. Salvatore Rosa	Gomez
The Spinning Wheel. The Angelus	Naylor
Farewell to my home. La Wally	Catalani

OPERATIC ARIAS for Men's Voices.

Che gelida Manina—Your tiny hand is frozen.
La Bohème	Puccini
Amor e grillo—Love and fancy. Madama Butterfly	Puccini
E Lucevan la stelle—The Letter Song. Tosca	Puccini
Recondita armonia. Tosca	Puccini
Donna non vidi mai. Manon Lescaut	Puccini
Dai Campo. Mefistofele	Boito
Guinto sul passo. Epilogue. Mefistofele	Boito
Cielo e Mar—Heaven and Ocean. Gioconda	Ponchielli
Celeste Aida. Aida	Verdi
Magiche Note. Queen of Sheba	Goldmark
Credo. Othello	Verdi
Ella giammai. Don Carlo	Verdi
Il Lacerato Spirito. Simon Boccanegra	Verdi
Quand era' peggio. Falstaff	Verdi
Per me Giunto. Don Carlo	Verdi
Pescatore-Barcarolle. Gioconda	Ponchielli

The above have English and Italian Text, and are published in several keys.

Lists may be had Post Free on Application;

G. RICORDI & Co., 265, Regent Street, LONDON, W.1.

The Craftsman says :

“LET ME SEND YOU A SAMPLE STRING.
YOU WILL BE DELIGHTED.”

Just send us your name and address, tell us the kind of string you want, and it will come along in the next post. Some thousands of musicians have discovered “Cathedral” and “Summit” strings in the past six months. It has been a revelation to them. Proof of this is found in our testimonial book. There we have people telling us, in letter after letter, that they never thought it possible such fine quality strings could be made in a British factory, and in London, too.

But it's a fact. “Cathedral” and “Summit” Strings are far and away better than any strings of doubtful or foreign origin. They cost less, and give you far more satisfaction on the instrument. You see this in the following letter :—

“I want to thank you for the sample E string received yesterday. I am struck by the beautiful quality of tone which can be produced from it. It certainly outdoes the foreign brands.—HERBERT BARDGETT, 51, Hill Street, Maryhill, Glasgow.”

Send for FREE Sample String.

This offer of a Sample String applies to Violin, Mandoline, and Banjo. State exact String required.

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD.,
MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

Telegrams : “CELLO, FINSPARK, LONDON.”

Telephone : NORTH 2594.

NEW AND SUCCESSFUL SONGS

A. HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.

Price 2s.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR—

Sweet evenings come and go, love.

In F (Compass, D to E flat) and B flat.

Price 2s.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).

Price 2s.

LAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).

Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.

Price 1s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER—

Hark! Hark! my Soul.

In C (Compass, A to C) and E flat.

Price 2s.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.

Price 2s. each.

W. G. ROSS—

A Daffodil Wedding.

In C (Compass, C to F) and D.

Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

The Summertime of Love.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

Price 2s. each.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO
FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REFLECTIONS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD GERMAN.

Full Score, 21s. ; String Parts, 9s. ; Wind Parts, 23s.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo	...	3s. 6d.
,, ,, Pianoforte Duet	...	5s. od.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Diversions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Diversion, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Diversion is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed. The Fifth Diversion is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Dispatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLAND

AN ODE

BY

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ERNEST CAMPBELL MACMILLAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO PASTORALS

COME YOU, MARY.

WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES FORSAKE?

THE WORDS BY

NORMAN GALE.

THE MUSIC BY

ERNEST BRISTOW FARRAR

(Op. 21, Nos. 2 and 3)

TWO KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR

SHAKESPEARE SONGS

1. HARK! HARK! THE LARK.
2. WHO IS SYLVIA.
3. TAKE, O TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY.
4. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

COMPOSED BY

REGINALD STEGGALL.

Op. 28.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

(KYRIE, RESPONSES TO COMMANDMENTS, CREDO, SANCTUS, BENEDICTUS, AGNUS DEI, GLORIA).

SET TO MUSIC IN THE KEY OF E MINOR

BY

BASIL HARWOOD

(Op. 28.)

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE'S

WORKS.

JUST ISSUED.

VOCAL.

NOVELLO & CO.

Price net.

£ s. d.

THREE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 69), for Tenor Voice and Piano, with String Quartet Accompaniment ...	0	5	0
TALIESSIN'S SONG, for Soprano and Tenor ...	0	2	6
"DYLAN" (Drama)—Vocal Score ...	1	1	0
Full Score ...	5	5	0
"DON" (Drama)—Vocal Score ...	1	1	0
Full Score ...	5	5	0
"PIERROT" (Operetta) ...	0	8	0
FIVE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 59) ... each, net	0	2	6

INSTRUMENTAL.

DYLAN (Brass Band) ...	1	12	0
" Selection parts ... each	0	1	6
" (Arr. by Weston Nicholl) ... Cond. pf.	0	4	6
(To be performed at the B. B. Tournament in June).
REELS AND STRATHSPEYS, for Strings and Wind	0	1	0
Each	0	1	0

(Played before The King and Queen at Buckingham Palace, 1919.)

(British Symphony Orchestra).

"BRONWEN" (Overture)—Full Score (in the Press) ...	1	1	0
"THE CURSE OF MATH" (Orchestral Fantasia), Score ...	0	15	0
"BYRON" (Orchestral and Choral Poem) ...	0	1	6
Full Score ...	0	15	0

CHESTER & CO.

BRONWEN'S SONG, Soprano and Tenor ...	0	2	0
SIX ROMANTIC SONGS (Op. 30) ...	0	3	0

JOHN COATES' RECITAL (QUEEN'S HALL), 1919.

"The Second Romantic Song of Holbrooke was repeated Three times—owing to prolonged encores"—Liverpool Post.

"THE PICKWICK CLUB" (Humoreske), String Quartet

Score 0 6 6

POEMS.

"THE RAVEN"—Poem. Full Score ...	0	15	0
" Piano ...	0	5	0

(London Symphony Concert, 1919.)

"THE VIKING"—Poem. Full Score ...	0	15	0
" Piano ...	0	5	0

(British Symphony Orchestra, 1919.)

"LES HOMMAGES"—Suite. Full Score ...	1	1	0
" Piano ...	0	6	0

(Royal Philharmonic Society, 1919.)

DRAMATIC CHORAL SYMPHONY (Op. 48) ...	0	3	0
Full Score ...	2	0	0

CHAMBER WORKS (see full list).

"ULALUME" ...	0	5	0
---------------	---	---	---

(Royal Philharmonic Society, 1919.)

"QUEEN MAB" ...	0	3	0
-----------------	---	---	---

(London Symphony Orchestra, 1919.—A. Coates, Conductor.)

"THE BELLS" ...	0	3	0
"BARRAGE" ...	0	3	6

"TALSARNAU"—Piano Solos ...	0	0	6
-----------------------------	---	---	---

VIOLIN CONCERTO ...	0	8	3
---------------------	---	---	---

TEN PIANO ETUDES ... each	0	2	6
---------------------------	---	---	---

THREE VIOLIN AND PIANO "Mezzotints" ... each	0	0	0
--	---	---	---

STRING QUARTET (No. 5.) on Folk-songs of Great Britain	0	0	0
--	---	---	---

PIANO SOLO (Arr.) ...	0	3	6
-----------------------	---	---	---

SEXTET FOR PIANO AND STRINGS (Op. 20) ...	0	8	0
---	---	---	---

" ARRANGED FOR PIANO DUET ...	0	6	6
-------------------------------	---	---	---

CARY & CO.

"EILEAN SHONA"—Organ ...	0	1	6
--------------------------	---	---	---

FOUR MEZZOTINTS—Violin and Piano, Clarinet and Piano ...	0	3	0
--	---	---	---

STRING QUARTET (No. 4), Songs and Dances ...	0	5	0
--	---	---	---

SUITE MODERNE—Piano (Op. 18) ...	0	3	0
----------------------------------	---	---	---

BOOSEY & Co.

"ANNABEL LEE" ...	0	2	6
-------------------	---	---	---

SIX CHARACTER SONGS ...	0	2	6
-------------------------	---	---	---

FIVE BOHEMIAN SONGS, Etc. ...	0	2	6
-------------------------------	---	---	---

ENOCH & SONS.

THREE SONGS (Op. 71), for Voice, String Quartet, and Piano, &c. ...	0	6	0
---	---	---	---

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MINIATURE FULL SCORES.

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE—	s. d.
---------------------	-------

FIFINE AT THE FAIR (Cloth, 7s. 6d.) ...	5	0
---	---	---

ELGAR, EDWARD—
----------------	--

CONCERTO. Violin and Orchestra (Cloth, 7s. 6d.) ...	5	0
---	---	---

DREAM OF GERONTIUS (Cloth, 10s. 6d.) ...	7	6
--	---	---

FALSTAFF (Cloth, 10s. 6d.) ...	7	6
--------------------------------	---	---

SYMPHONY No. 1, IN A FLAT (Cloth, 10s. 6d.) ...	7	6
---	---	---

SYMPHONY No. 2, IN E FLAT (Cloth, 10s. 6d.) ...	7	6
---	---	---

VARIATIONS ON AN ORIGINAL THEME ...	5	0
-------------------------------------	---	---

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOUR ENGLISH DANCES

SET I.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Full Score ...	s. d.
String Parts ...	10 6
Wind Parts ...	6 0
Ditto (small orchestra) ...	12 0
Military Band ...	9 0
Pianoforte Solo ...	15 0
Violin and Pianoforte ...	2 6
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings) ...	3 0
	2 6

Extra Strings, 6d. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee, and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured base for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.				s. d.
1.	SONATA in G major ...	JAMES LATES	2	0
2.	SONATA in D minor ...	HENRY ECCLES	2	0
3.	SONATA in B flat major ...	WILLIAM BABELL	2	0
4.	SONATA in G minor ...	JOHN STANLEY	2	0
5.	SONATA in A major ...	JOHN COLLETT	2	0
6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	3	0
7.	SONATA in D major ...	RICHARD JONES	2	0
8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
9.	THREE PIECES ...	WILLIAM BOYCE	2	0
10.	SONATA in E major ...	CHARLES MACKLEAN	2	0
11.	SONATA in G minor ...	WILLIAM CROFT	2	0
12.	SONATA in D minor	JOSEPH GIBBS	2	0
13.	SONATA in D minor	JOHN HUMPHRIES	2	0
14.	SONATA in A minor	THOMAS VINCENT	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHAPPELL & CO'S LATEST SONG PUBLICATIONS.

GUY D'HARDELOT—

MIDSUMMER MADNESS.
IN ENGLAND NOW.
MINE, ALL MINE.

TERESA DEL RIEGO—

HOMING.
BLESSING.

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS—

SING, JOYOUS BIRD.
THE SILVER LAMPS.
SING, SING, BLACKBIRD.

EDRIC CUNDELL—

A VAGABOND'S SONG.
SUMMER DAYS AND NIGHTS.

SAMUEL LIDDLE—

FULFILMENT.
A WOODLAND BOUQUET.

FRANK BRIDGE—

WHEN YOU ARE OLD.

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE—

GOLDEN DANCING DAYS.
REAPING.
YOU IN A GONDOLA.
A VENETIAN LULLABY.

HERMANN LÖHR—

THE ROAD OF LOOKING-FORWARD.
THREE LITTLE SPANISH SONGS.
THIS SONG OF OURS.
LITTLE HOUSE OF BLESSING.

HAYDN WOOD—

THERE'S A SONG DOWN EV'RY ROADWAY.
A LEAFLAND LULLABY.
FLEURETTE, I SHALL NEVER FORGET.
I LOVE YOUR EYES OF GREY.

ERIC COATES—

PEPITA.
THROUGH ALL THE AGES.
AT VESPER BELL.

GRAHAM PEEL—

THE CHALLENGE.

THURLOW LIEURANCE—

BY THE WATERS OF MINNETONKA.

GERALD CARNE—

PROVENCE.

H. LYALL PHILLIPS—

THE STRING OF PEARLS.
A DEVONSHIRE WEDDING.
WIMMEN ! OH, WIMMEN !

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And may be had of all Music Sellers.

NEW YORK, TORONTO, MELBOURNE, AND SYDNEY

JUST PUBLISHED.

INTERESTING MODERN WORKS FOR PIANO.

IGOR STRAVINSKY "RAGTIME"

Arranged for Pianoforte Solo by the Composer.
Cover Design by PABLO PICASSO.

Price 4s. net cash.

G. FRANCESCO MALIPIERO "MASCHERE CHE PASSANO" (PASSING MASQUES) SUITE.

Price 5s. net cash.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE "BARRAGE"

OP. 78.

Cover Design by ALVIN LANGDON COBURN.

Price 3s. net cash.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

THE
ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W.1.

INSTITUTED 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors, Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the letters A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors, Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter.

A Special Teachers' Training Course, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted, prospectus of which is now ready.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON,

Secretary.

Marshall & Rose

SUPERB GRAND & UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES

THE PIANOS WHICH INSPIRE

THOSE who purchase the Superb Marshall and Rose Pianoforte can always be confident that their instrument will win the highest measure of praise on account of its superlatively sympathetic qualities. The Marshall and Rose Pianoforte in the making has been treated with the same care and tenderness as a rare violin; it is the supreme outcome of years of experience and steady striving after an ideal; every part of it has literally been trained towards perfection, and the result is an instrument which is almost human in its responsiveness.

The artist who avails himself of this wonderful instrument as a means of self-expression will find that his message never fails in its appeal when given to an audience in such an exceptional manner. Real connoisseurs of Music are convinced that the magic and beauty of the immortal works of the great Composers can only be adequately realised when interpreted on the Piano of Perfection—the instrument which bears the name of MARSHALL AND ROSE.

The Marshall and Rose Grand and Upright Pianofortes can also be obtained containing THE WORLD-FAMED ANGELUS PIANO-PLAYER, which gives you a Piano possessing every musical quality and the ability to play it.

Kindly call or write for Illustrated Catalogue No. 113 to the Manufacturers

SIR HERBERT MARSHALL & SONS, LTD.,
Angelus Hall, Regent House, 233, Regent St., London, W.

Chappell Pianos

GRAND & UPRIGHT

Not to be excelled for TONE, TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.

Acknowledged by a discriminating Public throughout the world as the FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

Chappell Player-Pianos

GRAND AND UPRIGHT.

Agents in all the Principal Towns.

CHAPPELL PIANO CO.,
LIMITED.,

SHOW-ROOMS—

50, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.-1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

No. 929

Price 6d.

FOUNDED 1844

JULY 1, 1920

AUG 4 1920

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS ▽ UPRIGHTS ▽ PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON · PORTSMOUTH · SOUTHAMPTON
FOLKESTONE · DOVER · CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM · CAMBRIDGE

WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON.

“The World’s Piano Centre.”

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN

LTD.

 CECILIAN HOUSE.

PIANOS

ALSO 12, Park Row,
LEEDS.

• 65 Wigmore Street •
• LONDON W.1.

“NEW PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID” FOR GRAND PIANOS.

We have already converted over 600 Grand Pianos with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

FOUNDED

1837.

AGENTS
THROUGHOUT
THE WORLD.

GRANDS-UPRIGHTS.

AWARDS

for Good

Tone:

LONDON - - - 1851
PARIS - - - 1867
LIMA - - - 1872
CHRISTCHURCH,
N.Z. 1882
LONDON - - - 1885

PLAYER-PIANOS.

SHOWROOMS:

ALLISON PIANO FACTORY, LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, LONDON, N.W.5

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,

OXFORD STREET,

LONDON, W. 1.

AN IMPORTANT NEW EDUCATIONAL WORK.

101 ORIGINAL STUDIES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

G. H. CLUTSAM

Book I. - Nos. 1 to 32

„ II. - „ 33 „ 66

Book III. - Nos. 67 to 92

„ IV. - „ 93 „ 101

PRICE 2/6 NET EACH BOOK.

ENGLISH OR CONTINENTAL FINGERING.

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

METZLER & CO. (1909), LTD.,

42, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Copyright 1920 by Metzler & Co. (1909), Ltd.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 929.—Vol. 61
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

JULY 1 1920

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

SCHOLARSHIPS in the following subjects will be competed for in September: Pianoforte, Singing, Organ, Viola, and the John Thomas (Welsh) Scholarship for Instrumentalists of either sex. Last day for entry, 30th August.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, July 3 and 17, at 8.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Monday, July 5, at 3.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES, by The Lady Mayoress, will take place at the Queen's Hall on Wednesday, July 21, at 3.

L.R.A.M. Examination. Entries will be accepted up to July 15, on payment of a late fee of 5s.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams:

"Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone:

"1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The MIDSUMMER HALF-TERM commenced on Monday, June 7, 1920.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 15 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

(CORPORATION OF LONDON).

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 ros. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and/or Orchestra.

Saturday Opera Class, "Veronique," in rehearsal. There are a few vacancies.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.

Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1919-1920.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL,

1920.

PRESIDENT: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

DIRECTOR: RUTLAND BOUGHTON.

Holiday School (July 19th to September 11th), for the study of Opera, Dancing, Chamber Music, and String Orchestral Music. Performances daily from August 15th to September 11th.

SIX CYCLES of four distinct programmes, as follows:

1. THE BIRTH OF ARTHUR, a music-drama by Reginald Buckley and Rutland Boughton. First complete production.

2. THE ROUND TABLE (Buckley-Boughton).

3. DIDO AND ÆNEAS, opera by Purcell, preceded by MUSIC COMES, a choral ballet by P. Napier Miles, and the first productions of ALL FOOLS' DAY (a new play by Josephine M. Baretti, with music by Clive Carey), and THE CHILDREN OF LIR, a new ballet by Adela Maddison.

4. THE IMMORTAL HOUR (MacLeod-Boughton).

First Cycle, Aug. 16, 17, 18, 19. Fourth Cycle, Aug. 30, 31, Sept. 1, 2.

Second " Aug. 20, 21, 23, 24. Fifth " Sept. 3, 4, 6, 7.

Third " Aug. 25, 26, 27, 28. Sixth " Sept. 8, 9, 10, 11.

The performances on Wednesdays and Saturdays will begin at 3 o'clock; on other days at 8 o'clock. The Sixth Cycle will be given at the Crispin Hall, Street, many of the principal parts being taken by the understudies. A limited number of cheaper seats will be available for this Cycle.

Ticket for each Cycle of four distinct performances, £1 2s. 6d. (including tax).

Extra RECITALS, PERFORMANCES OF DANCES, &c., on Wednesday and Saturday evenings. CONCERTS of Chamber Music on Sunday evenings.

PRINCIPAL PERFORMERS:

Gwen Ffrangon-Davies, Dorothy D'Orsay, Winifred Lawson,

Leonora Turnbull, Gladys Ward,

William Bennett, Clive Carey, W. Johnstone-Douglas,

Tom Goodey, John Goss, Topliss Green, Arthur Jordan.

Direction of Dance:

Laura Wilson (Mlle. Olkhina, late of the Russian Ballet).

Musical Direction:

Edgar L. Bainton, David Scott, and Reginald Paul.

Costumes and Scenic Decoration: Christina Walton.

Booking Office: FRED. GILBERT, Goodall's Library, High Street, Glastonbury.

Details of Classes, Hotels, and Apartments: Miss PERCY, 86, High Street, Glastonbury.

HERBERT ANDERTON, Hon. Sec., Manor House Road, Glastonbury.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications are again advanced as from June 30, 1920 (see page 441), but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October: First Mus. B., March and September: Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Twenty-eighth Year opened on October 6, 1919.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, and Art of Teaching, &c.

The Summer Orchestral Concert will take place in the Houldsworth Hall, on Thursday, July 22nd.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE PHILHARMONIC CHOIR.

Hon. Conductor: CHARLES KENNEDY SCOTT.

Arrangements for next season include performances of "Christmas Oratorio" (Bach); "Christmas Carols" (Vaughan Williams); "Schicksalslied" (Brahms); "Prometheus" (Scriabin); &c., &c.

Rehearsals will be resumed on Wednesday, October 6th.

Applications for membership should be addressed to—

GRANVILLE HUMPHREYS, 145, Elms Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

DALCROZE EURHYTHMICS.

The SUMMER SCHOOL will be held at Oxford, August 16 to 28 inclusive.

CLASSES IN RHYTHMIC MOVEMENT, SOLFEGE, and IMPROVISATION

Prospectus on application to—

THE DALCROZE SCHOOL OF EURHYTHMICS, LTD.

23, Store Street, London, W.C. 1.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS.
LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC

held in JUNE and DECEMBER

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists.

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Copy of Testimonial from the renowned organist, Herbert F. Ellingford, Esq., Mus. Bac. (Oxon.), Organist of the Town Hall, Liverpool.

"I think your clever appliance for stretching the fingers is a most useful invention. Its regular use will help to maintain in a simple manner, facility and freedom of hand, wrist, and finger movements. It should be invaluable to organists, pianists, and stringed instrument players alike." HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD.

Send for full particulars and list of testimonials.

No earnest student should be without a Techniquer.

"Hand Development," post free, 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

WOLSELEY SPORTS AND FLOWER SHOW.

WARD END PARK, BIRMINGHAM.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21ST, 1920.

MALE-VOICE CHOIR COMPETITION (open). Entries close August 2nd.

Syllabus may be had on application to—

Mr. C. LAYLAND, c/o Welfare Dept., Wolseley Motors, Ltd.,

Adderley Park, Birmingham.

MR. TRAVERS ADAMS returns thanks for letters.

Vocal Classes shortly resumed. Intending pupils will receive copy, gratis, of latest work, "Physical Development in Relation to Perfect Voice-Production." Apply, 158, Holland Park Avenue, W. 11.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-five Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom in DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8th.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 387c.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

ORCHESTRAL CLASS for Ensemble Playing, Thursdays, at 12 (noon). Terms, £1 11s. 6d. per course.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY.

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS

FOUNDED 1882.

INCORPORATED 1892.

The Society, established in 1882 for the purpose of obtaining definite professional standing for professional musicians, claims the interest and support of every teacher of music in its work of organization which, owing to recent legislation, including the formation of the Teachers' Registration Council and the School Teachers (Superannuation) Act, has now become a necessity to the profession if the interests of the professional musicians of the country are to be properly safeguarded.

Membership of the Society is accepted by the Teachers' Registration Council as an "Attainment" in the case of Private Teachers who apply for Registration before January 1st, 1921.

To meet the needs of its members and to assist them in their relation with their present and possible employers, the following are some of the advantages which membership offers to a professional musician:—

AN ANNUAL CONFERENCE at which members can meet for the purpose of discussing matters concerning musicians and their work generally.

SECTIONAL MEETINGS which enable the members to discuss matters affecting their professional work in their own districts.

A CENTRAL ORGANIZATION through which members can obtain expert assistance in securing admission to the Register of Teachers kept by the Teachers' Registration Council.

ADVICE AND HELP in cases where members are entitled to benefits under the School Teachers (Superannuation) Act, 1918.

INFORMATION RELATING TO FEES, SALARIES, and matters concerning the etiquette and practice of the profession, collected and supplied for the purpose of assisting members to adopt as a "minimum" fees commensurate with the time and expense incurred in the training which they have had to undergo.

THE PUBLICATION OF A REGISTER OF MEMBERS, with their names and addresses, their appointments, qualifications, and the subjects taught, for the purpose of enabling the public properly to assess the value of their work and to place the tuition of their children in the hands of those who are properly qualified to undertake the work.

LEGAL ADVICE on professional matters such as Agreements for services; Income Tax claims; Copyright; Recovery of Fees, &c., &c.

ACCESS TO REGISTERS OF VACANT APPOINTMENTS AND ENGAGEMENTS, and for the transfer from Member to Member of pupils removing to new districts.

A BENEVOLENT FUND for the relief of necessitous persons who are, or have been, members, either by way of donation, annuity, or loan, and the regulations or which have purposely been made as wide as possible in order to meet the varying contingencies which arise from time to time.

AN ORPHAN FUND for the children of musicians which is open to the dependants of all musicians whether their parents were members of the Society or not.

A QUARTERLY "REPORT" recording the proceedings of the Society. The Society has entered into an arrangement with the proprietor of "THE EDUCATIONAL TIMES," whereby the quarterly "REPORT" of the Society will form a Special Supplement to the March, June, September, and December issues of the magazine. In addition members may receive copies of "THE EDUCATIONAL TIMES" for the remaining months on specially favourable terms. The policy of linking up the "REPORT" with an educational magazine was adopted in recognition of the fact that music is now assuming a position of growing importance in our system of education. It is necessary for teachers of music to be in close touch with the development of general education, as the future of music in this country depends greatly upon the extent to which the young citizens are trained to know and appreciate good music.

Forms of Application for admission to Membership and all further particulars may be obtained from the GENERAL SECRETARY, I.S.M., 19, Berners Street, London, W.-1.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxx. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.
THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. OXON.
THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1920.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best INTRODUCTORY
VOLUNTARY for the ORGAN, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, TE DEUM
(Chantwise), Harmonized Setting of the GUILD OFFICE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot,"
in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern

Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL, Worcester.

SEPTEMBER 5, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

Patrons, T.M.G.M. THE KING and QUEEN.
Conductor—MR. IVOR ATKINS.

Principal Soloists:

MESDAMES DE LA COTE, AGNES NICHOLLS, CARRIE
TUBB, ASTRA DESMOND, PHYLLIS LETT, KIRKBY LUNN,
MESSRS. JOHN COATES, GERVAASE ELWES, STEUART
WILSON, NORMAN ALLIN, HERBERT HEYNER, ROBERT RADFORD, FREDERICK RANALOV.

In the CATHEDRAL,

SUNDAY, 3.30 p.m.—Opening Service, with Chorus and Orchestra.

TUESDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"Elijah." At 7.30 p.m.—"Hymn of Faith"

(Ivor Atkins); "The Music Makers" (Elgar); "Hymn of Praise."

WEDNESDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"Gerontius" (Elgar); Motet, "There is an old belief" (Hubert Parry); New work, "Fantasy," founded on Dante's "DIVINA COMMEDIA" (Walford Davies);

Symphony in D minor (César Franck).

THURSDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"St. Matthew" Passion (Bach). At 7.30 p.m.—New work, Four Hymns, for Tenor Solo and Strings

(Vaughan Williams); "For the Fallen" (Elgar); "Requiem" (Verdi).

FRIDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"Messiah."

In the PUBLIC HALL.

WEDNESDAY, 8 p.m.—New work for Orchestra "Worcestershire Rhapsody" (A. E. Brent Smith), and works by Elgar, Julius Harrison, &c.

For Programme send STAMPED ENVELOPE
to Deighton, Worcester.

NOTTINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL COMPETITIONS.

President: SIR JESSE BOOT, BART.

ALBERT HALL AND CIRCUS STREET HALL,

SATURDAY, 30th OCTOBER, 1920.

ADJUDICATORS:

GRANVILLE BANTOCK, Esq.,

DR. E. MARKHAM LEE, GEOFFREY SHAW, Esq.,
ARTHUR CATTERALL, Esq., DR. FRANK RADCLIFFE.

Solo and Choral Classes. Instrumental Competitions,
&c., &c.

Syllabus, post free, 6d., from the Hon. Publicity Secretary,
FRANK LEES, 61, Stratford Road, West Bridgford, Nottingham.

WALLASEY MUSICAL FESTIVAL (NEW BRIGHTON).

SEPTEMBER 4th, 1920.

Hon. Musical Director: MR. WILFRID SHAW.

COMPETITIONS FOR

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

CHURCH AND CHAPEL CHOIRS.

LADIES' CHOIRS, S.S.C.

MIXED-VOICE QUARTETS.

MALE-VOICE QUARTETS.

Syllabus (post free, 3d.), from Hon. Secretary, CHAS. E. COWLEY, 44, Canterbury Road, Wallasey, Cheshire.

CHARLES TREE.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON "THE LONG LIFE OF THE VOICE."

Secretary of a Cardiff Choral Society writes, June 3rd, 1920:—

"I have been much impressed by the hints given in your book,
'How to Acquire Ease of Voice.' Could you give our Choral Society a Lecture-Concert before they begin to rehearse for the coming season?
Choral Societies should realise the value of a uniform and correct method of voice-production."

Life of the Voice depends largely on Vocal Placement.

Purity of tone " " " " Vocal Placement.

Vocal Resonance " " " " Vocal Placement.

Clearness of Diction " " " " Vocal Placement.

Compass of Voice " " " " Vocal Placement.

The art of Correct Vocal Placement is simplicity itself.

Mr. Tree's book on "How to Acquire Ease of Voice" (5/-). If difficult to obtain, write direct to author

Concerts, Lectures, &c.: Address, 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.3.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
• L.R.A.M., undertakes, by her method,
to develop perfect musical memory. Course of Six Lessons, £3 3s.
Lessons by correspondence if desired. 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W.3.

THE ART OF VOICE TRAINING.

MR. FIELD HYDE will conduct a

VACATION COURSE IN LIVERPOOL,

From Thursday, JULY 29, to AUGUST 6, 1920.

FOURTEEN LECTURE-DEMONSTRATIONS will be given, and the Course will include :—

1. A COMPLETE EXPOSITION OF VOICE-TRAINING METHOD.
2. COMPARISONS OF VARIOUS SYSTEMS WHICH ARE FOUNDED UPON DIVERSE THEORIES.
3. PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATIONS IN VOICE-TRAINING AND TEACHING.
4. PERMANENT NOTES (LETTERPRESS) OF THE VOCAL METHOD.
5. VOICE CHARTS, AND A COMPLETE SERIES OF EXERCISES AND STUDIES. ETC., ETC.

Mr. Field Hyde's Method and the Course of Lecture-Demonstrations have had the recommendation of many of the best Authorities—Musical and Medical, Cathedral and University Organists, Conductors, Principals and Professors, of some of the greatest Musical Institutions, the Editors of the chief Musical Journals, and of every Teacher and Student who has attended the Course.

The following extracts are selected from amongst hundreds of similar spontaneous expressions of opinion :—

"The Course afforded me one of the MOST ENJOYABLE WEEKS I ever spent, the educational value of which I can never forget.—F. A. C."

"Your Course seems IDEAL in that it can be taken by teachers using different methods from your own. They must INEVITABLY BE BETTER TEACHERS afterwards.—F. B., L.R.A.M."

"You SOLVED, I might say, all my DIFFICULTIES, and I do not regret having travelled the thousand miles which I did, as the Course was worth it.—J. R."

"I have for many years been a keen reader, student, and teacher of music, but never in my experience have I thought anything so necessary to be said on the subject of singing and teaching, as that which you said (or revealed) in your recent delightful course. It is easy enough to define or explain a thing, it is another matter to make it understood.—A. E. R."

"I wish to say how much I enjoyed your holiday course. You score where others fail, in that you back up all you say or teach by demonstrations with your own or pupils' voices. I have attended a good many courses, but I can honestly say that yours BEATS THEM ALL, and easily too.—J. T. S., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M."

"Your excellent course has added greatly to my success as a choir-trainer and adjudicator. It has brought me new engagements this month. Your splendidly-designed charts are extremely helpful in gaining experience. My candid opinion is that it is impossible to get better instruction.—T. J. M., L.R.A.M., F.T.S.C."

For Syllabus and full particulars, address early application to :—

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE, 4, WIGMORE STUDIOS, 52, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: MR. A. McALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.)

YOU can get to the

TOP

One Fee
for the whole series

F.R.C.O.
Mus. Bac.
—B.A.

Guarantee Courses: ONE FEE.

Mus. Bac.	A.R.C.O.	L.R.A.M.	A. Mus. T.C.L.
B.A.	F.R.C.O.	A.R.C.M.	L. Mus. T.C.L.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR)
Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

CHARLES T. BATCHELOR (BARITONE).
Oratorio, Recitals, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
10, Roche Road, Norbury, S.W. 16.

MR. ERNEST HODGE (BARITONE).
Organ Recitals, Oratorio. 123, Greenvale Road, Eltham, S.E. 9.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.
COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—
Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."
Over 500 Successes at Exams.
"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MISS BETTY HADDOW
SOPRANO.

Available for Oratorios, Concerts, Cantatas, &c.
For vacant dates, write, 74, Ollerton Road, New Southgate, N. 11.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.
15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. MAURICE VICCARS
BARITONE.

41, Arvon Road, Highbury, N. 5.

WILLIAM COLEMAN

BASS (MANCHESTER).
Oratorio, Ballads, Lessons.
18, Plymouth Avenue, Manchester, S.E.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.): L.R.A.M.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (2) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (3) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (4) Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. Degrees.
- (5) Musical Appreciation.

For terms, lists of successes, &c., address—
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

DURHAM MUS. BAC.

SEPTEMBER, 1920.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

For "FIRST" and "FINAL" Examinations.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

LATEST SUCCESSSES:

A.R.C.M., APRIL, 1920.

Paper Work	...	...	...	...	SEVEN
Practical	...	...	...	...	FOUR

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.): L.R.A.M., 48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

A CORRESPONDENCE COURSE FOR TEACHERS

SPECIALLY ARRANGED BY

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING.

This Course is intended to serve as a guide to Teachers, either in their Class-Work, or in their private teaching.

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN (VOICE SPECIALIST).

Singing, Elocution, and Breathing.

Write for free audition, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FIVE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

SINGING, PIANO-PLAYING, AND AURAL TRAINING. Dr. A. P. Alderson visits 60, Berners Street, W., every week for Private Lessons. Coaching also by Correspondence. 34, Knight's Park, Kingston-on-Thames.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-20 ... 154 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-20 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. ALBERT W. BIRD, M.I.G.C.M., GIVES
LESSONS on PIANO and ORGAN. For terms, apply The Stores, Evershot, Dorset.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING BY
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 370 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of
Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- | | |
|--|----------------|
| HARMONY. (2 vols.) | 5s. each, net. |
| COUNTERPOINT. | 5s. net. |
| DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT and CANON. | 5s. net. |
| FUGUE. | 1s. 6d. net. |
| ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. | 2s. 6d. net. |
| DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. | 2s. net. |
| PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. | 6d. net. |
| DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. | 6d. net. |
| MATERIAL OF MELODY. | 3d. net. |
| IMPROVISATION. | 1s. 6d. net. |

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes. L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. C. H. KITSON, having resigned his appointments in Dublin as organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Professor of Music at University College, and Senior Professor of Harmony at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, hopes to commence Theoretical Teaching in London in September. From July 1st, communications for him should be addressed, c/o John Whitmore & Co., West Bridge Mills, Leicester.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher), Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler. Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

MUNRO DAVISON,

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Profr. of Singing, G.S.M. (25 years); Vocal, L.R.A.M. and F.R.C.O.; Principal Alto, Temple Church; other appointments between 1900-1920, include: N. Poly*, Singing and Organ (20 years); Examiner for Higher Vocal Diplomas and Scholarships, T.C.L.; Adjudicator, Stratford, Crystal Palace Festivals, &c.; O. & C. St. Anne's, Holloway, and Holy Innocents, Hornsey (7 and 5 years); Conductor, Stock Exchange and N. London Male-Choirs (14 and 12 years); M.D. Chl. Sy. (for performance of unfamiliar works), 7 years; University Coll. School (Singing), 7 years; also Assistant to the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Temple Church (3 years).

For Lessons, address, 434, Seven Sisters Road, N. 4.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SOUTHPORT.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUSIC SPECIALIST REQUIRED as ASSISTANT MISTRESS in a large Girls' Council School. Good executant, voice, and pianoforte, desired. Commencing Salary according to qualifications and experience, rising by annual increments of £10 to a maximum of £280 per annum. Form of application may be obtained from the undersigned:

WM. ALLANACH, Director of Education.
Education Offices,
2, Church Street,
Southport.

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.

ALTO LAY-CLERK REQUIRED. Candidates should be under 30, and Communicants. Good reader essential. Duties at present, Evening five days in the week, and the usual Sunday Services. Salary, £70, and fees. Applications, with testimonials (copies), should be sent not later than July 15, to Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, Palace Yard, Gloucester.

RIPON CATHEDRAL.—Vacancies for TENOR and BASS LAY-CLERKS. Salary, £100 a year. Applicants must be Communicants of the Church of England. Good reading essential. Applications, with three recent testimonials or inquiries, may be addressed in the first instance to The Precentor, The Cathedral, Ripon.

There is also a VACANCY for a CHORISTER BOARDER. Education free, and partial board. Age not above 10. Application as above.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL for the Public Schools. Choir School for King's College Chapel. Inclusive Fees 70 guineas, reduced to £20 for CHORISTERS, who follow the regular curriculum.

A TRIAL OF VOICES to fill vacancies in the Choir will be held on Tuesday, July 20.

Candidates must have a good ear and good voice, and should be between 9 and 12 years of age.

For particulars apply to The Dean.

Names to be sent in not later than July 12.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

There is a VACANCY in the CHOIR for an ALTO, either a Choral Scholar or Lay-Clerk. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year with certain allowances. The stipend offered to a Lay-Clerk is £140.

The COMPETITION will be held in July.

Applications to be sent in not later than July 12.

For further information apply to The Dean, King's College, Cambridge.

ALTO-SOLOIST, in Cathedral (Protestant), Ireland, would like an appointment in a large City Church, or Town, in return for a position as clerk. Seven years' experience in a Gas Company's Office, had full charge of Rental and accounts, good knowledge double-entry book-keeping, present testimonials. Further particulars, apply, "Alto," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

KEW PARISH CHURCH.—Two ALTOS REQUIRED. Good readers. Salary, £15 each. Write, A. R. Dean, 16, Flanders Mansions, Bedford Park, W.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.

There is a VACANCY in the Choir for a TENOR singer. Should be under 30 years of age. Salary, £95, and 25 per cent. bonus. Application and testimonials to The Precentor, The Precatory, Lincoln.

TENOR REQUIRED. £12 per annum. Light duties. Good reader essential. Apply, "Choirmaster," St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, City.

NORWICH CATHEDRAL.—There is a Vacancy in the Choir for a BASS LAY-CLERK. Applications to be made to the Rev. The Precentor, The Close, Norwich.

WANTED, by Soprano, A.R.C.M., engagement in Quartet, on Riviera for winter months, in a choir. Apply, Miss Evetts, 7, Beech Croft Road, Oxford.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER (good trainer) WANTED for Linthorpe Parish, Middlesbrough. Salary, £100. Particulars of duties may be had from the Vicar. Applications, with two recent testimonials, one from a clergyman, the other from a professional musician, to be sent on or before July 15, to Mr. William Ellis, The Cathedral, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Mostyn Road Wesleyan Church, Brixton. Salary, £30 per annum. Member Wesleyan Church preferred. Applications, by letter only, with testimonials, to Mr. J. D. Archer, 107, Burton Road, Brixton, S.W. 9.

ORGANIST REQUIRED, for Sunday mornings only, during August. Church in N.W. District. Use of fine three-manual organ, and expenses paid in return for services. Write, "Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.," 44, Hopefield Avenue, Brondesbury, N.W. 6.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF SALFORD.

MUNICIPAL ORGAN RECITALS.

The Entertainments Committee are desirous of arranging a Series of Municipal Organ Recitals at the Royal Technical Institute, Salford, to be held during the next winter season.

Organists desirous of giving such Recitals are invited to make application, stating their terms, to me.

Full particulars on application, Chief Committee Clerk, Town Hall, Salford.

L. C. EVANS, Town Clerk, Salford.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. George's, Belfast. Must be a good Churchman, and have had experience in training boys. Salary, £120. Apply, with testimonials (copies only), to Rev. H. D. Murphy, D.D., 39, Wellington Park, Belfast.

MUSIC-MASTER REQUIRES POSITION in Public or Private School. Thoroughly experienced in Teaching of Pianoforte, Organ, and Voice-Production. Write, Victor H. Burraston, Coniston, Hayward's Road, Cheltenham.

PIANOFORTE TEACHER REQUIRED (gentleman), at Chiswick College of Music and High School for Girls, 21, High Road, Chiswick, W. Premium required. Letters only first instance.

ASSISTANT MUSIC-MASTER WANTED for a Public School in September next. Resident. Apply, Headmaster, Rossall School, Fleetwood.

WANTED, for a South-East London Institutional Mission, a MUSICAL DIRECTOR. Generous gratuity. Excellent possibilities. Apply, A. C. Vincent, 73, Farringdon St., E.C. 4.

ORGANIST.—Keen Organ-student desires Appointment (Church of England). Easy distance of S.E. London. Write, H. E. C., 56A, Church Street, Camberwell, S.E. 5.

DEPUTY.—Mr. C. CANNON is willing to deputise in or near London during the Cambridge "Long" vacation. Apply, 62, Stockwell Park Road, S.W. 9.

ACCOMPLISHED MUSICIAN wishes to accompany a singer in practice. Coaching in interpretation of modern songs; hints on French, Italian and German diction. Terms, 5s. an hour. "S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ROYAL COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND,

UPPER NORWOOD, S.E. 19.

WANTED.—Thoroughly reliable man, about 40 years of age, to teach Tuners' repairs, and impart a thorough knowledge of the Pianoforte, Harmonium, Reed Organs, and Player-piano. An interview is essential. Applications, &c., should be made to the Principal.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

July 7th, at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte and Vocal Recital by Messrs. Charlton Keith and Philip Henry.

July 10th, at 3 p.m.—Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W. (Sole Lessees of the Hall: Chappell & Co.)

July 14th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

July 15th, at 3 p.m.—Elocution, Chamber Music and Choir Concert, at Steinway Hall.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginner as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Fifteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EDWARD MACDOWELL.

FROM THE XVIIIth CENTURY

TRANSCRIPTIONS FOR PIANO OF HARPSICHORD
AND CLAVICHORD PIECES).

1. COURANTE ... Jean Philippe Rameau
2. SARABANDE ... Jean Philippe Rameau
3. TEMPO DI MINUETTO ... G. B. Grazioli
4. LE BAVOLET FLOTTANT François Couperin
5. GIGUE ... J. Mattheson
6. SARABANDE ... Jean Baptiste Loeilly

Nos. 1 to 5, 2s. net, each. No. 6, 1s. 6d. net.

These are of medium difficulty, and well varied. MACDOWELL was careful to preserve their original flavour in adapting them to the technique of the Pianoforte; and they will be found admirably suited either for recital or for teaching purposes.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LIMITED.

THE PIANOFORTE COMPOSITIONS OF
THE AMERICAN TONE-POET

ALBERT KÜSSNER

HELEN PITKIN writes:—

"I have received from the composer, Albert Küssner, a delightful pamphlet of three melodies, invitingly presented with the title 'Moon Moths' on its cover. The book is dedicated to his sister, Amalia Küssner, the remarkable young woman who has been depicting the beauties of royalty and of the first families in this country in miniature. The dedication reads simply 'To Amalia,' but the music says more. It idealizes her as clearly as her dainty brush does the great dames who sit to her to be immortalized, and there is a breath of spring, the lingering stringendos of passion, warm touches all through as though the composer were telling his tale in the green pastures under never a wintry moon. The themes are prose poems and easy to read; but, with all music of this kind, it requires talent in interpretation. I like 'Moon Moths.' I have played them so far in the noon-day sun. When I have imprisoned them in my brain I shall hear them as they may be best heard in the twilight of a southern moonrise."

MOON MOTHS, 3s. DAWN, 2s.

AT PARTING, 2s. HESITATION, 2s.

THE EVENING HOUR, 2s. MEMORIES, 2s.

BY CANDLE LIGHT, 1s. ENTREATY, 2s.

ETC., ETC., ETC.

At any Music Sellers.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS' RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES'

Publishers of 'SEVICK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'FERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSON.'

This adaptation has been made by Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., at the request of the LEAGUE OF ARTS, to whom it is dedicated. It is specially intended for the performance at the Dedication of the Cenotaph and similar ceremonies throughout the country.

WITH PROUD THANKSGIVING CHORUS

BY

LAURENCE BINYON

AND

EDWARD ELGAR

Arranged from "For the Fallen" for S.A.T.B., with accompaniment for Military or Brass Band, or Organ or Pianoforte.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

London · NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JULY 1 1920

ADVANCE IN PRICES

In consequence of the recent heavy rise in the cost of production, and the substantial advances in wages and establishment charges, Messrs. Novello & Co. have to announce that a further increase in the price of their publications is imperative. From this date the cost of all books and music (except separately published folio songs and publications originally priced at over Twelve shillings) will be double that charged before the war.

The prices of all publications not now advanced remain as they were on June 30, 1920.

In accordance with the above statement the cost of THE MUSICAL TIMES will be Sixpence. The annual subscription (including postage) will be Seven shillings and sixpence.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS

BY EDWIN EVANS

EPILOGUE: A PERSONAL EXPLANATION

One of the many disadvantages of a selective series of articles, such as that which I am now bringing to a conclusion, is that one's omissions are likely to be endowed with significance. In the near future I anticipate receiving much enlightenment concerning the reasons which led me to include this composer and exclude that other from my scheme, reasons which will be quite new to me, and, probably, very illuminating. In the circumstances, it would seem expedient for me to forestall some of the more obvious misconstructions of my purpose, even at the cost of a more frequent use of the personal pronoun than I have permitted myself in the course of these articles. After all, I nowhere committed myself to a complete survey of the subject, and the selection is my own responsibility, for which a personal explanation may be desirable.

In the first place, the title is to be taken in a strict sense. By modern British composers I do not mean merely those who are more or less alive in our midst, but those who are taking a lively and significant part in forming the repertoire of this generation of musicians. It may be that they are destined to be superseded in the next. Contemporary approval is not evidence in the court of musical history, and a critic who claimed finality of judgment would be fit only for employment in the Ministry of Fine Arts with which we are threatened. But that next generation of musicians will own to some kind of parentage. It will not merely happen, but it will grow upon the soil now fertilised by contemporary achievement. This aspect of the subject naturally limits the period to be dealt with. It excludes, to begin with, those great Victorian figures some of whom still stand at the head of the profession, and without whose names no historical treatment of modern British music would be complete. But although this exclusion is obviously justified, it is liable to misconstruction. Whilst it would be affectation on my part to suggest that those great names have given me memorable musical thrills, my memory goes back just far enough to convince me that they spent the most impressionable years of their lives under conditions which, far from being conducive to musical inspiration, made the mere survival of the musical instinct a stupendous triumph of man over his environment. To create an imaginative musical masterpiece in the England of the 'eighties would have required not a man but a demigod. I have the best of reasons for appreciating those conditions, for my own father's musical career was one that was deflected by them. If the old, absurd prejudice against English music is now visibly crumbling away, the change of attitude is in no small measure due to musicians who laboured the stony ground and tended the saplings, and though they have had their share of honour, the thought of what they went through makes me inclined to condone even their most tedious moments. Mere sentiment, if you like, but not even H. G. Wells can leave sentiment entirely out of history. That, however, does not affect their exclusion on purely chronological grounds.

The Edwardian names—that is to say, those which became prominent in the Edwardian period—are on a different footing. In the first place, so much has been written concerning the two foremost of them that I cannot feel it incumbent upon me to swell the volume. They are still too near to need advocacy, and not yet remote enough for the dispassionate criticism which only the verdict of posterity can substantiate. They make an imposing group of composers, great and small, and they set their stamp upon a period, but it is quite remarkable how faint is their influence upon their successors. One reason may be that recognition came to them more tardily than is the rule nowadays, and was accorded to a style that was already mature and did not appreciably develop afterwards. Their apparition was thus less a continuous influence than an exciting incident. The younger men heard their music and passed on, reserving their more alert attention for the progressive development of their contemporaries. Even if that were not so, chronological grounds alone would suffice to exclude these composers from the scope of these articles.

From that point onward difficulties begin to arise, as is inevitable in any delimitation of frontiers. It is really fortuitous that the difference in age between the oldest and youngest composer whose works have been passed in review is almost exactly twenty years, but their works prove them to be of the same generation. There was of course a debatable territory to be considered between what was Edwardian and what was Georgian. I remember that I pondered long over J. B. McEwen. In a time when we have good reason to be proud of our chamber music his contributions to it have been both copious and of sterling worth. Moreover they have a reflective quality that makes them singularly attractive, and their idiom, if not precisely that of to-day, retains an uncommon freshness and vitality. It was with considerable reluctance that I drew the line in point of date between McEwen and Vaughan Williams, and even now I am not certain whether the right place of the former is not with his juniors. But there must be a division somewhere, and though mere dates carry little significance—there are quite young composers with Victorian views on music—they are serviceable as sign-posts.

The subject was thus narrowed down to a group of nine composers, of whom the eldest is now forty-seven and the youngest twenty-seven years old. That they happen to be of extremely varied types, having very little in common, is not the result of selection—it is symptomatic of the present activity of our musical world, which has become like a disturbed ant-hill. Certainly no other period of our own musical history has been equally productive, and it is very doubtful whether any other country could at present muster as goodly a group of its younger composers. Nevertheless, though all musical history proves that nine is a generous number of composers to allot to one generation in a single country, I know that I shall be reproached with some omissions. The first that suggests itself is that of Josef Holbrooke. I have before me as I write, an article on his music which I contributed to the Musical Standard of May 30, 1903, and which drew the attention of H. A. Fricker, with the result that, soon afterwards, Holbrooke's 'Queen Mab' was performed at the Leeds Festival. In those days Holbrooke was certainly a remarkable apparition, and one which justified the highest hopes. But seventeen years have elapsed. The terrestrial globe has rolled on, and Holbrooke's best works are still the symphonic poems which first made his name: 'Ulalume,' 'The Viking,' 'Queen Mab,' and so on. They have lost none of those qualities which then made them so vivid to us, but there has been much music written since, and they are not, to-day, as exceptional as they were in 1903. Time is inexorable. A creative artist who does not grow is doomed to shrink. For all Holbrooke's feverish productivity, which is undisciplined by self-criticism, and for all his dynamic, explosive musical eloquence, he does not fill the position in the musical world to-day that was promised him when he first enlivened the Promenade Concerts with 'Three Blind Mice.' In the definition given above, he is not at present of those who take a lively and significant part in forming the répertoire of this generation. His contribution is dated, unless of course there is pending one of those cataclysmic revolutions of personality that occur occasionally in the lives of creative artists, and generally when they are least expected. He is still much too young for prediction to be safe, one way or the other.

Another omission occasioned me serious misgivings. It is that of Cyril Scott, on whom I wrote in the same series of articles in 1903. We were then not far from the 'nineties, a period to which both he and I were indebted in various ways. He has the rare distinction of having invented his own musical language, for the seeming Gallicisms with which he is sometimes reproached are present in music that he wrote before the modern French idiom was generally accessible in print. It is a brilliant means of expression, as fascinating as a rich, exotic brocade. His is certainly a very original talent, not merely because of certain external—and sometimes irritating—mannerisms of rhythm and tonality, but because he takes an original and personal view of the whole art of music. On the face of it he should be included in any representative gallery of English musical portraits. Yet it was difficult to include him in this series of articles, for he must be approached from a totally different angle. There were other obstacles too, but of minor importance. He is commonly regarded as modern, but I cannot completely dispel an impression that there clings to him the atmosphere of those literary 'nineties, and, in a curious way, there is scarcely a period more remote from the present than that of Beardsley and the Yellow Book. Then there is his intense preoccupation with pattern, his naïve delight in the invention of ingenious and fascinating devices which he then scatters over a score in such profusion that one is often blinded to the more serious content of the music. Finally circumstances have tempted him to write a considerable number of small works, many of which have only his personal idiom to distinguish them from the songs and pianoforte pieces that provide inferior composers with a living. Worst of all, owing to the shortcomings of the publishing trade, it is mostly these that are available in print, whereas the really valuable works remain in manuscript. This makes it difficult to liberate one's impressions of his chamber music, for instance, which is heard but seldom, from those of his many trivialities, with which every one is familiar. His recent Pianoforte Quintet, String Quintet, and Pianoforte Trio are a warning against a judgment formed rashly upon superficial data. He has certainly a greater importance than is generally given him in our programmes, but he has curiously pronounced limitations, notably in his musical vocabulary, which distort one's vision of him, and the resulting opinion is apt to fluctuate according to which of these many impressions is in the foreground. He is, in short, a far more controversial subject than any of those included in the series, and it was chiefly that consideration which led me to postpone discussion of his works until some future occasion.

For the rest, the material is far from exhausted, but what remains requires a different method. It is a feature of the times, not merely in England, that composers constantly arise whose best work is contained in one or two scores. They are the musical equivalent of the men of one book. Then there is the vexed question of 'mass production.' It is a fallacy to assume that only the best music deserves a hearing. A library limited to the best books would be a less effective solace than the strange assortment that most 'book' men accumulate around them. It is not by a prescribed course of masterpieces that public taste is fashioned. On the contrary, it is the confident reliance upon the approval of others that has caused musical taste to be so inelastic. The musical public should learn to make its own selection, and it cannot do that unless there is plenty to select from. An expurgated repertoire is suited only to the mentally indolent. Active minds require constant occupation, and in the present state of English music they get it. Among those composers of undefined rank there are many whose talent is at all events sufficient to keep one on the qui vive for its fruition, and their number is such that these articles might have been continued for another year or two.

A weakening feature of this remarkable activity is the continued parochial tendency to form groups of indeterminate mutual admiration. Such associations are inevitable everywhere, but the petites chapelles of Parisian music are as sharply defined as the alphabetical groups of London painting. Each of them has some kind of a creed which it puts into practice, and is ready to defend. Our corresponding cliques are much less certain of what it is that holds them together, and only too often it turns out to be a touching belief that all their geese are swans. This produces an enervating atmosphere which has sapped the vigour of many promising talents. In recent years there has been a re-grouping from which a new party has arisen in the musical state. It claims to be 'advanced,' yet much of its modernity is akin to the socialism professed by undergraduates. But it is active and scholarly, and much good may come of it, though probably even better results could be attained without such grouping. In other walks of life individualism is our natural instinct. Why not in music? However, these questions of musical politics do not concern a critic until they are thrust upon his notice. Then his best remedy is in flight.

Hearty congratulations to Sir Hugh Allen. It seems to be taken for granted that the headship of the R.C.M. carries with it a knighthood. This is to honour the post rather than the man. We like to think that in the case of Sir Hugh the distinction is bestowed chiefly as a reward for years of strenuous and successful work elsewhere.

THE SYMPHONIC WORKS OF

W. H. BELL

By M. VAN SOMEREN-GODFREY

(Concluded from June number, page 376)

The third Symphony is in F, and bears the date May, 1918-19. There are four separate movements, and the orchestra is slightly larger in spite of the work being generally lighter—celeste, glockenspiel, bass drum, and side-drum being added.

No programme is hinted at, but in contrast to the last Symphony the present one more readily calls up more or less definite ideas in each movement. The introduction to the first movement is full of suggestiveness of waking life. The main themes of the first movement proper are essentially reminiscent of the dance, but their development leads to the assumption that the composer would rather have them considered in the abstract. The whole is full of the spirit of youth and optimism. The second movement is a real Scherzo, losing nothing by its brevity. It is most delicately dainty and whimsical, and might well be in illustration of 'R. F.'s' fairy poems in Punch. The little chuckle with which it ends is really irresistible. The slow movement is entitled 'Elegy,' and is in parts the most heavily scored in the work. The critics found it sombre and mournful, and suggested that the composer was moved to pen it by the calamitous times Cape Town passed through in October-November, 1918. In those few weeks there were over seven thousand deaths from pneumonic influenza in the Cape Peninsula. This terrible pestilence found Cape Town utterly unprepared, and although little has been said about the matter, words quite fail to express the horrors that arose. The composer was one of the most indefatigable workers and organizers of relief amongst the poorer population in the neighbourhood of his home. This throws a certain light on his personality which may well be reflected in his music. Nevertheless the writer prefers to look on the 'Elegy' as a tribute to those fallen in the war, and set in a vein of pride which has overcome grief, rather than in one of gloom. The solemn writing for the brass recalls the nobility of the Beethoven 'Equality' for trombones, and the whole movement is full of a sincerity which places it in the category of the finest funeral music. Here at any rate is British music worthy of a solemn, great occasion.

In the strenuous last movement the composer's friends can scarcely fail to see the reflection of the out-door life which he has the good fortune to lead when away from his strenuous duties. Living in an ideal country and climate for the purpose, he and his family spend most of their leisure time on horseback. The Finale, although largely in the minor, is exhilarating in the extreme.

The first movement—Andante tranquillo 3-4, in F—is ushered in by a series of small motifs over a double pedal :

EX. 1. Andante tranquillo.
Cor.

EX. 2. Tr.

EX. 3. Fl. mp

The first and third appear in quick succession, being dovetailed together by the second. All three are immediately developed, forming quite a lengthy introduction to the main movement, in which they receive further treatment. Attention may be drawn to a beautiful undercurrent of clarinet semiquavers. The introduction is followed by the Allegro grazioso with its first theme :

EX. 4. Allegro grazioso.
Ob. Solo. espress.

in the tonic, followed by the second subject :

EX. 5. Cl. p

In his handling of material the composer always has so much to expound that lengthy recapitulation seems to be foreign to his idea of form. It is generally (as in the present case) replaced by an extended development section in which the most is made of the material of the exposition. After a final fortissimo statement of Ex. 5 the movement ends quietly in a very high register.

The second movement, Allegretto, is the shortest and lightest of the four. It remains in 3/4, and opens in D major :

EX. 6. Allegretto.

A change is made to 9/8 in a contrasting centre section in which there are some busy figures for the lower strings, and also some work for the brass. Much use is made of the celeste and harp with staccato wood-wind, and the perky little figure for violas—in the bottom stave of Ex. 6—is always obtruding itself. Its last appearance is in the final cadence, where it is allotted to the flute, which, with its accompaniment of high tenuto string chords, recalls the close of the first movement.

In the 'Elegy' a change is made to duple time which continues for practically the remainder of the Symphony. It commences Adagio 2/2, in B⁷ minor, with solemn chords :

EX. 7. Adagio.

for brass and wood-wind interrupted by a triplet theme, and followed by a broken figure on the strings. These are developed and followed by a more continuous version of the string figure :

EX. 8.

Full use is made of this in a canon at the sixth below, and there is also much imitation at other intervals.

After a big crescendo a calmer section with a variant of the string theme leads to a most sonorous fortissimo, employing the whole orchestra in the combination of the string theme with the triplet figure. The effect of this on an orchestra of the size for which it was conceived was overwhelming. This section dies down to an impressive close of solemn soft brass chords.

The last movement is largely in the minor. Commencing Allegro 4-4 with a throbbing repeated unison on the whole of the violins and violas :

Ex. 9. Allegro. Vl., Violo.
f Strepitoso.

one of the two main themes is heard on the lower strings. The falling diminished seventh should be noted. A second theme in the same key follows :

Ex. 10. Str. f

Elgar characterised his 'Enigma' theme by two consecutive falling minor sevenths. Here we have three consecutive falling sevenths, all of different sizes. The composer builds a continuous set of variations on these two subjects with the same artistic consistency as in the Symphonic Variations, and ends them with a really inspiring fugue (Allegro vivace) on a variant of the second theme :

Ex. 11. Allegro vivace.
Vl. mf

The falling diminished and major sevenths are retained, and a rising minor ninth is used melodically also. These unusual intervals seem to fall very well into the general scheme, and the whole movement is most stimulating. The fugue ends fortissimo, and a moment's silence and an abrupt change of key lead into the Coda in 3-4, starting over the same double pedal as the first movement of the Symphony. The Coda is very brief, and ends fortissimo in the major.

It is early to venture to prophecy in regard to such new works, but they undoubtedly bring up many points of interest to those who are really concerned with the progress of the symphony, and who have not made up their minds that the last word in symphonies has been uttered long ago. The mere fact that the composer is casting most of his work in this form, considering the present condition of the musical market, speaks volumes for his seriousness of purpose.

The gap of eighteen years between the first and second Symphonies has given ample time for the composer's development. His handling of the symphony is quite his own. His use of the variation form and his economy of material have already received comment. From its very nature, with its freedom of rhythm, contrapuntal texture, and overlapping phrases, the music requires intelligent study; but the listener is amply repaid.

Finally, it is good news that a fourth Symphony has been planned, and is well under way, from the pen of this most interesting writer.

THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN LONDON

The last week of the New York Symphony Orchestra's European tour was spent in London with pronounced success on both musical and social sides. The concert arrangements announced in the June Musical Times were adhered to, so there is no need for a detailed account of the performances. As to the high technical attainments of the Orchestra, opinion was unanimous. The wind departments, especially the flutes and horns, have drawn enthusiastic comment from even the most blasé concert-goers. There was general agreement that the horn playing was far ahead of the English standard. One was able to listen to the most trying passages without that expectation of mishap which takes away half the enjoyment. And the excellence did not stop at mere correctness. There was extraordinary gradation of power, the pianissimo playing being such as to make us realise in an unusual degree the magical possibilities of the instrument. The strings gave us an object-lesson in drill by bowing as one man. Perhaps the word 'drill' suggests itself at once as containing the secret of the Orchestra's excellences and defects. Thus the demands of modern brilliant and highly-coloured scores such as Ravel's 'Daphnis and Chloe,' and the Paris version of the 'Bacchanale' from 'Tannhäuser,' were met with a completeness that we have never heard excelled. On the other hand, in work calling for slow expressive playing we felt that there was a little less warmth and feeling than we get from the best English orchestras. However, there is but one opinion as to the all-round interest and enjoyment provided by the concerts.

We hope our friends from over the water will not attach too much importance to the rather large number of empty seats. A combination of gloriously warm June weather, the most popular race meeting of the year, and broad daylight until ten o'clock, is a force against which even the most delightful of indoor entertainments can only partially succeed. The gatherings, however, were thoroughly representative of London musical life. We doubt if so many eminent musicians have ever before been in the audience five times in one week. The best evidence of the Orchestra's appeal was to be found in the fact that the attendances increased as the week went on, culminating in an immense gathering at the Albert Hall on the Sunday. At the Saturday concert Mr. Damrosch made a brief speech, in the course of which he announced that the proceeds of the occasion were to be given to St. Dunstan's Hostel. He added that as the expenses were heavy, and the profits therefore likely to be on the modest side, Mr. Flagler had cabled his intention of making up the sum to £1,000—a generous act of which the audience showed great appreciation.

LUNCHEON AT THE MANSION HOUSE

Since Sir Edward Cooper was elected Lord Mayor of London, musicians have had frequent cause to congratulate themselves on his Lordship's zealous interest in their art. He showed it yet again on June 18 by entertaining at luncheon the Orchestra and a large number of distinguished native musicians. Among those present were the American Ambassador and Mrs. Davis, Viscount Bryce, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Miss Flagler, Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Alexander and Lady Mackenzie, Sir Frederick and Lady Bridge, Mr. Paul Cravath, Sir Gilbert Parker, Sir Walter and Lady Parratt, Sir Frederic and Lady Cowen, Sir Henry and Lady Wood, Dame Clara Kennerley-Rumford, Mr. Kennerley-Rumford, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Davies, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Littleton, Captain John Coates, Lieut.-Col. Mackenzie Rogan, and Captain Albert Williams. The string band of the 1st Life Guards, under Lieut. George Miller, supplied music during the function.

The Lord Mayor, in proposing the health of the Orchestra, announced that the Worshipful Company of Musicians was conferring its medal on Mr. Damrosch.

Mr. Damrosch made a delightful speech. He drew rounds of applause when, alluding to the importance of friendship between Great Britain and America, he said he would like to pronounce 'a dark and dreadful curse on mischief-makers who exploited superficial difficulties between the two countries.'

The Orchestra was demonstrative in its appreciation of the whole function. Probably no other kind of social entertainment would have appealed to the players so much as this civic hospitality, with its touches of antique dress and ceremony and its historic surroundings.

RECEPTION BY THE MUSIC CLUB

On the evening of the same day, at 160, Wardour Street, the Music Club held a reception in honour of Mr. Damrosch. There was a very large attendance, and the fine rooms, beautifully decorated with plants and flowers, showed to great advantage. Among those present were the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress (who received the guests), Lady Maud Warrender, Lord Justice Younger, Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. Albert Coates, and Mr. Tom Burke (who came after having sung in the first performance of the new Puccini opera), Mr. Frank Bridge, Mr. Julius Harrison, Miss Olga Haley, Mr. Felix Salmond, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. Augustus Littleton, and Mr. Adrian C. Boulton. A brief musical programme was contributed by Miss Agnes Nicholls, M. G. Barreré (the N.Y.S.O. principal flautist), Mr. Albert Spalding, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Robert Radford, with Mr. Berkeley Mason, Mr. Hamilton Harty, and Mr. Arnold Bax at the pianoforte.

A CHAT WITH MR. DAMROSCH

Though beset with engagements, Mr. Damrosch kindly found time to give us a few impressions of the tour.

'We have had a wonderful time,' he said. 'The promises made to us when we were arranging the tour have been more than fulfilled. The warmth of our welcome, the lavish hospitality, the enthusiasm of the audiences have been overwhelming. It has been one big glad hand from start to finish, and our week in London is a fitting climax. Of course there were difficulties. . . . Did I hear you murmur "Strikes"? We ran into a bigger variety of trouble that way than I should have thought possible. In France it was chiefly railway and other transport workers. In Italy the waiters and cooks were out. And we generally managed to arrive just as the trouble was beginning. However, we carried out our itinerary except that we had to miss Lyons. The strike made it impossible to get there, so we went in an improvised train straight from Bordeaux to Marseilles, the journey taking twenty-two hours instead of the normal thirteen. And when we arrived we found a tram strike, with strikers and strike-breakers rioting in the streets. However, all's well that ends well, and here we are in good quiet old London.'

WALTER DAMROSCH.

We talked of the musical side of the tour.

'A country, like an individual, develops its own idea of interpretation, and doesn't like to be jolted out of it,' said Mr. Damrosch. 'This is a truism, of course, but in order to realise the fact thoroughly one has to go through an intensive experience such as we have had in visiting five countries in a few weeks.'

'As for instance . . . ?'

'The treatment of classical music,' he replied. 'French and English critics disapproved of our reading of the "Eroica" as being too free. In Holland, Belgium, and Alsace it was received with enthusiasm. Here in London the chief complaint seems to be that some slight changes of tempo are made during the course of a movement—changes not marked in the score. Well, I can only say that such variations are not the result of mere caprice, or of any desire to make points. They are the honest expression of the way I feel the music, and it would be dishonest to alter my reading merely because I wished to fall in with your ideas. I studied for a long time with Von Bülow, whose opinion upon anything to do with Beethoven cannot be pooh-poohed. He held the view that each theme demanded its own tempo—within limits, of course. Now the two themes in the first movement of the "Eroica" are typical examples. The first is heroic, the second elegiac. This emotional contrast is surely heightened by the adoption of a slightly slower pace for the second. If the "Eroica" were a pianoforte sonata instead of a symphony, you would almost certainly find pianists making some such change of tempo, and few if any critics would object. Most of them would probably praise the player for elasticity! Why should the orchestral conductor alone be tied to the letter? It is curious that France, with her liking for the highly-coloured and bizarre, should be among the most academic in her ideas as to the performance of the classics. Yet the French were enthusiastic over our Mozart-playing, although we played the Finale of the "Jupiter" at a pace Mozart never dreamed of. We feel that no pace can be too great for music of this type so long as clarity is not sacrificed.

'Your wind-players have especially delighted us, Mr. Damrosch. The horns are so free from splutters and cracks, and have such control of nuance that we have heard people wondering if the instruments have the advantage of any improved mechanism.'

'No,' he replied; 'but perhaps things are helped by the fact of our having two first horns, one specialising in the more exacting solos, the other playing in the tutti passages. One of these players has an instrument with an extra valve, but that fact would not account for the excellence of which you speak. I suppose it is merely a matter of their knowing their job exceptionally well. One of your best-known conductors, by the way, complained that their tone is rather covered. If that is so, we feel the balance is more than made up by the sweet and noble quality.'

'Another matter on which people comment is the bowing of your strings,' we said. 'With us it is usually a case of the majority of the players adopting the same bowing, whereas yours are absolutely unanimous.'

'We attach a good deal of importance to that,' said Mr. Damrosch, 'believing it to be essential to certain subtleties of phrasing. When we take up a new work, the chef d'attaque and I go over all the string parts—except of course the double-basses—and we settle the bowing. The librarian marks every copy before we begin rehearsing.'

This led to some discussion on the subject of rehearsals. 'In America,' said Mr. Damrosch, 'we have a great advantage over you in that our orchestras are all subsidised. In some cases—the New York Symphony, for example—the financial backing comes from one wealthy patron, but usually it is due to the generosity of a group of men. The excellence of the city orchestras is a matter of local pride, and people are prepared to pay for it. Our orchestra costs our president, Mr. Flagler, 100,000 dollars a year—£25,000. As a result of being able to rehearse practically ad libitum American orchestras have developed a high ideal of precision. Anything a modern composer demands in the way of technique or ensemble has a good chance of being realised.'

'Isn't there a little danger of over rehearsal?' we asked. 'Some of us feel at times that the wonderful discipline of your players has been obtained perhaps at the cost of a little of the warmth we get from our English orchestras, who are notoriously under-rehearsed.'

'The resourcefulness and reading powers for which your players have long been famous,' he said, 'has been developed by shortage of rehearsals. And no doubt the constant necessity for being on the alert has given their playing a special quality, a personal touch, and a freshness that have something in common with an improvisation. These are excellences that you owe to your disability. "Sweet are the uses ——" You have a popular saying, "It will be all right on the night," and no doubt in a wonderful way you rise to the occasion, and it generally is all right. But why not have it all right on the night before, or even the week before? You take it from me that if ever your orchestras enjoy financial advantages similar to ours, your conductors will make the most of them, and in a few years the temperamental character of your performances will probably be modified by great developments on the side of precision and discipline.'

This is an interesting theory, and when our millionaires start falling over one another in their anxiety to endow orchestras we shall be delighted to test it. Till then, we shall continue our habit of postponing half of our first performances through lack of rehearsal, and raising over the other half our national slogan, 'Twill be all right on the night.'

THE MAHLER FESTIVAL AT AMSTERDAM

BY SAMUEL LANGFORD

It is in every way to be regretted that England was so poorly represented at the Mahler Festival, both in criticism and in the important concerts of International chamber music where she was not represented at all. The fault was not all ours, for though invitations to Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. Cyril Scott had eventually to be declined from unfortunate circumstances, our friends in Holland should have known that we have other composers of chamber music or songs who would have done us and them every credit. Our recently-formed British Music Society might conceivably have served us better in this connection, which would seem to be quite in its line of business. We have every excuse at the present time for not being very eager about Mahler, and the Germans themselves have flattered our want of interest in him by their own long neglect of his genius as a composer. Mahler himself had Whistler's gentle art of making enemies pretty highly developed, and in his music he is far from continuously ingratiating; yet one would not think it could take more than a glance to see the genius of his melody in his more condescending moments, and that the fascinating art and the invention with which he associates his melodies with the instruments of the orchestra could not easily be overlooked. That Mahler is not in the harmonic sense a modern is no doubt one reason why we continue to neglect him now. It is doubtful, even, whether he should be called a harmonist at all in any strict sense, so purely is melody the spring of his writing and so careless is he that the harmonic ear should be satisfied. We have had no such strictly melodic composer as Mahler since the days of Bach, but though his melody has often a likeness to the obbligati of Bach, it is by no means housed in the harmonic security which makes Bach's melody so satisfying. Having heard the last six Symphonies and other works of Mahler, we do not leave Amsterdam greatly envying the diet of Mahler first and every other composer afterward to which Mengelberg is training the music-lovers of that city; but we do leave it with an abounding admiration for the work of Mengelberg, and the conviction that Mahler was a great composer whom all the world must hear. We found in some parts of the fifth and sixth Symphonies a harshness intolerable, and could only marvel how the man who had the charm and genius to write the lighter parts of the Symphonies could have the hardness to imagine the rest. The symphonic song-cycle, 'The Song of the Earth,' appeared to be the most completely beautiful of all the works we heard, and a continual ravishment both in its easeful and manifold melody and in the exquisite aptitude of its orchestration. Whether it were sung in English or German, this work would now be the most suitable for the reintroduction of the composer's music to England. It presents him only in his most fascinating and poetic aspects, is the most easily-practicable of his compositions, and the poems, altered slightly by Mahler from lyrics in 'The Chinese Flute' of Hans Bethge, are themselves beautiful enough to give the whole a special appeal. It may be remembered that Mahler passed away shortly before the date of the first performance at Munich, in 1911. The pathos and beauty of the work are enriched by many premonitions of approaching death, though its lightness is not marred but its tenderness enhanced by the imminence of pathos which is felt throughout its gaiety. It is so far death-devoted, and its cadence of melody is so much elongated by this devotion as it reaches the final close, that the work may be regarded as Mahler's 'Tristan,' and the ninth Symphony, which separates itself in its closing Adagio from the rest of his work by its beautiful and daring use of chromatic harmony, does so in what seems an attempt to carry further, and into purely instrumental regions of abstract music, the noble emotions of this vocal and symphonic miniature. We are not in every way reconciled, even by this lovely work, to the purely symphonic treatment of the voice which seems less an aim than a necessity of Mahler's mind. Both in this 'Song of the Earth' and in the 'Songs of Dead Children'—which have a more immediate pathos—the poetic beauty of the instrumental melodies lures the mind so far from its usual pre-occupation with the voice that the continuity of the text is imperilled. We have the same feeling in Bach's obbligati, though in Bach the vocal melody itself is more continuous. The 'Song of the Earth' is in six movements, written alternately for tenor and contralto solo, and while the emotional power of the contralto numbers is the special feature which gives the work its high standing among Mahler's compositions, the symphonic poem seems more justified in the tenor numbers, which are essentially dances for voice and orchestra. Mr. Jac. Urlus, who sang them, realised very finely the staccato touch essential to their symphonic impression, and Madame Charles Cahier, whose power in the volcanic climax of Mahler makes her the greatest of all singers in his music, helped to make the presentation of this number the most perfect of the Festival. It was apparent that the harshness of Mahler's purely melodic methods in the energetic and heroic movements decreased gradually in his later works, as the combinations of melody became more manifold and masterly in their contrapuntal aspect. The Scherzo is always with him an important and finely developed movement. It has so much more variety of orchestral treatment, and this variety has in itself so much suggestion of pictorial effect, that it also provides a means of developing the form of the movement to greater symphonic proportion and with less monotony than in the symphonies of Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms, and Bruckner, who are the great masters of this movement. While one has an increasing respect for the constructive merits of Mahler's music with every successive symphony that he wrote, one feels even to the end that the composer is greatest when the texture of his music is the lightest, and that while sensibility to the varieties and combinations of instruments can be reckoned of the first order, as a pure harmonist he takes a lower rank. He asks much of his hearers, for his works are so long that a symphony and a few songs, and several times a symphony alone, were reckoned sufficient for a concert at the Amsterdam Festival. They were given with leisurely pauses which we might more often adopt in our English concerts. But there are limits, in a busy world, to our patience with the simplicity of the naïve in music. The Jewish-Catholic attitude to religion was common enough in the Vienna of Mahler's day, but it is not a position which gives us much confidence as a religious source of the naïve in music, when we find that quality carried to such lengths as in Mahler's scores. That, melodically, Mahler had a gift for this type of writing must be admitted, for all the success of his music is in it. But we begin to doubt him when, as in the first part of his great Choral Symphony on the hymn 'Veni, Creator Spiritus,' he leaves his own style, with all its exquisite sensibilities, to adopt the manner of the Church, and that not its most exalted manner, and to pile up by its means effects of mere sonority. The solo parts of this hymn were given with such splendour by Madame Gertrude Foerstel, Madame Cahier, and other singers, and its whole effect was so imposing and fine sounding, that the popular enthusiasm over its performance is quite explicable. But the closing scene from the second part of Goethe's 'Faust,' which Mahler uses to complete his great 'Symphony of Love,' calls out in a far greater degree the true imagination of the composer. The dactyl rhythm of this poetry makes it a not very promising subject for naturalisation into the English language, but no doubt the experiment will be tried sooner or later, and the 'Symphony of the Thousand,' as it is called from the number of performers, will some day be heard in England.

No criticism of Mahler could neglect to speak of his peculiar vein of naturalism, or realism. It is a defect of the ingenuous when carried to extremes, that it ceases to be selective and falls into the banality of literalism or realism. This danger Mahler has not escaped. But his naturalism is also a source of very great merit. It lies at the root of all his fascinating powers of instrumentation, and everywhere counts to him as invention. He never goes out of his way to hide anything, but if he wants a poetic suggestion, or an effect, seeks only the most direct way of expressing it. If a melody is to suggest anything in nature he asks only on what instrument it will do so most completely. From this use comes a fine sensibility to the timbre of melody itself and an exquisite individuality of melodic expression. He learns a whole gamut of nature. The naïveté of his religious imagination helps him to extend it. In his earlier works we find him manufacturing for himself out of the folk-song almost a language of animals and flowers, and when, as in his fourth Symphony, he transforms its exquisite fancy into the most artless realism of religious feeling, his whole scale of expression becomes gradually completed. His fifth and sixth Symphonies take on the sternness of personal tragedy, and here we find him showing a relationship with the Strauss of 'Ein Heldenleben' and 'Also sprach Zarathustra.' There is an effort to unify himself with nature, and to separate himself from ordinary levels and the mass of men. In the heroic aspects of these Symphonies he indulges a harshness of ejaculation less pleasing than perhaps anything else in his works. He signals his 'Hail and Farewell' as he ascends the lone heights, in fragments of melody made intelligible by association, and strains the instruments of the orchestra to give emphasis to his call. His imagination gains in mystery and swiftness as we pass from the 'Tragic' sixth Symphony to the 'Nature' or 'Night' Symphony, which comes seventh, and which shows, again, signs of a harmonious solution of life. But in this Symphony already there are signs also that Mahler's hold on life is slackening, and in the 'Song of the Earth' we feel its positive relinquishment. The soul of the eighth or Choral Symphony we find in Goethe's picture, from the second part of 'Faust,' of the holy mountain in which nothing shall hurt or destroy. We fear the picture, even in Mahler's Symphony, remains more a poetic than a musical one, and rather completes Mahler's philosophical view of life and art than adds anything definite to his musical achievement. We hold the broken pathos of his ninth Symphony to be musically more significant. How far the enthusiasm over the eighth Symphony at Amsterdam might be due to Mengelberg's driving power, and how far to the real, or popular merits of the work itself, it is not easy for a stranger to estimate. It is due both to Mahler and to Mengelberg that we should remember there is no longer anything tentative about the success of Mahler in Holland. The fourth Symphony has been given over forty times, the bulk of the Symphonies between twenty and thirty times, and the whole of the works quite often enough to make them well-known. The Festival wound up with a scene of much popular enthusiasm, but manifestly a great deal of this enthusiasm was due to the popularity of Mengelberg himself. He is anxious to introduce Mahler's music to England, and his understanding of the composer certainly marks him as the man. No composer need have greater justice done to his music than was done to Mahler at this Festival.

The solo work of the women singers throughout the Festival was amazingly good. Anything finer in its contrasted merit than the singing of Madame Foerstel in the naïve innocence and charming grace of the fourth Symphony (in which her precision seemed that of the composer's own spirit) and her powerful singing above the choir in the eighth Symphony, I could hardly imagine. She sang throughout from memory, and was evidently a great enthusiast for the composer. The choir of boys was greatly applauded, and it was reckoned in accordance with Mahler's naturalism that no attempt was made to refine their style. The orchestra of a hundred and sixty performers worked every morning from nine till one, and played like an animated machine. We have no such combination of instruments in our British musical life. Mengelberg was not less than Mahler an object of enthusiasm, and his fire and directness of style make him with his untiring energy an ideal apostle of Mahler's music. Mahler's widow and daughter, and we think also a sister of the composer were present, and many famous musicians of the Continent.

The most striking feature of the chamber concerts was Arthur Schnabel's setting, for voice and pianoforte, of a poem of Richard Dehmel, which occupied thirty-five minutes in a continuous movement. The poem depicts a dream, and every chord of its exceedingly slow music seems designed to intrigue the ear harmonically. The scene was sung by the composer's wife with an expression of the most exquisite poetic pain imaginable, and was played by the composer. He is a magnificent pianist, and had just given a glorious performance of Nielsen's second Sonata for violin and pianoforte—a beautiful but not very strong work in itself. Kreutzer at the pianoforte gave also a most imposing performance in the Concerto Quintet of Chausson, and two splendidly sonorous pieces much emulous of Debussy, by a Viennese composer, Wessezchl.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

(Continued from June number, page 381)

BY HARVEY GRACE

II.—THE WEIMAR PERIOD (continued)

The Toccata and Fugue in C (IX., 137) is on the whole a less successful concert piece than those we have just been considering. It was probably one of the works with which the composer went touring. It is however a good deal more than a mere show piece, even its over-plentiful florid passages being full of character. As Parry says, 'Bach makes such passages almost sufficiently interesting to redeem a branch of art which has been more piteously discredited than any in its whole range, save and except the operatic aria.' The long single-part manual flourish with which the Toccata opens leaves the average contemporary writing of the type far behind. We do little more than tolerate such flights to-day, but we can easily imagine that by their freedom and originality, and by their success in implying a fine harmonic background, the best of Bach's examples were extremely popular when new. Opinions differ widely as to the registration of the one we are considering. As in all similar passages we must be guided by the resources at our disposal. On one point only is it possible to be definite, and that is the question of pace. We may differ in the matter of power and tone-colour, but we must surely agree that high speed and brilliance are called for. When Bach writes a bravura passage, we do him poor service by trying to make it dignified or meditative.

The pedal solo is one of the finest ever written,—perhaps the finest. Such things are not often perpetrated to-day—fortunately—and the only modern examples worthy of a place beside this of Bach is the sweeping tune with which Franck opens his Finale in B flat, and the more obviously attractive example in Guilman's D minor Symphony. Bach's solo covers a good deal of ground. That in itself is not a matter for praise, because we have seen how easy it was even for Bach to give the organist quite a long walk with nothing happening to make it worth while. But this solo is unconventional in several ways. Its ejaculatory opening, with repetitions that may be regarded either as emphasising a point or echoing it (and which may perhaps be registered accordingly by the addition or subtraction of a reed or some other telling stop), its rhythmical variety, and its highly organized character put it in a class by itself. Of course, like all pedal solos with any pretensions to length, it is ineffective unless played on an organ of big scale. It is a fatal weakness of the type that purely musical considerations have so little to do with it. We may play any of Bach's fugues on a small organ with one stop drawn, or on a pedal pianoforte, and enjoy it. But a pedal solo that does not set any loose window-panes rattling is a thing of naught. If it goes delicately it does nothing that cannot be managed with greater ease and effect on a manual. Before leaving this solo, we should note in bar 4 the unusual down-leaping seventh, a favourite device of Bach, but used in no other pedal solo. The effect is that of a bad shot, until the repetition reassures the ear. In bar 16, the last note of the third group should surely be A. Most editions give G, but if we look at the next section, we shall see that Bach develops a good deal of the movement from the second half of this bar, and a comparison makes it pretty certain that the note should be A. Here is the second half of bar 16:

and here is the figure as it appears in the same key at the end of the Allegro:

This evidence ought to settle the point.

The pedal solo leads into a fine, vigorous movement, in style unlike any of Bach's previous organ music. Here, as in the Adagio which follows, we see the influence of the Italian chamber music with which Bach was now busy in his capacity as Kammermusicus at the Weimar court. Always fond of experiment, he evidently tried to adapt the concerto form to the organ by imposing its idiom and construction on the Toccata. The result is a not entirely satisfactory hybrid—a conclusion at which Bach himself probably arrived, for he made no further attempts in the same direction. This Allegro is the finest part of the whole work, despite its rather too frequent full closes. It has a Handelian breadth in places. A striking point in its construction is its being concerned almost equally with two subjects, the figure quoted above, and:

Both are drawn from the pedal solo, with excellent result on the score of continuity.

The Adagio, despite its charm, is perhaps a little bit out of the picture. It suggests a violin solo with cembalo accompaniment, and is altogether of a more antique cast than most of its surroundings. Some editions suggest the elimination of bars 20 and 21, on the ground that they are missing in one of the manuscripts.

The Grave is a problem. Clearly Bach does not write in seven parts unless he wants plenty of tone. If we begin the passage loudly the change from the delicate ending of the Adagio is too abrupt, as the brief recitative is not long enough to serve as a buffer. If we begin quietly there is not room in eight bars for a well-graded crescendo to the full power demanded by the cadence. Most editors suggest full Swell for the two bars of recitative. Perhaps a better plan would be to begin the Grave with a few mf Swell stops, and add a good deal for the B flat, increasing the power as the scale descends, coming on to the full Great with the chord, thus:

The fugue is a good deal in the Northern style, not only as to its subject, but also in the rather fidgety writing in such passages as:

The fugue is 'singularly gay and genial,' as Parry says, but it is a long way from showing Bach at his best. It ends curiously without pedals, a fact which leads players to decide that the close must therefore be quiet. The Widor-Schweitzer edition suggests keeping up the power and holding on the pedal CC to the end. But if this is done, the lower notes of the manual part are likely to be drowned. An alternative that seems to have been overlooked is the conversion of the passage into a pedal solo, beginning with the second semiquaver (G) in bar 139—that is, two bars from the end—playing the chord full organ and (dare I suggest it?) making it into a good double handful of notes.

Fortunately Bach's interest in Italian music did not stop at the fiddlers. He looked farther back, to the Italy that was the earliest home of organ music. We shall see later how much his finest fugues owe to his study of this school. As a beginning we find him writing the Canzona in D minor (ii. 34). The Canzona was a favourite form with the early Italian organists. It may be regarded as a keyboard madrigal, generally in two movements, with the theme of the first movement changed and made to do duty as a basis for the second. Bach not only adopted the form: he even went to Frescobaldi for the subject. He possessed a copy of the old composer's 'Fiori musicali' (inscribed with his own hand 'J. S. Bach, 1714'), on page 77 of which the theme appears in this form:

Pirro points out that the chromatic counter-subject is to be found on page 38 of the same book, but as almost every composer of the time made liberal use of the same series of notes we need attach no importance to the fact. As usual John Sebastian improves on his model. Nothing that we know of Frescobaldi is so well worth playing to-day as this austere beautiful piece of Bach.

Spitta considers that the almost equally fine Alla Breve in D (II., 26) is due to Italian influence. It is a closely-knit fugue of the type the early Southern composers called ricercare, and is splendidly effective played on fine diapasons.

Two other works which owe their origin to Italy are the excellent fugue in B minor (III., 60) and the long double fugue in C minor (X., 230). The former is on a subject by Corelli. The Italian said all he had to say in thirty-nine bars; Bach found matter enough for over a hundred. There are some delightful points in this work, e.g., the way the subject soars out in bar 38, after the low two-part writing for left hand and pedal, and the very close and effective stretto towards the end.

The C minor fugue is on a subject of Legrenzi, and must be written down as a failure. It contains so many full closes that we never seem to get anywhere. To make matters worse, it is cast in a form that rarely avoids being tedious—a fugue on two subjects announced separately, fully developed, and then combined. One of the chief requirements of a fugue is that the interest should be cumulative. In a double fugue of this type we are pulled up for the delivery and exposition of the second theme at a time when the excitement ought to be increasing, and a further decline in interest is risked when a third section is started by the combination of the two subjects. Good and effective fugues have been written on this model, but very few, and this Bach specimen is not one of them. Even the faithful Spitta feels that all is not as it should be. He says, 'A striking feature is the constant recurrence of a full close before each entrance of the theme, by which it acquires a somewhat fragmentary and shortbreathed character.' However, he concludes his criticism by saying 'Here we have a full and mighty organism, whose abundant beauty far outweighs the deficiencies we have mentioned.' Most of us will be of opinion that the scale falls heavily on the other side.

Perhaps the last Prelude and Fugue Bach wrote before coming under this Italian influence was one in G minor (VIII., 120), an admirable work which deserves far more frequent performance than it gets. Throughout it is in the Northern manner, but far superior to any similar work by members of that school, and easily the best bit of fugal writing of Bach we have so far met. The Prelude opens in the broken chord style which composers had long since found useful as a means of imparting interest to very simple thematic material. This example is far more expressive than such passages were wont to be, and has a novel feature in the hint of the fugue subject. It is so tentative that we wonder if it is a mere coincidence. Perhaps Bach wrote the fugue first, and prefaced its performance one day with an improvisation which he afterwards wrote down. The movement has an impromptu character, and we can easily figure Bach beginning to extemporise with the fugue at the back of his mind, and quite naturally bringing in a reference to its opening phrase. The long sequential passage beginning in bar 19 seems to call for the use of alternate manuals. Played on one keyboard it sounds mechanical after the harmonic novelty has worn off. Many players use a quiet Great and Swell, changing at each bar. I suggest that the Choir be called on as well. With three quiet uncoupled manuals the effect is delightful. The contrasts in tone should not be violent; the sections should almost melt into one another. If we begin with the Swell at bar 19, we arrive at bar 31 with that manual, which we may well increase to full, dropping on to the Great f (now coupled to Swell) at bar 32. The close should be worked up to full organ. Apart from its poetic and expressive character as a whole, the movement contains some interesting foretastes of the mature Bach. Note for example the

We shall frequently find him showing his fondness for this kind of progression—his last work, written on his death-bed, ends with a string of second inversions.

The subject of the fugue :

is very Buxtehudian, with its repeated notes and zigzagging close. Its working throughout shows great variety and resource. There is no more than a suggestion of a regular counter-subject, and even that is soon dropped. Each entry gives us delightfully fresh and spontaneous treatment. Nothing could be more buoyantly tuneful than the counterpoint over the subject in the pedal, commencing thus :

The whole fugue is full of this happy youthful spirit. Bright and clear registration is called for, power being reserved for the final section, beginning with the pedal entry in the tonic. There is a fine stroke following on the close in D :

The Best-Hull edition suggests a flat for the last A in the pedal solo. Why? The whole of the solo is simply the dominant chord with the seventh added at the end. Anticipation of the Neapolitan sixth would badly blunt the point of the progression. Surprises of this kind should be emphasised, not toned down. Nor is there much to be said in favour of the German Bach Society's suggestion that we should omit the second half of bar 51 and the first half of bar 52, in order to avoid the reiterated cadence. There seems to be no doubt about the genuineness of the passage, so we must take it as it stands. Moreover, the effect is by no means bad, owing to the second of the cadences being used as a semiquaver take-off for the ensuing episode. It is odd, by the way, that Parry seems to have forgotten to mention this excellent fugue—one which we may imagine appealed very much to him.

(To be continued.)

THE DEROGATION OF THE LAUREL

Aux myrtes de l'amour, le laurier de la gloire.—HEREDIA

It is perhaps only natural that the myrtle should long ago have been superseded as the Emblem of Love. This choice of the ancients has not been approved by the modern world. The sober evergreen lacks the appropriateness, we feel, that is expressed by some more ephemeral vegetable form, and the sensuous and fast-fading rose is our choice. But need our rejection of the myrtle have entailed the present-day derogation of the laurel too? For that reverend emblem of the holiness 'of poetry and music, the crowning reward of loftiest bards of old, has come down in the world. What passion against the past possesses us thus to depreciate an image dear to no negligible ages?

Laurels are cheap to-day, and when a total stranger, a mere youth, is presented in a London concert-room with the symbolic wreath—he need only have been playing his instrument for ten minutes or so—no one perceives an impropriety, for the derogation of the laurel has long been coming. An audience at Queen's Hall the other day saw nothing excessive in such an effusion of homage. In the excitement stirred by exceptional harmonics and double-stopping few no doubt withheld for a moment the applauding hand to think, say, of Petrarch, and how that sweetest of singers—as, in his day, among scholars the chief, —waited forty years before, in the Capitol, the laurel was bestowed on him at the hands of a senator of Rome.

But who are the laureates of our day? The laurel is now a tribute to be showered on our entertainers—on fiddlers and operatic tenors and the athletic lads who dance in modern ballets. The laurel to-day is little more than a joke, as indeed Monsieur de Pachmann, humorist and pianist, took it one day when, on being offered at a concert the tribute of a wreath, he donned it in the manner of a horse-collar, with a grin. Another absurd occasion saw the Russian barytone Shaliapin, when at Drury Lane, importuned with a mass of laurels and ribbons at least six feet high—at the end of the first Act in which he had not had to sing a note.

Clearly the best thing is for the laurels of glory to join the myrtles of love in one oblivion; for, the laurel having been rendered ridiculous, there is no value or use in the leaves of this shrub. The young women of the stage to-day are reported as preferring chocolates from their admirers rather than the time-honoured bouquet. So the heroes of recital, ballet, or operatic stage may shortly be hinting at a sensible preference for homage in the form of cigarettes instead of in laurel leaves. Petrarch these hundreds of years has been at rest.

R. C.

Interludes

BY 'FESTE'

You may persuade a busman to spend his holiday otherwise than by riding round on a mate's bus, but only blinkers will prevent him from looking about with a busman's eye. Wherever he goes his main interest in the streets will be professional—the local methods of regulating the traffic ('You ought to see 'em handle it at the "Elephant and Castle"!'); an awkward corner ('Nothing to a nasty one I know off the Fulham Road!'); a damaging comparison between the tram and the bus, and so forth. Similarly, a musician may determine on a musicless holiday, only to find his ears and brain making the most of any kind of organized noise that comes his way. I have come to this little town on the East coast partly because its attractions do not include a band or concert party. A good many very tired horses of battle have thus been dodged, but in their absence some trifling musical experiences have become absurdly engrossing, and have gone only too far towards filling the gap. I have escaped the fire, but have got no farther than the frying-pan. At present the interest is provided by the far-reaching sonorities of the organ attached to a steam roundabout at our annual four days' fair. Familiarity does not always breed contempt. After three days I am finding this very efficient piece of machinery more than tolerable, and am now able to listen at short range with a good deal of interest and some pleasure. For one thing I have to thank the engine for making me acquainted with the whole of 'There's a long, long trail.' Have you so far heard any more than the refrain? Until a few hours ago a request to hum the melody of the verse would have found me stumped and silent.

What a lot of nonsense is talked about the vogue of such songs! We are told that they are the genuine songs of the people, that they take the place once filled by folk-song, that their melodies are the fruit of a kind of inspiration rarely, if ever, vouchsafed to the trained and serious musician, that &c., &c., &c. This last remark is sometimes made by people who know, or should know, that the composition of a good tune is almost as much a matter of skill, judgment, and training as its harmonization, or its development into a lengthy movement. How ill-equipped the composers of these songs usually are is shown by the fact that the whole of their slender powers of invention have to be focussed on the chorus. A glance through any of the comic song 'Annuals' or at the specimens published in some of our Sunday papers, will show that the words and music of the verse generally touch the bedrock of banality. If the situation is saved—which happens about once in fifty cases—it is by some belated touch of life in the chorus. This chorus is straightway sung at thousands of people weekly in the variety theatres, played at millions by piano-organs (and in some cases by restaurant orchestras and military bands), and boomed and puffed and thrust down the public throat until a few thousands of us find ourselves involuntarily humming or whistling it. This is the final seal of success.

We are then told that this is what the public like, and that our recognised composers can't write such tunes. Can't they? Say rather that they won't.

Anybody with even a little power of thematic invention could, after running through a collection of 'great popular successes' and 'winners,' turn out a sample above the average. This examination of specimens is important, because such songs have to be reminiscent in order to ensure their being quickly caught up. Usually they copy one another; sometimes they 'convey' phrases from folk-song or even classical sources. The closeness with which they follow their model is often amusing. Here is a good example, quoted in the Musical Times of December, 1915, when we were all obsessed with 'It's a long, long way to Tipperary':

EX. 1.

This was what the publisher called the 'haunting yet sympathetic refrain' of a song which he optimistically told us was 'destined to become firmly implanted in the hearts of all true Britishers.' As will be seen the composer had done his best to insure this by making considerable use of a refrain that had already taken root in those hearts, though as the Musical Times charitably suggested the similarity may have been merely an example of the long, long arm of coincidence. As an example of borrowing from classical composers, perhaps some of you recollect a song very popular a few years ago called 'Redwing,' the melody of which was almost identical with Schumann's 'Merry Peasant.' And the same little piece seems to have been called on very appropriately by the composer of a recently published fox-trot called 'The Farmer's Wedding.' Here are the opening bars:

Ex. 2.
With great rhythm.

As this section opens with four bars of Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' and closes with a phrase from the 'Helston Furry Dance' it is a compilation rather than a composition. However, the compiler is pleased, for the advertisement tells us that 'Mr. — says, "This I regard as the best piece I have yet done."' And the publisher—another optimist—adds: 'It will be hummed and whistled by every boy in the streets before long; it is the most insistent melody we have had for many a long day.' As we see, its component parts were insistent melodies long before any of us were born.

It frequently takes almost as many hands to turn out a comic song as it does to compound a revue. A hits on a tune, plays it (with one finger) to B, who takes it down and adds reputed harmony, C fits it with words (frequently calling on D for assistance), and E scores it. Often it is painfully evident that the tune of the chorus was written first, the composer working back to the verse, and sticking badly over the job.

It is to be hoped that some day one of our comic lions or lionesses will boldly take the words of a new song to a leading composer and say, 'A good tune and a rousing chorus, please, in return for a cheque and a royalty worth more than you have ever received from all your orchestral and chamber music put together.' Will there be 'anything doing?' Not till we get rid of our snobbishness. It has had some hard knocks since Hambourg and other soloists have taken to performing at the Coliseum, and have proved that such appearances involve no loss of prestige.

Is the position of Arnold Bax as a composer affected unfavourably by the fact of his having recently written the music for a humorous play at the same variety theatre? On the contrary, his reputation is enhanced. It is worth while noting that a few years ago a commission of this kind would have been given to a tenth-rate composer who had happened to hit the public taste with some musical comedy or revue jingle. Fortunately the choice of composer in this case was left in the hands of Mr. Edwin Evans, who courageously handed the book to one known to the public only as a writer of very modern chamber music—which is another way of saying that he was unknown to all but a handful. As we know, Mr. Bax played up by turning out a score with which both critics and public were delighted.

The fact is, a composer worthy the name ought to be able to answer practically any call, so far as the smaller forms of occasional music are concerned, just as a good journalist is ready to write at least acceptably on almost any subject of general interest. It is time we got rid of the old high-horse idea that good music cannot be written to order. But is the idea so old? Bach, Beethoven, Handel, and practically all the big men of the past were as delighted to receive an order for a new work as a tailor is to measure you for a new suit. Sometimes these 'to order' works turned out to be masterpieces. At the worst they answered their purpose, and good or bad they boiled the pot. Relieved from anxiety on this latter score, the composer was able to write to please himself—often pleasing nobody else. It is doubtful, indeed, if he reached a higher average level when a free agent than when composing for a customer. So much for the absurdity of using the term 'potboiler' as a term of reproach. Deduct the 'potboilers' from the not too long list of admitted masterpieces, and we can write the rest on a half sheet of notepaper, and still leave space for those over which ——— and ——— are busy.

Here is another proof that the unlikeliest of composers is able to express himself in popular idiom when he chooses to do so. We can imagine a rag-time enthusiast saying, 'Only a handful of American and English music-hall composers have the knack of writing this sort of thing. Your serious composers have no idea of tune and snappy rhythm. What kind of a show would Debussy make if asked to write a cake-walk?'

And there seemed to be something in the question until Debussy actually did produce a cake-walk—one so good that if it had been written by a recognized purveyor of cake-walks, and banged out at a hundred music-halls on both sides of the Atlantic, would have been among the 'winners' on sale in Charing Cross Road. But as it happened to be one of a set of pianoforte pieces, expensive to buy and not easy to play, its public performances are confined to about three a year at a West-End concert-hall.

'Potboiler' is not the only word that needs reconsidering. 'Popularity' has come to mean nothing more than the vogue of to-day. For example, we are told that 'A long, long trail' is more popular than any work by a great composer. Is it? The answer is a simple matter of arithmetic. Let us grant that millions have sung, hummed, whistled, or delivered themselves of the song in some way—not forgetting, however, that a very large proportion of these millions never knew more of it than the chorus, and sometimes not even the words of that. On the other hand, how many millions in all civilized quarters of the globe have enjoyed hundreds of works or extracts by Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Wagner, &c.? Cast your mind forward a half century and imagine how many millions more will go on enjoying them. Where will the 'Long, long trail' be in 1970? A man will have to follow a very long, long trail before he will find a copy. Here and there he may come across an old man able to recall the tune, and will persuade the ancient to champ his toothless gums and pipe it out. The singer will of course add a lament over the decay of song-writing: 'They don't write chunes like this nowadays. Thank you, sir; I don't mind if I do.'

The really popular composers are the classical ones, plus the most esteemed of the lesser lights. Sometimes they can beat the merely fashionable tenth-raters at their own game. Thus no ragtime success has ever had a greater vogue than Rachmaninoff's C sharp minor Prelude, Mackenzie's Benedictus, Raff's Cavatina, Chopin's Nocturne in E flat, Elgar's 'Salut d'Amour' and 'Land of Hope and Glory,' the Bach-Gounod Meditation, Brahms's Hungarian Dances, Rubinstein's Melody in F—it would be easy to fill a column with a list of such works.

All this time the organ at the fair has been doing its duty, and a sudden stoppage reminds me that I have got right away from my subject—the marvellous advance in the mechanical production of music. The combination of the busman's ear and a wandering, holidayish frame of mind have been too much for me. I can now do no more than point out that the advance has not been confined to the gramophone and pianola. There has been progress even in the fair-field. The organ across the way has none of the old blatancy and shrillness. Its brass tone is smooth and rich, its high wood-wind not piercing, and it has a splendid fat bass. A deficiency of 8-ft. tone and an overdose of 16-ft. give such gravity to its lightest numbers that even a jazz becomes almost ecclesiastical. Indeed, it is far more fit to deliver the songs of Zion than a good many Church organs you and I have sat under. Who would have imagined twenty years ago that we should ever take our pennorths, or rather our two-pennorths—for even the penny has lost its old magic in these days of high prices—of Gallopin' 'Orses to a religioso accompaniment? . . . It is beginning again. Close your ears to the crash and thud of falling cocoanuts, and listen. . . . Are we at a fair or At a Solemn Musick?

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

X.—ROBERT COWPER, Mus. D.

The name of Robert Cowper (also written Couper, Coper, and Cooper) is well-known as a composer of the first decade of the 16th century; but beyond the fact of his having graduated Doctor of Music at Cambridge in 1502, and mention of his name by Morley, very little else has hitherto been available as to his biography. The British Museum possesses several of his Masses and Motets, as well as two Madrigals for three voices, 'I have been a foster' and 'Farewell, my joy'; while Wynkin de Worde's printed Song-Book of 1530 has three items by him, namely, 'In youth, in age,' 'So great unkindness,' and 'Ut, re, mi,' each for three voices. A song of his, 'Petyously constraind am I,' is in the Brit. Mus. Royal MSS., App. 58, and a Round or Catch, 'Alone I live,' was published by the Plain-Song and Mediaeval Music Society in 1896.

Robert Cowper was born about the year 1474, and on November 16, 1498, was presented by the Crown to the free Chapel of Snodhill (Co. Hereford), in the diocese of Hereford, vacant by the surrender of Robert Fayrefax, one of the Gentlemen of the King's Chapel, resigned,' as is recorded on the Patent Rolls. From this it would appear that Cowper, if not attached to the Court of Henry VII., was persona grata in courtly circles.

In 1502 Robert Cowper graduated Mus. D. at Cambridge University. The entry on the Cambridge Register reads as follows*: '1502. Item, conceditur magistro Roberto Cowper ut studium quinque annorum cum practica totidem annorum citra introitum suum in eadem sufficiat sibi ad incipiendum in Musica.' (Cambridge Grace Book, Gamma, p. 34.)

Previous writers have absolutely no details of Cowper after the year 1502, but it is certain that he retained the Chaplaincy of Snodhill from 1498 to 1514. This we know from the Patent Rolls, inasmuch as on November 4, 1514, Robert Geffreys was presented to 'the free chapel of Snodhill in the room of Robert Cowper resigned' (Calendar of Patent Rolls).

In 1515 Dr. Cowper's elder brother, William Cowper, was presented to the Deanery of Bridgenorth. An entry under date of January, 1516, reveals this clerical Doctor of Music as the composer of 'an anthem of defuse musicke.' Three months later, on April 21, he was appointed Rector of East Horsley, in Surrey, 'in the Deanery of Croydon.' A few weeks afterwards, on May 13, he resigned this preferment in favour of a more lucrative one, namely, the Rectory of Latchington, Essex, with an annexed chapelry.—(Baker MSS. in Camb. Univ. Library, xli., 219.)

His Madrigal of 'I have been a foster' was probably sung in the play presented by Cornish at Windsor on June 15, 1522, in which a keeper, three foresters, and four hunters took part, as well as six Children of the Chapel Royal.

On June 5, 1525, William Cowper, Dean of Bridgenorth, wrote to Cromwell, recommending his brother Robert for further preferment. In the letter, which is calendared in the 'Calendar of Letters and Papers of Henry VIII.,' the Dean urges Cromwell to procure another benefice for 'his brother Sir Robert who is well disposed and virtuous, and a good quereman.'

In the Inventory of the 'Pryke Song' books belonging to King's College, Cambridge, in 1529, we find an entry of '4 smaller books covered with leather having Cornyshe's and Coper's Masses,' evidently indicating that Cowper had composed Masses.

It would appear that Dr. Cowper was a friend of Nicholas Ludford, the composer, whose memoir I hope very soon to present in the present series. As for the further career of Cowper himself, I can find no trace after the year 1530, and I presume he died about that time, when he would have been a sexagenarian. His creative period was between the years 1495 and 1526, and his best work is regarded as quite equal to that of John Taverner or of Redford. He must not be confounded with a later namesake, John Cooper or Cowper, who Italianised his name as Coperario in 1598, and who died in 1627.

THE IDEAS OF M. VINCENT D'INDY

BY C. SAINT-SAËNS, DE L'INSTITUT

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell)

(Continued from June number, page 387.)

IV.

There is not the faintest indication of nuance or of variation of pace in the music of the ancient clavecinists. Probably the movements were less contrasted than they are nowadays, and the speed might have been left to the whim of the executant, except in those extreme cases in which it was indicated. Nuances were not practicable, on the clavecin, where forte and piano were alone possible, because of the different registers with which large instruments were provided. It was Czerny, I imagine, who, when publishing for the pianoforte the clavecin works of Sebastian Bach, enriched them with numerous indications of movements and nuances of tied and detached notes. The work was carried through in the most arbitrary fashion. Only at a considerably later date, when the numerous cantatas of Bach were rescued from oblivion, was it possible, by comparing them with clavecin pieces, to discover by similitude of form what feelings these latter were capable of expressing. It was then ascertained that Czerny had frequently erred, but he had created a school, and his influence had long been felt; perhaps it continues even up to the present time.

With the appearance of the pianoforte, which allowed of nuances, music has become more coloured. Composers have largely increased the number of their indications or signs. Moreover, as the divergence has become wider between slow movements and lively movements, indications of pace have become necessary. Those of tied and detached notes have also become more frequent.

Judging by the method of playing adopted by certain elderly persons whom I heard when I was young, I am inclined to believe that, at one period, abuse was made of the detached note, and that this abuse found its reaction in the system of the perpetual legato. This system, probably introduced by Kalkbrenner, had met with ill-omened success in

* This is quoted by Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams in his admirable little book on 'Musical Degrees.'

France. According to Kalkbrenner, everything was to be tied; this was a principle, it was not even necessary to indicate it. In his pianoforte arrangement of Beethoven's Symphonies he writes the theme of the Pastoral Symphony as follows:

depriving it of its articulation, and, at the same time of its distinctive character.

The most celebrated professors of the pianoforte, carried away by the force of example, have adopted this method, and have published editions of all the classics which have been subjected to this deplorable system. Quite recently a new edition of the 'Clavecin bien tempéré' presents the theme of the Fugue in D major in the first book as follows:

thus diminishing the strong and rhythmic character of the last two beats in the bar. And yet it is easy to point out the error in such a system.

When Mozart, in one of his Concertos, after writing the following passage for the flute:

which shows that the second group of notes alone must be tied, reproduces the passage in the pianoforte part with the same indication, it is quite evident that his intention is being violated if a large tie is carried over the whole bar.

When Beethoven, in a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, gives the violin this figured passage:

the very writing of the passage shows that where there is no tie a different stroke of the bow is needed for each note, and when the same passage appears in the pianoforte part with the same indication, this is certainly done in order that the latter may reproduce, as far as possible, the effect of the violin.

When Beethoven, in the Sonata for Pianoforte, Op. 79, writes:

with the indication leggieramente, and then puts ties over the following passage, it is clear that this denotes a different execution in the two passages, and that the former must be understood to be non legato. The author's thought and intention are consequently distorted or misrepresented when ties are scattered about promiscuously.

This non legato is not the same as a detached note. It is produced by a clearness of articulation and a lightness of touch which enable one to 'put air between the notes,' as Liszt said.

When the firm of Breitkopf conceived the idea of publishing a complete collection of Mozart's works, in their desire to make it as perfect as possible they issued an appeal to all who might possess manuscripts of the great composer's, with the object of producing a ne varietur edition. Unfortunately they entrusted the revision of the Pianoforte Concertos to Reinecke, who, instead of aiming at purity of text alone, thought of nothing but treating these wonderful Concertos in the fashion of the day. Consequently we find everywhere such indications as legato, molto legato, sempre legato, frequently running counter to the purpose of the author himself. He did even worse than this; but to enter upon such a subject would carry us beyond our present limits.

Germany, alas, was destined to go even farther in distorting his masterpieces!

One day, Westphal came along with his strange invention for applying to the execution of modern music the principles of Greek scansion. This idea, for some reason I do not understand, has had a great vogue, and at the same time done a vast amount of mischief.

An already ancient edition of the celebrated Fugue for clavecin in E minor, by Handel, the theme of which is:

appears as follows:

When the fugue develops and becomes complicated, this accentuation makes it impossible of execution.

Is it not evident that the genesis of the second bar is nothing else than the breaking-up of the figure:

and that consequently the last three notes of the third and fourth beats belong to the group of four notes of which they form part, and not to the following group?

If, therefore, ties were to be introduced—though they are quite useless—they ought to have been given thus:

and not in the manner stated.

In the Peters edition a passage from Chopin (first Concerto, Finale) which the author has indicated thus:

is disfigured in this way :

and so robbed of all its elegance.

If, however, we would see to what degree of folly the Westphalian system is capable of leading us, we must consult the 'Analyse thématique, rythmique, et métrique des Symphonies de Beethoven,' made by a Belgian and published at Brussels, with a eulogistic preface by Combarieu. At almost every note we find Beethoven put to school and improved upon !

What he writes thus :

is transformed in this way :

and everything else is dealt with in the same fashion.

How comes it that M. D'Indy, attentive as he is to the slightest details, did not more successfully resist the contagion of bad example ?

He protests quite rightly against the superfluous indications, notably the rallentando inflicted on the old masters in modern editions ; and yet he himself, in the first part of his book, cites a fragment of Sebastian Bach containing a rallentando which the author has not indicated. A strange contradiction !

In the musical quotations from this second book of the 'Course' we find hypothetical indications, arbitrary ties in which the influence of the Westphalian ideas too frequently makes itself felt. Here are a few instances :

SEBASTIAN BACH.

The ties weaken the rhythm.

RAMEAU.

No explanation is given of these two notes tied on to the three, making the playing of the passage inconvenient.

DOMENICO SCARLATTI.

Here are two nuances impossible on the clavichord, and arbitrary ties.

HAYDN.

In the original text the chord in the second bar is noted thus :

Nor is there any reason whatever for tying it on to the preceding bar.

BEETHOVEN, OP. 57.

Original text :

The tie between A and C changes the character of the passage.

BEETHOVEN, OP. 101.

In the author's text there is no tie at all, and this one, culminating in an octave in a passage of considerable power, makes the passage impossible of execution.

Later on the author, reproducing the same idea in the melody, writes it as follows :

and not in this way :

as the new principles would have it.

BEETHOVEN, OP. 106.

Original text :

The Westphalian aberrations—of which the examples taken from a Fugue of Handel and a Symphony of Beethoven give a sufficiently clear idea—spring from one initial error, which consists in regarding musical figures in themselves, without taking into account the harmony, expressed or understood, which gives them their meaning. Down to the time of Westphal, all the masters had instinctively been aware of this ; it had guided them in their indications. All the notes that form part of one and the same chord should, on principle, form part of the same group. This is a general rule to which there are many exceptions. Just as the musician has the privilege of writing syncopations, he has also that of infringing the above-mentioned rule. A charming example of this may be found in the Gradus ad Parnassum of Clementi :

We have no right, however, to turn the exception into the rule, and inflict it on authors against their will.

Now that this long digression is ended, we may return to the study of the 'Course of Musical Composition.'

(To be continued.)

THE SECULAR MUSIC OF ANCIENT EGYPT

By JEFFREY PULVER

(Concluded from June number, page 410.)

The second period of Egyptian art falls in the reigns of the kings of the Eleventh and Twelfth Dynasties ('The Middle Empire')—an art which was developed directly out of that of the 'Ancient Empire' (Budge). King Mēptuhotep III. (the ninth of the Eleventh Dynasty) was a great patron of the arts, and a very fine song—the celebrated 'Song of the Harper'—on the walls of the palace of Antef, belongs to this period. The Twelfth and Thirteenth Dynasties literally abound in evidence of musical activity. These Theban Dynasties, rightly called the 'Golden Age' of Egypt, provide us with works that are perfectly astounding in their excellence; yet, according to Arthur Evans's discoveries, the most primitive culture of Greece, as exhibited in the 'Island Graves,' was more or less contemporaneous with the period of the Twelfth Egyptian Dynasty. Instruments of music are common, not only in pictorial representation, but in actual tangible remains. Under king Amenemhat III., in particular, the country enjoyed an art and a prosperity difficult to realise to-day. But Amenemhat III. was probably one of the greatest kings who ever sat upon the throne of Egypt (B.C. c. 2300). It is interesting to note in passing that under the Middle Empire, as well as in the Ancient, it is generally men who performed, the women usually dancing or keeping time.

There can be no doubt that much Asiatic influence was brought to bear upon the Egyptian art of these reigns, and it is very probable that several foreign instruments and methods were imported. Under Usertsen II. a number of Semitic immigrants arrived, bearing their own musical traditions with them. These Beni-Hassan strangers came in B.C. 2366, and settled, some authorities seeing in them the family of Jacob. If this be so, then we can see more easily how one nation of antiquity influenced another (see also my article 'Israel's Music-Lesson in Egypt,' Musical Times, July, 1915). Still more foreign invasions, both peaceful and otherwise, took place from the Thirteenth to the Seventeenth Dynasties, and much confusion prevails in the chronology. But the outstanding feature was the almost unopposed entry of the Hyksos, and the entire change they wrought in the trend of Egyptian thought, though these shepherd kings ended by themselves adopting Egyptian civilisation. For a more detailed account of this period I must again refer the reader to the Musical Times article mentioned above. The growing power of Southern Egypt eventually expelled the Hyksos, and the Seventeenth Dynasty was, as Budge thinks, most probably 'the direct descendant of the Thirteenth.' Such being the case, we are not surprised again to find in the catacombs of El-Amarna pictorial representations of true Egyptian music. Thus we see the departed master of the house with his wife listening to two singers accompanied by harps and flutes, while a girl beats time with the native clappers.

The art which was restored in the Seventeenth Dynasty came to its highest development in the Eighteenth; and during the reign of this house, Egyptian music rose to a height of excellence that is hardly credible. Aahmes, the first of the Dynasty, was a man of powerful mentality, and under his firm rule the country was soon assured a period of prosperity.

His great achievement was the war by which he dislodged the Hyksos from their last strongholds and established the independence of Egypt; and by the time the third king of the Dynasty (Tahut-mes or Thothmes II.) ascended the throne, the Nile valley was a model for the world in art. Some of the outstanding principles of Greek art were first developed there, and the Greeks themselves did not hesitate to look upon Egypt as one of the chief sources of our European civilization. Luxurious living and feasting were common, and every occasion was honoured by and with music on a sumptuous scale. During meals, female singers and nefer-players, or a chorus of men, accompanied on harps, or quartets and quintets of various instruments, performed. Wilkinson says that 'when hired to attend at a party, the musicians either stood in the centre or at one side of the festive chamber, and some sat cross-legged on the ground,' and gives (Plate XI.) an illustration, from a Theban tomb, of such a concert-party. Thothmes III., after his campaign against Megiddo, where the enemy attacked 'with much music' (Lepsius iii. 316, line 62), settled down to a reign of peace, during which wealth and luxury were seen on every hand. But besides being the chief attraction at banquets, music was also used as a relaxation and as a consoling agent. Thus we see an interesting picture on the tomb of Rekh-mā-Rā at Kurna, showing this eminent official in the act of listening to singing and to a performance on instruments. Later in the Dynasty, the number of musical instruments increases; under Akhen-aten (Amen-hotep IV.) we actually find a Theban school of music and dancing. Lepsius reproduces the illustration, and Petrie ('History of Egypt,' ii. 222) gives a reduced sketch of it. And such an Academy of Music existed, approximately, fourteen centuries before the Christian era opened. The date of Thothmes III. is completely fixed by astronomical calculation at March 20, B.C. 1503, to February 14, B.C. 1449.

The Eighteenth Dynasty presents a great change in Egyptian music; and, as far as the remains go, the change seems to have been for the better. A larger number of instruments are found, and they exhibit new design, sizes, and methods. The influence of Asia, at this time, was very strong, and the cult of music extended to women as well as men. The conquests of Thothmes III. in Western Asia brought Asiatic fashions into the Egyptian Court. Moreover, the wife of Amen-hotep III. and the mother of Akhen-aten was Syrian, and much of the new trend can be traced to her influence. Queen Kirgipa entered Egypt accompanied by three hundred and seventeen women attendants, and with such an entourage, the spread of Syrian customs must have been rather rapid at Court ('Zeitschrift für Aegyptische Sprache,' xviii. 82). A letter (No. XII) from Dushratta, king of Mitanni, to Akhen-aten, mentions instruments. And the influence that Syria exercised upon the Egypt of the time of Thothmes III. must have been as good as it was powerful, for the state of civilization in Syria at that period was quite equal, if not superior, to that of Egypt itself. As Petrie says (History, ii. 146), there was technical work there 'which could teach them rather than be taught.' Nor can there be any doubt that among the captives taken from Megiddo back to Egypt must have been a large number of skilled craftsmen. In fact, the Annals state as much. But luxury and ease soon had their usual results, and the power of Egypt at home and abroad crumbled away gradually as the last of the Dynasty ruled.

It cannot be said that the Ramesside Dynasty (the Nineteenth) did much further to develop the art of music in Egypt. Still, the science had obtained too great a hold on the people to fall away. The instruments continued to increase in size, and presumably in tonal power. A very interesting specimen of the harp from the Temple of Abydos (Pl. XX., fig. 3, Egypt. Research Account, 1902: Caulfield) dating from the time of Seti I. (B.C. c. 1320) shows a curious and ingenious method of double-stringing on an almost semicircular body. I should think this to have been a serious attempt to increase the tone-volume, and to prove that the interest taken in music was by no means on the wane. But when we reach the reign of the third king of that Dynasty (Ramessu, or Ramses II.) we find a sad decline in the art of the country. People still lived luxuriously, but the work of this reign, when compared with that of Seti I., is clumsy, careless, and cheap. Things went on in a happy-go-lucky fashion as the Dynasty drew to a close. Peace reigned, it is true, and 'by night resounds not the cry "Stop" . . . in the mouth of the people; one goes with singing . . .' (Temple of Meremtah, Karnak); but no advance was made. Soon decay set in, and, as the Harris Papyrus says, 'the land of Egypt was overthrown. Every man was his own guide; they had no superiors. From the abundant years of the past we had come to other times.' Such, certainly, were not the conditions under which art could flourish.

The first king of the Twentieth Dynasty (Ramessu III.) caused the lamp of Egyptian greatness to burn up anew for a short while. The country was well-organized and well-governed, although it had already begun to decline from its previous high moral state. Nevertheless, considerable musical remains are to be found. The large and elaborate harps first announced by Pocock and Norden, and subsequently copied by Bruce from the Theban tomb, belong to this reign (B.C. c. 1200). Their beauty and elegance were so great that Bruce's veracity was doubted; and it was not until Captains Irby and Mangles, accompanied by the eminent Belzoni, visited Thebes and found Bruce's name 'scratched over the very harp,' that any credence was given to the discovery. The sketch was originally made for Burney. Wilkinson reproduces the pictures of these two harps: one a finely ornamented instrument with ten strings, considerably over man's height, and decorated with a head at the bottom of the sound-case, and the other still larger, with twenty-six visible pegs. The crumbling power of the succeeding kings brought the third great musical period to a close, and with the conquering Ethiopian Dynasties came an era of artistic stagnation.

By the middle of the 8th century, Egypt was broken up, and subsequently re-organized by the Assyrians. But the struggle between Ethiopia and Assyria for the dominion of Egypt was ended by influence from outside. Psamtek I., opening the Twenty-sixth Dynasty, crushed the petty local rulers, and with the help of foreign mercenaries (chiefly Greek) and of loyal Egyptians, once more welded the country into one solid Empire. And here begins its fourth and last period of musical activity. The advent of so many Greek auxiliaries resulted in the formation of a large and important Greek colony; but it is an open question whether they influenced Egyptian art very much. More probably the land of the Pharaohs was still able to teach them more than it learned of them. The dynasty was an era of antiquarian revival; the works of art stand on a high plane of excellence, and as Sayce says, 'only wanted originality to make them successful. As it was, the art of the Twenty-Sixth Dynasty was careful and good, and under its rule, Egypt enjoyed for the last time a St. Luke's summer of renown.' The last king to encourage true Egyptian art before the advent of the Persians, was Aahmes-si-Neit (Amasis II.). This was the period when the Greeks were acquiring their musical knowledge on the Nile. A few feeble Egyptian kings followed the Persians, and then came another period of Persian rule. The country had ceased to be Egyptian, and many of the old literary and artistic traditions had already died out. 'The native spirit was broken . . . the nation with a history that numbered thousands of years, and the country that had shed the light of civilization abroad when those round about were steeped in barbarism and ignorance, now sank into a darkness which obscured and eventually swallowed up the glory and majesty of the Pharaohs and their land' (Budge). Under the Ptolemies the artists still continued to copy the older style, but in character the art was no longer purely Egyptian, and with Amasis II. our consideration of Ancient Egyptian music must end (B.C. c. 550).

In closing this sketch of Egyptian musical history, it will be necessary to draw attention to the scope of the period. The whole ground traversed represents a matter of, roughly, four thousand years. The first period of musical greatness covered a thousand years, and was separated from the second by about four hundred years of darkness. The second period lasted approximately half a millennium, and was followed by the third after an interval of nine hundred years. This 'New Empire' revival of 'Middle Empire' art occupied about three hundred and seventy years, to be succeeded by, roundly, seven hundred years of strife and art-decadence. The last flicker under Amasis II. lasted only about fifty years, being but a short interval of prosperity between the two eras of conquest. A consideration of the harmonic system used by the Egyptians, and a closer examination of their instruments of music, must be left for another occasion.

'THE CRYES OF LONDON'

'The Cryes of London' were heard in the Great Hall of Westminster School on June 9, at a lecture by Sir Frederick Bridge. The Dean of Westminster was present, and there was a very large audience. The lecture was in aid of a Westminster charity, and realised a large sum. The 'Cryes' by Weelkes, Gibbons, and Dering were given, and also some rounds founded on the 'cryes,' and a 'Freeman's Song' by Ravenscroft. The string accompaniment was played throughout with the mutes on—which gave a very good idea of the old-time tone. Miss Peachey, Miss Champneys, and Mr. Graham Smart were the vocalists, and the players were from Trinity College. The delightful old Fancies made a great impression, and the surroundings of the old hall—formerly the dormitory of the monks—added much to the effect of this interesting revival.

Occasional Notes

We regret that the relations that have existed for so many years between the publishers of this journal and Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son and Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. have been terminated by those firms' refusal to continue to be distributing agents for the Musical Times. They have acted thus in obedience to the mandate of a trade union. Into the merits of the dispute behind all this we have not space to enter, nor would the subject be of general interest. We will merely indicate its extent by pointing out that in the whole music trade not more than five per cent. of the employees are affected. We may add that of Messrs. Novello's staff of six hundred only two have left their work. Meanwhile, we shall be grateful if our readers will make known the fact that subscribers who have not received their copies of the Musical Times may obtain them on application to the publishers.

The Carnegie United Kingdom Trust has issued a report of its music publication scheme for 1920. Six works are recommended for publication, and according to the adjudicators they represent the best among many compositions of great merit. They are as follows:

Concerto-Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra	E. L. Bainton
'The Magic Harp.' Rhapsody for orchestra	(Miss) I. Boyle
'Tam o' Shanter.' Overture for orchestra	Learmont Drysdale
'English Pastoral Impressions.' Suite for orchestra	Ernest Farrar
Rhapsodie Quintet for clarinet and strings	Herbert Howells
'Nativity Hymn,' for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra	Cyril Scott

While we hear the cry of 'publication, and more publication' raised on behalf of the British composer, it is interesting to note this steady piling-up of actual achievement by the Carnegie Trust.

With the Epilogue on page 441, Mr. Edwin Evans ends his series of articles on 'Modern British Composers.' We have received abundant proof that the series has fulfilled its object of making known a very large number of new and unfamiliar native compositions. It is sometimes said that propaganda of this type is apt to err in the direction of over-praise. We do not think that Mr. Evans has been guilty of more than a natural and justifiable leaning towards the work of his fellow-countrymen. But even if he showed undue bias, it would go but a small way towards compensating the native composer for the neglect he has received in the past. And, after all, it is even better to say hastily that all our geese are swans, than to continue the bad old custom of taking it for granted that the swans come from abroad and that the geese are bred at home. Sympathetic criticism—the effort to understand, and to help others to understand—should, like charity, begin at home—though (also like charity) it shouldn't stay there.

We have received a poster and cuttings giving particulars of an attempt now being made at a suburban picture theatre to capture the 'world's pianoforte-playing championship.' This honour goes not to the best player, or to the player of the best music, but to the one who is able to play the longest at a sitting. Our sporting papers would no doubt call it 'the piano Marathon.' The present holder of the title is a German with eighty-two hours to his credit, but, says the poster, 'Prof. A. Kemp (our pianist) is making a strong attempt to win back to England the honour,' and the trifle of ten thousand pounds that goes with it. The Professor is undergoing four training tests of forty-eight, eighteen, twenty, and sixty-six hours respectively, and it seems to be taken for granted that an eager public will flock to hear him, and even more, to see him. For there is much to see. He is necessarily fed in public, as befits a lion, and further (we read) the pianoforte keys are sprayed with methylated spirit to prevent his fingertips from cracking, and his face is bathed at intervals with eau de Cologne. He is surrounded with little dolls, flowers, and teddy-bear mascots to distract his mind, otherwise, he explains, he would go insane. It seems a pity the mascots were not brought on sooner.

A correspondent sends us a copy of the magazine of one of our most famous public schools, in which appears a list of organ recital programmes played in the College Chapel. Misprints—our own or other people's—are always fair game, so we quote the following items, with thanks to the perpetrator:

'Marche Souvorov'	Areusky
'Tempode ballo'	Scarlati
Chune Prelude: 'In dutei julilo'	Bach
'Eraud Chœur'	Euilmant
'Five and sleep music' (Valkurie)	Wagner
Fuque ('the Giant')	Bach
Dialogue	Eigout

Quarterly magazines have an inconvenient way of arriving for review so near our going to press that we have to choose between giving them a notice prompt but too brief, or ample but a month late. Here is the new Music and Letters, full of good things as usual, and inviting comment for which we have no space. Among the contributors are R. Vaughan Williams ('Gustav Holst,' with portrait), Walter Ford ('Some Thoughts on Singing'), Philip Heseltine ('The Scope of Opera'), Sydney Grew ('Clichés'), and R. R. Terry ('Sailor Shanties'). An important feature is a section devoted to Church Music, with excellent articles by A. Ramsbotham, W. H. Frere, Alan Gray, and A. Brent Smith. Dr. Frere's paper is a scholarly one on the Choral Preludes in Bach's 'Clavierübung.'

In a general way this journal is unable to concern itself with musical comedy, but we feel disposed to strain a point in favour of 'His little Trip,' a work written, composed, dressed, produced, and acted by the Cambridge University Footlights D.C. We took the opportunity of attending the performance given at the Strand Theatre on June 18, and found the music bright and tuneful, and scored with excellent point. Four composers were mentioned on the programme, but the bulk of the work was by N. A. Williams and M. D. Lyon.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

The Royal Philharmonic Society ended its hundred and eighth season on May 20, by a concert conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. The symphony was Schubert's in C major, which was played with fine energy and swing, and excellent phrasing in the slow movement. Considerable cuts were made; I think I am right in saying that the whole work was shortened by about a quarter of an hour, a proceeding which I naturally commend. Those who are interested in the subject of 'cuts' may be referred to an article in the June issue of the Musical Times by Mr. Sydney Grew, and to an article by the present writer that appeared in the issue for December, 1919. The novelty of the concert was Miss Katherine Eggar's song, 'My soul is an enchanted boat'—with string quartet accompaniment—agreeably sung by Miss Carmen Hill, in the absence of Mr. Gervase Elwes owing to indisposition. It is a pleasing little work, but hardly worthy of the position it occupied. Mr. William Murdoch played Scriabin's early F sharp minor Concerto, which is interesting now chiefly because it shows us how greatly the early and later Scriabin differs. It would be an exaggeration to say it is a case of Jekyll and Hyde, but it is not possible for anybody to admire both equally. It appears from the summary of the Society's season that the seven programmes contained thirty-three items, of which nine were by living British composers, four by French composers, four by Russian composers, and one by an Italian composer.

An orchestral concert which should not be overlooked, although it is long ago now since it took place, is the special concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra in aid of the endowment fund of the Orchestra. Conducted by Mr. Albert Coates, the programme contained nothing new, but the event should be recorded for the benefit of future historians.

There is only one other orchestral concert which should be mentioned, viz., that given by Mr. Cyril Jenkins with the assistance of the Newport Choral Society. The programme contained three works new to London which had been previously heard at the recent Welsh Musical Festival, organized also by Mr. Cyril Jenkins. These were Dr. Vaughan Williams's 'Five Mystical Songs' for chorus, orchestra, and baritone solo, Mr. Jenkins's Fantasy on Welsh airs for strings, and his cantata 'Freedom,' for mezzo-soprano and baritone soli and orchestra. The singing of the Newport Choir, which had been trained by Mr. A. E. Sims, was of the very high quality that can rarely be heard in London. Mr. Albert Coates conducted also Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration,' and the 'Leonora' Overture No. 3.

Last month it was suggested in this column that Jascha Heifetz's first recital ended, so to speak, on a note of interrogation, which left us in doubt as to his musicianship and temperament. At his second recital, which included Mendelssohn's Concerto and Bach's Chaconne, his display of technique in both works was even more astonishing than it had been at his first concert. As regards his interpretations, it can be said that there was nothing in them to which the most fastidious or the most pedantic could take exception on the ground of purity of taste or style, but at the same time there was nothing in them that bore the mark of strong independent personality. None the less, my own impression is that the temperament is there, and will develop when the artist no longer finds it necessary to devote himself exclusively to technique. After all, the Chaconne is a work to which very few players have been able to do full justice at the age of nineteen.

Two new Sonatas for pianoforte by native composers have been produced, which merit a place in the repertoire. It used to be said that there was only one English Pianoforte Sonata, that of Dale. Now we have one by John Ireland, and one by Arnold Bax. The Sonata of Ireland had the advantage of being played (on June 12) by Mr. Frederic Lamond. One can imagine a more romantic performance, but none more intellectual or more vigorous. It is not a work that reveals its secrets at once. Like much of John Ireland's music, it makes the impression of a flame burning in a misty air, but still it is a strong flame. There is much suppressed passion in it, and a sense of sombre, austere beauty. In a subject which is like an old English folk-dance, and at the beginning of the Finale the composer comes for a moment into the sunlight (to continue the metaphor), and the effect is heightened by the contrast. The craftsmanship is, as one would expect, of commanding strength. Possibly a further hearing may reveal the fact that the devotional slow movement is the finest of the three. It should be mentioned that the Sonata is published.

Mr. Bax's Sonata (played by Miss Harriet Cohen, on June 15) is easier to grasp at one hearing, though its emotions are subtler and succeed each other more rapidly. It is probably due to his Celtic blood that the composer has a keener sense for charm than almost any of his contemporaries, and this is revealed in this Sonata. In spite of its waywardness, its structure has a consistent logic of its own. The sections of the single movement are clearly marked, and the relationship between the beginning and the end is easy to recognize. There is real emotional power in the climaxes, and in his treatment of the instrument Mr. Bax shows a personal touch. Miss Cohen's playing of the Sonata, which formed part of a concert devoted to the works of Mr. Bax, was excellent. Mr. John Coates sang several songs, of which 'The Enchanted Fiddle' was encored. As pianoforte sonatas have been mentioned, Miss Isabel Grey's fine performance of the Dale Sonata at her last recital should be placed on record.

The production of Cyril Scott's new Pianoforte Quintet by the London String Quartet is also noteworthy. It is a work that could have been written by no one else, but tells us little about him that is new. He is not ashamed to indulge in mere lyrical beauty here.

THE AMERICAN SINGERS

Several notable singers from America have made their first appearance here. It is possible after hearing them to form some idea of the tendencies of American musical culture and the trend of American taste. The impression is that America likes extreme precision in matters of detail and charm of tone, but has not got, or has not developed, a great love for variety of tone-colour. The playing of the New York Symphony Orchestra seems to point in the same direction—a fact which strengthens faith in the theory. It leads to a suggestion, not always justified I think, of want of temperament.

Mr. Lambert Murphy is a very pleasing tenor, who produces liquid top notes with ease and sings with much taste. Mr. Reginald Werrenrath has a baritone voice of noble quality, and is a singer with a strong personality. There is a very attractive blend of manliness and refinement in his style, and he pays some attention to variety of tone. Miss Sophie Braslau has a contralto voice of commanding power and rich quality, and she sings with an intensity which suggests that she is as well fitted for the operatic stage as for the concert platform. Indeed, she is a leading member of the Metropolitan Opera House of New York. There is charm and strength and conspicuous musical intelligence in the singing of Miss Marcia van Dresser, and a command of tone-colour which suggests that she has not been moulded by the same influences as her fellow Americans. Miss Anna Case has a voice of great charm in the middle and lower notes, but not so pleasant in the upper notes, and sings in an extremely intimate and elegant style which would probably be more effective in a space smaller than Queen's Hall.

There was much to interest in the singing of Mr. Ronald Hayes, probably the first negro tenor to give a recital in London. He has a sweet voice and a warm temperament, guided by strong intelligence. His singing of 'Negro Spirituals' was fascinating by reason of its mixture of intense conviction and unsophisticated humour. Mr. Hayes, it should be added, has made valuable contributions to the study of the folk-music of primitive races.

The number of recitals by artists familiar and unfamiliar, native and foreign, has been more than ever bewildering. One found oneself wondering what would have happened if in addition we had had the number of German artists that was customary before the war, for as it is recourse has been made to giving an unprecedentedly large number of concerts at five or half-past five in the afternoon, because halls were not available at three or eight. I will refrain from moralising. Only a few, of course, can be mentioned.

The folk-songs from various parts of Italy collected and arranged by Mlle. Gina Sadere have a charm of their own, and she sings them in a highly attractive way. To listen to these and then to think back to Verdi and Puccini will teach us more about what is meant by 'an operatic style that has its roots in folk-song' than many reams of theoretical writing. Prof. Walford Davies said not long ago that no Englishman could sing a love-song properly, but at his recital (Queen's Hall, May 31) Mr. John Coates easily succeeded in proving that the Professor was wrong. Miss Dorothy Silk (Wigmore Hall, June 3) is among those who are fulfilling early promise, and a young artist whose first appearance justifies good hopes is Miss Diana Lawrence, a mezzo-soprano with an unusually pleasing voice and other good points.

Among pianists should be mentioned Mr. Walter Morse Rummel, now changed from a player of ultra-refined methods to a volcanic exponent. The Spanish pianist, Montariol Tarres, is also explosive and has fine facility, and M. Laffitte—who gave an orchestral concert (June 3)—is a sound and well equipped player. At a less hectic time Miss Illingworth would have attracted some notice. Busoni is amongst those who gave recitals at 5.30 (June 19). His audience filled Wigmore Hall to overflowing. He played nothing at all new, so that it need only be said that he was in a very fiery but merciful vein.

The Flonzaley Quartet was able to give only one concert here (June 4). Two were contemplated, but a strike in New York and a delayed liner made the duo impossible: a new phase of the influence of Labour on Art. Since the disbanding of the Roneisch Quartet, the Flonzaley combination are the most famous players of chamber music in the United States. They have maintained intact the great quality of their style; its flawless polish and elegance, and the sweetness of the tone, are distinctive. Yet these attributes do not by any means end in effeminacy. Their playing of Mozart was a delight, and made us regret that so large a part of the programme was devoted to a long and able, if not very inspired, Quartet of Loeffler.

Opera in London

By FRANCIS E. BARRETT

THE ENGLISH SEASON—'THE BEGGAR'S OPERA';
'QUENTIN DURWARD'

As far as the period with which I am able to deal is concerned, it consists of a record of opera in English. Of these there have been several notable examples, ancient and modern. The ancient goes back a couple of centuries and is represented by that fine characteristic work, 'The Beggar's Opera.' Those who happened to know of its existence or who saw the revival of many years ago have long wished to see it produced. Their opportunity has come at last, and they have taken full advantage of it, as have and will many others. We owe this revival to Mr. Frederic Austin, in co-operation with Mr. Nigel Playfair, and it came into effect at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, on June 5, with an immediate success. It is said that its original success in 1728 was aided by political reactions, although there is no mention of that thorny subject in the libretto. I rather fancy, however, that approval was accorded for exactly the same reason that approval will be accorded to it to-day, namely, because it is something entirely opposite to the prevailing mode of the hour. Two hundred years ago London was satiated with Italian Opera, and hailed with delight something that had nothing to do with Italian Opera. To-day we certainly are not bothered with Italian Opera, but evidently have had enough of foreign examples, with the result that we are ready for a change. The change is very completely represented in 'The Beggar's Opera.' It is as novel in 1920 as it was in 1728—and rather more so, for the reason that we hear less of our own traditional music than did our forefathers, who invariably employed it in their dances and so were thoroughly familiar with most of the tunes the ingenious Pepusch employed. Nowadays they come back with particular freshness, for the British idiom has disappeared from our own music in favour of any and every other kind. One of the good effects of this revival will be to show us how good and satisfying that idiom is. It certainly helped to make things easy for the audience at the first performance at the Lyric. The music got home at once, as did in fact the whole piece. It is very well done. Mr. Austin, who would be casually described as a modern of the moderns, becomes atavistic. He has prepared the edition of the opera used, and has executed his task with enthusiasm. A feature is the restoration of many of the airs omitted in later day representations, and a careful preservation of the atmosphere of the original. Appropriate tone-colour is secured by the use of strings, oboe, flute, and harpsichord to accompany the voices and play the delightful dances. Mr. Austin has not interfered with the songs, and has omitted only a few, since fashion demands that the piece shall end by eleven o'clock. His additions are chiefly in the form of dances which are in keeping, though not always the best tunes available. But the point is that the revival is thoroughly respectful to this intriguing old opera, and as such gains our admiration. When in due time the anniversary is reached, Mr. Austin may well celebrate it by remedying some weak points and by restoring Pepusch's original overture.

The company enters fully into the spirit of the piece, and no member more heartily than Mr. Austin himself. As a matter of fact his Peachum is an extraordinary piece of work. That 'genial ruffian' is depicted to the life by means that effectively remove every trace of Mr. Austin's personality. There is a grim humour in his manner that is very appropriate, and a general subtlety of bearing befitting the scheming one. He delivers his songs with all effect without forcing their point, and in all respects enters into the part in such a way as to give it its full relish, meaning, and significance. The other members of the company are all excellent. Miss Elsie French gives a delightful picture of Mrs. Peachum with a weakness for 'vapours' for which gin is the only remedy. She utters the philosophies of the part as to the manner born. Mr. Frederick Ranalow is the Captain Macheath, and makes him just the kind of individual one would expect him to be. There is enough but not too much of the 'devil may care' about him to suit the character, and of course from a local point of view he is well able to give the necessary effect to the fine old songs. Miss Sylvia Nelis's Polly is the best effort she has yet made on the musical stage. It is not wanting in charm, and has just the right degree of pathos without being melodramatic. Miss Violet Marquesita's Lucy is a good foil, and gives proof of unsuspected ability. Mr. Arthur Wynn enters freely into the devilry of Lockit, and a good piece of characterization comes from Mr. Alfred Heather as Filch. All the others—including The Beggar, who sits in the proscenium in the melancholy attitude appropriate to an author—are well in the picture. The dresses are perfect, offering a little epitome of the fashions of the day, with but one fault—that of newness, which time alone can and will remedy. There is likely to be plenty of opportunity, for unless I am much mistaken the piece will prove a powerful attraction. I should add that Mr. Eugène Goossens, Jun., acts as conductor, that the effective scenery, like the dresses, has been designed by C. Lovat Fraser, and that Mr. Nigel Playfair is the producer, and one who has clearly the highest artistic inspirations.

OPERA IN ENGLISH

Next in order came the first London production of Mr. Alec Maclean's opera, 'Quentin Durward.' This was made under the auspices of the Royal Carl Rosa Company in the course of its highly successful season at the Lyceum. We have had to wait a long time for a work from Mr. Maclean, and for this we must blame the unfortunate operatic conditions in this country. He ought to have been heard before, for twelve or thirteen years is a long time between operas. The fact is patent in this instance, as the music is obviously of two periods. He has based his plot—I think I may use the expression literally, for I imagine him to be his own librettist—on Sir Walter Scott's romance of the same name. It is a wise move to take a British literary classic for treatment, because it is half the battle in the matter of a comprehensible story. In this instance there has been very close compression, and the points of the story of Countess Isabelle and young Quentin Durward are compressed into a paragraph. Allowance has to be made for this and for other things, but the result is by no means insignificant. The idiom is faithful to Britain, which at once gives the music distinction, and the ability to follow the mood is very striking and by way of being exceptional. It is on these points that our 'English' operas fail. They may—or may not—be very good operas, but they contain nothing that marks them as being British. And it is British flavour we want in our operas. Although his phraseology is not always in the manner that we know Mr. Maclean can command to-day, it is always faithful to the spirit of the text. Genuine charm is expressed in the Flower Duet between Isabelle and Quentin, and the composer shows us another aspect of his powers when he describes the 'Wild Boar,' as De la Marck was termed. In spite of the fact that it but indifferently represents the composer's real development, and in face of a compression of plot that did not make for general understanding, I found the music in the right vein. And having this control of vein it is only a question of its investment in terms of the day instead of yesterday. Miss Eda Bennie as Isabelle, Mr. John Perry as Quentin, Mr. Albert Kirkman as Louis, Mr. Booth Hitchen as Crevecoeur, and Mr. Appleton Moore as De la Marck, with Mr. Wynn Reeves at the conductor's desk, all served the composer well, and the reception indicated the good-will of the public. The production came on an evening of British opera, Mr. Percy Colson's 'Pro Patria,' an initial essay of note produced last year, preceding the newer work.

This, so far, has been the only variant on a répertoire of popular operas ranging from 'Tristan and Isolde' to 'Carmen.' Between these there was the production in English of M. Wolf-Ferrari's 'The Jewels of the Madonna.' It is a fiery piece of work, emphasising the more lurid side of the Italian character and somewhat whitewashing the Camorristi, who are shown to have no part in the act of sacrilege that is a feature of the action. The music has many good features that make one wish it were wedded to a story of more healthy character. There was a finely temperamental performance in which Miss Beatrice Miranda as Maliela, and Mr. William Boland as Gennaro, showed in unmistakable terms of what stuff the British operatic artist is really made. M. de la Fuente conducted admirably. A good level has been maintained in the representations, which have included Wagner's 'Lohengrin,' that for some reason has been put on the shelf for the last six years while his 'Tristan' has been performed regularly. The audiences have been consistently good, and have comprised all sections of the community—including two horses who walked into the pit one fine afternoon. Efficiency and a fine spirit have distinguished the work of Mr. Van Noorden's company, and his courage in making a regular London season a feature of his undertaking is of the greatest help in demonstrating the real standard in the presentation of opera in the vernacular.

THE RUSSIAN BALLET

For more reasons than one the return of M. Diaghilev's company—generally known as the Russian Ballet—to Covent Garden was most welcome. This enterprising impresario plunged at once into novelty, and on his opening night gave us something entirely new from the old: in other words, his first novelty was an 18th century Neapolitan comedy entitled 'Pulcinella.' The music is, or was, by Pergolesi, until M. Igor Stravinsky took it in hand. He has used Pergolesi and he has used Stravinsky, and the hearer is at liberty to indulge his guessing powers as to which is which. But the result is undoubtedly satisfying. It is the best way in which to serve up gems of the past. Kept strictly to its period it would be dull stuff to the many. M. Stravinsky has not altered the notation of such Pergolesi as he uses, but has here and there added a sixth to a common chord and discoursed undiatonically on the old melodic progression. The piece is quaint—decidedly so in parts—but it is effective as ballet and appealing as music, since the ingenious plan is followed of having many passages sung by voices stationed in the orchestra. The whole plan, in which Madame Karsavina and M. Massine have a part, is entertaining, and enables us to make the acquaintance with a classic that otherwise would be lost to us. Another example of the 'new-old' was duly seen in 'La Boutique Fantasque,' which is a terpsichorean illustration of some musical jokes contrived by Rossini in his old age, and herein brought to unmistakable life. Too late for notice here, M. Diaghilev developed his latest idea in the shape of the revival of old Italian opera; but of this I can speak more fully next month.

THE PAVLOVA SEASON

Having finished her season at Drury Lane, Madame Pavlova very promptly moved herself and her company to the Princes Theatre for a further exposition of the art she represents so well. But before leaving Drury Lane she gave a dance-version of Liszt's well-known tone-poem 'Les Préludes.' It is treated in an impressionistic manner, chiefly expounded by Madame Pavlova herself and her clever partner, M. Volinine. When a move was made to the Princes, a complete novelty was introduced in the shape of a number described as 'Mexican Folk-Dances.' I rather fancy that Mr. Cecil Sharp will see something he knows already in these 'folk-dances.' Some of the steps seemed Northern—but then if we have folk themes in common, why not dances? With the picturesque costumes, the spirited execution, and the familiar music, the number went well. In the same programme there was Madame Pavlova's excellent version of the Walpurgis Night Ballet from Gounod's 'Faust,' which contains some of the best dance-music ever written; a 'Chopiniana,' which I do not consider happy, and a good supply of the Divertissements which comprise some of the best things Madame Pavlova, the clever Mlle. Butsovar, and the sprightly M. Volinine, offer an appreciative public.

COVENT GARDEN PERFORMANCES

With the exception of the production of Signor Puccini's three-in-one opera, which was promised for the end of the month—too late for notice in this issue—nothing remarkable has happened at the Royal Opera. 'Louise' has been added to the repertoire, and given, as it should be, in the tongue in which it was written. The difference in atmosphere, the augmented appeal of the whole thing, and the vitality of the performance when thus given in the language of its origin, are very marked. And to borrow a phrase from the country in which that tongue is used, it 'gives one furiously to think' on the subject of the presentation of foreign opera in a philologically unallied tongue. Whatever may be the case with the German works, it is beginning to dawn on me that the process of giving Latin opera in the Anglo-Saxon speech is not particularly effective. But that is a matter for discussion on another occasion. For the moment we are concerned with the fact that the performance of 'Louise' in French was undoubtedly an immense attraction. All the wonderful atmosphere was realised. Madame Edvina, so closely associated with the part of Louise, of which she was the original exponent in this country, was admirable. One can forgive her for the fearful and wonderful hat she wore, in view of her fine singing and her faithful portrait of the work-girl. M. Anseau, as last year, made an excellent Julien. He has a fine voice, and in this part his lack of style does not tell against him. It was delightful to see—and hear—Madame Bérat again as the mother. She is the embodiment of that fine class, the French working people with a code, an outlook on life, and a grasp of its significance all their own. It is one of the characters it is impossible to translate by word or action, and this great artist gives us a picture of it that lives. But one could write a whole chapter about that character, and leave something to be said. The fact remains, however, that the work is appreciated in this country, although it deals with thoughts and sentiments, with a rule of life and a view of morality, which in their deeper import are incomprehensible to the Anglo-Saxon race. But whatever may be the reason, there can be no doubt that 'Louise' is very attractive to the British public. However much the actual expression may owe to outside influence, there can be no question that the spirit of the music is perfect. The father of M. Cotreuil was well in the picture, and the new Noctambule and Pape des Fous, M. Maurice Oger, was an improvement on his predecessors. The famous work-room scene was weak, but the Bohemian Fête was good. Mr. Albert Coates conducted sympathetically.

For the rest it has been largely a Puccini season. In due course his 'Manon Lescaut,' his first work to retain a hold on the public, has been given with a new and well-qualified singer in Signora Quaiatti as Manon. She has a pleasing voice, a mature style, and marked powers as an actress, that constituted her one of the most efficient of the new-comers. Mr. Thomas Burke was the Des Grieux, and as is the case wherever Italian opera is concerned, sang well. The Lescaut of Signor Badini was theatrical. Mr. Coates directed the orchestra to good purpose. Subsequently Verdi's 'La Traviata' was added, in which Signora Pareto distinguished herself as Violetta, and Signor Govoni as Alfredo did not. M. Dinh Gilly was the Germont and Signor Bavagnoli conducted.

Recent gifts to the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, include a copy of the first edition of Fux's 'Gradus ad Parnassum,' and among the autographs, twenty-eight letters of Samuel Wesley, voluntaries, &c., by Blow, and five volumes of Church music by P. Hayes.

THE GLASTONBURY PLAYERS IN LONDON

When the announcement was made that a company from the Glastonbury Festival School was coming to face a London trial, to leave its pastoral home in Somerset (like Theocritus leaving Sicily for Alexandria) and play to a public jaded with multiplied entertainment, probably a good many friends of the movement trembled for it. There was enough reason for apprehension. The Glastonbury players have their friends, both numerous and enthusiastic, but the warmest of these would hardly assert that present achievement justifies all the interest asked for the movement. The idea is the great thing about Glastonbury; it is an idea which so far has only imperfectly materialised. The friendly folk who travel far and hard to see the shows at Glastonbury itself in August have the faith that compensates; the very gaps in the actual fulfilment are an incitement to imagination. And the charming greenery of the land, the sunny hours, and the ease and quiet of life down there conspire to propitiate the sceptic and to conjure fresh sympathies from the friend towards the so interesting efforts of the young folks of the Festival School.

It was taking a different sort of risk to depend on similar sympathies in an audience of jaded Londoners, in a theatre down in Waterloo Road, S.E., on a June night. It was not as though the Glastonbury School could be transported in a block. Without being wholly rustic, without really claiming many 'men from the barn and the forge and the mill and the fold,' the company still could not detach every one of its members from their daily tasks. Gaps therefore had to be filled as best might be. Moreover the players, now about to swell it on a real stage, had to adapt their scenery, and since at last they had the space for an orchestra, an orchestra had to be recruited. How much of all this difficulty was known to the audience at the 'Old Vic,' when the season started on May 31, could hardly be guessed, but it is rather to be feared that certain obvious shortcomings were commonly put down to the natural business incompetence of highly intellectual people. As a matter of fact it was a triumph of zeal and industry that the performances were carried through at all. Whether the incurring of such difficulty was justified events must show. (The event will be the arising of some patron or patrons of art with the offer to build a theatre for Mr. Boughton and his friends amid the apple orchards on the Tor of Avalon.)

On the ground of the immediate gratification of the London audiences the venture had one solid justification—of course Mr. Rutland Boughton's opera 'The Immortal Hour.' Much has been written about this work, its subject and its music, which one need not go over again. Enough that, taking a most detached view, aloof for the moment from the personality of that wonderful, vibrating, overflowing little man, the composer, and recognising that its world of somnambulistic Celtic kings with cobwebs in the brain-pan, and of fairy-queens with yearnings in place of a standard of conduct, belongs to a somewhat desuete vogue (the vogue of a day when every goose on the Liffey was a swan), one cannot deny the theme itself a measure of prettiness, while Rutland Boughton's music truly sings its way to the heart. Reading the text alone one might fear 'The Immortal Hour' to be an opera ponderous with Wagnerian machinery, symbols, and thunderstorms. Happily the music is not 'deep,' in spite of the long scene of the Celtic Mephistopheles, who is so deep that no fellow can tell if there is a bottom at all to his sayings. The easy charm of Rutland Boughton is rarer nowadays than musical profundity, and others than professed friends of Glastonbury must have been won by 'The Immortal Hour' at the 'Old Vic,' in spite of shortcomings in the preparation which demanded much in the way of charity. Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott, who conducted, must have had an anxious evening. The singers were those who had been heard at home—Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies, Mr. Clive Carey, Mr. Johnstone-Douglas, and Mr. Arthur Jordan.

On other evenings we were offered fragments of Mr. Boughton's Arthurian dramas, and smaller pieces, danced and sung, both antique and modern. As examples of the work to which the students are devoting themselves, hardly one failed to be of a lively interest. Viewed absolutely as entertainment for Londoners they were mixed. The dancing was curiously superior to the singing, and of the dances those arranged to Elizabethan and Jacobean music pleased most. New music for dancing by Mrs. Adela Maddison and Mr. P. Napier Miles proved not arresting. The company possessed one delightfully accomplished dancer, Miss Laura Wilson. When there was an adequate motive behind the pieces, as in 'The Wickedness of Dancing,' the dancers had a frank success, and Miss Ruby Boughton's young gracefulness was charming. But much of the singing was not good, quite apart from moments when the conductor it was who was chiming in. Singing seems to be the weak spot at Glastonbury. On the other hand the costumes and the scenery were from first to last a true pleasure. The author of them, Miss Christina Walsh, has an eye, and she has an original taste and feeling for theatre decoration. With her, as with Rutland Boughton, one feels that given a scope only a little more generous she could do more and more delicious things.

R. C.

Choral Notes and News

BY W. McNAUGHT

The early days of June brought three events of interest to those concerned in matters choral. On June 2, a choir from Norway sang at Central Hall; on June 11, a choir from Newport travelled to London in the morning, rehearsed in the afternoon, and gave a concert at Queen's Hall in the evening, with an up-to-date programme; and on June 12, the Association of Music Competition Festivals held its first conference since the beginning of the war. Of the three, the last is of the greatest importance. Like many movements whose vision is wide and whose work is done in humble places, this Association is unnoticed by the public. Its aim is to unify and support the work of competition festivals throughout the country by which, largely through choral singing, musical knowledge and practice are spread among classes and in districts where no other musical influence enters. Its special care is the country-side festival. By small grants of money and other forms of help it has enabled many of these organizations to combat their difficulties and continue an existence that is often precarious. Considering how widespread and how much-needed these festivals are, the importance of the work done by the Association can be perceived. The chief impression

(Continued on page 473.)

Here a pretty baby lies.

A FOUR-PART SONG.

Words by ROBERT HERRICK.

Composed by J. ALBERT SOWERBUTTS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Adagio. p

SOPRANO. Here, . . . here . . . a pret-ty ba-by

ALTO. p
(With closed lips.)

TENOR. p
(With closed lips.)

BASS.

PIANO. Adagio. ♩ = 72. p
(For practice only.)

lies, . . . Sung a-sleep, . . a-sleep . . with lul - - -

Here, . .

Copyright, 1920, by Novello and Company, Limited.

la - bies, . . with lul - - - la - bies, with sung a - sleep, here, . . . sung a - sleep with lul - la - bies, here a pret - ty ba - by here a pret - ty ba - here, . . . here . . . a lul - - - la - bies, here, here a pret - ty lies, here a . . pret - ty ba - by lies, . . Sung a - by . . lies, . . . Sung . . . a - sleep, pret - ty ba - by lies, . . . Sung a - sleep, a - ba - - by lies, . . a pret - - ty ba - - by poco.

Musical score for "Here a Pretty Baby Lies." The score is written for voice and piano. It features a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a common time signature (C). The music is divided into several systems, each containing staves for the voice and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are written below the voice staves. The score includes dynamic markings such as dim., pp, p, mp, and poco.. The piano part includes a section marked poco. at the bottom.

This Supplement is part also of the July issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 144.

THE ASSOCIATION OF MUSIC COMPETITION FESTIVALS.

Chairman: LADY MARY TREFUSIS.

Hon. Secretaries: Mrs. ARGLES and Dr. ARTHUR SOMERVELL.

Secretary: Miss MADDOCK, 20, Berkeley Street, London, W.1.

Owing to the abandonment of a great number of competitions during the war, and to the temporary inactivity of the committees, it was found necessary to suspend the annual Conferences of this Association. The other activities of the Association were, however, maintained, and a considerable expansion was made possible by the help of the Carnegie Trust, which made grants of £200 in 1915 and 1916, £400 in 1917 and 1918, and—to meet the peace-time revival of competitive Festivals throughout the country—£1,000 in 1919.

The conditions under which these grants were made by the Carnegie Trust were:

- (1.) That no money should be distributed in the form of prizes;
- (2.) That preference should be given to Festivals where choral music rather than solo music was encouraged;
- (3.) That preference should also be given to Festivals in scattered country districts, where the difficulties and expenses of organization were greater and little gate-money could be received;
- (4.) That each application should be considered on its merits.

Following these requirements the £1,000 grant made in 1919 was allocated in varying sums to the following Festivals: Aberdeen, Ayrshire, Ballymena, Brigg, Carlisle, Cleethorpes, Coleraine, Cornwall, Dorset, Eskdale, Fife, Leith Hill, Linlithgow, Londonderry, Isle of Man, Morpeth, North Northants, North Notts, People's Palace, Petersfield, Sligo, Mid-Somerset, South Somerset, West Kent, Wharfedale, Wirral, Worcestershire, Yorkshire, South Yorkshire.

The number of affiliated competitions is now fifty.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

June 12.

With the revival of Festivals came the necessity for reviving the Annual Conference. By permission of the Lord Mayor of London this was held at the Mansion House on June 12. The meeting very satisfactorily represented the competition movement delegates being present from nearly all Festival areas, in England and Scotland. The discussions evinced a prevalent desire for the better co-ordination of the movement as a whole. On the initiative of the committees of Birmingham and Glasgow, some of the larger town Festivals whose circumstances had enabled them to work independently of the Association had recently formed a Conference at Birmingham to discuss a scheme of unification. This meeting had been attended by Sir Henry Hadow and Sir Hugh Allen on behalf of the Association. A large part of the discussion at the Mansion House had reference to the Birmingham Conference and its outcome.

THE CHAIRMAN briefly referred to the work of the Association since the last Conference. There had been criticism, she said, of the propriety of holding competition Festivals in war-time. The answer was that the Festivals provided education and recreation in the best sense, and were not organized for amusement or for profit. While cinemas were permitted, no objection could be taken to competitive Festivals. The annual grants of the Carnegie Trust had been distributed in amounts of from £5 to £50, chiefly to assist in the payment of adjudicators' fees, choirs' travelling expenses, and the charges for the hire of halls.

LADY WINIFRED ELWES (treasurer) read a financial statement.

SIR HENRY HADOW said that his report on the Conference at Birmingham was one of complete agreement on principle. It was felt that the machinery set up by the Association was not adequate to meet the great extension of the competition movement, and that it needed periodic enlargement. The proposal put before the Birmingham Conference was that representatives of the larger non-affiliated Festivals should meet with representatives of the Association to concert a wider means of control. The advisability of co-operation as a general principle was agreed upon without hesitation. If a scheme could be evolved by which, instead of having two different sets of machinery at work, the whole could be controlled with one, it would be clearly to the very great advantage of the Festival movement.

SIR HUGH ALLEN pointed out some directions in which co-ordination would be useful:

- (1.) In the choice of music. Standards could be unified. Test-pieces were often too hard, too easy, or bad music. A certain degree of difficulty was necessary, but often it was of the wrong sort. Individual tastes were apt to enter too freely into the choice of music;
- (2.) In adjusting the differences of standard among adjudicators;
- (3.) In getting into touch with the people on whom the success of the movement largely depended, namely conductors, and in educating them;
- (4.) In promoting massed singing as one of the chief aims of every Festival. Choirs should be led to look upon this as a definite object and privilege in which winners and losers shared alike.

MR. BISSET (Chairman of the Edinburgh Festival) said the general scheme in view apparently resembled what was already in force in Scotland, where the movement was organized as a whole by representatives of the Festivals themselves. All were under a Scottish advisory council while retaining local autonomy. He suggested as an ultimate aim that Festivals should be grouped round district councils—say one for Scotland, one for Wales, one for Ireland, and several for England. One advantage of having a central representative body was that it could gain the ear of educational authorities. It could also be useful in co-ordinating dates of Festivals, helping in the choice of adjudicators, and in devising a universal scheme of marking. A district council could make it its business to become acquainted with likely competitors and circularise them. A journal could be issued containing, among other things, suggestions as to test-pieces and information as to the availability of adjudicators. The federal body could organize Festivals on a national scale—say every five years; scholarships for promising competitors could be administered; the problem of entertainment tax at combined performances could be properly tackled.

THE CHAIRMAN invited members of the Conference to speak briefly on any subject that might be of interest.

DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW did not agree fully with all strictures on test-pieces of extreme difficulty. Such music was often ugly, but its practice had greatly developed technique, as conductors found to their satisfaction when they came to prepare choral performances with northern chorals. He had heard criticism of solo competitions, but thought them useful in spreading good songs and good standards.

MR. H. S. ROBERTON (Glasgow), in adding his agreement to the idea of co-operation, said it was important that the governing body should be a 'live' one, i.e., that it should consist of people personally active in the competitive movement. On the question of test-pieces he had sometimes observed that simple music could be a useful and vital test for 'crack' choirs.

DR. SOMERVELL said that his criticism of solo competitions arose out of his enthusiasm for concerted performance of any kind. By bringing people together to make music—even if it was only one violinist and one pianist—the movement exercised its most characteristic form of usefulness. Solo competitions had their greatest value when coupled with compulsory sight-reading, the prizes being awarded for proficiency in both tests.

MR. MCEWEN (Renfrew and Ayr) complained that through lack of concerted arrangement the two competitions in which he was actively concerned were held on the same day.

MR. LESTER JONES (London) recommended the adoption of British music as much as possible.

MRS. COMMELINE (Berks, Bucks, and Oxon.) hoped that the central body would include a representative of the Board of Education. Efforts should be made locally to get inspectors, teachers, county boards, &c., to believe in the movement and to co-operate in promoting it.

MISS TURNBULL (West Kent) referred to the opposition shown by educational authorities (especially the National Union of Teachers), who were apt to look upon all competitive work as a kind of 'extra duty'; 'not that teachers were antagonistic to the principle of competition,' she added later.

DR. R. R. TERRY upheld concerted music as the most useful aim of competitions. He had often listened to classes of violin soloists no single one of whom had the power of giving artistic pleasure, but who, if brought together in an orchestra, could produce something really acceptable. He deprecated the 'exaggerated attention given to solo work of an indifferent character.' Co-ordination of Festival dates he looked upon as a scheme that would prove welcome to adjudicators; it would save them sleepless nights in the train and enable them always to come fresh to their work.

MR. JOHN GRAHAM (Stratford) said he had attended a conference of the music trades at Scarborough, and had pointed out to the delegates how the competition movement was bound up with their interests and would benefit by their support.

THE REV. C. J. BERESFORD (People's Palace) suggested that pressure should be brought upon the trade to allow professional discount for competing conductors, on whom the cost of music was often a heavy burden.

MISS KINDERSLEY (Dorset) suggested, as a means of approach between educational authorities and competition Festivals, that the Festival tests should be adopted as school tests by examiners.

Other contributors to the discussion—which now largely turned on the question of the schools—were MR. DANKS (Worcestershire), MR. MORTON (Morecambe), MR. BOWEN (Mid-Somerset), MR. SHEAVES (Newcastle), MISS BUCHANAN (Carlisle), MR. CRAINE (Isle of Man), and MR. BOWKER (Birmingham).

The following Resolution was passed:

That the following committee be appointed to confer with a similar committee appointed by the Birmingham Conference in order to draw up a constitution and rules for the new Association, the constitution and rules to be submitted to a general meeting of the whole body. Committee: Lady Mary Trefusis, Mrs. Argles, Sir Hugh Allen, and Mr. H. Plunket Greene, with power to add to their number.

At the afternoon meeting, after the Chairman had expressed her regret at the unavoidable absence of Sir William McCormick and the Rt. Hon. H. A. L. Fisher:

SIR HENRY HADOW said: 'At the first meeting of this Association after a long and tragic interval we should naturally give ourselves partly to retrospect and partly to looking forward. Retrospect is the more difficult, because everything which preceded the war seems now to belong to ancient history. It is difficult to get our perspective right, or to remember with any accuracy the course of our proceedings in those far-off, remote days. But I seem to remember at some of our earlier meetings speakers used to remind us of the house of bondage from which the Competition Festival had done so much to deliver England.' Here Sir Henry gave an amusing description of a typical village musical evening of the old days. 'The Competition Festival,' he continued, 'has already done an immense lot to raise the tone and level of music, but it needs absolute and ceaseless vigilance to prevent the weeds from coming back. We have got to have Competition Festivals more frequently and more regularly, and they must be instilled and embodied into the very blood of the people before we have really achieved our object.' The speaker briefly summed up the early beginnings of the movement and the 'Mary Wakefield' period. 'Now' he said, 'we are at the beginning of a new chapter in our history, and it is worth while considering for a moment what the change and the development involve and how they will best help the forward movement of the Competitive Festival. As the Festival movement has proceeded during past years, certain large centres have grown up and developed more or less on their own lines. They have not always been inside the purview of the Festival Association as a whole, but they have done quite admirable work in their own respective districts—work that serves as a standard and a model for the rest of the country. By the nature of the case, however, they have not been able to come into close contact with the central organization.' So there was a danger of two schemes existing in England, one for the smaller Festivals and one for the larger and more sumptuous which were able to look after themselves. The object which was going to occupy the attention of the Executive of this Association for some time was the re-drafting of the constitution so as to bring the whole of the movement together throughout the United Kingdom into one scheme and one machinery. Sir Henry then went on to offer some words of comment on the subject of standardisation, as put forward by speakers at the morning meeting. He hoped nothing would be attempted in the way of standardising adjudicators; the personal equation tended to flexibility and breadth, and was on the whole of unmixed benefit. With regard to the standardisation of marks, he preferred the word 'abolition.' It was certainly necessary to have some kind of nomenclature or system, and that system might possibly be as well expressed in numerical terms as in any other; but there was too much tendency, in giving totals, to leave out the steps by which the totals were reached. So far as standardisation could be applied to music, he was on the side of local freedom and local autonomy. 'One of the things we can do is not to impose orthodoxy, but to provide a body of information as full as possible, regulated according to degree of difficulty, so that small village choirs and small local competitions which want something within their compass can have a list sent to them of where such things can be obtained, the price, and so forth; such information would be of first-rate value to many local societies in England that want to do the right thing but do not quite know how to do it.' The speaker then considered the broad effects of the scheme of co-operation, and, referring with approval to the organization outlined by Mr. Bisset, emphasised the advantage of speaking with an authoritative voice to the Board of Education. He expressed a feeling of gratitude for the gifts of the Carnegie Trust, by which much-needed help had been given to many of the smaller Festivals. Turning to the subject of the schools, he said: 'I am in most entire sympathy with all that was said this morning about the children's day, of getting in touch with schools, and overcoming their natural prejudice founded on the already plethoric fullness of their time-table. We have got to convince the schools that music is as important a part of education as anything else; if you leave it out, you might just as well leave out arithmetic.' Sir Henry then spoke on the possibility of establishing a central library of music which could be used for purposes of reference and borrowing. He advocated some such scheme as the establishing of a panel of adjudicators who could visit competitions in operation, and go about giving advice on important points. He instanced the great success of the Petersfield Festival in the days when Sir Hugh Allen used to visit competing choirs and give them lectures on interpretation. Dealing with the question of difficult test-pieces, he utterly condemned music in which difficulty was manufactured in order to provide a test of technique, and likened it first to the mnemonic nonsense verses of his schooldays and then to Bradshaw's railway guide. The question of solo competitions, he said, should not be decided by the personal sufferings of adjudicators in listening to them. Solos should be retained for several reasons: firstly, on the principle of non-interference with autonomy; secondly, because they could lead to the discovery of genius; thirdly, because people who are probably determined to sing in any case might as well be encouraged to sing the best music.

MRS. COMMELINE spoke on the need for improvement in the general manner of singing hymns. It was suggested that this was a matter on which the Church Music Society should be approached.

DR. SOMERVELL dealt with the subject of the reluctance of school teachers to enter competitions. He attributed this largely to the fact that many of them were professional teachers of music who felt that they might lose caste if they were publicly unsuccessful in the exercise of an art in which they were supposed to be experts.

THE REV. C. J. BERESFORD said that this did not hold good in the district covered by the People's Palace Festivals.

There was general discussion on the imposition of the entertainment tax on the evening concerts with which many competitions conclude their proceedings. Several individual experiences were recounted, and the general finding was that the authorities were ready to condone competitions on the score of educational value but were reluctant to perceive a similar value in combined performances.

A Resolution was passed: 'That the Association be asked to approach the Customs authorities and ask them to grant exemption from the entertainment tax for all sessions of Competition Festivals.' We are informed that a letter embodying this Resolution has been sent to the Chairman of the Board of Customs and Excise.

NEW COMPETITIONS IN LONDON.

Since the Herts and North Middlesex Festival ceased its operations at Alexandra Palace a large area in the North of London that had proved ripe for competitive activity has lacked the rallying-point that it obviously needs. We are now glad to announce that this blank is to be filled by the institution of a North London Musical Festival, with a competitive area covering the North and North-West London postal districts. At a meeting on June 1, Mr. John Graham was elected hon. secretary of the new Festival, and he was able to announce that the committee of the Stratford Festival, of which he is secretary, offered a guarantee of £100 to the new organization. It is intended to hold the first Festival in November next.

A proposal is also on foot to establish a Festival for the river-side districts of South London. A meeting of those interested is to be held at the Browning Settlement on July 15 (at 8 p.m.).

A competitive musical Festival will be held at Leicester on October 8 (junior section) and 9 (senior section). There are nineteen classes, of which six are choral. The secretary is Mr. J. C. Smith, 28, Beckingham Road, Leicester.

EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

When the first Edinburgh Musical Competition Festival was mooted about six months ago, the executive committee was not too sanguine regarding the public response. Edinburgh is very conservative in such matters, and we are glad to report that the results of the Festival from every point of view have exceeded the hopes of the most optimistic of well-wishers.

It was intended to run the Festival for three days, but the number of entrants compelled an extension to five days. Mr. F. H. Bisset, chairman of the executive, deserves great credit for his initiative; and Mr. Davis Latto, the honorary secretary, proved himself a most capable organizer, without whose self-denying labours we are afraid it would not have been possible to record this phenomenal success.

The movement is well supported by musicians and enthusiastic amateurs. Many of these ladies and gentlemen entered the lists as competitors in order to show that they were really interested in and believed in the Festival as an educative asset to the musical life of the city.

The adjudicators—Mr. Plunket Greene, Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, and Mr. Robertson—spared no pains to encourage the competitors, while they did not hesitate to condemn all that was unworthy. Such frankness no doubt disturbed a few of the audience, but sent many away revising their standards of judgment.

Already we are reaping the fruits of the Festival in reading notices of local performances of 'Festival Music.' Only recently we noticed two concert bills with this important additional attraction intimated.

The entire proceedings were divided into twenty-six sessions. The competitions were arranged in sixty-two classes, catering for mixed-voice, male-voice, and female-voice choirs, church choirs, junior choirs, school choirs, action-songs, singing games, and operatic quartets; vocal solos, duets, and quartets; brass quartets, instrumental solos, duets, and chamber music. The tests took place in Usher Hall and Central Hall. The standard of the music was on the whole very high, as was that of the performances. The trophies—given by various ladies, gentlemen, and societies—were presented to the winners by the Lord Provost of Edinburgh at the last session, when there was a large attendance of the public.

The principal choral results were as follows:

SCHOOL CHOIRS.

Challenge Class (open).—Tests: 'There is a garden in her face' (John Ireland) and 'A croon' (Herbert Howells). 1st, St. James's School, Leith (Mr. E. Wakefield); 2nd, Queen's Park Higher Grade School, Glasgow (Mr. T. H. Allwood).

Other school competitions.—First prizes won by North Berwick High School (Miss Ann M. Stewart), James Clerk Higher Grade School (Mr. George H. Baillie), London Street Public School (Mr. G. Calder), St. Leonard's Public School (Miss Jane F. Gray).

Action-Songs.—Senior Class: St. Ignatius Girls' School, Edinburgh (Miss Nana Linton); Junior Class: Portobello Higher Grade School (Miss A. M. Murdoch); Singing Games: St. Andrew's Church Sunday School (Miss A. L. Anderson).

JUNIOR CHOIRS.

Challenge Class (open).—Tests: 'The Nightingale' (Weelkes) and 'Music when soft voices die' (Charles Wood) both three-part. 1st, Clydebank Co-operative (Miss C. B. Wood); 2nd, Pathhead and Sinclartown Co-operative (Mr. W. S. Stephenson).

Class B.—Dollar Junior Choir (Mr. C. E. Allsopp).

CONTINUATION SCHOOL CHOIRS.

1st, Brunsfield School (Mr. A. C. Little); 2nd, London Street School (Miss Helen G. Danne).

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Challenge Class.—Tests: 'Night' (Hamish MacCunn) and 'The tambourine player' (Schumann). 1st, Manfield Choir, Northampton (Mr. W. F. Marshman); 2nd, Mr. Thorpe Davie's Choir, Glasgow.

Class B.—No entries. Class C.—1st, Clydebank Co-operative (Miss C. B. Wood).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Challenge Class.—Tests: 'After many a dusty mile' (Elgar), 'Scots, wha ha'e' (arr. by H. S. Robertson). 1st, Clydebank (Mr. J. D. Fleming).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Challenge Class.—Tests: 'My love dwelt in a northern land' (Elgar) and 'All creatures now are merry-minded' (Benet). 1st, Manfield Choir, Northampton (Mr. W. F. Marshman); 2nd, Mr. Thorpe Davie's Choir, Glasgow.

Other Classes.—Union U.F. Church Choir, Clydebank, (Mr. J. D. Fleming) and Mr. Moodie's Choir, Dunfermline (Mr. James Moodie).

CHURCH CHOIRS.

Two classes.—Morningside U.F. Church, Edinburgh (Mr. Robert McLeod) and St. Serf's Parish Church, Leith (Mr. T. Paterson Lamb).

KENT MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

When the war broke out this Festival was in its eleventh year, and showing signs of greatly developing. Its revival on May 15 and 19 at Chatham was a courageous step that was well justified by results. It is inevitable that a competition drawing its participants from a wide area should be at a disadvantage in these days of high railway fares. Choral bodies (especially elementary school choirs) are especially hard hit. In spite of some absences on this ground, however, there was a good entry, and the general level of achievement was unexpectedly high. We single out for special mention the singing of the St. Pauls' Boys' School, Maidstone. These youngsters sang with a beauty of tone and a delicacy of nuance and phrasing that were astonishing. No less remarkable was the excellence of their part-singing. Not often does one hear boys sing second treble so well. The Troy Town Girls' School, Rochester, also sang with notable finish.

The arrangements were well carried out, and the Festival gave every sign of overcoming the disadvantages brought about by a lapse of half-a-dozen years.

In the chief mixed-voice choral class the tests were Gibbons's 'The silver swan' and Elgar's 'It's oh! to be a wild wined,' with a sight-reading test. The first place was retained by the previous holders, Maidstone Choral Union. Female-voice choirs sang Geoffrey Shaw's 'Ask me why' and H. Ellingford's 'Daffodils,' Miss Grace Morgan's Choir, Maidstone, being first. Other prizes in the adult sections were won by Shepherdswell Musical Society (Mrs. Ethel Clout), Faversham Parish Church (Mr. W. J. Keech), and Faversham Parish Church Male-Voice Choir.

The judges were Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. Herbert Walenn, Dr. Charles Palmer, Dr. C. H. Merrill, Mr. Harvey Grace, Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, and Mr. W. J. Keech.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

MALVERN.—May 18.

On reviving this Festival after a lapse of six years it was felt better to confine it to one day instead of attempting to occupy three or four as in previous years; but the success attending the venture was sufficient to warrant a larger scale next year.

The best attended choral competition was that for Village Choral Societies. Hagley Choral Society (Mr. H. Oakes) was first and Colwall Choral Society (Miss Chorley) second out of seven in the performance of Parry's 'I know my soul hath power' and a selection from Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet.' Afterwards the whole class joined in a complete performance of the 'Songs of the Fleet' under Mr. Ivor Atkins, with a string orchestra accompanying. The successful choirs in other classes were Newland Choral Boys (Mr. R. Biggs), Worcester Secondary School for Girls (Miss Tyers), and Himbleton (Ladies) Choral Society (Rev. R. Craze). Dr. R. R. Terry adjudicated.

Mr. Herbert E. Knott, whose performance of Harwood's 'Pæan,' earned the first prize at the organ competition at the Birmingham Festival, writes to correct the statement in Mr. Sydney Grew's report that he had previously used the 'Pæan' in his F.R.C.O. examination. Mr. Grew regrets that he made the statement on apparently reliable information that has proved to be untrue.

LEAMINGTON.—June 3, 4, 5.

Although some of the twenty-seven classes of this Festival had to be cancelled for want of entries, there was a good deal of satisfaction to be drawn from the course of the competitions. The most regrettable feature was that the abandoned classes included those for Choral Societies (open), Male-Voice Choirs, and Church and Chapel Choirs (open). The competition for village choirs was, however, held, and Whitmarsh gained the prize for its performance of Maunder's Magnificat in D. Warwickshire school choirs were invited to compete in two classes, according to the size of the school, and were given excellent test-pieces. Sight-singing was included, and the shield for the highest aggregate went to Coventry Industrial School. The various competitions in solo-singing were successfully carried out with few exceptions, and two classes for elocution were judged by the Right Rev. The Lord Bishop of Ontario. The adjudicators in music were Madame Edith Hands and Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill.

BALLYMENA.—The annual competitions of the Ballymena Musical Festival Association were held on May 4, 5, 6, and 7, and attained a success that eclipsed all previous records. We regret that news of the Festival arrived too late to be published last month, and only brief reference can be made in this issue. The first day was devoted to fourteen classes for national schools, other children's choirs, and factory choirs, the most notable being that in which seven choirs from mills and factories sang Fletcher's 'The summer morn' and Mendelssohn's 'I would that my love.' The remaining days were largely devoted to vocal and instrumental solos, duets, quartets, &c.; three choral competitions resulted in favour of Y.W.C.A. Choir, Coleraine (Mr. W. F. Crofts), Ballymena Mixed-Voice Choir (Rev. J. R. Clinton), and Ballymena Methodist Church (Rev. J. R. Clinton).

TEESDALE.—The first Teesdale Musical Tournament was held in the Waltham Hall, Barnard Castle, on May 25. A long day was occupied with fifteen classes and a concert of prize-winners. The attendance of the public was good, especially at the concert. The high standard of the junior singing pointed to excellent work in the rural schools. Barnard Castle C. E. Girls' School Choir, Barnard Castle Council School, and Middleton Council School (boys) carried off the prizes. Senior choirs sang German's 'My bonnie lass she smileth,' North Eastern County School Choir proving the best. There were also classes for vocal and instrumental solos. Mr. T. Henderson adjudicated.

LINLITHGOW.—A day of competitions for children's choirs was held at Linlithgow on May 18, with Dr. R. Vaughan Williams as adjudicator. Prizes were won by Bridgend and Kingscavil and the first Linlithgow Company of Girl Guide Choirs, and in the evening a concert was given with an excellent programme. This was the first venture of the Linlithgow Committee. It is to be hoped that the neighbourhood will give improved support in the future, and that competitions for adult choirs may be included.

BYWELL-ON-TYNE.—The list of events at the second Broomley and Bywell School Children's Gala and Sports day held on Whit-Monday included a choral contest judged by Mr. George Dodds. Seven choirs competed, the result being as follows: 1st, Birtley P.M. Choir; 2nd, Gateshead N.E.R. Temperance; 3rd, Haltwhistle Vocal Union. The choice of tests was left to the choirs, the winners offering Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music.'

In aid of the Wallasey War Memorial Fund a competition musical festival on a rather ambitious scale will be held on Saturday, September 4. Prizes are offered for mixed-voice, male-voice, and ladies' choirs, as well as church and chapel choirs, and vocal quartets. Already the entrants include choirs from Northern and Midland towns. Particulars can be obtained from Mr. C. E. Cowley, 44, Canterbury Road, Wallasey.

The twenty-third 'Summerscales' Musical Competitions will be held at Keighley on October 30 and November 6, the adjudicators being Dr. E. C. Bairstow and Mr. Herbert Johnson. The secretary is Mr. Holmes Feather, 18, Hainworth Wood Road, Keighley.

Other competitions are reported in the School Music Review edition of the Record.

You shall go out with joy

COMPOSED BY

OLIVER KING.

953. A charge to keep I have ... King	3a	324. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts	4d	909. Come and let us ... A. Hollins	3d
884. A crown of grace for man Brahms	4d.	587. Behold My servant ... J. F. Bridge	3d.	52. Come, and let us return ... J. Goss	3d
478. A few more years shall roll H. Blair	3d.	65. Behold now, praise ... J. B. Calkin	3d.	905. Ditto ... W. Jackson	3d
597. A prayer for peace ... Crotch	3d.	631. Ditto ... F. Iliffe	3d.	85. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann	4d
801. A solemn prayer ... A. H. Brewer	2d.	912. Ditto ... John E. West	3d.	283. Come, Holy Ghost ... G. Elvey	4d
935. A song of joy ... John E. West	3d.	315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird	4d.	201. Ditto ... J. L. Hutton	4d.
917. Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins	3d.	524. Behold, the days come Woodward	4d.	829. Ditto ... Palestrina	2d.
424. Ditto ... R. Dunstan	4d.	1045. Behold the Heaven ... A. R. Gaul	3d.	717. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams	2d.
805. Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann	4d.	502. Behold the Name ... Percy Pitt	4d.	881. Come, let us join our ... E. V. Hall	3d.
927. All go unto one place ... Wesley	3d.	938. Behold, two blind men ... J. Stainer	3d.	293. Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin	4d.
247. All nations whom B. Luard-Selby	4d.	502. Bethlehem ... Ch. Gounod	1d.	314. Comenow, and let us H. W. Wareing	4d.
113. All they that trust ... Hiller	8d.	378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston	4d.	1. Come unto Him ... Gounod	2d.
1033. All Thy works ... T. Adams	3d.	796. Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing	3d.	946. Ditto ... H. Leslie	3d.
475. Ditto ... J. Barnby	4d.	855. Bless the Lord thy God Roberts	3d.	256. Come unto Me ... H. R. Coudrey	3d.
503. Ditto ... G. H. Ely	4d.	450. Bless thou the Lord ... C. Bayley	4d.	635. Ditto ... G. J. Elvey	3d.
30. Ditto ... E. H. Thorne	3d.	374. Ditto ... Oliver King	3d.	103. Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer	3d
719. All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs	3d.	693. Blessed are the dead ... B. L. Selby	2d.	922. Come with high and holy Blair	3d.
9. All ye who weep ... Gounod	3d.	667. Blessed are the pure ... A. D. Arnott	3d.	1005. Come ye, and let us Macfarren	3d.
592. Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams	3d.	390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson	3d.	748. Come, ye children and J. Booth	3d.
729. Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris	3d.	616. Ditto ... H. Blair	3d.	924. Ditto ... H. J. King	3d.
548. Almighty Father ... B. Steane	3d.	77. Ditto ... W. H. Monk	3d.	334. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall	3d.
937. Almighty God, give us Wesley	3d.	112. Ditto ... Arthur Page	3d.	921. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain ...	3d.
261. And all the people saw J. Stainer	6d.	15. Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley	2d.	1019. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button	3d.
699. And God shall wipe Greenish	3d.	756. Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby	3d.	951. Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer	2d.
1055. And in that day F. R. Rickman	3d.	570. Ditto ... J. F. Bridge	6d.	931. Come, ye thankful ... B. Steane	3d.
229. And it was the third hour Elvey	4d.	895. Ditto ... O. Gibbons	2d.	914. Comes at times Woodward	3d.
485. And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer	6d.	876. Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.	1008. Ditto ... H. Oakeley	2d.
658. And Jesus entered H. W. Davies	4d.	183. Ditto ... Heap	6d.	994. Coronation Offertorium Elgar	2d.
732. And suddenly there came H. J. Wood	3d.	770. Ditto ... Markham Lee	3d.	622. Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry	3d.
675. And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson	3d.	331. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams	4d.	688. Crown Him the B. Luard-Selby	2d.
357. And the wall of the city Oliver King	3d.	1006. Blessed be the Name Macfarren	3d.	356. Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King	3d.
778. And there shall be signs Naylor	4d.	724. Blessed be Thou ... E. C. Bairstow	4d.	449. Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge	3d.
402. And when the day ... C. W. Smith	3d.	833. Ditto ... J. Kent	4d.	213. Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart	2d.
861. Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky	2d.	400. Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher	4d.	682. Day of wrath ... J. Stainer	6d.
642. Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall	3d.	284. Blessed is He ... F. E. Gladstone	2d.	252. Death and life ... Walter Parratt	3d.
611. Angels from the realms Cowen	3d.	262. Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd	8d.	968. Death is swallowed up in Hollins	3d.
749. Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher	3d.	292. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie	4d.	849. Deliver us, O Lord Gibbons	3d.
751. Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.	206. Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfield	3d.	90. Distracted with care ... Haydn	4d.
1017. Arise, shine ... T. Adams	3d.	64. Ditto ... John Goss	4d.	857. Do not I fill heaven ... H. Blair	3d.
923. Ditto ... G. F. Cobb	4d.	769. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing	3d.	737. Doth not wisdom cry D. S. Smith	3d.
228. Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd	6d.	1004. Blessed is the soul (S.B.) Macfarren	3d.	703. Drop down, ye heavens Stainer	4d.
948. As Christ was raised Wareing	3d.	286. Blessed Jesu (Stabat Mater) Dvorak	6d.	277. Enter not into Judgment Clarke	2d.
311. As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp	3d.	943. Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley	2d.	352. Eternal source ... F. Brandeis	2d.
333. As it began to dawn Ch. Vincent	3d.	5. Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours	3d.	1008. Evening and Morning Oakeley	2d.
498. As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow	3d.	950. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer	3d.	854. Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot Button	3d.
643. As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer	3d.	632. Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe	3d.	764. Except the Lord build Edwards	3d.
24. As the hart pants (S.S.T.B.) Gounod	4d.	97. Blow ye the trumpet Henry Leslie	3d.	771. Ditto ... Eaton Fanning	4d.
147. Ascribe unto the Lord Travers	6d.	961. Born to-day ... J. P. Sweelinck	3d.	628. Ditto ... H. Gadsby	4d.
109. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	4d.	118. Bow Thine ear ... W. Bird	3d.	470. Eye hath not seen (S.A.) Foster	3d.
399. At the Lamb's High E. V. Hall	3d.	939. Bread of Heaven ... E. German	3d.	584. Ditto (S.A.T.B.) M. B. Foster	3d.
456. At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing	3d.	1024. Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock	3d.	625. Far be sorrow ... E. V. Hall	3d.
957. Author of Life Divine Button	2d.	774. Ditto ... H. E. Button	3d.	672. Far from the world H. W. Parker	3d.
660. Awake, awake ... John E. West	3d.	415. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor	3d.	329. Far from their home Woodward	3d.
700. Awake, awake, put on Greenish	3d.	798. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews	3d.	364. Father, hear the prayer F. Brandeis	2d.
56. Ditto ... J. Stainer	6d.	92. Ditto ... R. Prentice	6d.	763. Father, now Thy grace W. Coenen	3d.
759. Ditto ... Stephenson	4d.	491. Ditto ... B. Steane	3d.	46. Father of Heaven Walmisley	3d.
149. Ditto ... M. Wise	4d.	323. Brightest and best ... E. V. Hall	3d.	384. Father of Life ... S. J. Gilbert	3d.
955. Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester	3d.	340. Bring unto the Lord Gladstone	3d.	768. Father of mercies ... E. V. Hall	3d.
199. Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer	6d.	98. Brother, thou art gone T. Goss	2d.	1065. Ditto ... S. P. Waddington	3d.
159. Awake up, my glory M. Wise	3d.	279. By Babylon's wave Gounod	2d.	671. Ditto ... John E. West	3d.
744. Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster	3d.	197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson	4d.	1050. Fear not, O land ... E. Elgar	3d.
578. Ditto ... B. Steane	3d.	121. By the waters of Babylon Boyce	4d.	26. Ditto ... John Goss	3d.
212. Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart	4d.	644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor	3d.	18. Ditto ... W. Jordan	3d.
989. Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins	3d.	511. Ditto ... H. Clarke	3d.	872. Fear Thou not, for I am J. Booth	1d.
143. Be merciful ... H. Purcell	6d.	853. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs	4d.	446. Flee from evil ... W. J. Clarke	3d.
257. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham	3d.	742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorak	4d.	553. For a small moment J. Stainer	2d.
597. Be peace on earth ... Crotch	3d.	116. Call to remembrance J. Battishill	3d.	198. For ever blessed Mendelssohn	3d.
567. Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley	3d.	952. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts	3d.	901. For this mortal ... S. S. Wesley	3d.
583. Beye all of one mind A. E. Godfrey	3d.	680. Calm on the list'n'ing ear Parker	3d.	728. Forsake me not ... J. Goss	4d.
471. Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker	3d.	841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams	3d.	273. From the deep I called ... Spohr	6d.
440. Before the heavens H. W. Parker	3d.	975. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley	3d.	227. Give ear, O Lord T. M. Pattison	2d.
651. Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley	4d.	497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor	3d.	433. Give ear, O Shepherd A. Whiting	3d.
598. Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor	4d.	454. Christ is risen ... G. B. J. Aitken	6d.	88. Give ear, O ye heavens Armes	3d.
865. Behold, God is my John E. West	3d.	368. Ditto ... J. M. Crament	3d.	956. Ditto ... W. G. Alcock	3d.
636. Ditto ... F. C. Woods	3d.	666. Ditto ... W. Jordan	4d.	604. Give thanks, O Israel Ouseley	4d.
1035. Behold, how good J. Battishill	3d.	533. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts	3d.	741. Give the King thy W. G. Alcock	6d.
349. Ditto ... (Male) Caldicott	3d.	814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham	3d.	990. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer	3d.
349.* Ditto ... (S.A.T.B.) Caldicott	3d.	307. Christ our Passover E. V. Hall	3d.	309. Give the Lord ... C. H. Lloyd	8d.
419. Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke	3d.	783. Christ the Lord is risen again ...	4d.	383. Give unto the Lord H. W. Parker	4d.
89. Behold, I bring you J. Barnby	3d.	370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day ...	3d.	933. Glorious and powerful God Gibbons	3d.
148. Ditto ... J. Maude Crament	3d.	488. Christians, awake ... J. Barnby	3d.	1039. Glorious in Heaven Vittoria	3d.
296. Ditto ... E. V. Hall	3d.	648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs	4d.	2. Glory be to God ... S. S. Wesley	2d.
810. Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins	2d.	983. Christmas Day ... G. von Holst	4d.	779. Glory to God in the E. M. Lee	3d.
713. Behold, I have given you C. Harris	3d.	445. Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley	3d.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY

FULL ANTHEM FOR HARVEST

COMPOSED BY

Isaiah lv. 12; xxxii. 20; i. 19;
Psalm cv. 2; S. John iv. 35.

OLIVER KING.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro. ♩ = 120.

The first system of the piano introduction and accompaniment. It consists of two staves, treble and bass, in the key of D major (two sharps) and 4/4 time. The tempo is marked 'Allegro' with a quarter note equal to 120 beats. The music features a rhythmic pattern of eighth and sixteenth notes in the right hand, and a more melodic line in the left hand. The first system ends with a 'Ped.' (pedal) marking.

The second system of the anthem, featuring vocal parts and piano accompaniment. It includes staves for Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass, each with the lyrics 'Ye shall go out with joy, . . . with joy, . . .'. The piano accompaniment continues below the vocal staves. The key signature remains D major (two sharps). The piano part features a melodic line in the right hand and a harmonic line in the left hand. The system concludes with a final piano accompaniment line.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY.

ye shall go out with joy, and be led . . forth with peace : the out with joy, . . and be led . . forth with peace : the out . . . with joy, and be led forth with peace : the out . . . with joy, . . and be led forth with peace : the dim. mf dim. mf dim. mf dim. mf

Ped.

moun-tains and hills shall break forth be-fore you in-to sing-ing, the moun - - - tains and . . hills, the moun - tains and hills shall break forth in-to sing-ing, the moun - - - tains and hills, . . the . .

moun - - tains and hills shall break forth in-to sing-ing, . .
 moun - - tains and hills shall break forth . . in-to moun - - tains and hills shall break forth, shall break forth in-to moun - - tains and hills shall break forth, shall break forth in-to

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY.

First system of the musical score. It consists of four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a grand piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#) and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics for the vocal parts are: "shall break forth . . . be - fore you in - to sing - ing, shall break forth be - fore you in - to sing". The piano accompaniment features a steady eighth-note pattern in the right hand and a more complex, syncopated pattern in the left hand.

Second system of the musical score. It continues the vocal and piano parts from the first system. The lyrics for the vocal parts are: "ing. O bless - ed, bless - ed are ye that sow. O . . .". The piano accompaniment continues with its characteristic rhythmic patterns, providing harmonic support for the vocal lines.

Third system of the musical score. It concludes the piece. The lyrics for the vocal parts are: "are ye that sow be - side . . . all wa - ters. that . . . sow be - side all wa - ters. If ye be bless - ed are ye . . . that sow be - side all wa - ters." The piano accompaniment ends with a final chord and a pedaling instruction. The key signature remains one sharp (F#).

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY.

If ye be will - - ing,
 If ye be will - - ing, if ye be will - - ing will - - ing, if ye be will - - ing
 If ye be senza Ped. Ped.

ye . . . shall eat . . . the good of the land; for and . . . o - be - dient, ye shall eat . . . the good of the land; for and . . . o - be - dient, ye shall eat . . . the good of the land; for will - ing, ye shall eat . . . the good of the land; for f (Reeds.)

senza Ped.

I am the Lord thy God, for I am the Lord thy God.

I am the Lord thy God, for I am the Lord thy God.

I am the Lord thy God, for I am the Lord thy God.

I am the Lord thy God, for I am the Lord thy God.

(5) Ped.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY.

Ye shall go out with joy, . . . with joy, . . .

Ye shall go out with joy, . . . with joy, . . .

Ye shall go out with joy, . . . with joy, . . .

Ye shall go out with joy, . . . with joy, . . .

Ped.

ye shall go out with joy, and be led . . . forth, led forth . . . with out with joy, . . . and be led . . . forth, led forth . . . with out . . . with joy, and be led forth, led forth with out . . . with joy, . . . and be led . . . forth . . . with

Ped.

Più allegro.

peace. O let your songs be of Him and praise . . . Him,

peace. O let your songs be of Him and praise . . . Him, peace. O let your songs be of Him and praise Him, praise . . . Him, peace. O let your songs be of Him and praise Him, praise . . . Him, Più allegro.

senza Org.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY.

be of Him, and praise Him, and let your talk - ing

be of Him, and praise Him, and let your talk - ing be of Him, and praise Him, and let your talk - ing be be of Him, and praise Him, and let your talk - ing

sempre senza Org.

be of all His won - drous, won - drous be of all His won - drous works, of all His won - drous works, of all His won - drous be of all His won - drous works, of all His works, of all His won - drous works. Lift up your of all His won - drous works. Lift up your works, His won - drous works. Lift up your works, of all His won - drous works. Lift up your

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY.

eyes, . . . lift up your eyes, . . . and . . look up-on the eyes, . . . lift up your eyes, . . . and . . look up-on the eyes, . . . lift up your eyes, . . . and . . look up-on the eyes, . . . lift up your eyes, . . . and . . look up-on the fields, for they . . are white al - rea - dy to har - vest. . .

fields, for they . . are white al - rea - dy to har - vest. . .

fields, for they . . are white al - rea - dy to har - vest. . .

fields, for they are white al - rea - dy to har - vest. . .

* The Baritones to sing the small notes.

Also published in Novello's Tonic Sol-fa Series, No. 2124.

sleep, a - sleep with lul - la - bies, . . a - sleep with sung a - sleep . . with lul - la - bies, a - sleep . . with sleep with lul - - - la - bies, . . with lul - - - lies, Sung a - sleep . . with lul - la - bies, a -

dim. al pp Poco più mosso.
 lul - la - bies, . . lul - la - bies;
 lul - la - bies, . . with lul - la - bies;
 la - bies, with lul - la - bies; . . Pray be sleep . . with lul - la - bies; Poco più mosso.
dim. al pp p

p Pray be si - lent, pray be si - lent,
p Be si - lent, be si - lent,
p si - lent, pray be si - lent,
p Si - - - lent, si - - - lent,

poco più f

and not stir, . . not stir . . The ea - sy earth, not

poco più f

and not stir The ea - - sy earth, the

poco più f

and not stir The ea - - sy earth, the

poco più f

and not stir, . . not stir . . The ea - sy

poco più f

cres.

stir . . The ea - sy earth . . that cov - - ers her:

cres.

ea - - sy earth that cov - - ers her: . .

cres.

ea - - sy earth : . that cov - - ers her: p Pray be

cres.

earth, not stir . . The earth that cov - - ers her: . .

cres.

p

Pray be si - - lent, be si - lent, be si - lent.

Pray . . be si - lent, be si - lent.

si - lent, be si - - - lent, be si - lent, be si - lent.

Pray be si - lent, be si - lent, be si - lent.

morendo.

morendo.

morendo.

morendo.

morendo.

Tempo 1mo.
mp

Here, . . . here . . . a pret - ty ba - by

p

Here, . . . here a pret - - - ty . . .

p

Here, . . . here a pret - - - ty . . .

p

Here . . . a pret - - ty ba - - - by

Tempo 1mo.

lies, ... Sung a - sleep, a - ba - - by lies, ... Sung a - sleep, . . .

ba - - by lies, ... Sung a - lies, ... Sung a - sleep, a -

pp

. . . sleep with lul - - - - - la - bies.

. a - sleep with lul - - - - - la - - bies.

. . . sleep, ... a - sleep with lul - la - bies.

. . . sleep with lul - - - - - la - bies.

poco. ppp

(Continued from page 466.)

of the Conference (reported in the Competition Festival Record this month) was one of solidarity. It was a gathering of secretaries, presidents, and adjudicators from all parts of the country, and while many issues were raised the discussions moved on converging lines to the one general idea of co-operation. It was this which gave importance to the meeting, for what the competition movement has hitherto lacked is the sense of partnership between the various festivals. There have been feelings of rivalry and isolation, too much attachment to local practices and individual tastes, and some reluctance to learn from general experience. If the Association of Music Competition Festivals went no further than correcting these tendencies it would be doing extremely useful work, for as most musicians are now dimly aware, the competition movement is to-day a strong and active teaching force.

The Norwegian Choir was a body of about fifty gentlemen of University connections known as Guldberg's Academic Choir, and its programme represented choral writing by Grieg, Svendsen, Selmer, Reissiger, Kjerulf, and others. The music was, however, less interesting than the singing. Choirs from abroad usually show some quality of virtuosity that marks them off as belonging to the 'Continental school,' and challenges a comparison of ideals with the English school. The Ukrainians, early in the year, were a case in point. Guldberg's Choir, however, set no store on virtuosity for its own sake, and used technical power only as a means to an end. There were thrills enough—the never-failing thrill of a simple passage sung with perfect chording, good tone well-blended, a feeling of the phrase and unity in every element of the phrase: the type of effect with which, in the long run, the best English choirs make their deepest appeal. M. Ansgar Guldberg and his singers gave a long programme, and a great deal of pleasure. The visit of the Newport Choir is dealt with by Mr. Kalisch.

The Philharmonic Choir crowned a season of notable achievement on June 2, with a concert at Queen's Hall that summed up the best things in a short and brilliant record. By repeating Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus' and Delius's 'Song of the high hills,' the Choir did a service for which many were grateful. Both are works that do not reveal themselves quickly. However striking and obvious their immediate effect at the first hearing, one was then really learning how to listen to them at the next opportunity. When that opportunity occurred one's admiration grew for the broad musical gestures and easy grandiloquence of the 'Hymn' and the marvellous colouring of Delius's tone-picture. The Choir then completed its season's work with the Choral Symphony. The orchestra was that of the Royal Philharmonic Society, with Mr. Albert Coates in charge. The 'Hymn of Jesus' was conducted by its composer. Mr. C. Kennedy Scott did not share much of the limelight, but no one needed to be reminded that the occasion was his celebration as much as anybody's. It remains to mention the solo singers. In the Choral Symphony these were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Cecil Fanning, and the solo passages in the 'Song of the high hills' were taken by Miss Maud Wilby and Mr. Eustace Belham.

MAIDSTONE.—An excellent concert was given on May 17 by the Maidstone Choral Union, a capable body of singers trained by Mr. F. Wilson Parish. The programme consisted of chamber and choral music, the one supplied by Miss d'Aranyi (violinist), Miss Myra Hess (pianist), and Captain Herbert Heyner (vocalist), and the other including Elgar's 'How calmly the evening' and 'It's oh! to be a wild wind,' Lee Williams's 'Song of the pedlar,' Parry's 'Tell me, O love,' two of Colin Taylor's female-voice trios, and a 'Dance of the sword' by H. Priestley-Smith. The Choral Union Competitive Choir gave Wilbye's 'Sweet honey-sucking bees' and 'My love dwelt in a northern land.'

MILL HILL.—The Musical Society, supported by the newly-formed Mill Hill Orchestral Society, gave R. H. Walthew's setting of 'The Piper of Hamelin' recently, under the direction of Mr. L. A. Cane. The choir showed unusual capacity, and sang with well-studied expression and spirit. Other works in the same programme were Sullivan's 'Fair Daffodils,' Elgar's 'As torrents in summer,' Callcott's 'Love wakes and weeps,' Leslie's 'Lullaby of life,' and, for the orchestra, Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody' and Grainger's 'Mock Morris.'

PORTSMOUTH.—Berlioz's 'Faust' and Bach's Mass in B minor are to be given next season by the Borough of Portsmouth Philharmonic Society, in the course of a series of five concerts. The conductor is Mr. Hugh A. Burry.

SEATTLE (U.S.A.).—We have received the programme of a concert given at Meany Hall, University of Washington, by the Amphion Society of Seattle, a male-voice choir conducted by Mr. Claude Madden. It includes Brewer's 'Alexander' and Reissiger's 'Olaf Trygvason.'

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Gentleman, higher public school teacher, wishes to join any London band as violinist (amateur).—A. FROSTIG, 12, Essex Road, Acton, W.3.

Thoroughly experienced Viola player (lady) would give services in orchestra and chamber music concerts, &c., for expenses.—'Viola,' c/o Musical Times.

Experienced pianist desires to meet competent violinist, 'cellist, and viola player (preferably G.E.R. season-ticket holders) for study and enjoyment of classical quartets. Broxbourne and Bishops Stortford district.—H. G. B., c/o Musical Times.

Quintet party want practice-room containing a good piano, in a private house, hall, or school, within two miles of G.P.O., for use once a week (not Saturday or Sunday) from 5-8 p.m. In return free recitals would be given.—B. B. H. W., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to join chamber music party. Most evenings free.—Miss D. E. L. TREVOR, c/o 'The Homestead,' Rawlings Road, Bearwood, Smethwick, near Birmingham.

Young lady pianist desires to join trio or quartet for practice of good music.—V., 108, Norbury Crescent Norbury, S.W.

Violinist (amateur) required to complete trio for chamber music practice.—Apply to Mr. C. W. SCOTT, B.A., 2, Buxton Road, Thornton Heath; or to Mr. A. WEBEL, 133, Langdale Road, Thornton Heath.

Violinist and 'cellist (male), good sight-readers, wanted to join flautist and pianist in weekly practice. Good-class miscellaneous music. Fine practice room and all music found. Muswell Hill district.—F. H., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist desires to join quartet, violinist and 'cellist. Good music.—GEORGE DAY, 10, Little Oak Road, Aston, Birmingham.

Birmingham amateur orchestra requires deputy leading violin and 'cello. Also oboe and horn. Central practices, Fridays.—Apply to Secretary, Stafford House, The Retreat, Aston Manor, Birmingham.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist. Classical and modern music. Margate and Cliftonville district. Most evenings free.—'Allandale,' c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist desires to meet other players, or good singer. Sheffield and Rotherham district.—'Pianist,' c/o Musical Times.

Ladies and gentlemen, all instruments, with good orchestral experience, are invited to attend the Symphony rehearsals held on Tuesdays at 7.45 at the Philological College, 248, Marylebone Road, N.W. 1 (near Great Central Station).

BRITISH HISTORY AND BRITISH MUSIC

BY HERBERT ANTCLIFFE

It is seldom realised how closely bound up together are the history of a nation and its art, and particularly its music. One reason why this is so is that too often the history of a nation is regarded as that of its politics; instead of which the political history of a country is only a small part, and not always the most important part, of its complete history. In spite of 'Tipperary' and its predecessors and successors, however, even the political history of England, from the earliest days down to the present time, has had a close affinity with its music. The British people have never been a musical nation in the same way as have the Italians and the Germans; nevertheless, they have been saturated with and have exuded music at all periods.

Even in the remote ages of the Roman invasion, the then possessors of the land, some of whose blood is in the veins of many Englishmen to-day, found the effect of music a powerful one in their wars as well as in times of peace. The battle cries with which they met the armies of Julius Cæsar were mingled with songs—fierce and terrible, perhaps, but songs none the less. More than this, however, their music was an art of peace and peacemaking. Diodorus the Sicilian, the Greek historian, says they had their bards who 'celebrated the noble actions of illustrious persons in heroic poems, which they sang to the sweet song of the lyre'; and that after two armies had actually placed themselves in fighting order 'the poets have stepped in, and by their soft and fascinating songs calmed the fury of the warriors, and prevented the bloodshed.'

How essential was music to the life and well-being of the Ancient Britons may be gathered from the song of the British bard on the burning of Uriconium or Wrekin. This was in the year 583, when the Saxons sacked 'the white town of the valley,' so that it was 'without fire, without light, without songs.'

With the coming of the Saxons, and later with the advent of Christianity, we have still further evidence of the influence of music. Of course we are at a great disadvantage in studying these periods, when it would appear that music took a more vital position in the life of the people than it has done in the long centuries following. It is recorded that certain people were skilled in the art, that the common people had their songs, that the liturgy was chanted to solemn strains. In many cases we have the words of these songs and hymns; but we have to depend upon the traditions of a later age to know the character of the music. Musical notation was not invented till long afterwards, so that while tradition and literature combined in the preservation of the poems, tradition alone could help to preserve for posterity the melodies to which they were sung.

Of the direct use of music, though bearing but little on the progress of history, we have records of the litanies sung by St. Augustine and his companions on the road to Canterbury, and of the fear inspired in the Picts by the songs of the newly-baptised Saxons on Hadrian's Wall. Caedmon, the earliest English poet in the literary sense, shows, in his shame at being unable to play the harp, how general was musical instinct and ability. The Venerable Bede, as a cultured man and priest, counted among the accomplishments which raised him above his fellows that of being 'skilful in Ecclesiastical chant,' which he had learnt from a cantor of Benedict Biscop. An inference may be drawn from the last of these cases that music was not such a common gift as has been suggested; but as a matter of fact there was in those days, as now, a difference between the music of the Church and that of the household, the former being of a more severe and classical style. Therefore it was in this that the monk-historian showed his superiority over the common people.

The skill of Alfred the Great is the subject of stories more or less legendary. Certain it is, however, that 'in moments of gloom he found comfort in the music of the Psalms,' and that he learned the 'old songs of his race' and had them taught in the school which he founded and attached to his Court. Of this period generally Jeudwine says that:

Music takes a prominent place in Church and Hall, though the instruments were crude, and both melody and harmonies rough and coarse to our ears. The chief instrument was the harp for secular use, and for Church use a very primitive organ. Except in a few instances the harp rarely had more than ten strings, and was therefore incapable of modulation beyond a flattened fourth and a raised seventh [he obviously means a flattened seventh and a raised fourth]. The Irish and Welsh were noted for their skill on the harp from the earliest times; in Wessex we have reference to its use in the story of Aldhelm, the Saxon Bishop of Malmesbury, who used to stand on the bridge in a place of public resort and sing to his harp, to religious words, tunes set to frivolous lay songs. Such songs, we are told, were sung two hundred years after his time.

Sincere musicians, and particularly those who hold strict views as to the style of music which should be used for religious purposes, may regret the last feature of the worthy Bishop's methods. Possibly he may have retarded the progress of the best kind of Church music. Whether he did so or not is a question both of research and of opinion, and is one which might readily lead to fuller knowledge of the life of the people of that period.

Remembering how close was the intimacy in these primitive times between social, religious, and political life, it is hardly likely that continual use of the art in the two former failed to affect the latter. The saintly Dunstan, who became Archbishop of Canterbury, also knew something of the traditional music of his time. In the hall of his father, Heorstan, he learnt to love 'the vain songs of ancient heathendom, the trifling legends, the funeral chants.' As a Christian he applied this knowledge of music to the practice of his new religion, and to the relief of the monotony and weariness of life. Without the solace of his harp he had been less fitted for the troublous life which fell to his lot. He was also one of the earliest of English organ-builders, and did something for the development of that instrument.

A royal musician who counts for much in romance, if not in history or art, is Canute. Unfortunately we have to leave him with this reference, for it is difficult to find any reliable record of the effect of his art on the history of his reign.

The social use of music, its use to beguile the hours of leisure and to recount the stories of romance and courage, was at its height in the reign of Edward the Confessor. Then, we are told, 'Gleemen sang in manlier tones of the long peace and glories of his reign.' And they did not sing without there being music, even though that music might sound to us even more crude than does their verse.

Just as the Roman invasion was marked by music at its first battle so was that of the Normans. It had this difference, however, that the music in the first instance was merely the war-song of a crowd of undisciplined fighters, while in the second instance it was the art-music of an accomplished minstrel, telling the tale of former heroic days. It is possible to conceive that the song of Taillefer the Minstrel, who sang the Song of Roland as he led the van of William's army, had less effect than that of the distressed Britons whose shores were being invaded by the all-conquering Roman legions. But both had the same objects in view: first that of inspiring the army to which the singers were attached, and, secondly, that of causing dismay in the ranks of their enemies. That their methods were entirely different is a matter of interest, though not of the greatest importance. By his cool bravado Taillefer undoubtedly intended to strike awe in the Saxons, just as the Britons wished to dismay the Romans with their terrible chants. This twofold purpose of martial music dates back a long way in the world's history, and we can reckon the method of Taillefer as its final development, which ceased with the growth of civilisation, except in one or two isolated cases.

With the Angevins the interest is chiefly a personal one. Fulk the Good, a Duke of Anjou and Normandy, was a Church chorister, while Bertrand de Born, a leader in several revolts against the ruling power of the 12th century, was a troubadour. Bertrand fought at different times both for and against Richard Cœur de Lion at the time when Richard was Duke of Aquitaine, and, though it fits in nicely with a common and cheap sneer against musicians, we have to admit that he was regarded by Henry II. as the one who more than any other was likely to bring discord into that king's family.

It was the reign of Richard I. that is reputed to have been most influenced by a single significant musical incident. Whether the story of Blondel be apocryphal or true, it at least points to a condition of affairs in which music and musicians played no unimportant part.

Almost parallel with this period we have the remarkable instances of the relation of music to the national life of Wales to which J. R. Green's 'Short history of the English people' draws attention. 'At the hour of its lowest degradation,' runs Green's narrative:

The silence of Wales was suddenly broken by a crowd of singers. The song of the 12th century burst forth, not from one bard or another, but from the nation at large. 'In every house,' says the shrewd Gerald du Barri, 'strangers who arrived in the morning were entertained till eventide with the talk of maidens and the music of the harp.' Then [continues Mr. Green] side by side with this wayward fanciful stream of poesy and romance ran a torrent of intenser song. The old spirit of the bards, their joy in battle, their love for freedom, their hatred of the Saxon, broke out in ode after ode, in songs extravagant, monotonous, often prosaic, but fused into poetry by the intense fire of patriotism which glowed within them.

If we allow the fullest recognition of the fact that the historian would have in mind the idea of poetry rather than of music, we cannot get away from the certainty that the two were inseparable at the period and among the people that he is discussing.

A century or less than a century later we get to a very definite event in the history of British music. This is the composition of that remarkable piece of music which even to-day is sung and listened to with no small degree of enjoyment, 'Sumer is i-cumen in.' The isolation of this work from all others of a similar character, through its anticipation of them by a period of a hundred years or more, makes its existence a difficult problem. It also lessens its historical value. Nevertheless, we can see how its construction coincides with a period which may well have given rise to works of a high artistic and intellectual character in all branches of art and philosophy. 'It was the time of a great religious revival which saw the establishment of the Mendicant Friars, whose two chief orders, the Dominicans and Franciscans, came to England in 1221 and 1224. It was a time of remarkable intellectual progress, of the growth of the Universities, where flourished many famous scholars, philosophers, and theologians. It was the time when mediæval art attained its highest development in the growth of Gothic architecture'; while in architecture which had as its sole object that of utility, we know that Queen Maud about that time built the first stone bridge in England. Moreover, it was the time when the nation was not only growing rapidly in wealth, but was also finding its unity of national feeling, from which arose that healthy sentiment of emulation of other nations which always results in artistic progress. We can only surmise, though with a fair degree of confidence, that the general rise of the nation in these matters was not without its effect on the art of music. This one example shows that efforts were being made to place music, as other matters, on a right footing. The one work was probably an accident, but it was not an accident without cause.

International relations were not unaffected by song, and certainly song was not unaffected by international relations. The emulation of other nations, to which reference has already been made, is shown even in so matter-of-fact a document as the Chronicles of Froissart. Here Edward III. is described as sitting on the deck as he sailed to meet the Spanish Fleet, and calling on Sir John Chandos 'to troll out the songs he had brought with him from Germany.' This was the beginning, also, of the great literary period of England, when the language was coming into its own, and Langland was followed by Chaucer, who in turn had his great pupil, Edmund Spenser. It was also the beginning of great things in music. By their singing the Lollards won and maintained for some time a position which their less musical opponents were losing. The people sang songs, both religious and secular, and in the houses of the wealthy the minstrels were preparing the way for more formal and artistic methods.

The combination of folk-song and art-song (using the latter term in its broader and more general sense) is early seen in the two- and three-part harmonization of 'The Agincourt Song' ('Dei gratias Anglia'). One great reason for the historical interest of this song is that it is not only contemporary with the event it commemorates, but was an evasion of the King's orders as to what should or should not be sung.

As the late Dr. Cummings said in his lecture on 'Our English Songs,' the author and arranger of the music 'was mindful of the orders of the King, Henry V., who, on his return to London after the victory, made it known that he desired no song in praise of himself as victor, for he would have the praise and thanks altogether given to God.' Shakespeare makes him on the field of victory order 'Non nobis,' and other writers add 'Te Deum.' But, as at other times, the people preferred their own songs, and if they could not praise their hero directly, they did so indirectly, and thus made history alike of their country and their song.

The official record of the day says :

Hoc enim, prudentissimæ constantiæ, Regis nostri, gratificæ caritati conjunctæ, consonum, meditabor . . . in suis mandatis quæ dilexi, ad quæ levavi manus meas, ut in suis justificationibus exercer; quod non solum sibi nec suæ, sed Deo et suæ beatissimæ genetrici, sanctisque Georgio et Edwardo, et omnibus sanctis ejus, ad gloriam victoria ascribatur; et (quod) astantibus in domo Domini, in atrius domus Dei nostri, benedicatur, qui in noctibus hujus vitæ extollunt manus suas in sancta ut Dominum benedicant. (For it is in harmony with the very prudent practice and beneficent charity of our King that I ponder within myself his commands which I have cherished and endeavoured to act upon, in order to live in the performance of his law and justice; so that the glory of victory be ascribed not only to himself or to his soldiers, but to God and His most Blessed Mother, to St. George and St. Edward and all the saints, and that He be praised by all that stand in the house of the Lord, in the courts of the house of our God, and lift up their hands in His sanctuary in the night to bless the Lord.)

This period, and that immediately succeeding it, were notable for the musical relations between England and the Continent: relations as strong as, or stronger than those existing at the beginning of the 20th century.

So far as the direct relation between history and music is concerned, there is little to record of it for some years after this. Music seems to have been a relief from contemporary history, rather than an adjunct to it, as we may judge from the story that on Christmas Day, 1428, during the siege of Orleans, Captain Glasford, one of the English leaders, borrowed a band of musicians from the enemy to play carols during the truce.

Much of the Tudor period was barren of spontaneous and lasting music, because it was a period of artificiality and compromise. The desire for compromise, the avoidance of all unpleasant effects, could not have any effect on the art of the period except that of stifling its natural expression, and preventing any force or passion appearing in it. The music of the period was largely like the poetry: full of quaint conceits and excellently written passages, but it never burns with its intensity or awes with its depth of feeling. Yet the people really loved music, even if some of the professional musicians were more ubiquitous than was desirable, and were quite worthily classed as rogues and vagabonds. The constant reference one finds in descriptions of the domestic arrangements of the time to Wolsey's many minstrels show that, although the Cardinal-statesman was exceedingly lavish in the way he did things, the minstrels, benefited or peripatetic, played an important part in the life of the period. Their recognition in laws regulating their practice, and their undoubted popularity, show this still more, and it is probable that the 'Merryman and his Maid' were as popular in reality as Gilbert has made them in romance.

The fierce struggles of Mary's reign stirred things up somewhat, and the long reign of Elizabeth, with its strenuous successes, drew forth a stream of melody that, with all its little affectations, is full of real genius and feeling. Sir Charles Stanford has said that 'The Spanish wars and the Armada peril resulted in an equally strong outburst of artistic life in England' as had been the case with the Spanish Inquisition in the Netherlands. 'Tallys, Byrd, Morley, Orlando Gibbons and the Elizabethan madrigalists gave England the right to its title of "a nest of singing birds."'

Music had little or no effect upon the Reformation, though naturally, in matters of sacred music the Reformation had an effect upon the art. Indeed, in England music was scarcely made use of in bringing about the later stages of the Reformation, greatly as it had assisted in Germany in this enterprise, and also, as has already been mentioned, in the work of the Lollards in our country. The extraordinary affection of her subjects for Queen Elizabeth, however, caused some little development of musical taste, for she was not only an able musician herself, but also a great patron of music. Also there is little doubt that music contributed to the building up of this affection, partly by her direct patronage of the art and the homage paid to her in such works as that great collection of madrigals, 'The Triumphs of Oriana,' written in her honour, partly by the political songs of the people. In the social life of the people music abounded, and Court masques were full of it, as were the rougher play and dancing of the lower classes.

Before we see any further influence exercised by music directly on political matters we have to wait till the closing days of the Commonwealth, when such songs as 'When the King enjoys his own again' prepared the way for, or acknowledged the benefits of, the Restoration.

The Stuart period seems to have been rich in political songs, some of which undoubtedly had great influence. The most important and best known of these was 'Lilliburlero,' the music of which was adapted from a melody of Henry Purcell, and the words of which were claimed by the author, Lord Wharton, to have 'sung a deluded Prince out of three kingdoms.'

'Malbrough s'en va-t-en guerre' was improvised on the eve of the Battle of Malplaquet, in which Marlborough captured the town of Mons, though losing more men than his enemy, the French. Songs of this type continued till the early Hanoverian days, when the character of the people and the influence of Handel and other composers made the employment of music less spontaneous and less applicable to current events.

In later times it must be admitted there is little in history that can be traced to any direct connection with music. Luther has been mentioned as having brought about the Reformation in Germany largely through the use of music. Something of the same kind happened with the Methodist revival in England; but though in some respects the former was a political move, the latter most certainly was not. Of the connection between the Catholic Revival and the renaissance of Church music there is also no need to speak, for this equally was in no respects a political movement.

Upon contemporary history perhaps the most important influence exerted by music has been that caused by the number of musicians who gave their lives to crush the tyranny of a nation that once was musical. That there were other influences is now recognised by all in authority, official or otherwise. Government departments, Army officers, the Y.M.C.A. and numerous soldiers' and sailors' aid societies have encouraged the study of music in its more serious, as well as its practice in its less serious, aspects. Its cumulative influence and the reactions of that influence cannot be assessed until the history of our days has become a distant past, and can be viewed with entire detachment.

THE LEAGUE OF ARTS

The Musicians' Company gave a dinner to the founders and some of the members of the League of Arts at Stationers' Hall on June 7. The Lord Mayor, as Master, presided. His Lordship read the following message from the King:

Buckingham Palace.

It has given me, my Lord Mayor, the utmost satisfaction to learn that the ancient Musicians' Company of the City of London is assembled to-night, under your presidency, to take the lead in propagating among the workers of this country a true realisation of the attractive influence of music and art. I welcome with joy this new development as a further proof of the spirit of comradeship that unites all classes of the community, and I wish every success to this praiseworthy movement.

GEORGE R.I.

The object of the meeting that night, continued his Lordship, was to interest the members of the Company in the new effort to take the art of music, and especially the art of vocal music, to the masses of the people. They felt that music should be a more important factor in our national and civic ceremonies. On last Lord Mayor's Day, which rather concerned him, two things that he enjoyed most were the singing outside St. Michael's, Cornhill, of 'England, awake,' by the choir under the conductorship of Dr. Darke; and the singing outside St. Paul's Cathedral by a large choir, of beautiful old English songs under the direction of the League of Arts.

He would have liked to get out of the State coach and listen to the music; but he was due at the Law Courts, and he could not keep the Judges waiting. To his mind, there was no music that touched the heart so much as vocal music. It was all very well to realise that, and to see what should be done; but what stopped them in their desires was the everlasting question of money—or the lack of it. They would all like to do a great deal more, but they had not got the money. Therefore, he was asking for gifts of money, or, in the alternative, for the formation of a guarantee fund, to provide a choir on the occasions of national festivals. They had come there that night to talk about the subject, and to provide the money.

Speeches in support of the proposal to raise a guarantee fund for the League were made also by Mr. W. H. P. Leslie, Prebendary Gough, Mr. Clement Edwards, M.P., the Hon. Herbert Gibbs, and the Lady Mayoress.

As a result the Musicians' Company decided to open a fund in furtherance of the aims of the League.

THE WELSH MUSICAL FESTIVAL

BY GERALD CUMBERLAND

Most of us give Wales credit for being more deeply musical than she really is. We hear many of her best choirs, are profoundly impressed, and conclude that only a nation musical in every fibre of its' being could produce bodies of such fine singers. In a sense such a conclusion is perfectly just: that is to say, Wales is, from the emotional point of view, profoundly musical. Excitable, quick to respond to the easy beauty of flowing melodies, brimming over with fluid emotion, she throws herself into the sea of music with a most admirable abandon. The voice is the readiest instrument, and it is the voice she uses, for one can, after all, get quite useful results from singing after a year's, or even three months' study, whereas all other instruments for the interpretation of music demand a long period of close application. And by means of singing she gives vent to the simple joys and sorrows that assail her: that is to say, she sings, and sings sincerely, from the heart.

But singing from the heart without intellectual control is the practice of barbarians—and, indeed, there is something barbaric, something elemental (or should I say elementary?) in the manner in which these people regard music. Music to them is all gusty emotion tinged with the faint stirrings of imagination; the subtler feelings, the more magnificent heights to which the human soul can aspire, are beyond their ken. In a word, they are without culture and therefore without taste; their imaginations are fired only by the more obvious passions, and their intellects remain outside, or take only an occasional peep within, the courts of music.

These assertions may appear rather sweeping, but their truth may be demonstrated by a close examination of the kind of music that one finds in the homes of Wales. I have been in many Welsh homes in which musical people live, and I have seen there an abundance of songs from the latest revues and vaudevilles, 'religious' songs, fox-trots, crude part-songs by Welsh composers, perhaps a clean, unused copy of Beethoven's Sonatas, a few pianoforte pieces by Chaminade, and so on. But not a note of Elgar, or Wolf, or Strauss, or Debussy, or John Ireland, or, indeed, of any contemporary composer who writes real music. I have found everywhere an incredibly low standard in the playing of instrumental music. Never yet have I come across a really good amateur pianist or violinist, for instrumental music demands study and intellectual effort; moreover, it is not popular. For this and other reasons, Wales has never possessed even a third-rate orchestra. She knows practically nothing of orchestral music—Beethoven's Symphonies are little more than a name; Wagner is a man who wrote the Overture to 'Tannhäuser'; Elgar is recognised as the composer of 'Land of Hope and Glory'; Delius is regarded as a foreigner who somehow or other has crept into British music. And so on. With very few exceptions—and these occur only in the large towns—Wales is given over to a musical emotionalism that inhibits the critical faculty, that swamps the intellect, and that runs to seed in the kind of rough vulgarity that is found in the great bulk of native compositions.

Something of all this has been said over and over again by English critics and musicians during the last ten years. It was said in his genial way by the late Editor of this paper; it was said recently by Prof. Granville Bantock when, at a local Eisteddfod, he refused to adjudicate on a certain competition because of the low standard of the test-pieces; it was said the other day by Prof. Walford Davies. Wales, indeed, is accustomed to being rated and, it must be admitted, she has taken her scoldings with exemplary composure; indeed, in the years immediately before the war there were many signs that she had begun to think of saving her musical soul, and was even taking steps to do so.

During last Whitsuntide, Mr. Cyril Jenkins, who is the moving spirit of the Welsh Musical Festival, temporarily took the matter into his own hands by holding a two days' competition at Mountain Ash and by engaging the London Symphony Orchestra to give two concerts in that town and concerts at Cardiff, Swansea, and Newport. The five days' Festival, organized on a lavish scale, was devoted almost exclusively to contemporary music, and among the British composers represented were Sir Edward Elgar, Granville Bantock, Julius Harrison, Cyril Jenkins, Dr. Vaughan Thomas, Delius, Josef Holbrooke, and Dr. Vaughan Williams, the first five of whom conducted their own works; in addition there was music by Wagner, Rimsky Korsakov, Borodin, Scriabin ('Le Poème d'Extase'), Dukas and others. These composers, familiar enough to every concert-goer in London and in the larger provincial towns of England, are little known in Wales; so novel were they indeed, and so incomprehensible to the only partially educated musicians of Wales were the idioms employed, that one heard on all hands, both from the Press and the public, that adjective of execration—'revolutionary.' What to us is familiar daily food is to Wales the very Leninism of music.

But not all the music proved caviare to the general, for an overwhelming surprise awaited us at Mountain Ash. The huge pavilion there accommodated an audience variously estimated at from 5,000 to 7,000 people, most of whom were of the so-called working classes—miners, engineers, and the like. One would have expected that so novel and hectic a composition as Scriabin's 'Le Poème d'Extase' would leave such a gathering bored and contemptuous; but the exact contrary proved to be the case. Mr. Albert Coates's interpretation whipped his listeners to an enthusiasm that found vent in a physical demonstrativeness such as the Albert and Queen's Halls can never have witnessed: at one point it appeared as though the complete work would have to be played a second time. It was this demonstration that made those of us interested in the musical welfare of Wales feel that we had underestimated the capacity of the working-man in that country to assimilate and understand the more difficult compositions of modern times; and it was this demonstration which indicated that, if orchestral music were supplied with some approach to regularity, Wales would provide the necessary support.

A rather different aspect, however, was presented at Cardiff, where the audience was unaccountably small. Here Sir Edward Elgar conducted his second Symphony. But at Swansea and Newport the success of Mountain Ash was repeated. It was at Newport that Mr. Cyril Jenkins's cantata, 'Freedom,' written for soli, chorus, and orchestra, was given for the first time. I hope I am not prejudiced in Mr. Jenkins's favour because I wrote the libretto of 'Freedom,' but it seems to me that this composition is quite the most satisfactory piece of work that has come from musical Wales for many years. Prof. Granville Bantock, addressing a large audience at Mountain Ash, referred in terms of high praise to Cyril Jenkins's work, and reminded his listeners that it was in that hall, eight years previously, that he had called this composer 'the hope of musical Wales.' His prophetic words, he declared, were already in process of being fulfilled.

The objects of the Welsh Musical Festival—which, it may be said, will henceforth be held annually—are purely educational. In no sense has it been organized to compete with the National Eisteddfod, though it offers that old institution many object-lessons in the kind of music that is chosen for test-pieces. Mr. Jenkins has succeeded in showing South Wales that his native country is sadly behindhand in its musical development, and that if she is to progress she must not only absorb and assimilate the music that is being written elsewhere, but she must, by hook or by crook, form and maintain a first-rate orchestra of her own. No one can doubt that Wales is a little complacent with regard to her musical achievements; she has done wonderful things in choral music, and has been deservedly praised for what she has accomplished; but by insisting on the importance of the orchestra as an essential factor in a healthy musical life, the Welsh Musical Festival has already demonstrated that the attitude of self-approval is no longer tenable. After all, Welsh musicians are not likely to write orchestral compositions if she has no orchestra to play them.

The most striking features of the two days' competition at Mountain Ash were the very high standard of the test-pieces and the detailed criticisms of at least two of the adjudicators—Prof. Granville Bantock and Mr. Samuel Langford. Mr. Langford's short extempore lectures were felt on all hands to be of the utmost educational and æsthetic value, and most of the adjudicators have good reason to know that the competitors regarded the two days' work as an opportunity for obtaining as much information and advice as possible. The winning of prizes at Festivals and Eisteddfodau is of little moment; what matters is the exchange of views, the helpful criticism of competent men, and the spread of the conviction that art should have a place in the lives of all intelligent men and women.

THE END OF THE INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL SOCIETY

BY J. PERCY BAKER

After having been in a state of suspension for nearly six years, the International Musical Society may be said to have come to a peaceful end consequent on the decision of the committee of the English Section to resign its position. It was no doubt inevitable, but at the same time one may be excused a sigh of regret that an undertaking fraught with such possibilities of good to music and opportunities for exchange of thought amongst the musicians of the world should have failed somewhat ingloriously.

At the outset it seemed as if it would carry everything before it, for it started with a well-thought-out constitution, a large number of members, and with ardent enthusiasm. The founder was Dr. Oskar Fleischer, of Berlin, who with the aid of several eminent confrères seems to have modelled the nascent Society on the basis of the imperium in imperio, or, to state it more exactly, on the basis of the constitution of the United States of America, or of the German Empire, in which the constituent sections preserved a certain degree of autonomy while acknowledging fealty to a central authority. The German Empire had five national sections, Austria one, and Hungary one. France had two, and the following countries had one each: the United Kingdom, the United States, Italy, Belgium, Denmark, Holland, Russia, Sweden, Spain, and Switzerland. Each section elected its own president and officers, and was at liberty to form as many local branches under its own ægis as it might think proper, as well as to arrange for meetings, &c.

The governing body of the whole Society consisted of the presidents of these nineteen sections, who elected a general president, a general treasurer, and a general secretary, these last three forming the executive.

The operations of the Society were to be manifested in two main directions: one being the publication of news and articles on matters of musical interest, by means of a 'Monthly Journal' and a 'Quarterly Magazine.' The 'Journal' included, besides various articles, a considerable amount of information about meetings and the current musical life of the world; the 'Magazine' was more solid and learned. German, French, English, and Italian were the officially recognised languages. The social side of the Society was provided for by the holding of Congresses, which were planned to take place every two years, though that arrangement was never rigidly observed. The first Congress was held at Leipsic and the second at Basle, but the function did not attain its full glory until 1909, when Vienna was the scene of a very delightful réunion of members in which the Viennese displayed to the full all that thoughtful politeness characteristic of them. In 1911 the Congress was held in London with great success, although here everything had to be done by private effort without any such State-aid as had been the case in Austria. Next came the Paris Congress in 1914, a brilliant function indeed, the sixth Congress being settled for Berlin in 1916. And then the war broke out in less than two months!

Knowing, as we do know now, that a considerable proportion of influential Germans were fully aware in June, 1914, of the impending conflict, it would seem that either a good many tongues were in their cheeks when Berlin was discussed, or else the belief was entertained that victory would be so speedy and complete as to ensure total forgetfulness by 1916! If so, the mistake was colossal. It was not the only one made regarding the war, and as a penalty, thrones have collapsed wholesale beneath their scared occupants, just as the International Musical Society has also collapsed.

For some little time affairs in the Society had not been going very smoothly. The original publishing scheme had worked well on the whole, and Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel, who were the practical treasurers of the Society, had undoubtedly carried out their part of the work without grudging or stinting; but an unfortunate change came over the spirit of the editorial direction. The German language was not only employed to an excessive degree, but the articles tended to become more and more dull and pedantic, with an increasing bias to antiquarianism of the least valuable kind. Great dissatisfaction was expressed in the non-German sections, and it may here be placed on record that the late Dr. Charles Maclean, who had succeeded to the office of general secretary, fought strenuously for a better management. But for the war he would have carried his point. As it was, Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel issued in September, 1914, a statement that the Society was at an end.

It need hardly be said that such action was absolutely ultra vires. The Society could only be dissolved legally in the way provided by its constitution, and France, England, the United States, and Denmark promptly refused to recognise the autocratic announcement on hearing of it in 1915. At that time the hope was cherished that in course of time it might be possible to revive the Society on amended lines, but since 1915 much water has flowed under the bridges. Very few people five years ago dreamed of the actual length of the war or had the faintest conception of the legacy of bitter memory, widespread misery, and general unrest which was to come from it. The general president, Dr. Jules Ecorcheville, was killed in action in February, 1915. Later, Dr. Charles Maclean, the general secretary, passed away, his life cut short by the abnormal amount of work he vainly tried to accomplish, while finally Dr. W. G. McNaught, who had been closely associated with him in the management of the English section, also paid the debt of nature. Taking all these things into consideration, the English committee has now come to the conclusion that it cannot hope to re-establish the Society, and therefore, as already said, has decided to resign in a body. Its decision has been communicated to other non-German sections of the Society, which of course may or may not follow its example. In any case, the action of the English committee seems to have put the last nail in the coffin of the Society. Much as one may regret it, much as one may believe in the power of music to draw the nations closer together in bonds of amity, sorrowfully it must be admitted that not for years to come is there likely to be a reasonable prospect of a new International Musical Society. If ever it does come about one thing is certain, that the old spirit of Deutschland über Alles which killed the excellent fundamental idea of Dr. Fleischer's venture, will be sternly repressed. Music must not be Prussianized.

Church and Organ Music

NEW CHURCH MUSIC

'And I heard a great voice out of heaven'—Anthem, by W. G. Alcock.

'Love divine, all loves excelling'—Hymn, by Albert C. Tysoe.

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (in E flat), Eric Gritton. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (in D), by Ernest Bullock.

'Hark! hark, my soul!'—Hymn - Anthem, by Percy E. Fletcher.

[Novello.]

For the commemoration of the seven hundredth anniversary of the laying of the foundation stones of Salisbury Cathedral (June, 1920), Dr. Alcock has written an elaborate work which will be perused with interest by Church musicians. It is in three movements—an opening chorus, a semi-chorus, and a Finale consisting of an ornate treatment of Hymn 396, A. & M., Part 2, set to the well-known plainsong melody 'Urbs Beata.' The choral writing is for four voices, with occasional division of parts. The importance of the organ part is shown by the fact that it is written on three staves throughout.

The work opens with an introduction of about forty bars, based largely upon fragments of the plainsong tune. A bass solo (Andante quasi recit.) then enters with the words 'And I heard a great voice out of heaven,' leading into the opening chorus (Allegro moderato), 'Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men.' This is straightforward and diatonic in style, with a well-developed and effective organ part. A big climax at 'And they shall be His people' leads to a resumption of the opening theme (ff) with voices in unison. A diminuendo soon commences over a sustained dominant pedal on the organ, and a quiet passage 'And God Himself shall be with them' (Meno mosso e tranquillo) over a tonic pedal brings the movement to a quiet close. During the holding of the final chord on the organ, an expressive phrase is given out as a solo, which is subsequently made much use of in the organ part. A few bars later the voices enter unaccompanied (semi-chorus) with the words 'And God shall wipe away all tears,' the organ coming in quietly at intervals. At the words 'Neither sorrow, nor crying, nor any pain,' the pace and power are increased, some striking modulations and pungent discords are encountered, and a big fortissimo is reached. The movement ends with a final re-statement of the opening subject unaccompanied.

A passage of five bars (pp) for tenors and basses only, 'For the former things are passed away,' closes on a chord of D major. The organ enters softly with a sustained tonic and dominant pedal-point, and a reference, in diminution, to the second line of the hymn-tune. The first two lines of the hymn are then given out in minim chords on the Swell organ, the diminished form of the second line being ingeniously utilised to provide an effective staccato figure in quavers for the pedals. The organ then increases, the key-signature is changed to five flats, and the music works up to a majestic climax, with all voice-parts divided at the words, 'Behold, I make all things new.' A few instrumental bars lead to the key of G minor, and four verses of Hymn 396, Part 2, then follow. The first and last verses are sung by all voices in unison, the second by men alone, and the third by boys. Some finely-written free accompaniments are provided, admirably contrasted in style. The pedals rest while the boys are singing alone, and come in with telling effect for the last verse, quaver and semiquaver movement being maintained throughout. A thrice-repeated 'Amen' finishes the work.

Thoroughly ecclesiastical in style, and presenting no difficulties to an ordinary well-trained parish choir, this new anthem by Dr. Alcock is a fine example of modern Church music.

Dr. Tysoe has written an admirable tune, simple and dignified in style, for the well-known hymn 'Love divine, all loves excelling.' The rhythmical treatment of the second half is interesting and effective. The arrangement provides for unison singing for the first and last verses, voices in harmony with or without organ (vv. 2 and 5), men only (v. 3), and sopranos only (v. 4). The harmonies are suitably varied, and the broadly-written organ accompaniments emphasise the contrasted treatment of the various verses. We can imagine the hymn becoming highly popular both with choirs and congregations.

Choirs in search of music that is well-written without being difficult will find what they want in Eric Gritton's setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E flat. It is straightforward in character, and the composer succeeds in producing some massive effects by very simple means. The choral writing is always effective, and a judiciously-written organ part allows frequent opportunities for the voices to be heard alone.

The setting of the same canticles by Dr. Bullock at once arrests attention by the novelty of its treatment. We look in vain here for the robust strains usually associated with the Magnificat. We miss the conventional fortissimo opening by full choir, with that sturdy leap from dominant to tonic, with which we are all so familiar.

The treatment of the Hymn as conceived by the composer is indicated by the direction, 'To be sung and played quietly throughout, except the Gloria.' Apart from the Gloria, the range of tone is from pianissimo to mezzo-forte. The opening words are sung by sopranos (p), the full choir entering a bar later. There are some beautifully expressive phrases for sopranos alone, and occasional passages in unison for two or more voices. The Nunc Dimittis is sung throughout by a baritone (or basses in unison). Commencing very softly, and gradually working up to a climax at the end (ff), its effect should be magnificent. The Gloria is the same as for the Magnificat, with a beautiful close on a chord of B major (pp).

The harmonic treatment, the choral writing, and the accompanying part for the organ, are all distinctive, and everywhere in this work the composer eschews the obvious and commonplace. Although not difficult, it demands a good choir for its adequate interpretation. Organists would do well to procure a copy of this thoughtful setting by the gifted organist of Exeter Cathedral, and make a careful study of it themselves.

Percy E. Fletcher's anthem is an arrangement for four-part chorus and organ of his sacred song, 'Hark! hark, my soul!' It is melodious and expressive, the voice parts are smoothly written and quite easy to sing, and the result is an anthem of an easily attractive nature which will doubtless find many admirers.

G. G.

Almost the last public appearances of the well-known harpist, Miss Miriam Timothy, prior to her departure abroad, were at the City Church of St. Vedast Foster, where she played solos at organ recitals given by her brother, Mr. H. J. Timothy. Concert-goers in London will join us in wishing Miss Timothy bon voyage, and every happiness in her forthcoming marriage.

Mr. Percy J. Vincent has retired from the post of organist and choirmaster at the British Embassy Church, Paris, after thirty-eight years' service. The monthly magazine of the Embassy Church pays high tribute to Mr. Vincent for his 'rare enthusiasm,' adding that even during the most difficult period of the war he maintained an efficient choir. The Church Council has opened a testimonial fund. Mr. Vincent is succeeded by Mr. Harold Etheridge.

The Bristol Branch of the Church Music Society paid a visit to Fishponds Training College on June 5, when, after rehearsal, the members and the College students sang Evensong in the Chapel. Tallis's fauxbourdons were used for the Magnificat with fine effect. The accompaniments were shared by Messrs. G. H. Riseley, Mr. R. T. Morgan, and Mr. A. Warrell. A discussion afterwards took place in the College grounds.

Presentations to organists are not infrequent, but we rarely hear of choir-boys receiving gifts from a congregation. But Ralph Stevens, retiring after six years' service in the choir of St. Stephen's, Bristol, has been such an excellent boy that he has received a nice little packet of War Savings Certificates from a hundred and thirty-five subscribers, a silver wrist-watch from the rector, and a purse of silver from his fellow choristers, together with good words from all. We hope our organist-readers will cut out this paragraph and post it in the choir-vestry, that the trebles who read may run the same road.

At Jesus College Chapel, Cambridge, on June 13, Mr. C. P. D. Cannon (Christ's College), Mr. G. P. Thorne (Clare College), and Mr. A. E. L. Burr (Jesus College) joined forces in an interesting organ recital, playing the overture to 'Jephtha,' Franck's Pastorale, Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Harwood's Cathedral Prelude No. 2, two pieces from Louis Vierne's 'Messe Basse,' and Guilmant's 'March on a Theme of Handel.' Mrs. Ffrangcon Roberts sang items by Bach and Dvorák, and Mr. L. Oldham played Handel's Violin Sonata in A.

Messrs. F. W. Holloway, and Thomas J. Crawford have just completed twenty years of voluntary work as recitalists at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, and it is proposed to celebrate the fact by presenting them with a testimonial in the form of a cheque. The St. Stephen's recitals have been among the most popular of the various series given in the City, and the testimonial will have been well earned. Donations should be sent to Mr. Francis W. Sutton, at the Church.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (five recitals)—Prelude to 'Parsifal'; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn; Trio-Sonata in E flat, Bach; Fugue in C minor, Reubke; Canzona, Bach.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (three recitals)—Fantasia in E, Lyon; Prelude on 'Christe, Redemptor omnium,' Parry; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Finale, Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger.

Mr. Ernest Blitcliffe, St. Mary Magdalene, Bradford—Sonata in A minor, Borowski; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Ballet, Debussy; Clair de Lune, Karg-Elert; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Overture to 'Otto'; Air from Suite in D, Bach; Allegro Maestoso and Cantilène (Symphony No. 3), Vierne; Andante in G, S. Wesley.

Mr. Leitch Owen, St. Mary's, Edge Hill—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Menuet, Moszkowsky; Fantasia in A minor, Lemmens.

Mr. Reginald J. Silver, St. John's, Barnsley—Fugue in G minor, Bach; Slow Movement (Symphony No. 1), Elgar.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport (two recitals)—Finale to Sonata 'Celtica,' Stanford; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Study, Goodhart; Three Preludes, Vaughan Williams; Summer Sketches, Lemare; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge. Wigan Parish Church—Prelude on 'St. Mary's,' Charles Wood; Sonata, Arne; Arabesque in E, Debussy; Sonata, Reubke.

Mr. D. E. Roberts, St. Andrew's Cathedral, Inverness (two recitals)—'Meditation in a Cathedral,' Silas; Chaconne, Stanford; Prelude in D minor, Mendelssohn; Idylle, Rheinberger; 'Finlandia,' Fugue in E flat, Bach; 'Morgenstimmung,' Grieg.

Mr. Albert Orton, Newport Parish Church, Isle of Wight—Marche Nuptiale, Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in G, Mendelssohn; 'Casse Noisette' Suite.

Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Meditation and Toccata, d'Eury; 'Summer Sketches,' Lemare.

Mr. G. F. Robertson, Hinckley Parish Church—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Allegretto Scherzando, Stuart Archer; Schiller March, Meyerbeer.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (three recitals)—Andante Cantabile (from String Quartet), Tchaikovsky; Fantasia, Pearce; Romance, Cuthbert Nunn.

Mr. Bertram J. Desman, St. Mary's, Hitchin—Grand Chœur, Hollins; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Dr. William Rigby, Glencairn U. F. Church, Kilmarnock—Minuetto in B minor, Gigout; Fantasia, Pearce; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Gavotte in A, Elgar; Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Mr. S. Harrington, St. George the Martyr, Southwark—Epilogue, Healey Willan; Valse Triste, Sibelius; Toccata in C minor, Halsey.

Mr. Reginald Goss Custard, London Road Congregational Church, Kettering—Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant; Nocturne, Goss Custard; Fugue in G minor, and Fugue à la Gigue, Bach; Suite Gothique, Boëllmann.

Mr. Alan Hamer, Park Wesleyan Church, Leeds—Fugue, Reubke; Elegy, Bairstow; Suite Gothique, Boëllmann; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Fantasy-Prelude, Charles Macpherson.

Mr. Arthur Swaine, Park Wesleyan Church, Leeds—'Occasional' Overture; Impromptu in A minor, Coleridge-Taylor; March on a theme of Handel, Guilmant.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Overture to 'Hansel and Gretel,' Humperdinck; Legend, Harvey Grace; Berceuse de Noël, Amédée Renschel; Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. Cyril F. Musgrove, St. Martin's, Scarborough (three recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn; Pæan, Harwood; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Evening Song, Bairstow; Two Preludes, Stanford; Theme with Variations, Noble; Prelude to 'Gerontius.'

Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Andantino in G minor, Franck; Légende, Dvorák; Fantasia, Saint-Saëns. (Collection for Organists' Benevolent League, £8 2s. 3d.)

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Central Hall, Westminster—Sonata da Camera No. 1, Peace; 'Linden Lea,' Vaughan Williams; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; March, 'Rinaldo,' Handel.

Mr. J. F. Shepherdson, King's College Chapel, Cambridge—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; 'Requiem Æternam,' Harwood; Preludes on 'Sleepers, wake,' Bach and Karg-Elert; Chaconne, Stanford; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Letters to the Editor

'DR. R. R. TERRY AND

"THE CRYES OF LONDON."'

SIR,—I regret the tone of your article under the above title. No one who has read it could fail to conclude (a) that I had made a gratuitous attack on Sir Frederick Bridge's edition of the 'Cryes,' and (b) that my strictures were confined to such trivialities as you specify.

Permit me therefore to state the facts. The 'Cryes' were sent to me by the Editor of the Queen for review. Had I wished to 'attack' Sir Frederick I could safely have done so under the convenient shelter of a Reviewer's anonymity. But since adverse criticisms had to be made, I considered that the more sportsmanlike thing to do was to issue them over my own signature.

A Reviewer's strictures naturally fall into two classes: (a) serious ones, and (b) minor, or even trivial ones. I regret, therefore, that with a single exception your article deals only with the trivial issues and ignores my serious criticisms. Each point on which you take me to task admits of a conclusive answer. I can, however, afford to pass them all over for the present, and confine myself to several points which do matter, and on which you are silent.

(1.) As to the Dering 'Cryes': I showed that the Novello Edition omitted four whole bars and two half-bars of the original music. I leave your readers to decide whether or not that was 'a complaint of the puerile type.'

(2.) Black breves, semibreves, or minims—indicating Hemolia or Sesquialtera, or some other form of 'proportion'—are well-known pitfalls for inexperienced transcribers of

Tudor music. I decline to conjecture whether the Editor or his copyist was responsible for translating 'black' minims as crotchets, but the fact remains that the black minims in the Cooper's song are wrongly transcribed as crotchets. There is a difference between a crotchet and a minim; so again I leave your readers to decide whether my calling attention to the fact was or was not a 'puerile complaint.'

Moreover, in Dering's original this song is marked 3-1, which is the sign for Proportio Tripla. That means that in this movement three semibreves or their equivalent (in this case six minims) are to be sung in the same time as one semibreve in the previous movement. In other words, all the notes are to be sung three times as fast as in the previous movement. But in the Novello Edition Dering's 'black' minims have been transcribed as crotchets, and have been put into bars of 3-4 time, with the movement marked 'Rather slow,' when as a matter of fact it ought to be a quick movement in compound duple time, instead of (as it stands in the Novello Edition) a slow movement in simple triple time. Such a fundamental error in notation would in itself be sufficient to condemn any edition. But I note that to this really serious criticism of mine you make no reference.

(3.) As to Weelkes's 'Cryes': There are two movements which in the original are both marked with the sign of Tripla. To make assurance doubly sure they are also both marked with the sign $\textcircled{C}$ which indicates Imperfect Time with the Major Prolation. The first of these movements is written in 'black' minims (which to the uninitiated certainly do look like crotchets), and the second is in white minims (which look like the minim of to-day). But in the Novello Edition the 'black' minims of the first movement have been transcribed as crotchets and put into 3-4 time; and the white minims of the second movement transcribed as minims and put into 3-2 time. Such an error is fundamental, because Morley tells us that although Tripla is sometimes written in black notes and sometimes in white, and sometimes with a mixture of both, yet it is 'always the same measure.' I therefore submit that I was entitled to ask by what authority two movements which in the original are both in the same tempo were—in the Novello Edition—put into two different tempi, viz., 3-4 and 3-2 respectively? I cannot think that your readers will consider this a trivial matter, or my comment on it a 'puerile complaint.'

(4.) Lastly, the Editor of the Novello Edition stated (in his preface) that a certain passage was 'Weelkes's own harmony written for the Viols.' He also stated that his edition had been prepared from a manuscript (not 'manuscripts' be it noted) in the British Museum. I—naturally concluding that this British Museum MS. was the one given in Mr. Hughes-Hughes's catalogue of secular vocal music—based my criticisms on that assumption, and pointed out that the Novello edition did not at this point coincide with the original, since it contained a 'second Viol' part not in that original, and also had a different bass. Sir Frederick Bridge in his reply stated that this missing 'second Viol' part had been supplied from a second MS. I was therefore obliged to quote this second MS. in the Queen, and show that the Novello Edition (at the point indicated) did not coincide with it either. You, Sir (in your article), say that 'the Editor, we think, committed no crime in collating the two MSS.' Most certainly there is 'no crime' in collating MSS. Every editor has to do it. But 'collation' is generally understood to mean the supplying from one MS. what is missing in another. To supply something—as is done in the Novello Edition—which is not to be found in either MS. is certainly not collation but adaptation. Since the passage as it stands in the Novello Edition is an adaptation, and agrees with neither of the two MSS. from which it is professedly derived, how can it be 'Weelkes's own harmony written for the Viols'? Your readers will again judge whether this very natural question is a 'puerile complaint.'

(By the way, you state that 'the second of the MSS. . . . is evidently unknown to Dr. Terry,' although I gave musical quotations from it in the Queen.)—Yours, &c.,

Westminster Cathedral, R. R. TERRY.
June 17, 1920.

[The point of our article was that Dr. Terry's imposing list of thirty-two errors consisted chiefly of puerilities of the type we quoted, and that only two were concerned with actual mistakes. We held, and still hold, that the best answer to Dr. Terry's 'serious criticisms' is Sir Frederick Bridge's remark that the edition was prepared for performance by average choral societies rather than for the student or librarian. However, we have no wish to shirk any of the issues, so we deal briefly with the four points raised in the letter.

(1.) The omission of a few bars in the Dering work was due to the over-frank character of the words. We think Sir Frederick would have done better to have retained the music and modified the text, as the less violent of two alternatives, but the point is arguable. At all events, the result is satisfactory, as nothing of musical importance has been lost.

(2.) Dr. Terry evidently thinks that Sir Frederick's copyist was responsible for the discrepancies in notation. As a fact, the copies were made correctly, in accordance with the principles set out by Dr. Terry. Sir Frederick was guided in his choice of notation by the practical consideration of the appeal to the eye. Our readers will understand the point at issue if we eschew all obsolete terms and refer them to an easily accessible and comparatively modern example of this type of difficulty. On the second page of the Novello Edition of Beale's 'Come let us join the Roundelay' is a change of time from 4-4 to 3-2. A footnote points out that the minims in the latter case 'should be sung in the same time as the previous crotchets.' Every singer and conductor knows how misleading in such cases the minims are to the eye. Sir Frederick, bearing this in mind, transcribed the 'black minims' as crotchets, and we think he did well in thus considering the spirit rather than the letter. The indication 'rather slow' is justified by the effect, and by the contrast provided by the tempo lmo a few bars later.

(3.) Sir Frederick was guided in his choice of minims for the second movement of the Weelkes 'Cryes' by the fact that the music appeared to call for a slower pace, and that minims conveyed this idea more readily than crotchets. We admit that the use of crotchets for both movements would have been consistent; but again the point is of no great practical importance.

(4.) We plead guilty to speaking of this passage as a 'collation.' As Dr. Terry says, it is an adaptation.

Finally, we would ask Dr. Terry to refer to our article again. He will then see that we did not allude to any of the above points as 'puerile complaints.' We used the term to describe the bulk of his thirty-two charges, and we gave a half-dozen of the most easily quotable examples. As we have said, this was the point of the article, and Dr. Terry's letter leaves it untouched.—ED., M.T.]

HAD THE KITHARA FRETS?

SIR,—My article in your May issue has probably done good service if it has drawn forth nothing more than the exceedingly interesting and valuable letter from Mr. Abdy Williams which appeared in the succeeding number.

As regards my 'remarkable' statement that the kithara had frets: the Egyptians were familiar with the nefer. Mr. Abdy Williams says that he has 'seen no evidence of frets' on this instrument. But Stainer and Barrett in their 'Dictionary of Musical Terms' (article 'Guitar') say expressly that 'upon the neck or finger-board [of the nefer] frets were tied or fastened, as in the modern guitar. Each string is said to have been able to produce two octaves.' The early Christians derived their instruments mainly (but not exclusively, I imagine) from the Greeks, and the Greeks from the Egyptians. The difficulty arises from the fact that authorities are divided as to whether the word kithara is to be understood as meaning an instrument of the nefer and guitar class, with finger-board and (sometimes) frets, or one of the harp and lyre type. Most mediæval Latin writers—also Stainer and Barrett, Chambers's Encyclopædia, and Bonavia Hunt ('Concise History of Music,' p. 139, foot-note)—take the former view. The latter writer says expressly, 'The kithara was distinguished from the lyre by the addition of a neck with frets,' and I followed these writers in my article. The confusion is well illustrated in 'A Cyclopædic Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' which gives self-contradictory definitions of the word (determined apparently by whether the Latinised or original Greek initial letter is used!)—thus 'Cithara (L. from Gk.) the ancient lute; Kithara (Gk.) an instrument of the harp or lyre kind used by the ancient Greeks.' (The lute, of course, was of the guitar type and had frets.) I fully admit that high authorities may be cited in favour of the definition of the kithara as meaning a large form of lyre. Of these two meanings it seems to me more probable that Clement of Alexandria meant the guitar type. If the smaller lyre was legitimate it would hardly be necessary to specify the larger as being legitimate also: therefore by the two words lyre and kithara he is likely to have meant two distinct kinds, and not merely sizes, of instrument.—Yours, &c.,

Ellangowan, Crieff, CLEMENT ANTROBUS HARRIS.
June 6, 1920.

THE MODERN SPIRIT IN CHURCH MUSIC

SIR,—I often get letters from various parts of the country asking me to recommend organists and choirmasters of the new type. These letters prove that there is a demand for the new kind of Church musician who shall (1) be in sympathy with the liturgical aspect of music; (2) have a working knowledge of plainsong (not 'Gregorians') and how to accompany it; (3) be in sympathy with the growing movement in the direction of a more virile type of Church music all round.

I am summarizing in the foregoing clauses the kind of qualifications my correspondents ask for.

I do not exaggerate when I say that within the last few months I could have found six organ posts for the right man—but I didn't know the right man.

Do our musical institutions realise that what vicars want is not merely players of the organ but, first and foremost, Church musicians? Is provision being made at our academies and colleges for the new spirit in Church music?

A short time back I was judging the appointment of organist at a central London Church. A young organist, who had been trained at a leading musical institution, played some classical pieces very well—but he did not know the meaning of liturgical music and could not accompany the eighth tone!—Yours &c.,

MARTIN SHAW
(Master of the Music,
St. Martin-in-the-Fields).

Trafalgar Square, W.C. 2.

THE SYMPHONY AND THE CINEMA

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to protest against the following paragraph from the article entitled 'The Symphony and the Cinema,' by Mr. Grew. He says: 'The only serious attempt of this class that I call to mind in England, is the "Illuminated Dramatic Symphony," of Holbrooke's, known as "Apollo and the Seaman"; the attempt was to blend music, limelight pictures, and spoken verse. It was a complete failure.'*

This information is quite wrong. I was at the performance of this work, and there was no spoken verse at all.

As there has been, in my opinion, a great deal of misrepresentation and abuse, for a good many years, in our press of Mr. Holbrooke's art, particularly by gentlemen who have never heard his works, I think it is only fair that you should print this correction.

As for the verdict on 'Apollo,' 'a complete failure,' delivered by Mr. Grew, it would be interesting to know his reason for this opinion. The press on that occasion was most laudatory! Perhaps it is 'a failure' to Mr. Grew because he has not heard the work at Birmingham, or perhaps because it has not been played at the 'Promenade' Concerts?—Yours, &c.,

G. H. SAUNDERS.

23, Oakley Crescent, S.W. 3.

June 9, 1920.

IS MUSIC AN EXPRESSION OF ITS COMPOSER?

SIR,—I do not think Mr. Edwin Evans is right in saying 'music is primarily the expression of an individual' (Musical Times, June, 1920, p. 371), because to my mind music is an 'objective' art as exclusively as is drama. Where the dramatist creates 'pure' individuals irrespective of himself, the musician creates 'pure' emotion. You cannot find Shakespeare in his plays (except of course in the way you find all humanity in them); and similarly you cannot find Palestrina, Bach, Handel, Beethoven, or Gluck, say, in their music. Art that is 'primarily the expression of an individual' is the art we call lyrical in poetry, and 'egoistic' or subjective in more general circumstances. Tchaikovsky is 'subjective,' Schumann is 'egoistic,' and Chopin is 'lyrical,' as all newspaper writers know; and the reason why their music does not always please—and certainly the reason why it will not live permanently—is just that it is primarily the expression of an individual. This is an important matter. We ought to have it well discussed, so as to find some scientific basis for our critical opinions. Perhaps Mr. Evans will one day give us an article on the subject.—Yours, &c.,

Birmingham,

SYDNEY GREW.

June 15, 1920.

RENAISSANCE OF THE LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NANCY.

SIR,—At the end of the war, on October 31, 1918, the library of the University of Nancy was destroyed by an incendiary bomb, and the English section in particular suffered heavily. Not a single volume remains of the works of such standard English authors as Carlyle, Dickens, Meredith, Scott, Matthew Arnold, Robert and Elizabeth Browning, Fielding, Smollett, Richardson, Jane Austen, Swift, and Pope.

Efforts are being made by the University of London to assist the University of Nancy in re-establishing its library after the ravages of the war. Already about five hundred volumes have been collected for this purpose, and an appeal is now made to all who are in a position to contribute books, to send them to the undersigned, who is in charge of the work. Gifts of money for the purchase of books will also be gratefully received.—Yours, &c.,

University of London.

REGINALD A. RYE

(Goldsmiths' Librarian).

THE LATE DR. C. H. LLOYD

SIR,—The many friends and admirers of the late Dr. C. H. Lloyd will be glad to learn that a memorial to him is to be erected in Gloucester Cathedral, where he succeeded S. S. Wesley as organist and conductor of the Three Choirs Festivals. It is unnecessary to do more than mention the enormous work that Dr. Lloyd did for English Church music. His anthems and services are in constant use in all Cathedrals and Parish Churches where a musical service is sung. The Dean and Chapter of Gloucester have very kindly given their consent to a stained-glass window being placed in the Lady Chapel facing that of his great predecessor, S. S. Wesley. Many who were associated with him at Oxford, Eton, and in London, in addition to the three counties of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, will welcome the opportunity of making a lasting memorial to a distinguished English musician. Any subscriptions sent to me I will gladly acknowledge, and should there be any balance after defraying the cost of the window, it has been suggested that it be devoted to some musical purpose in the Cathedral that Dr. Lloyd loved so well.—Yours, &c.,

7, Palace Yard, Gloucester.

A. HERBERT BREWER

May 31, 1920. (Organist of the Cathedral and Conductor of the Three Choirs Festivals at Gloucester).

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of July, 1860:

ORGANIST WANTED for the Church of Saint Michael Bassishaw, London.—Persons wishing to offer themselves, may send their applications in writing to Mr. Gale, the Vestry Clerk, 70, Basinghall-street, on or before Saturday, the 7th July. A day will be appointed for the Candidates to give a specimen of their abilities, when a Professor of Music will attend and select the three whom he may think best qualified, whose names will be returned to the Parishioners for their choice of one of them. Whoever may be chosen must execute the office in person, and not by Deputy, and will be required to attend at every public service in the church, as well on Week-days as on Sundays, and once a week to instruct the children who attend the church in Psalmody, and will be subject to annual election in Easter-week. The salary is £40 per annum.

CRYSTAL PALACE

THE Orphéonist Festival commenced on the 25th of June, and was continued on the 26th and 28th. The 'Orphéon' is an amateur choral association of some standing in France. . . . The 3,000 singers who made their appearance at the Crystal Palace are selections from the various societies, and are composed, we are told, of the commercial classes—shopkeepers, clerks, artisans, and others; indeed, it was evident from their general appearance that the artisans were in considerable force, which proves how much the study of music is extending in France.

The programme on Monday commenced with 'God save the Queen,' sung in very intelligible English; the harmonies, it is true, were much altered, and not for the better, but the good-will with which the National Anthem was sung made up for any defects in the execution. . . . It was, however, in the characteristic French music that the great effect was produced. The striking beauty of the piano passages, the distinct enunciation of the words, and the neat and crisp execution of the quick passages, were exceedingly good. There is no great power in the forte passages, not like the depth of sound produced, for instance, by a few hundred of our North-country chorus singers, but there is a smoothness and precision which are extremely pleasant. We may also add that there is a certain amount of trick, that is decidedly effective; we allude particularly to a chorus called 'La Retraite,' in which the sound of drums, imitated by the voices, is first heard in the distance, then a chorus advancing and subsequently receding into distance, so as to become almost inaudible. This was remarkably good, and without speaking of it as fine chorus singing, it would be well worth imitating. . . . At the conclusion of the music the audience rose en masse, and with waving of hats, and every demonstration of good feeling, called vociferously for the French National Melody, whereupon 'Partant pour La Syrie' was given with hearty good-will by the singers.

BAYSWATER.—The last subscription concert for the season of the Amateur Musical Union took place on the evening of the 14th ult., at the School-rooms, Porchester Gardens. The principal vocalists upon the occasion were Mrs. Friswell and Miss Margaret McAlpine. . . . the latter . . . is deservedly celebrated for her Scotch style of singing.

2500 ALREADY SOLD.—FELLOWS' PATENT VENT-PEG, 1s. EACH; USED BY THE LONDON BREWERS AND WINE MERCHANTS, &c. It will last for 20 years; cannot get out of order; will keep a barrel perfectly air-tight, and so prevent wine or beer getting sour or flat; is no trouble to servants. Each Peg bears the Patentee's name, and a separate number. Sold by all respectable Ironmongers in the United Kingdom; wholesale by Warner and Sons, and Morgan Brothers, London. One Peg post-free for 18 stamps, from T. Hill, Cutler to the Queen, &c., 4, Haymarket, London.

N.B.—THIS ADVERTISEMENT WILL NOT APPEAR AGAIN.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

At the chamber concert given on Wednesday, May 26, an interesting and well varied programme was heard, and in some of the items the performances reached a very high standard. Amongst these may be included that of the Bach 'Chaconne' (Miss Dorothy Chalmers), English Air with Variations for pianoforte, A. C. Mackenzie (Mr. Russell Chester), and Andante con Variazioni from Beethoven's Sonata Op. 47, for violin and pianoforte (Master Jean Pougnet and Miss Betty Humphy). The programme also included the first movement of Widor's sixth Organ Symphony (Mr. Bertram Orsman), two movements from Arensky's Trio in D minor, pianoforte music by Schumann and Chopin, and songs by Frank Bridge, Coleridge-Taylor, and Arthur Somervell. Mr. Horatio Davies proved himself an able accompanist.

At the orchestral concert given at Queen's Hall on Wednesday, June 9, a new work by that promising young composer Paul Kerby (Carl Rosa Scholar) came to a hearing. It is entitled 'Two Dramatic Studies for voice and orchestra,' the vocal part being sung by Mr. Leonard Hubbard. The other noteworthy items of this concert were Saint-Saëns's 'Africa' fantasia for pianoforte (Miss Dorothy Rivett), Adagio and Finale from Brahms's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat (Mr. Rae Robertson), Vieuxtemps's Concerto in D minor for violin (Mr. Reginald Batten), and Balfour Gardiner's Comedy Overture for orchestra. The programme also included three movements from Popper's Suite 'In the Forest' for violoncello, a 'Polka' by Smetana orchestrated by F. Corder, and vocal items by Handel, Mascagni, and Rossini. Sir Alexander Mackenzie conducted.

Two performances of 'The Blue Stockings,' an adaptation of Molière's comedy 'Les Femmes Savantes,' were given by the dramatic students in the Duke's Hall on June 16 and 17, under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond, Hon. R.A.M.

RECENT AWARDS

The Piatti Prize (violoncello playing) has been awarded to Frank Leonard (a native of London), G. M. Jeffreys being highly commended and Kathleen M. Hill commended. The adjudicator was Miss May Mukle.

The annual distribution of prizes will take place at Queen's Hall on Wednesday, July 21, at 3 p.m. The Lady Mayoress, Lady Cooper, has kindly consented to distribute the awards.

MUSICAL SETTINGS OF HORACE'S
LYRIC POEMS

The Musical Association members had on April 13 an opportunity of listening to a paper on the above subject by Dr. H. Thomas, whose attention has been given to the matter for the last three years. He had found a general impression that the setting of Horace to music, whether in the original Latin or in translations, was quite a modern practice, or at least a revival, since some of Horace's poems were certainly sung in his own day. As a matter of fact there was reason for thinking that from classical times onwards the practice of setting Greek and Latin lyrics to music had never died out, and the author who best illustrated the practice was Horace, whose poems had been set to music more often than those of any other Greek or Latin author, not excepting the Anacreontic verses. This predilection for Horace was due to his eminence among Latin lyricists both for his poetical style and for the variety of his metres.

After considering the nature of classical metres at some length, the lecturer went on to say that the settings of Horace with which he proposed to deal fell into two groups: (1.) Those meant to illustrate the scansion of the poems, the aim being to teach students the scansion and enable them to memorise the metres. These might be called metrical settings. (2.) Those which gave free play to musical rhythm, the aim being æsthetic. These might be called free settings. For the earliest known settings of Horace we went back to MSS. of the 10th to 12th centuries. These gave the melody only in the neumatic system. The extant specimens, which can be but a few of those which must once have existed, support the view that the setting of Horace to music was a common enough practice in the Middle Ages. The Renaissance gave the practice a great impetus, especially after the invention of printing. The earliest known specimen of secular music printing was in a Latin Grammar by Francesco Negro, or Negri, which was printed in 1480, and contained lines from Latin poets set to a melody to illustrate the structure of various metres. These snatches pointed to the use of music in the class-room to illustrate verse structure.

Dr. Thomas proceeded to deal with a large number of specimens of German metrical settings for four voices in the 16th century, after which he turned to this country. But first he spoke of Buchanan's Latin paraphrase of the Psalms in the old classical metres, which became so popular that the Rector of Rostock University commissioned Oltherius, a musician on the staff, to set the Psalms to music, including specimens of Horatian metres not used by Buchanan. These settings for four voices also became popular, and the book passed through numerous editions. In 1640 an edition was published in London. This would seem to be the first appearance of Horace in music in these islands. In the Bodleian Library were two MS. settings of Odes in the original Latin composed for public performance at Oxford about 1670 and 1700 respectively. At the beginning of the second quarter of the 18th century there appeared in this country two vernacular settings of the same ode of Horace. Passing by some Odes of Anacreon and Horace set by Dr. Heighington in 1744, we come to a much more interesting and important collection (1757), illustrating the Italian influence in music at that time. It consisted of twelve odes set to music by the most renowned Professors, i.e., Dr. Arne, Dr. Boyce, J. Worgan, and others.

About 1780, Giuseppe Baretti, an Italian who had taken up his abode in this country, conceived the idea of having Horace's 'Carmen Seculare' set to music, and he persuaded the French musician Philidor to compose a setting for full band and chorus. The popularity of this experiment seems to have been responsible for a small outburst of Horatian settings about the end of the 18th century.

In conclusion, Dr. Thomas said that the metrical settings had rather more interest musically and historically than the free settings, and they had also the interest that arose from their having been composed for a serious purpose. Briefly, they arrived at combining the cultivation of music and the classics. These 16th century scholars recognised what every one should recognise now, that music could throw a great deal of light on metre and rhythm for young students and others. Musical settings like those he had mentioned helped in the comprehension and retention of different metres, and incidentally they helped students to learn easily by heart texts which otherwise they would know only vaguely.

A number of the settings were sung by the lecturer to illustrate his paper.

AN OLD ENGLISH OPERA

BY MURIEL SILBURN

The popularity attained so quickly and retained so long by the 'Beggars' Opera'—the first of the so-called ballad-operas—naturally brought forth a host of flatterers who imitated it, with varying results. From the entertaining pages of Colley Cibber's 'Apology' we learn that that cheery egoist himself wrote a ballad-opera called 'Love in a Riddle,' which he produced about a year after the 'Beggars' Opera' appeared. Although (in Cibber's own estimation at least) his work was infinitely superior in every way to its prototype, with unaccountable lack of taste the 'Publick' would have none of it. A considerably later work (very similarly named), 'Love in a Village,' appeared in 1762, and proved more fortunate. In his 'History of the Stage' Dibdin pronounces this opera to have come next to the 'Beggars' Opera' in its success and longevity. Certain curious and interesting features which undoubtedly it retains should furnish a sufficient reason for rescuing it from oblivion. Amongst these features are an extraordinary wealth of composers, and the familiarity of many of its numbers. On the title-page of the published score is a list of composers in this order:

Handel.	Howard.	Geminiani.	Paradies.
Boyce.	Baillon.	Galuppi.	Agus.
Arne.	Festing.	Giardini.	Abos.

On examination we find that the overture is by C. F. Abel, and that Weldon, Carey, and Barnard have each a share in this veritable musical olla podrida—too many cooks, apparently, did not spoil this broth. Considering that sixteen composers are concerned in the music of 'Love in a Village,' it is somewhat surprising to find that several numbers remain anonymous. Dr. Arne's large share in the work is strikingly evident: out of fifteen numbers in Act I he has six; in Act 2 he claims eight out of seventeen; while in the last Act, out of eleven items five are his. Of the twelve names on the title-page one observes that eight are those of foreigners, three of whom were violinists—Festing, Geminiani, and Giardini. The second of these must have been of a forgiving disposition, one imagines, or his name surely would not appear on a Walsh publication. Many years previously the firm in question pirated Geminiani's Op. 2, and actually had the effrontery to offer him the choice of himself correcting the plates or allowing the work to appear with errors before the public. Geminiani very naturally rejected this insolent proposal, and obtained an injunction against the sale of the work. Thereupon Walsh compounded the matter, and Op. 2 was eventually published under the composer's inspection. The Frenchman, Agus, was born in 1749, and must therefore have been very young when 'Love in a Village' was produced. Whether it was printed in 1762 is uncertain, and the song under Agus's name may have been introduced later. The singers who created the eight rôles in the work were Misses Brent, Hallam, and Davies, and Messrs. Beard, Mattocks, Dunstall, Dyer, and Shuter. Charlotte Brent was a favourite pupil of Dr. Arne's: his pride and interest in this lady may be estimated from the fact that Garrick was once invited by Arne to Ditton, near Hampton Court, chiefly so that the great actor might hear Miss Brent's voice. Garrick duly came, heard, and applauded, then slyly added: 'Tommy, you should consider that music is at best but pickle to my roast beef.' Arne as jocularly retorted: 'Is it not, Davy? Your beef then shall be well pickled before I have done.' Miss Brent became the wife of Thomas Pinto, the well-known violinist, in 1766. Miss Davies—the original 'Madge' of the work under consideration—married Jonathan Battishill, the composer, and retired from the stage in 1763: her death some twelve years later so affected Battishill that he abandoned composition.

'Mr. Beard' of course was the celebrated John Beard for whom Handel wrote the tenor parts in 'Israel in Egypt,' 'Messiah,' &c., &c. He married en second nocces a daughter of Rich, the proprietor of Covent Garden Theatre. Through this marriage Beard eventually became part owner and manager of the theatre, but deafness unfortunately forced him to retire from public life in 1767. His last appearance was in the rôle of Hawthorn in 'Love in a Village.' Beard's rights in Covent Garden were purchased by a Mr. Harris for sixty thousand pounds.

Shuter was probably better known as an actor than a singer. He achieved fame as the original Croaker in the 'Good-natured Man,' and Mr. Hardcastle in 'She Stoops to Conquer.' Goldsmith was largely indebted to Shuter for the success of the first play.

We come at length to the libretto of 'Love in a Village.' Of its writer, Bickerstaffe, we learn from Forster's 'Life of Goldsmith' that he (Bickerstaffe) was a 'clever and facile Irishman.' Dibdin tells us that this librettist knew the art of writing for music, but was frequently wrong in technicalities. The same authority writes somewhat contemptuously of the verse in 'Love in a Village,' and dismisses the dialogue as puerile. The principal characters are Hodge and Madge. Of the plot nothing is known, and it is impossible to gain any idea of it from the vocal score. Dibdin waxes enthusiastic over the selected music, which we will therefore consider in some detail. We at once find an old friend in 'There was a Jolly Miller.' In Chappell's 'Popular Music of the Olden Time,' the writer tells us (regarding that melody), 'one stanza of this tune was sung in "Love in a Village" (1762), and it is therefore supposed to have been written by Bickerstaffe, but he appropriated so many songs from other sources, without acknowledgment, that this may also have been introduced. However, I have not seen this work in print before 1762.' It may be remembered that the 'Jolly Miller' was one of the tunes harmonized by Beethoven for George Thomson's Scotch songs in 1824. In the volume before us the song is in C minor, with 6-4 time-signature, and was one of those sung by Beard. Another well-known air, 'St. Patrick's Day,' is remarkable from the fact that it is represented as harmonized throughout on a tonic pedal, without any figuring, all the other numbers having merely a treble and figured bass. 'We all love a pretty girl under the rose,' is found differing from its modern form only by being placed in 6-4 time. A melody entitled 'Larry Grogan' is as essentially Irish as the name it bears, but whether here introduced for the first time it is impossible to say. The words of 'My Dolly was the fairest thing' were (according to Dibdin) plagiarised from a playwright named Randolph. They are set to Handel's 'Let me wander not unseen,' from 'L'Allegro.' The number was sung by Beard, and it is quite possible that it was originally written for him. A song given to Shuter, 'When I followed a lass,' sounds very familiar, and strikes the hearer as having marked national characteristics, but no composer has as yet been found for it. A charming melody of Arne's is attached to the words 'When once love's subtle poison,' sung by Miss Hallam. A song to the words 'Let Rakes and Libertines' is ascribed to 'Mr.' Handel. That may be so, but whence taken one fails to discover, and it most certainly was not specially written for 'Love in a Village,' Handel having been dead nearly three years when this work was produced. The text of the tenor song 'If ever I'm catch'd' sounds clumsy and ungrammatical to modern ears, but one is inclined to think that the setting of this number, by Dr. Boyce, would repay the trouble of reconstruction.

A RESIDENT OPERA COMPANY

AN INTERESTING BIRMINGHAM EXPERIMENT

A very interesting experiment has been initiated at the Repertory Theatre, Birmingham, where an effort is being made to test the practicability of a Repertory Opera Company. It is notorious amongst students of music that very many operas specially suitable for production in a small theatre are neglected in this country through sheer force of circumstances. The inevitable enormous expense incurred by the great touring companies involves the necessity for making use of the largest theatres in order to ensure that the potential income shall be commensurate with the certain expenditure. So long, therefore, as we remain dependent upon such companies, conditions can never arise in which the 'smaller' operas may be produced. It should be borne in mind that this classification includes almost all the operas written prior to Wagner and quite a large number written more recently. The attempt is being made at Birmingham to stop this gap. The circumstances are worthy of note.

First, Mr. Barry Jackson, the proprietor of the Repertory Theatre, has already carried to complete success a similar work in the field of dramatic art. This conquest in a very difficult arena is in itself sufficient evidence of his genius and practical ability. He is not only a capable actor and designer but is also a musician much above the average: he retains the responsibility of production. Secondly, his theatre is ideal in structure and tradition for the new venture. Thirdly, he has secured the enthusiastic co-operation of Mr. Appleby Matthews—the first director and conductor of the City of Birmingham Orchestra—in the capacity of musical director.

The scheme is to be inaugurated publicly by a performance of Mozart's Opera, 'Così fan tutte' during the week commencing June 28. Works by Gluck, Rameau, Pergolesi and others are also under consideration.

The proposal has excited interest all over the country, which is easily understood, for what can be done at Birmingham can be done in any other provincial centre. The potentialities of the scheme are enormous. To the general public it means the exploration of a new field in music. To local singers it means an opportunity to acquire a technique in opera near their own homes. And assuming success at Birmingham, it signifies to the whole country the beginning of a new movement.

H. S. G.

GRAMOPHONE 'WHY NOTS?'

BY ULRIC DAUBENY

This Year of Grace, 1920, musicians may still pile up crescendos of half-truths denouncing the gramophone as unmusical, as inartistic, or mechanical, but even the most hidebound of the greybeards will no longer betray hardihood sufficient to deny its educative value.

This attribute of the gramophone appeals of course much less to residents in a musical metropolis than it does to the thousands of musicians and music-lovers buried in sleepy provincial towns and villages, where—save for an occasional concert-party—year succeeds year without the opportunity, locally, for hearing any decent music. To them the gramophone is, or should be, a very genuine blessing, for it often affords the only means of becoming acquainted with ambitious musical works. Conductors of provincial orchestras, young singers, pianists, violinists, members of string trios or quartets, all of these will find details of a liberal education among the catalogues of the various 'record' manufacturers; the expenditure of a few shillings will bring into their own homes the 'sound photographs' of the greatest musical interpreters and executants.

So far the prospect appears entrancing; but it is impossible to ignore the many darker patches. One must, however, judge with fairness. Certain axioms there are, which must be swallowed somehow, and ruled out from further criticism. It is irrational to expect a gramophone reproduction in all respects to equal the original performance; yet this is commonly the standpoint taken by many critics, who also haggle because most works must of necessity be brutally cut and mutilated to bring them within the compass of a single 'part' or record. Yet, making all possible allowances, many points still strike the gramophonist, causing him to marvel when he reads of the 'new' and revolutionary improvements in recording made during recent years. Manufacturers may advertise all this, but to the lay critic gramophone-recording has made no appreciable progress during the past decade. The art seems, in fact, to have remained more or less at a standstill. I possess a record of the Prelude to 'Lohengrin' which has been in use for quite eight years. The beginning and the end, where the violins are in altissimo, is certainly now rather broken-winded, but generally speaking, after all this usage, it compares favourably with the latest orchestral reproductions. What of this, Mr. Manufacturer? Again, why are records of the great symphony orchestras so persistently self-effacing in their tones? Sir Henry Wood or Mr. Landon Ronald, with a large establishment of strings, woodwind, and brass, reproduce with less volume of sound than does the average string quartet. It is easy to comprehend why brass band records seldom err on the side of tonal modesty; but why should the average dance band 'photograph' louder than the full orchestra? It is disappointing to the genuine music-lover, to say the least.

Consider the case of songs. These are certainly loud enough, I suppose, because the singer can 'shove his snout right into 'un, and hollar down the trumpet,' as a rustic acquaintance quaintly expressed it. The accompaniments, especially where orchestral, are sometimes all but inaudible, but on the whole, vocal records old and new are amazingly good, and, compared with orchestral records, suggest little scope for immediate improvement. Perhaps this is why the early records of Caruso are finer than any produced by English singers at the present day, because their excellence is undoubtedly explained by voice. But I have in mind a pre-war record of Peter Cornelius's 'Love Song,' a truly noble reproduction, which surely it would be impossible to beat, even with the aid of 1920 mechanism.

But putting aside criticism of this kind, and accepting the gramophone exactly as it is, surely a very grave indictment can be drawn up against the latter-day choice of subjects for recording. In a recent monthly catalogue we find Mr. Landon Ronald and his orchestra presenting for the approval of an expectant public two Intermezzos from 'Carmen'—'Carmen'! They have been recorded several times before, by symphony orchestras, small orchestras, and for all I know, by military bands. Think of this fine material, in A.D. 1920, wasted on such insignificant and stale subject-matter!

The same orchestra recently performed, for the gramophone user's benefit, the Overture to 'Zampa' (since the earliest phonograph days a popular brass band piece, and not long since also recorded of Sir Henry Wood and his band), and not content with this, they followed it up with a record of that classic morceau, 'Zanetta' Overture!

No doubt the buying public has to be considered; but would not musicians constitute a larger buying public if the quality of the goods were better? Wagner still remains a tolerably popular composer, as the Promenade Monday nights will testify, and surely an extensive public would be prepared to buy many of his works, so far unrecorded—for preference, not again the Wedding March from 'Lohengrin' nor 'Rienzi' Overture, but, say, the 'Siegfried' Funeral March, the Introduction to Act 3 of the 'Mastersingers,' or the 'Siegfried Idyll,' all admirably adapted for gramophone production. Even leaving Wagner out of it, there would be no difficulty in offering the public a little more inspiring, though hardly less popular subject-matter, instead of keeping first-class orchestras on the grind with 'Carmen' intermezzos and 'Zampa' Overtures. César Franck's great and deservedly popular Symphony has never been recorded. We hear 'Valse Triste' to satiated repletion, but never the composer's infinitely finer 'En Saga.' Tchaikovsky's 'Symphony Pathétique' has several times been reproduced, but to the exclusion of the last and of the first movements, the latter perhaps the finest of the four. Where are his other symphonies? The fourth, for gramophone users, is represented only by the Scherzo; the fifth has been more completely recorded, but unfortunately the interpretation is so unusually poor that it is quite useless.

British composers are represented by a marked predominance of very early works, all worn decidedly threadbare. More serious compositions, which bid fair to become classics, are strangely neglected. We scan the catalogues of record manufacturers in vain for the orchestral works of Granville Bantock and Gustav Holst.

It is the same with songs. A new singer is widely boomed, but singing never a new song—unless it be some mawkish ballad. The usual 'Traviata' and 'Rigoletto' appear—more horrible exposure of the same old operas, long since dead, and, were common modesty more prevalent, by rights long since decently interred. Turn to the recent monthly supplements. A famous bass gives us 'I'm a Roamer,' and a short while previously he sang 'She Alone Charmeth my Sadness.'

And if not these, we are given the usual 'On with the motley' from 'Pagliacci,' or the good old favourite 'La Donna è mobile'—but we all have these records of Caruso, whose singing, even through the medium of the gramophone, is finer than that of any British tenor heard 'first hand.' It seems highly improbable that students or musicians will purchase further and less inspiring records of such songs.

Prior to the war, one company, in their Celebrity List, offered a most extensive selection of Wagner songs, mainly drawn from 'The Ring,' but these were largely of Continental production, and in consequence what constituted one of the most valuable and comprehensive avenues of musical education by gramophone has since been closed. This is very deeply to be regretted, although we trust that the difficulty in obtaining such records is only temporary.

Meanwhile, there are still most of the greater works of the greater masters, both vocal and orchestral, awaiting the reproducer's skill.

THE NEUE BACHGESELLSCHAFT FESTIVAL AT LEIPSIK.

After the Bachgesellschaft had published the Complete Edition of Bach's works, it was dissolved, and a Neue Bachgesellschaft was founded to bring into practical use the masterpieces which had been made accessible. The Complete Handel was brought to a conclusion just at the same time. Dr. Max Seiffert, in the International Society's Magazine for February, 1900 (vol. 1, p. 126), regretted that the musical world had hardly taken advantage of the opportunities thus offered, concluding his article:

'It has taken a century before the classical constellation Haydn-Mozart-Beethoven has found a universal comprehension of its historical importance and its art, not only among musicians but also among the whole nation. Let us hope that unflinching perseverance may succeed in obtaining, after another century, an equal result for Handel and Bach. Then will blossom the laurel wreath for the indefatigable workers who' . . . &c., &c.

Undeniably a vast amount of immortal work by both geniuses is still but little known. Our inheritance from them is immense in quantity, as well as imperishable in quality. The Neue Bachgesellschaft resolved to give Festivals, in different towns, every two years or thereabouts. The first of these biennial Festivals was held in 1902 at Berlin. Leipzig was next visited; then Eisenach, Chemnitz, Duisburg, Breslau, Vienna. At Duisburg M. Henri Marteau proposed smaller celebrations for the intervening years, and these were held at Eisenach in 1911 and 1913. Several Handel Festivals were also held. The Vienna Festival was immediately followed by the Paris Congress of the International Society; and then came the world-war. The Festival of 1916, for which Bonn had been selected, was naturally abandoned. Some kind of meeting seems to have been held in September, 1917. After the war the Directorate resolved to revive the Festivals in the spring of 1920, Leipzig being selected. There were various hindrances, but old members were duly invited for June 19-21. The prospectus, beyond a list of the works to be performed, gave no details. Straube was to conduct. As the Festival began on a Saturday, the Saturday afternoon Motet performance at St. Thomas's Church, an institution existing for centuries, included Bach's greatest Motet, the 149th Psalm. A twelve-voice piece by Calvisius, 'Lobe den Herrn,' and Knüpfer's 'Ach Herr, strafe mich nicht,' were also announced. Bach's gigantic work, which Mozart heard in 1789, sounds at its best in this Church, sung by the choir for which it was written. It is there sung in two sections, separated by an organ solo. The first movement is taken about $\text{♩} = 100$. The choral is sung by both choirs; the interludes by solo voices. Apart from the pace, this treatment obviously produces a performance quite unlike that heard at the recent Bach Festival in Central Hall, Westminster.

The first concert of the Festival, also in the Church, contained seven works by Bach's predecessors—Schelle, Weckmann, Schein, Knüpfer, Buxtehude, and Schütz—mostly taken from the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst.' The selection seemed affected by present-day conditions: 'When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion,' 'O Lord, correct me not in Thine anger,' 'Zion said, the Lord hath forsaken me.' But the opening piece was 'Praise the Lord, O my soul.'

The morning service on Sunday was to include something of Bach's. The first secular concert had a remarkable programme, the only works of Bach's being the Concerto for two violins, and the D major Suite No. 3, both quite familiar. There were also a Concerto Grosso by Stölzel (1690-1749) for two trumpet-choirs, wood-wind, and divided string orchestra; an Organ Concerto (MS.) by J. G. Walter (of Weimar); a Cantata by Handel, for soprano and orchestra; and a Pianoforte Concerto (MS.) by Emanuel Bach. All these must have been of highest interest historically, especially the work by Stölzel, a most prolific composer who left eight 'annuals' of both cantatas and Motets, besides twenty-two operas and fourteen oratorios. The Handel piece was probably one of the Italian cantatas in the Complete Edition, vols. 52, 53.

The 'St. John' Passion was announced for Sunday evening. In the original intention of the Festivals, the Passions, High Mass, and other large works were to be excluded, on the ground that they were presumably familiar.

Monday morning brought a chamber-music concert, with the third and fifth 'Brandenburg' Concertos, unnamed pieces for pianoforte (probably the harpsichord), violin solo, a Sonata with gamba, and a soprano cantata. In the evening, St. Thomas's was again to be used, the programme being the short Mass in A major, the very fine but little known Cantata No. 127, 'Herr Jesu Christ,' and the Easter Oratorio.

Those who can recall previous Festivals of the Neue Bachgesellschaft must sigh over the changed conditions which make a visit almost impossible. We may comfort ourselves with the thought that Bach's music now requires no propaganda; it is accepted and loved all over the world. But the great number and variety even of the Church Cantatas alone will give work for generations to come.

HENRY DAVEY.

At Winchester, on May 18, the Musical Society gave its first concert at the Guildhall, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts, with a programme of high quality, that opened with the Adagio and Allegro from a Symphony in D, by Haydn, and concluded with Mozart's G minor Symphony. The strings of the orchestra were also heard in Frank Bridge's 'Sally in our alley' and Percy Grainger's 'Molly on the shore.' The choir gave 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and some part-songs, while the solos of Miss Freda Foster and Mr. Stuart Wilson comprised a well-chosen selection of British songs.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

We have now completely entered upon our customary saison morte, and the next few months will bring no concerts of special interest.

The Birmingham Bach Society, so well directed by Mr. Bernard Jackson, is doing useful work, as was fully demonstrated at a concert of Bach's music given at the Midland Institute on May 29, when, by a happy idea, opportunity was taken to introduce some madrigals by Byrd and Wilbye that were excellently sung by Mr. Hutchings's small choir. The chief items of the evening were Bach's two Cantatas for voice, strings, oboe, and continuo, the solo vocalists being Miss Emily Broughton and Mr. Arthur Wriggleworth. Mr. Howard Rutter, an able violinist equipped with a fine technique, gave the solo part in a Bach Concerto for violin and string orchestra, winning general appreciation.

The City of Birmingham Orchestra is now formulating next season's complete programme. The Sunday concerts will be held at the Theatre Royal, and the first of the series will be conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, who, it will be remembered, so successfully conducted the old Theatre Royal Promenade Concerts for many seasons. Concerts will be given every Sunday from the beginning of September, and it is likely that the venue will be packed each Sunday during the season. Mr. Appleby Matthews will be the conductor-in-chief. The dates of the Wednesday Symphony Concerts have also been fixed, and will take place on November 10, December 15, January 19, February 9, March 9, and April 6. In addition to these there will also be a series of Saturday concerts. Mr. Appleby Matthews, who promises shortly to issue further details, says he never felt more happy or confident about the scheme than he does now.

The twentieth annual orchestral and vocal concert given by the students of the Midland Institute School of Music was held in the Town Hall on June 2, under the direction of Prof. Granville Bantock, who conducted the excellent band with his customary watchfulness and close attention to detail. The programme offered no novelties, but was good and representative of its kind, the purely orchestral items being restricted to Sibelius's well-known 'Varsang' and Elgar's 'Wand of Youth' Suite No. 1. The orchestra was also requisitioned to accompany Liszt's Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra in E flat, the solo part being capably executed by Miss Mary Fuery. The orchestra also accompanied Mackenzie's violin solo 'Benedictus,' the solo part of which was played in expressive manner by Mr. Thomas Jones. Miss Nora Farmer contributed Scriabin's Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp, Op. 4, but her performance sounded somewhat artificial and seemed to lack character. A small ladies' choir conducted by Mr. Lionel Field, and accompanied on the pianoforte by Prof. Bantock and by two harps, sang four 'Choral Hymns from the Rig-Veda,' by Holst, but the choir is evidently not yet well versed in imparting the right colour and vocal power into its work, although portions of the Hymns had some good moments. Miss Dorothy Showell, a new soprano, revealed great promise, vocally and expressively, in Liszt's 'Loreley.' Songs were also given by Mr. Fred J. Clifford and Miss Miriam Wiseman. There was a large audience, and certainly there was no lack of enthusiasm during the whole evening.

BOURNEMOUTH

Music at the Winter Gardens may be conceived as a cyclic process, although as far removed from present-day conceptions of a 'vicious circle' as any other beneficent undertaking that remains uninfluenced by the profiteer on the one hand or the forty-four-hour week on the other. But the use of the term 'cyclic' describes the sempiternity of the musical activities for which Bournemouth has earned such a wide repute. In this town the musical seasons practically overlap, and there is little differentiation between the musical scope and purpose of any of the four seasons. Spring has now melted into summer; but so far as the town's musical interests are concerned the only change to be noted was an official implication that the so-called 'winter' season ended on May 8 and that the 'summer' season would be duly ushered in on May 10. In short, on May 6 the last of the twenty-fifth series of Symphony Concerts took place, and on May 12 was given the first of the summer concerts of a similar nature.

Nevertheless, it should be explained that there is a slight difference in the type of programme presented respectively at the winter and summer concerts. To meet the town's requirements during the latter season in the direction of open-air orchestral performances, rehearsals for the summer Symphony Concerts suffer a certain curtailment, and consequently it is not possible to give performances of the lengthy and exacting works that automatically, as it were, fall into the scheme of the winter series.

But even within these limitations it is something of an achievement that the flag of symphonic music is kept flying all the year round, with only a short break in July during Mr. Dan Godfrey and the orchestral instrumentalists' annual holiday.

Well-known compositions of established popularity have occupied the most conspicuous positions at these concerts up to the time of writing, those that have attracted the greatest interest being the following: Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture; Elgar's Serenade for strings and 'Froissart' Overture; Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony (beautifully played); Kalinnikov's Symphony in G minor; and Goetz's 'In Spring' Overture. Also one lesser-known work that successfully bore comparison with the foregoing was the second Symphony of Dr. H. Holloway—a Bournemouth musician whose compositions are worthy of transportation to other musical centres.

Works of the concerto type have been played by the following artists with uniform success: Mr. S. Clifford (Violoncello Concerto by Saint-Saëns), Mr. Benno Schönberger (Pianoforte Concerto in D minor by Rubinstein), M.M. Jean and Pierre Gennin (Serenade for two Flutes by Titl), and Miss Edith Leah (Pianoforte Concerto by Grieg).

Vocalists who contributed to the programmes have been Mr. Tom Brown, Miss Phyllis Lascelles, Mr. J. H. Scotland, and Mr. Kenneth Ellis.

BUXTON

Visitors to Buxton have the opportunity of hearing an orchestra that for its size will worthily sustain comparison with any similar organization at other spas. Conducted by Mr. George Cathie, an able and enthusiastic musician, the band has recently been heard in some admirable performances of Symphonies, viz., Tchaikovsky's fifth and sixth, Brahms's first and second, and, consecutively, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of Beethoven. The programmes have also contained some representative concerted items, that have afforded a hearing for several well-known soloists, e.g., Miss Frances Coopman, who played in Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor; Miss Elsie Walker (Arensky's Pianoforte Concerto); and Mlle. Lena Kontorovitch (Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto). Other orchestral numbers have included the 'Légende' of Delius, the 'Celtic Suite' of Foulds, and the Overtures 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Euryanthe,' 'Leonora' No. 3, and 'Egmont,' besides a choice selection of light music.

CAMBRIDGE

Cambridge music has been very much alive this term, and the enthusiasm created by the 'Fairy Queen' and sustained by the increased C.U.M.S. and other activities has resulted in the tentative launching of a scheme for the amalgamation of the existing Musical Societies, and the formation of a large central organization with suitable premises.

On June 11, the C.U.M.S. gave a performance of Vaughan Williams's 'Sea Symphony,' with Miss Gladys Moger and Mr. Clive Carey as the principal singers. Beethoven's 'Leonore' Overture No. 3, and Dvorák's Violoncello Concerto, with Mr. Howard Bliss as solo violoncellist. Earlier in the term, under the auspices of the Society, Brahms's Clarinet Quintet and Schubert's Octet were given.

In recognition of the musical bent of the new Chancellor, Mr. Balfour, a special recital was given at King's College Chapel on Tuesday, June 15, the programme consisting very largely of works by Cambridge composers, who also conducted them. The items were: a Processional, by Dr. C. B. Rootham; the National Anthem, arranged by the Professor; 'Soul of the World,' by Purcell; a Motet, 'Expectans Expectavi,' by Dr. Wood; 'Dixit Dominus,' by Dr. Alan Gray; 'Let all the world in every corner sing' (from 'Five Mystical Songs'), by Dr. Vaughan Williams; Gloria in Excelsis (from Mass 'Via Victrix'), by Sir Charles Stanford; 'Blest Pair of Siens,' by Hubert Parry; and an Overture in D, by Dr. E. W. Naylor. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Plunket Greene took the solo parts. The Chancellor and the recipients of the honorary degrees—who included the Prime Minister, Mr. Chamberlain, and Lord Robert Cecil—attended the performance.

An Opera Society has been formed to meet fortnightly for the study and practice of opera, and to form a nucleus of performers for operatic performances at Cambridge. The strength of the Society is limited to thirty members. Mr. Dent gave the opening lecture, and other meetings have been devoted to the study of the 'Magic Flute.'

The membership of the Musical Club now approaches three hundred. Mr. Bernhard Ord, of Corpus, has succeeded Dr. Rootham as president. The open concert this year was given in the hall of Trinity College, the programme consisting of Bach's Concerto in D minor for pianoforte and strings, a series of English folk-songs sung by Mr. M. G. Davidson, a Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte by Henry Eccles, songs by Mr. MacLeod and Mr. Arundell, pianoforte solos ('Goyescas' by Granados, and Prelude in A minor, Debussy) by Mr. Anson, and Dvorák's Terzetto for two violins and viola.

The Lady Clare, Benet, and Scales Musical Clubs have held regular meetings during the term, and much private music such as madrigal singing has taken place in the colleges.

Organ recitals have been given at Trinity by Dr. Gray, and in May week at King's by Dr. Gray, Dr. Mann, Mr. Ord, and Mr. Shepherdson.

A performance of Milton's 'Comus' took place on June 7, 8, and 9 in the grounds of Merton Hall. The Masque was produced by Mr. Arundell, of St. John's, and the music was arranged from contemporary composers—chiefly Henry Lawes—for harpsichord, flute, and string orchestra by Mr. Bernhard Ord.

CORNWALL

Apart from the Competitions held at Truro on May 20 and 21, little music has been heard in Cornwall during the month. Preparatory to entering the lists Marazion Apollo Male Choir gave a concert on May 19. The singing was characterized by fervour and good technique, and the programme included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Drake's Drum' and Dunhill's 'Full fathom five.'

A cantata, 'Paradise,' by Fawcett, was sung by a choir at Chacewater on May 20, with Mrs. Jenkins at the organ.

Penzance Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Walter Barnes, continues to do good work in the district, and the programme played on June 3 was of the high standard that has always been its aim. The 'Unfinished' Symphony, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Othello' Suite, Foulds's 'Keltic' Suite, the 'Londonderry Air' (arranged by Percy Grainger), the 'Preludium' of Jarnefeldt, and Elgar's 'Imperial March' received excellent treatment. Mr. Barnes, Miss May Stewart, Mr. Barrie Bennetts, and Mr. C. G. Pike played Tchaikovsky's String Quartet (Op. 11.) in D major, and a Quartet by Speaight.

A concert was given by Mr. Joseph Slater (flute) and Miss Dora Petherick (violin) at the Small Public Hall, Croydon, on May 18. The programme included Coleridge-Taylor's Variations in B minor for violin and three pieces by the late F. Purcell Warren.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

Coventry was well represented in the recent Midland Competition Musical Festival at Birmingham, but the various Societies competing were successful in securing only one award. This was the Novello Challenge Shield, won by the Coventry Choral Society under the leadership of Mr. John Potter. The Armstrong-Siddeley Male-Voice Choir, under Mr. S. J. Wisdom, won its way into the Male-Voice Choir (Open Section) finals, but finished third. Among the children's choirs competing, that of St. Joseph's Convent High School came in for praiseworthy remarks from the adjudicators.

The Coventry Chamber Music Society is early in announcing its arrangements for next season. These show that four concerts are to be given. The Arthur Hytch String Quartet, a combination well-known in the city, will appear at three of these, and an instrumental trio at the remaining event. A new departure in the forthcoming season will take effect in the giving of concerts on different nights of the week, thus enabling those who are always engaged on one particular evening to hear at least some of the programmes submitted to patrons.

Coventry Philharmonic Society numbers among its arrangements of the near future an open-air fête in the old-fashioned grounds of Coventry Charter House, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' will be presented in character.

At Leamington, the chief musical event of the month has been the Leamington and County Competitive Musical Festival, which commenced on Thursday, June 3, and was continued on the two following days.

DEVON

A Choral Society has been formed at Plymouth under the somewhat cumbersome title of 'The Samuel Coleridge-Taylor Memorial Choral Society.' Mrs. Coleridge-Taylor is a patron, and it is stipulated that at least one work of Coleridge-Taylor's shall be performed each season. Mr. Douglas Durston has been appointed conductor, and hopes to associate a permanent orchestra to the choral force. Against this latter object the unions block the way, for there are not amateurs in the town to provide a complete orchestra, and recourse to professional players at once raises difficulties. A town of the size of Plymouth should have a permanent municipal orchestra. Choral music will play a large part in the 'Mayflower' celebrations at Plymouth in September. The aim is to form two choirs of five hundred voices each, and also a great choir for open-air singing. A children's choir of ten to twelve thousand voices will sing on the Hoe, and from these five hundred will be picked for the presentation of a cantata, 'The Ship of Adventure.' Dr. Coward will conduct the choral performances.

At the annual choir festival at St. Michael and All Angels', Exeter, on May 20, five anthems were sung, under the direction of Mr. H. Treneer. The most impressive were Brahms's 'How lovely are Thy dwellings' and 'Let the bright Seraphim' (Handel), the latter by boys' voices.

The remote village of Winkleigh supports its own Choral Society, and on May 27 managed also to secure quite a good orchestra of strings and pianoforte. Under the direction of Mr. J. T. Lane 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was performed, and the Wedding Chorus from 'The Rose Maiden.' Eaton Faning's 'Song of the Vikings' and the Spinning Chorus from 'The Flying Dutchman' were also heard. The soloists were Miss Muriel Cowle, Mr. Ward Kennedy, and Mr. Walter Belgrave.

Torquay Municipal Choir, on June 3, sang 'Merrie England' in concert edition, with orchestra. The choral singing was spirited and musical. Mr. Ernest Goss conducted this work, and also Elgar's 'It comes from the Misty Ages.'

A well-attended meeting at Plymouth on June 2, addressed by Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull, resulted in the formation of a branch of the British Music Society, with Mr. Walter Weekes as secretary. The organ recitals given twice weekly in Exeter Cathedral by Dr. Ernest Bullock attract increasing attention. Dr. Bullock's interpretative powers and technical mastery of his instrument have enabled him to give highly interesting readings of music, new and old, representing Bach (each week), Guilman, Herbert Howells, Debussy, Vienne, Wagner, Bairstow, Basil Harwood, Parry, &c.

A new organ was opened at Dartmouth on June 7 by Mr. E. W. Goss, of Torquay.

In Torquay Pavilion, at the end of May, a series of concerts was given by the band of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, conducted by Mr. Thomas Wilson. An overture, 'Romantique,' by Kala Bela, Elgar's 'Scènes Espagnole Sevillana,' a Suite by Schnelling, 'In Toledo,' and regimental marches appeared in the programme. These performances comprise the only music of outstanding interest that has been heard in the Pavilion since the beginning of March, with the exception of two concerts given on June 5 by Miss Adela Verné and M. Bratza, with Mr. S. Krish at the pianoforte. The pianist's items included Busoni's arrangement of a Bach organ prelude and fugue, three Cuban dances by Cervantes, a Chopin group, and pieces by Smetana, Severac, and Liszt. The violinist made a great impression by his playing of a Vieuxtemps Concerto (D minor), and music by Paganini, Sarasate, and Kreisler.

DUBLIN

The recent report of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust, in regard to musical compositions, gave high commendation to 'The Magic Harp,' the work of Miss Boyle, a young Irish lady of Bushy Park, Enniskerry, not far from Dublin. Her many friends were much gratified at the announcement that one of her works had been accepted for publication, and those who have heard her compositions predict great things for this talented Irish musician.

Dr. E. H. Chaundy, organist of Bangor Abbey Church (Co. Down), has been appointed organist of Armagh Cathedral in succession to Dr. Hewson, who has been promoted to St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin.

On May 29, at the National Library of Ireland, Kildare Street, an interesting paper by Dr. Grattan Flood was read before the Bibliographical Society of Ireland on 'Music Printing in Dublin from 1698 to 1750.' Dr. Grattan Flood's paper was much appreciated by the members, especially as extremely rare musical specimens from the Joly Collection in the National Library were kindly lent to illustrate the account of Dublin printed music during the first quarter of the 18th century, including Neale's 'Playhouse Tunes' (1727), 'Beggars' Opera' (1728), 'Polly' (1729), and 'Comus' (1740). Incidentally it was pointed out that the suggested date of '1680' in the printed catalogue of the British Museum for Barton's 'Psalms of David in Metre' was too early, the actual date being 1698.

Dublin University Choral Society gave a fine interpretation of Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' on June 1. The work was comparatively new to Dublin, and received an adequate performance—especially the parts for baritone and chorus—under the careful direction of Dr. Figgis, whose reading also captured the orchestral colouring in all its weird beauty.

His many friends at Dublin are very pleased at the appointment of Mr. T. H. Weaving, organist of the Castle Chapel (incorrectly known as the Chapel Royal), as organist of Christchurch Cathedral, in succession to Dr. C. H. Kitson, who, to the general regret, has returned to England.

The Kildare and Glendalough Choral Festival was held on June 11 in Kildare Cathedral. The combined choirs did remarkably well, and reflected credit on the Rev. T. W. E. Drury, who had conducted the rehearsals, and who also presided at the organ.

At a recent meeting of the Leinster Society of Organists and Choirmasters a much-needed step was taken when it was resolved to have the question of organists' salaries urged upon the Church authorities. Only lately an advertisement for the post of organist of an important parish church held out the bait of £50 a year. It is not desired to establish comparisons, yet it may be pointed out that road sweepers in Ireland under the Urban Councils receive fifty shillings a week.

The O'Mara Opera Company opened an after-season at the Gaiety Theatre on June 14 with 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and 'Pagliacci.' Some novelties are promised.

It is said that the old music warehouse of Cramer & Co., of Westmoreland Street, is to disappear. Founded by Goulding & Knyvett at the close of the 18th century, the business was developed by Isaac Willis (who published 'Cherry Ripe' in 1820), and by Robinson & Bussell.

EDINBURGH

The great recent event dominating the whole musical life of Edinburgh has been the first Edinburgh Musical Competition Festival, which ran from May 17 to 22, and congratulations and thanks are due to all who had to do with its organization and execution. The smoothness with which the whole affair proceeded is a great testimony to the efficiency of the arrangements when it is remembered that the individual competitors numbered at least three thousand five hundred. A report is given in the Competition Festival Record this month.

For a fortnight, beginning on May 3, the Southern Syncopated Singing Orchestra entertained crowded houses at Usher Hall. This orchestra is a truly wonderful organization of highly-trained musicians, who gave of their best in all the varied items of their programmes, which, ranging from Spirituals to Jazzes, were performed with absolute perfection and finesse, and with much of the quality that the Americans call 'pep.'

On May 17, an interesting dramatic and vocal recital was given by Messrs. J. Augustus Beddie and Philip Malcolm.

Starting on May 24, the O'Mara Opera Company gave a fortnight's performance. The usual favourites were presented and received well; two novelties also were heard, we believe for the first time at Edinburgh, viz., Verdi's 'Un Ballo in Maschera' and Catalani's 'La Wally.'

On June 2, a vocal recital was given by Miss Greta Don, assisted by Mr. J. Peebles Conn (violin), and Miss Ruby E. Dunn at the pianoforte. Miss Don's interesting programme ranged from Lulli and Bach to Parry and Ernest Bullock. A group of old English, Irish, and Scottish folk-songs formed a very enjoyable feature of the evening. Miss Don possibly erred in giving her recital so soon, but she afforded ample evidence of the makings of a good all round vocalist and artist.

LIVERPOOL

The Finance Committee of the City Council is again considering the question of renovations and repairs to St. George's Hall, at a cost, it is estimated, of twelve to thirteen thousand pounds. A large portion of this sum would be expended in the installation of a modern electric system of blowing in place of the present steam plant. When the organ was built, in 1855, a steam-engine was probably the only efficient means of generating the wind for an instrument of such magnitude, and Father Willis's device for securing automatic control of the engine itself has always been considered as a marvellous example of his mechanical genius, apart from his supreme skill as an organ-builder. The blowing engine also operates a system of ventilating fans within the building, and maintains a head of water for a public fountain outside the Hall. Dr. Wesley's insistence that the organ be tuned on the already obsolescent system of unequal temperament soon came to be regarded as an error on the part of that erratic genius. It was remedied at great expense in 1867, at the request of W. T. Best. Eighteen years later, in 1895, the Corporation consulted Dr. E. J. Hopkins, in collaboration with Father Willis, and a specification prepared by these great authorities was approved, and finally completed with the inclusion of certain suggestions later made by Dr. A. L. Peace. Nearly a quarter of a century has since elapsed, and the present proposed renovations and modern accessories will maintain the noble instrument in the front rank of concert-organs in this country, among which its superb tonal characteristics have never been surpassed.

The seventh Children's Musical Festival, promoted by the Liverpool and District Teachers' Association, was held very successfully at St. George's Hall on May 26. An interesting programme of seventeen choral items was sung with wonderful accuracy and commendable expression by the choir of eight hundred children, conducted by Mr. W. H. Fell, a feature of the selected music being its modern trend. A detailed account of the Festival appears in the July School Music Review.

The recital of pianoforte and violin music given in Crane Hall on June 9 by Mr. Anderson Tyrer and Mr. Alexander Cohen will long remain in memory as a skilful and artistic interpretation of delightfully interesting music that comprised César Franck's accepted modern classic, the Sonata in A; Medtner's three 'Nocturnes,' Op. 26; Catoire's Poem-Sonata, and Elgar's new Violin Sonata, which was welcome re-hearing as played by two artists so completely in sympathy with the interest and beauty of the music, and with each other. The Medtner and Catoire numbers were played for the first time at Liverpool, the 'Nocturnes' being arresting and indeed enchanting in their freshness of thought, rhythmic beauty, and harmonic colouring, and this without oppressive modernity of manner. A composer of the Russian school, Medtner was born at Moscow of German parents, in 1879. Becoming a pianoforte pupil of Safonof—as were also Scriabin and Rachmaninov—Medtner is, however, in his earlier period, considered to have been distinctly influenced by Brahms. Indeed he has been called the 'Russian Brahms.' But he is apparently more than this, and the charm of his three 'Nocturnes' excites a strong desire to know more of his instrumental music and songs. It is passing strange that a composer of so much individuality and fertility of idea should not have essayed to be heard in the greater medium of the orchestra.

Another performance of interest and artistic merit was that given in Crane Hall on June 2, by MM. Krish (pianoforte), Melzak (violin), and Mannucci (violoncello), who were heard in Dvorák's F minor Trio and Brahms's C minor Trio. The vocalist was Mr. F. L. Marshall, with Mr. B. Sandberg Lee as his able accompanist.

The local branch of the British Music Society—which finds such exceptional social advantages in the beautiful club-room set apart in Messrs. Rushworth's Islington premises—organized in June a week's exhibition of Purcell's publications that attracted many members. They had the opportunity of inspecting at leisure the twenty handsome volumes published by the Purcell Society, which find a place in the City Reference Library, and also the valuable collection of original first editions, by the loan of which the Centre was indebted to Mr. Barclay Squire, of the British Museum, and hon. secretary of the Purcell Society. The exhibits included the full score of 'Dioclesian,' the only opera of which Purcell personally undertook the publication; Nat Lee's 'Theodosius,' published in 1680, and containing Purcell's earliest music for the stage in the songs sung between the Acts; and a highly interesting volume containing the first edition (1692) of the words of 'The Fairy Queen.' The exhibition was in several ways a revelation to many, to whom the music of our greatest English composer has been almost if not quite unknown. It was further helped by the initial concert of Purcell's music given by Miss Gladys Scollick (pianoforte), with Mrs. West and Mr. Mather as vocalists. Each day during the week Miss Scollick cleverly played at request examples of Purcell's keyboard music, including an arrangement of the 'Golden Sonata' and the brilliant Toccata in A.

At the invitation of Dr. J. D. Hayward the members of the Liverpool branch of the British Music Society assembled on Saturday afternoon, June 19, on the lawn of Dr. Hayward's beautiful house, Leyfield Priory, West Derby, to hear an address by Mr. Rutland Boughton, of Glastonbury fame. The success of Mr. Boughton's work since 1914, as a leader in the renaissance of English music-drama, is common knowledge. Speaking with unaffected sincerity and lucidity he convinced his hearers that his ideals and their fulfilment not only affected English music and music-drama, but also had a deep and far-reaching influence upon our national life in a wider sense. At Glastonbury he had acted as a lightning-conductor to mystic forces previously undreamt of by a rustic countryside. Mr. Boughton thinks that similar good work can be done in every hamlet and town in this country. It is a consummation devoutly to be wished, but it would have to be directed with similar initiative, brains, and courage.

Mr. Boughton paid eloquent tribute to the memory of his coadjutor in the Arthurian cycle of music-drama, the late Mr. Reginald Buckley, and also to the invaluable assistance of Mrs. Boughton as an art-designer of representations generally carried out at incredibly small cost. He mentioned one where the total expense was under £40, which included the costumes as Druids of a male-voice choir of fifty performers. The vote of thanks moved by Dr. Eaglefield Hull was very heartily accorded.

The movement for the establishment of a municipal orchestra at Liverpool reached an important stage in the meeting called by the Lord Mayor and held at the Town Hall on June 18, to consider the best means of promoting the scheme. Dr. Pollett said the movement had in mind the provision of an orchestra of about forty players, who would be engaged by the year, and that on as many evenings each week as was found to be practicable concerts would be organized in various parts of the City and suburban districts, where suitable halls could be found. It was not intended to give entirely free orchestral concerts. Upon the proposal of the Lord Mayor the meeting went into committee to consider and frame a definite scheme having in view the principle of a guarantee fund to be jointly provided by the Corporation and by private subscription.

On the appointed evening, June 15, a small but highly interested gathering in the Applied Electricity Laboratory of Liverpool University 'listened-in' to the voice of Dame Nellie Melba carried to them from the Marconi Works, Chelmsford, by wireless telephone (seven-valve amplifier with loud-speaking telephone). Musically the demonstration was not as satisfactory as it was scientifically marvellous, for the golden notes of the great singer were often broken by metallic whirs and weird sounds caused, it was said, by thunder in the atmosphere.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

The only music-makings to be heard at Manchester just now, apart from the Park's Open-Air band and (occasional) choral performances, are at the Tuesday Mid-day concerts at Houldsworth Hall. On June 1 and 8, however, these had to be transferred to the Cathedral on account of the Hall being let for other purposes. No surer indication of the hold that these concerts have secured on the public can be adduced than such a change of venue, for on June 8 the Cathedral was really very full on the occasion of a recital of anthems by the Cathedral choir under Dr. A. W. Wilson. Munday's 'Henry VIII.' anthem, 'O Lord, maker of all thing,' Purcell's 'Remember, not, Lord, our offences,' and Hubert Parry's 'Lord, let me know mine end,' constituted the opening group of alla cappella works that were, perhaps, too predominantly sombre in hue for the general public. The Purcell number at once stirred the hearer as none of the other items could or did. The closing bars, 'Spare us, good Lord,' thrilled one's whole being, so unerring is the emotional touch. Here indeed is genius and judgment in perfect alliance. Parry's anthem is the most ambitious in scale of the set of 'Songs of Farewell,' and in many ways seems to the present writer less effective, suggesting as it does a tendency to intricacy almost for intricacy's sake, with recourse to reiterated verbal emphasis, e.g., 'nothing' or 'verily.' The phrase 'And now, Lord, what is my hope, &c.,' at once brings to mind the same phrase in Brahms's 'Requiem,' and the great resemblance in general character is very marked. But as in the Purcell music, Parry's closing 'Spare me a little . . . before I go hence and be no more seen,' sounds infinite depths of feeling—there is no mistaking it; its sheer inspiration carries conviction.

Ernest Walker's 'I will lift up mine eyes' (for male voices) is simple, beautiful in its reticence and quiet dignity. Ivor Atkins's setting of 'Abide with me' (for boys' voices) is, however, weak precisely because of its needless elaboration. The old hymn still preserves enough emotion to find a response in any normally constituted person should a composer touch just the right chords; but this is almost a cold, calculated sort of exercise. Wesley's 'Ascribe unto the Lord' brought to a close a most interesting experiment, worthy of early repetition.

The Handel Festival began with its old-time success on June 19, Rehearsal Day. The Festival takes place too late in the month for notice in this issue. A report will appear in our August number.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE AND DISTRICT

On May 1, Mr. W. Ellis delivered a short address in the Cathedral song school on 'Living English Composers,' which was followed by an organ recital of works by Elgar, Ireland, Frank Bridge, Harvey Grace, Bairstow, and Herbert Howells, given by the lecturer.

A somewhat unique event took place on May 8, when the Leeds Choral Union visited the city, and, with the assistance of the New Symphony Orchestra, gave an impressive performance of 'The Apostles' in the Cathedral, directed by Sir Edward Elgar. The soloists were Misses Agnes Nicholls, Phyllis Lett, Messrs. John Coates, Herbert Heyner, Robert Radford, and Charles Knowles, all of whom sang their parts in a thoroughly sympathetic manner. A word of praise is due also to Mr. John Groves, whose work at the organ was marked by keen appreciation of the general effect. On Sunday afternoon, May 9, the same choir performed selections from 'Messiah,' under the conductorship of Mr. W. Ellis, organist of the Cathedral.

During the week beginning May 10, the Newcastle Operatic Society gave performances of German's 'Tom Jones' and Sullivan's 'Haddon Hall.' Musically the work both of choir and principals was well done, the generally admirable balance and crispness of the choral singing being a noteworthy feature.

The Bach Choir closed its present season with a recital in the Cathedral on May 15 of three Bach Church Cantatas. The examples chosen were: No. 21, 'I had great heaviness of heart'; No. 41, 'Jesus, now will we praise Thee'; and No. 50, 'Now hath salvation and strength.' The last-named work was evidently never completed by the master, as it consists of only one chorus—a magnificent movement in eight parts which deserves to be as well known as the Motets. A curious feature of No. 21 is the final chorus, which anticipates, in a somewhat striking manner, Handel's 'Worthy is the Lamb.' The choral-singing was quite up to the high level that the Bach Choir has invariably sustained, and the solos were tastefully interpreted by Mrs. George Dodds, Miss A. Lawton, Messrs. R. Peel and E. J. Potts. There was a small orchestra of strings, led by Mr. A. Wall, Mr. W. Ellis was at the organ, and Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

A recital of compositions by local members of the Incorporated Society of Musicians took place on May 29, when Messrs. E. L. Bainton, A. Wall, W. G. Whittaker, and F. W. Smallwood presented examples of their work. An effectively-written Sonata for violin and pianoforte, by A. Wall, showed the influence of the César Franck school, while at the same time revealing a distinct individuality of its own. Two carols by W. G. Whittaker, although making full use of a modern mode of expression, yet contrived to create quite a mediæval atmosphere. The most striking item in the programme was, however, the Pianoforte Quintet of the last-named composer. It is a piece of impressionistic writing with the title 'Among the Northumbrian Hills,' and takes the form of variations on an original theme. The variations are a succession of mood-pictures with such titles as 'Early morning,' 'Gloom,' 'Swallows,' 'Mid-winter,' &c. It is the work of one who has absorbed the spirit of the modern French impressionists, but who at the same time does not forget his Northumbrian origin.

On May 5, the North Shields Philharmonic Society gave a performance of 'Elijah' under the conductorship of Mr. R. H. Stapylton.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT

After a season of unprecedented activity, musical matters locally have practically come to a standstill. The Nottingham Gleemen gave a capital programme for their final concert on May 17, with Mr. G. Hodgett, Mr. A. Myers, Miss Chrissie Russell, Mr. J. Winfield, and Mr. H. Farnsworth as soloists. The Gleemen contributed De Rille's 'War song' and H. Leslie's 'Evening' in delightful style. Mr. C. Riley conducted. On May 17 there was held the annual general meeting of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, when the committee's report was extremely gratifying, the concerts having been better attended than for many years past. Arrangements for next season include: November 18, 'The Flying Dutchman'; December 27, 'Messiah'; February 10, Elgar's 'Spirit of England' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (Parts 1 and 2); March 17, Elgar's 'The Apostles.'

The Mansfield Amateur Operatic Society gave a highly creditable series of performances of 'The Gondoliers' during the week beginning May 17. The orchestra, under the direction of Mrs. T. W. Renshaw, and augmented by musicians from Nottingham and Leicester, did extremely well, chorus and soloists being alike excellent.

Blind musicians gave a successful concert on May 26 at Loughborough Town Hall, in aid of St. Dunstan's Hostel. Songs and quartets were admirably interpreted by Misses Busscall and Lister and Messrs. Logan and Turner, Mr. Marsh's pianoforte solos were greatly appreciated, and Miss Kate Gurnell proved a sympathetic accompanist.

PORTSMOUTH

The project for establishing a Municipal Musical Society and Orchestra for Portsmouth is being prominently discussed. The need for municipal concerts has been amply demonstrated to the Council and public by the demand for good music evidenced in the over-subscription to the Philharmonic Society, the mushroom-like growth of the North End Choral Society, and the enormous success of the Welfare Association Musical Festival.

The necessary power will come from the Portsmouth Corporation Bill in October, and already the Town Hall Committee has co-opted the leading musicians resident here, including Messrs. C. H. Burry and L. H. Glanville (hon. conductor and hon. secretary of the Philharmonic Society), and Captain B. S. Green (late conductor of the R.M.A. band).

The idea of running municipal concerts is not new to Portsmouth, concerts of this character having been started thirty-seven years ago. They proved very popular, and for fourteen years were a paying undertaking. In the fifteenth year, however, the Southsea Entertainment Committee sealed their doom by launching a scheme for providing al fresco concerts, and by March, 1908, the concerts were closed down with a small adverse balance. The reports from Bath, Torquay, and Bournemouth concerning municipal orchestras are not of a uniformly encouraging nature, but even so they are not likely to provide a cold douche for the deliberations of the Town Hall Committee, which doubtless will have a scheme in concrete form for the coming winter.

There is a prospect of the Royal Naval School of Music becoming a self-contained unit, and bearing the same relation to the senior Service as Kneller Hall does to the Army. This is indicated by the promulgation of an order authorising higher ranks, which will consist of one superintendent, one musical director, two company officers, a quartermaster, a sergeant-major, and a superintending clerk. The addition of an assistant musical director is under consideration. With the exception of the rank of superintendent and one company officer, all the other ranks will be open to band ranks. The late Major Charles Franklin, R.M.L.I., has been succeeded in the musical directorship by a band rank, Bandmaster S. Fairfield. Up to the present the directing staff has been filled by marine officers.

The light opera season at the Theatre Royal was opened on May 24, and a specially selected company, under the direction of Mr. Frederick D. Lloyd, has included in its programme 'Dorothy,' 'La Cigale,' 'Les Cloches de Corneville,' 'Merrie England,' and 'Tom Jones.' The principals are Miss Gwladys Newth, Miss Vera Love, Mr. Ian MacRobert, and Mr. Alan Johnstone. Mr. Vincent Thomas is the conductor.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT

The University Musical Society closed its 1919-20 season with a successful chamber concert at which the Catterall Quartet played Mozart in G major, Frank Bridge's 'Three Idylls,' and Brahms in C minor, with a perfection of ensemble that made these performances the best that this combination has given at Sheffield.

Impressive interest centred in the performance of Part I of Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam' by the Amateur Musical Society on account of the recent death of Mr. J. A. Rodgers, the Society's esteemed conductor. This event, so arresting in its suddenness, also involved the committee in serious difficulties, but fortunately Sir Henry Wood was able to take up and complete the preparation of the work, and to conduct what proved to be a wonderfully creditable performance. Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Herbert Brown were the principals, and Mr. J. S. Bridge led the orchestra.

Sir Henry Wood has undertaken the conductorship of the Society for the ensuing season, and Mr. G. E. Linfoot has been appointed chorus-master.

Sheffield to-day hardly deserves the reproach it formerly merited on account of its neglect of opera. The recent visits of the Carl Rosa and D'Oyly Carte Companies were conspicuously successful, and if the possibility of a visit from Sir Thomas Beecham in the near future is realised, no doubt Sheffield audiences will rise to the occasion. An attempt is being made to revive the study of grand opera in the formation of a Sheffield and District Grand Opera Society, with Dr. J. F. Staton, of Chesterfield, as musical director. 'Faust' and 'Aida' are to be produced during the coming season. The Sheffield Teachers' Operatic Society is already well ahead with its preparation of 'Princess Ida' for production at the Lyceum Theatre, Sheffield, in December next. Mr. Linfoot is again musical director, and Mr. A. Revill Slater stage-manager. The Chesterfield Operatic Society is rehearsing German's 'A Princess of Kensington.'

The Sheffield centre of the British Music Society has made a promising beginning. At its first meeting at the University the President, Sir Henry Hadow, gave an address on 'British Song,' which was charmingly illustrated by Miss Eva Rich with a representative selection of songs ranging from Purcell to F. Bridge, and the newly-formed Sheffield Quartet (Messrs. J. Collins, J. Bingham, Allan Smith, and Collin Smith), by their playing of two movements of the Elgar Quartet, and other British works, not only aroused the hope but seemed to justify the expectation that they will speedily achieve a more than merely local reputation.

SOUTH WALES

The Cardiff Harmonic Society and Male-Voice Choir—important constituents in the musical life of the town in pre-war days—gave their first concert since the war on May 18, at Cory Hall. The works presented were 'The Creation' and 'The Desert' (David), the veteran conductor, Mr. Roderick Williams, giving musicianly interpretations of both numbers. The soloists were Madame Gunter-Williams and Messrs. Gwilym Price and David Hughes. The audience, though not very large, was keenly appreciative.

At Merthyr, on May 23, a miscellaneous concert, organized by Mr. Valentine Stevens, was held at the Theatre Royal in aid of the Merthyr General Hospital. The artists were Madame Gwladys Arthur, Miss Elvira Evans, Messrs. Todd Jones and Glanville Davies. Mr. Harry Clare had been instrumental in getting together an efficient orchestra, and the concert was a decided success both from a financial and musical point of view, the hospital benefiting by over £100.

The Barry Harmonic Society, numbering, with the orchestra, nearly two hundred performers, under the conductorship of Mr. D. J. Thomas, gave its fourth annual concert at Barry near the end of May. The works chosen were 'Ode to the North-East Wind' (Cliffe) and 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' (Parry), the soloists being Miss Ida Cooper and Mr. Herbert Brown.

At Conway Road Wesleyan Church, Cardiff, the new organ was opened on June 9 with afternoon and evening recitals by Dr. W. G. Alcock, organist of Salisbury Cathedral. The programmes included Franck's Choral in A minor; Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Prelude and Fugue in D major, and the Prelude on 'Adorn thyself, my soul'; Widor's Allegro cantabile and Toccata from the Symphony No. 5; works by Guilmant, Mozart, Dvorák, Liszt, Wolstenholme, and Reubke; and the player's own 'Wedding March.'

A graceful tribute was paid to Mrs. Evans, the wife of Mr. D. Evans, Professor of Music at University College, Cardiff, for her indefatigable services in connection with the Choral Society of the College, when she was presented with a silver salver by the choir at their 'Social' on the evening of May 20. Principal Trow occupied the chair.

It is gratifying to note that the Tredegar Choral Society is self-supporting, and that its balance-sheet shows a sum of £47 to the good.

The Cardiff Musical Society and its supporters also are to be congratulated upon being able to show a balance in hand of some £56. The executive committee has in consequence arranged to hold four concerts next season instead of the usual three, viz.: on November 5, Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' and Stanford's 'Sea Songs' will be performed; 'News from Whydah' (Gardiner), 'Kubla Khan' (Coleridge-Taylor), and 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' (Parry) on January 21; 'Messiah' on Good Friday; and there will be a miscellaneous concert on April 20.

Musical Notes from Abroad

BRUSSELS

The New York Symphony Orchestra under Mr. Damrosch gave a very interesting concert at the Monnaie on Sunday, June 6. The programme included the Adagio for strings by Lekeu, Franck's Symphony in D minor, the 'Leonora' Overture (No. 3), and Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, all of which received interpretations that were a revelation in precision and accuracy, but deficient in emotional appeal. This was the more noticeable as on the previous Sunday the Conservatoire Orchestra from Paris had contributed a programme (including Beethoven's fifth) in the traditional 'Latin' manner. The success of the American orchestra was, however, very marked, particularly in its interpretation of Lekeu's little heard Adagio.

The regular orchestra of the Monnaie refused to play in a Wagner programme that had been announced for June 14. But means were found to subvert the protesters, whose places were filled by other performers, and the concert took place without disturbance. The Monnaie will be closed as usual during the month of July.

J. H. WOOD.

Miscellaneous

The Annual Meeting of the Professional Classes War Relief Council was held on June 9. Although some departments of this excellent work have been closed down, the Council is keeping on certain of its activities until next year, at its new offices at 251, Brompton Road, S.W. 3. The Report for 1919 shows that over £6,000 was spent on Education, the average number of families per term receiving assistance being a hundred and fifty. The training of young people for the professions was continued. New applications to the number of five hundred and sixty-six were dealt with in the General Assistance Department. The total sum disbursed in all departments was nearly £15,000.

Concerts were given at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, on May 26 and at Shanklin on June 2 by Miss Eveline Petherick's Island Orchestra, a capable body of fifty players. The programmes included Rossini's 'William Tell' Overture, Hamerik's 'Symphonie Spirituelle,' and the march from Wormser's 'L'Enfant Prodigue.' At the Palace, Freshwater, on May 26, the West Wight Choral Union gave Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George,' under the direction of Mr. R. H. Newlands.

Mr. Reginald Somerville, composer of 'The Miracle,' has completed an opera on the subject of David Garrick, which is to be produced by the Carl Rosa Opera Company in the autumn.

The London Sunday School Union will hold a Festival at the Crystal Palace on October 16. Concerts will be given on the Handel Orchestra in the afternoon and evening, and choral competitions will be held.

The summer course of the Dalcroze School of Eurhythmics will be held at Oxford, beginning on August 16.

Dr. C. H. Kitson is leaving Dublin, and hopes to settle in London at the end of the summer.

Answers to Correspondents

PACHMANNITE.—We cannot agree with you that 'one hears very little about Pachmann.' If you mean the remark, however, in the sense that there is no published book on the pianist, you may be right, for we know of no such work. Can any of our readers tell us of one?

PLEX.—The composer you name is one of several whose claims to special consideration might reasonably be urged. See Mr. Edwin Evans's article in the present issue for a discussion of this point.

CONTENTS

	Page
Modern British Composers. Epilogue: A Personal Explanation. By Edwin Evans ...	441
The Symphonic Works of W. H. Bell (concluded). By M. van Someren-Godfery ...	443
The New York Symphony Orchestra in London ...	445
The Mahler Festival at Amsterdam. By Samuel Langford ...	448
The Organ Works of Bach.—II. The Weimar Period (continued). By Harvey Grace ...	450
The Derogation of the Laurel ...	453
Interludes. By 'Feste' ...	453
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. X.—Robert Cowper, Mus. D. By W. H. Grattan Flood ...	456
The Ideas of M. Vincent D'Indy (continued). By C. Saint-Saëns ...	456
The Secular Music of Ancient Egypt. By Jeffrey Pulver (concluded) ...	459
'The Cries of London' ...	460
Occasional Notes ...	461
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch ...	462
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett ...	463
The Glastonbury Players in London ...	466
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught ...	466
Chamber Music for Amateurs ...	473
British History and British Music. By Herbert Antcliffe ...	474
The League of Arts ...	477
The Welsh Musical Festival. By Gerald Cumberland ...	477
The End of the International Musical Society. By J. Percy Baker ...	478
Church and Organ Music ...	479
New Church Music ...	479
Letters to the Editor ...	481
Sixty Years Ago ...	483
Royal Academy of Music ...	484
Musical Settings of Horace's Lyric Poems ...	484
An Old English Opera. By Muriel Silburn ...	485
A Resident Opera Company—An Interesting Birmingham Experiment ...	486
Gramophone 'Why not?' By Ulric Daubeney ...	486
The Neue Bachgesellschaft Festival at Leipsic. By Henry Davey ...	487
Music in the Provinces ...	488
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	493
Miscellaneous ...	493
Answers to Correspondents ...	494

MUSIC:

'Here a pretty baby lies.' Four-part Song. By J. ALBERT SOWERBUTTS ... 467

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. 'Ye shall go out with joy.' Full Anthem for Harvest. By Oliver King.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ALCOCK, W. G.—"And I heard a great voice." Anthem. String Parts (5), 1s. each.

BOËLY, A. P. F.—Toccata for Organ. Edited by John E. West. (No. 70, Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series).) 1s. 6d.

BULLOCK, ERNEST.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in B flat, for T.B. (No. 100, Novello's Services, Anthems, &c., for Men's Voices.) 3d.

—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D. (No. 971, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 4d.

CHAPPELL-HAVERSON, A. C.—Vesper Hymn, ("Lord, as from this Thy House of prayer.") 2d.

DICKINSON, M. A.—"Let us now go to Bethlehem." Ancient Christmas Carol with Pastoral Interlude and Gloria. 3d.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—Piacetole from String Quartet (Op. 83). Arranged for Organ by John E. West. (No. 59, Organ Arrangements, Edited by John E. West.) 2s.

FLETCHER, P. E.—"Hark! Hark, my soul!" Hymn—Anthem. (No. 1077, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.

FOWERS, F. O.—March in E flat. For Organ. 2s. 3d.

GRIFFIN, W.—"Save me, O God." Anthem. 6d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, W.—"The Holy City." Hymn and Tune. 1d., or 2s. 6d. per 50.

ROBERTS, F.—"Autumn Leaves." Song. 2s.

—"Disillusioned." Song. 2s.

—"Roses." Song. 2s.

ROBERTS, W. H.—"Anrhydded Seion." Hymn and Tune. Staff Notation and Tonic Sol-fa together. Welsh words. 2d.

—"Benedicamus." Hymn Tune. Staff Notation and Tonic Sol-fa together. Welsh words. 2d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 337) contains the following music in both notations:—"June." Unaccompanied Trio for s.s.a. GEORGE RICHMOND. "To a Daisy." Unison Song. W. G. DIETRICH. 1½d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1298. "Mimosa San." Japanese Action-Song. H. ERNEST HUNT ... 4d. —

SEARLE, G. F.—Chant (with Magnificat) and Vesper Hymn ("Jesu, we thank Thee"). 2d.

SOWERBUTTS, J. A.—"Here a pretty baby lies." Four-Part Song. (No. 929, The Musical Times.) 1½d.

SWABY, R.—"Regina Coeli." Latin words. 3d.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

BLAIR, HUGH.—"Harvest-Tide." Cantata for Harvest. 9d.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—"With proud Thanksgiving." Chorus, arranged from "For the Fallen." 4d.

WALKER, G. F.—"The Silence Beautiful." (November 11.) Song. 2s.

WATLING, H. F.—Evening Hymn ("Father, Son, and Holy Spirit"). 1d.

WHITEHEAD, C.—Largo for Violoncello and Pianoforte. 1s. 6d.

WILLIAMS, J. G.—"Love Outwitted." Phantasy Duet for Voice and Pianoforte. 2s.

—"Hunting Song." Four-part Song. (No. 1374, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

DE LAMARTER, E.—Prelude on a Theme in Gregorian Style. For Organ.

SOWERBY, L.—“Rejoice, ye pure in heart.” Choral Prelude for Organ.

JUST PUBLISHED.

POT-POURRI

A CYCLE OF FRAGMENTS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

ON VERSES BY

ISOBEL SCOTT BREMNER

COMPOSED BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE SCHOOL HOUSE, BERKHAMSTED.—ASSISTANT MUSIC-MASTER or MISTRESS WANTED. To start September Term. Violin essential. Apply, Headmaster, Berkhamsted.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL CHOIR. Vacancy for a Deputy TENOR (or possibly two), to commence duty at Michaelmas. On a vacancy occurring in a stall of a Tenor Vicar-Choral, consideration will be given to any Deputy who is at the time serving in the Choir. Apply, Rev. M. Hardey, Sub-chanter, The Close, Lichfield.

NEW COLLEGE CHAPEL (Congregational), Swiss Cottage, N.W. 6. TENOR LEADER WANTED in the Choir. Good musical service. Weekly practice. £20. Apply, “W. H.,” 6A, Upper Park Road, N.W. 3.

CHARLES KNOWLES (BARITONE).

Now booking for Choral, Orchestral, and Ballad Concert Season, 1920-21.

For terms, address, Messrs. Ibbs & Tillett, 19, Hanover Square, W. 1., or usual agents.

Charles Knowles, Goff's Oak, Cheshunt

Telephone: Waltham Cross, 247.

TENOR and BASS WANTED for a City Church. Salaries, £15. By letter to Thos. Pimm, 2, Sugar Loaf Court, Upper Thames Street, E.C. 4.

VIRGIL KLAVIER PIANO, practically new, for SALE. 7½-Octaves. £12. “G. F. G.,” 117, Belsize Road, Hampstead, London, N.W. 6.

FINE Two-Manual CHURCH (Pipe) ORGAN, by Cavallé-Coll (Paris), for SALE. Only 7 years old. Had very little use. Price, £550. Present cost, £1,200. Suitable for Church or Cinema. Apply, “G. F. G.,” 117, Belsize Road, Hampstead, London, N.W. 6.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1, not later than TUESDAY, JULY 20 (FIRST POST).

JUST PUBLISHED.

CYRIL SCOTT.

YOUNG HEARTS

(PIECES FOR CHILDREN).

Series I., 2s. 6d. net.

1. SEE-SAW.
2. LAMENT FOR A BROKEN DOLL.
3. MUSICAL BOX.
4. EVENING PRAYER.
5. QUICK MARCH.

Series II., 2s. 6d. net.

1. MARCH OF A TIN SOLDIER.
2. SUNDAY MORN.
3. CONCERTINA.
4. LONELINESS.
5. THE BOY WITH THE PIPES.

These pieces are quite short and quite easy—easier even than the same composer's well-known “SUMMERLAND” Suite. Their aim is to familiarize young players with the modern idiom, so that they will be able to pass on to more complex works in due course.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

By the author of “Orchestration,” “A History of Music”

(with Charles Villiers Stanford), &c.

Choral Orchestration

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

WITH MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth, Price, 7s. 6d. net.

A practical text-book on the grounding in scoring compositions, especially anthems; a complete composition analysed bar by bar; musical difficulties considered; orchestral possibilities of each passage balanced against the other; orchestral execution explained.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY COMPANY.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—Chamber ORGAN, 2-manual, pedal, 12 stops (Flight & Robson, enlarged J. W. Walker & Sons). Suitable for Church seating 200 to 300. Price, £350, or with hydraulic engine and blowing gear complete, £400. Now on loan in London Church. Apply, Mrs. Marriott, South Malling Vicarage, Lewes.

TWO-MANUAL CHURCH ORGAN for SALE. May be seen by appointment. Price £600. A. P. Cole, 20, Swinderby Road, Wembley, Middlesex.

ORGAN (unfinished).—Two manuals, pedals, six stops, three couplers. Requires metal pipes and casework. Suit amateur. "Organist," 2, Albert Road, S.E. 4.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN, two-manuals and pedals, 17 speaking stops, 3 composition pedals, fine tone; suitable for Church, Chapel, or Cinema. Specification, &c., from Director of Music, the College, Malvern.

TWO-MANUAL CHAMBER ORGAN.—Remarkably fine instrument, by A. Noterman, Sen., built regardless of cost, and now in perfect condition as new. CC to A (58 notes), Pedals CCC to F (38 notes), 15 speaking stops on Great and Swell. Sub-bass and Lieblich Bourdon (both 16 feet) on pedals. Usual couplers, &c. Tubular pneumatic throughout. Hydraulic engine by Watkins & Co. Detached console in dark oak. The instrument is also fitted with an automatic playing device, the performer making his own combinations, and the whole organ can be used in this way or played in the usual manner. Will be sold at a great sacrifice. Full particulars from F. Heath, Esq., Brinksway, Shottermill, Haslemere, Surrey.

WANTED, in Ireland, a second-hand PIPE ORGAN for Church. Price must be very moderate. From West or South of England only. Full particulars, Rathdonnell, Shermanbury, Henfield, Sussex.

PEDAL ORGAN, with independent strings, good for practising organ at home. Oak bench. All in perfect condition. £25, or near offer. Apply, Etherington, George Street, Richmond, Surrey.

FOR SALE.—Alexandre two-manual ORGAN, new, very comprehensive, Mustel quality. Also three-manual and pedal American ORGAN, 20 complete sets of reeds, 26 stops, complete with electric motor. Demonstration at Woodlands, Wake Green Road, Moseley, Birmingham.

FOR SALE.—Mustel ORGAN, new, specially voiced concert model. Exceptional opportunity to secure one of these rare instruments. Demonstration, Woodlands, Wake Green Road, Moseley, Birmingham.

R.C.O. PIANO PEDAL BOARD, Norman & "Nutley," Hampden Park, Eastbourne.

PLEYEL DIGITORIUM, 2½ octaves. Superbly made, mahogany, in well-made lined case for travelling. 10 guineas. 175, Clarence Gate Gardens, London, N.W. 1.

STERLING SILVER CONCERT FLUTE, Ratcliff Model, by Rudall Carte & Co., all holes covered, shake keys, perfect condition. Recently re-padded. Approval on deposit. Price £22. Write, "B.T.," c/o 54, New Oxford Street, W.C. 1.

TO AMATEURS AND COLLECTORS.

FOR SALE.—VIOLIN, by Gagliano, 1730. Very valuable instrument. Offers to M. Henri Wiltberger, Notaire, Lauterbourg, Alsace.

VIRGIL CLAVIER, in perfect order. £8, or offers. Apply, Mr. Tate, "Lynmouth," Collington Avenue, Bexhill.

FOR SALE.—A double-action HARP, by Sebastian Erard, in good condition. Apply, Fry, Rosslyn House, Oatlands Park, Weybridge.

VIOLONCELLO for SALE, by François Barzoni, 1891, with bow and wooden case. £40. Apply, Blake, 8, Priory Avenue, Higher Broughton, Manchester.

PART-SONGS (equal voices) FOR SALE. Good condition. Enclose stamp for catalogue. Apply, Mr. Wilfrid Shaw, 4, Hawarden Avenue, Wallasey, Cheshire.

BASSES and BARITONES should buy "SONGS OF THE NIGHT" (Oakley). Two sets: Numbers 1-4 and 5-7. Price 2s. each set. Weekes and Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

DANCING.—GENTLEMAN, with highest qualifications and many years' successful teaching experience, in all branches, is now concluding arrangements for conducting, Day or Evening, LONDON and SUBURBAN CLASSES, commencing Autumn, and wishes to hear from Principals of MUSICAL COLLEGES, &c., including, or contemplating the inclusion of this subject in their Syllabuses. "Alpha," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPosed AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS, Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton. DEAR SIRs,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR

FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS
(Op. 84).

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

QUARTET

FOR STRINGS

(Op. 83)

SCORE	...	...	...	PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.
PARTS	...	...	...	" EIGHT SHILLINGS

SONATA

FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE
(Op. 82).

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CONCERTO

IN E MINOR

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 85).

ARRANGEMENT FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire only.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

By A. M. GOODHART.

Price Threepence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

By HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

FEAR NOT, O LAND

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LORD OF THE HARVEST

COMPOSED BY

R. REDHEAD,

EDITED BY ALFRED REDHEAD.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

COMPOSED BY

H. A. CHAMBERS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

COMPOSED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

COMPOSED BY

E. W. NAYLOR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

AND GOD SAID

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Threepence.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY

COMPOSED BY

OLIVER KING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

COMPOSED BY

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

Price Threepence.

THE ETERNAL GOD IS THY REFUGE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

(From the 100th Psalm.)

COMPOSED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THOU, O GOD, ART PRAISED IN SION

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

COMPOSED BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE VINEYARD OF THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN GOD

(FROM "SEEDTIME AND HARVEST")

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

COMPOSED BY

BRUCE STEANE.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

COMPOSED BY

MYLES B. FOSTER.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

W. WOLSTENHOLME.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE JOY OF THE LORD IS YOUR STRENGTH

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

COMPOSED BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O HOW GREAT IS THY GOODNESS

(FROM "THE RAINBOW OF PEACE")

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.; Words only, 10s. per 100; String Parts, price 9s.; Wind Parts, 14s. 6d.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

HENRY KNIGHT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, 5s. per 100. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

GEORGE GARRETT.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 5s. per 100.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings.

Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

THE GLEANER'S HARVEST

FOR FEMALE VOICES

BY

C. H. LLOYD.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. M. VON WEBER.

Price One Shilling.

Full Score, 21s.; String Parts, 8s.; Wind Parts, 7s. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 5s. per 100.

String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS, Etc.

TWELVE HYMNS FOR HARVEST

Selected from THE HYMNARY.

Price One Penny.

LET ALL OUR BRETHREN JOIN IN ONE

HARVEST HYMN BY J. BARNBY.

Price One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

SOWING AND REAPING

HARVEST CAROL BY J. MAUDE CRAMENT.

Price Three-Halfpence. Words only, 1s. per 100.

THE JOY OF HARVEST

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE

By J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE SOWER WENT FORTH SOWING

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. BARNBY.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny

MAKE MELODY WITHIN YOUR HEARTS

HARVEST CAROL BY F. A. J. HERVEY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

O LORD OF HEAVEN, AND EARTH AND SEA

By J. BARNBY.

On Card, Price One Penny.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

By WALTER B. GILBERT AND J. BARNBY.

Price One Penny each.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EDITED BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

THE CRYES OF LONDON

HUMOROUS FANCY

THREE SETTINGS FOR S.A.T.B. BY

(1) RICHARD DEERING, (2) ORLANDO GIBBONS,
AND
(3) THOMAS WEELES.

NOS. 1 AND 2, PRICE 6d. EACH; NO. 3, PRICE 4d.

String Parts may be had on hire.

The Daily Telegraph says:

"... What Sir Frederick Bridge doesn't know about the great madrigal period in English music is surely not worth knowing. . . . Once more he puts us all in his debt by the publication of 'The Cryes of London.' . . . Perhaps the most attractive of the three is Richard Deering's: 'Have ye any wood to cleave?' Sung by a bass voice to a beautiful tune, it is one of the many delightful details that make up this patch-work composition. The variety of songs and cryes is bewildering."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Frederick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FREEDOM

A CANTATA FOR BARITONE AND MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLOS, MIXED VOICE CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA.

POEM BY GERALD CUMBERLAND.

MUSIC BY CYRIL JENKINS.

The Work was composed for the Welsh Musical Festival and is dedicated to Mr. ERNEST NEWMAN. The author (who has incorporated into his work a few lines and phrases from the Apocrypha) has personified the spirits of Love and Evil, imagining the latter as conjuring up war for his entertainment, and the former as watching over mortals, comforting and strengthening them for the final triumph of love and freedom. A mystic choir of Angels and a chorus of Mortals complete the poetic scheme.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

"The music has evidently been designed with regard to the abilities of local choral Societies."—Referee.

"At its best the writing is among the finest that we have ever had from British choral composers during recent years."—Sunday Times.

CURWEN EDITION, 3620. Price, 5s. Sol-fa, 3s.

LONDON : J. CURWEN & SONS, LIMITED,
24, BERNERS STREET, W. 1.

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN.

NOW READY.

Music Folio: Cloth Boards, gilt lettered, price 15s. net ; by post 16s.

THE TRANSPOSED TUNE BOOK.

EVERY TUNE in the OLD EDITION and in the FIRST AND SECOND SUPPLEMENTS is GIVEN IN A LOWER KEY. And all the Tunes for each Hymn are placed together.

* * * This Book has been specially designed by the Proprietors for the convenience of Organists and other Accompanists in Unison singing ; but even where singing in Harmony is preferred, it will often be found most useful—especially in smaller churches.

Latest PRICE LISTS of all the favourite sizes of Hymns Ancient and Modern, with or without the Second Supplement, Forms of Application for Grants, and any special information required, will be sent post free on application to—

WILLIAM CLOWES & SONS, Ltd., 31, Haymarket, London, S.W. 1.

The Craftsman says :

"OUR 'CATHEDRAL' AND 'SUMMIT' VIOLIN E's ARE CHEAPER AND BETTER THAN GUT STRINGS."

For proof of this statement you have only to read the letters given below. These well-known Italian Professors are qualified to judge, and their verdict is that our Violin E Strings, both "Cathedral" and "Summit," are better than gut. Why not put them to the test yourself? Write for a free sample, which we shall be glad to send to any musician. The tone of the "Cathedral" and "Summit" E's is superb—a genuine revelation to all instrumentalists who try them for the first time.

PROF. UMBERTO SUPINO, Teacher of Violin in the Royal Conservatorio di Music, Parma, writes:—

"I have tested the 'Summit' Violin Steel E and find it is the equal in every way to gut strings. It is far more durable, easy when playing, very lasting in tuning, and pure in the fifth. The 'Summit' Violin 'E' may be recommended as the ideal string for school and orchestra."

PROF. R. PRINCIPE, Teacher of Violin in the "Rossini" Lyceum, Pesaro, writes:—

"I am glad to be able to testify that the 'Cathedral' Violin Steel 'E's' of the British Music Strings, London, have given me great pleasure on account of their excellent quality of tone, which is equal to that of gut strings. These to-day are not only very expensive, but are also of middling quality."

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD., MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N.4.

Telegrams: "CELLO, FINSPARK, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2594.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR MILITARY BAND Arranged by DAN GODFREY, GEORGE MILLER, Mus. Bac., and Others.

	s. d.		s. d.
BENDALL, WILFRED.—Pas Seul	5 0	HAYNES, BATTISON.—Westwood Gavotte	5 0
BREWER, A. HERBERT.—Auf Wiedersehen	5 0	HERVEY, ARTHUR.—"On the March"	9 0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.—Four Characteristic Waltzes	15 0	HIGGS, H. M.—"Our Queen" (Quick March)	5 0
— "Onaway, awake Beloved" (Euphonium Solo)	5 0	HOFMANN, H.—"Kirmess" (Rustic Pictures). Book I.	15 0
COWEN, F. H.—Four English Dances (in the Olden Style)	15 0	— "Kirmess" (Rustic Pictures). Book II.	15 0
— Coronation March	10 6	LEMARE, EDWIN H.—Andantino in D flat	3 6
— Minuet d'Amour (from "Suite of Old English Dances," Second Set)	5 0	LLOYD, H. C.—An Eton Memorial March	7 6
CRESER, WILLIAM.—Wedding March	3 6	MACKENZIE, A. C.—"Benedictus" ("Six Pieces for Violin")	5 0
ELGAR, EDWARD.—Chanson de Matin	3 6	— Ballet Music ("Colomba")	15 0
— Chanson de Nuit	3 6	— Courante ("Ravenswood")	12 0
— Imperial March	9 0	— Funeral March ("The Story of Sayid")	3 0
— Mazurka	5 0	— La Savannah	7 6
— Sérénade Mauresque	5 0	— "The Empire Flag"	5 0
— Contrasts (The Gavotte, A.D. 1700 and 1900)	5 0	MACPHERSON, STEWART.—Orchestral Ballad	15 0
— Meditation ("Light of Life")	5 0	MILLER, GEORGE.—Solemn March	3 6
— Follow the Colours ("Marching Song")	3 6	MOLIQUE.—March ("Abraham")	7 6
— Pleading	3 6	MORLEY, CH.—Emperor Gavotte ("Cornflower")	2 6
— Wand of Youth (Second Suite)	15 0	OUSELEY.—March ("St. Polycarp")	7 6
ELVEY, G. J.—Festal March	5 0	POPULAR PART-SONGS	7 6
FANING, EATON.—"The Queen's Song"	7 6	RAMEAU.—Gavotte	4 6
— Song of the Vikings	5 0	ROECKEL, J. L.—Graceful Dance	7 6
FLETCHER, PERCY E.—The Toy Soldiers' March	7 6	SIX HYMN TUNES (composed for Commemorations of Queen Victoria's Long Reign)	4 6
— Valse Lyrique ("The Smile of Spring")	5 0	SMART, HENRY.—Festive March in D	7 6
FORD, ERNEST.—Grand Valse ("Faust" Ballet)	10 6	SPINDLER, FRITZ.—"Husarenritt"	7 6
— Scène Bacchanale ("Faust" Ballet)	15 0	SPOHR.—"Calvary" (Selection)	7 6
GERMAN, EDWARD.—Bourrée and Gigue ("Much Ado about Nothing")	12 0	SULLIVAN, A.—"In Memoriam" Overture	10 0
— Coronation March ("Henry VIII.")	7 6	— Onward, Christian Soldiers	2 6
— Gipsy Suite (Four Characteristic Dances)	15 0	— Ditto. For Brass Band	2 6
— Harvest Dance (from "The Seasons")	10 0	THREE SACRED PIECES, viz.—	7 6
— Masque (Three Dances from "As you like it" Music)	15 0	— "Blessed be the God and Father"	S. S. WESLEY
— Overture to "Richard III."	12 0	— "O Gladsome Light" ("Golden Legend")	A. S. SULLIVAN
— Three Dances ("Henry VIII.")	15 0	— March ("Occasional Oratorio")	HANDEL
— Welsh Rhapsody	15 0	TSCHAIKOWSKY.—March Militaire	15 0
GLINKA.—Polonaise ("Life of the Czar")	12 0	WAREING, H. W.—Summergold Gavotte	7 6
GOUNOD.—Judez ("Mors et Vita")	3 0	WENDT, TH.—Air de Ballet with Intermezzo	7 6
— Ditto. (For Brass Band)	2 0	WEST, JOHN E.—Maypole Dance	7 6
— "Mors et Vita" (Selection)	15 0	— Commemoration March	9 0
— Marche Solennelle	7 6	ZIMMERMANN, AGNES.—March	7 6
— Six Sacred Pieces	10 6	SIX CLASSICAL PIECES FOR SMALL MILITARY BAND	3 0
— "The Redemption" (Selection)	15 0	THE MILITARY CHURCH PARADE SERVICE BOOK	1 0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO
FROM THE SONG.COMPOSED BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REFLECTIONS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD GERMAN.

. Full Score, 2Is. ; String Parts, 9s. ; Wind Parts, 23s.

JUST PUBLISHED.
Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo ... 3s. 6d.
,, ,, Pianoforte Duet ... 5s. 0d.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Diversions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Diversion, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Diversion is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed. The Fifth Diversion is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Dispatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOUR ENGLISH DANCES

SET I.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

	s.	d.
Full Score	10	6
String Parts	6	0
Wind Parts	12	0
Ditto (small orchestra)	9	0
Military Band	15	0
Pianoforte Solo	2	6
Violin and Pianoforte	3	0
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings)	2	6

Extra Strings, 6d. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee, and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured base for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.		s.	d.
1.	SONATA in G major JAMES LATES	2	0
2.	SONATA in D minor HENRY ECCLES	2	0
3.	SONATA in B flat major WILLIAM BABELL	2	0
4.	SONATA in G minor JOHN STANLEY	2	0
5.	SONATA in A major JOHN COLLETT	2	0
6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	3	0
7.	SONATA in D major RICHARD JONES	2	0
8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
9.	THREE PIECES WILLIAM BOYCE	2	0
10.	SONATA in E major CHARLES MACKLEAN	2	0
11.	SONATA in G minor WILLIAM CROFT	2	0
12.	SONATA in D minor JOSEPH GIBBS	2	0
13.	SONATA in D minor JOHN HUMPHRIES	2	0
14.	SONATA in A minor THOMAS VINCENT	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S SONGS.

A. HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.

Price 2s.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR—

Sweet evenings come and go, love.

In F (Compass, D to E flat) and B flat.

Price 2s.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).

Price 2s.

LAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).

Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.

Price 1s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER—

Hark! Hark! my Soul.

In C (Compass, A to C) and E flat.

Price 2s.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.

Price 2s. each.

W. G. ROSS—

A Daffodil Wedding.

In C (Compass, C to F) and D.

Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

The Summertime of Love.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

Price 2s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A NEW SONG BY JOHN IRELAND

"REST"

POEM BY ARTHUR SYMONS.

Medium Voice

Price 2s. net cash.

Other Settings by JOHN IRELAND of Poems by ARTHUR SYMONS.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED,

"THE ADORATION" "THE RAT"

Medium Voice.

Price each, 2s. net cash.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

If you have room for an upright piano you have
room for : : :

The Weber Small Grand Piano

Length:
4 ft. 10 ins.,
Width:
4 ft. 10 ins.

This instrument is the latest product of the famous Weber factory at Hayes, Middlesex. It is a triumph alike for its producers and for British craftsmanship, for never have any foreign makers succeeded in obtaining so rare a tone in an instrument of such limited proportions. Less than five feet in length, it occupies almost the same space as an ordinary upright piano, but has all the advantages of tone and appearance that characterise the Grand type of piano ::

The tone of the Weber Concert Grand Piano has made that instrument the choice of the world's chief pianists, and in this miniature model all the beauties of the Weber tone are preserved. This wonderful new piano may be seen and played in our showrooms; it is obtainable upon easy payment terms that make it as accessible as an upright piano.

THE AEOLIAN COMPANY, LTD.,

(Formerly the Orchestral Co.)

Aeolian Hall, 131-7, New Bond St.,
LONDON, W. 1.

THE PURCELL SOCIETY.

Committee.

SIR C. VILLIERS STANFORD, D.C.L., M.A., MUS. DOC., MUS. PROF., CANTAB.
SIR J. FREDERICK BRIDGE, M.A., MUS. DOC., C.V.O., GRESHAM PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.
G. E. P. ARKWRIGHT, Esq.
ROBERT BRIDGES, Esq., M.A., M.B., D. Litt.
LL.D., Poet-Laureate.
E. J. DENT, Esq., M.A., MUS. BAC.
J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND, Esq., M.A., F.S.A.
ALAN GRAY, Esq., LL.M., MUS. DOC.
AUGUSTUS J. LITTLETON, Esq.
CYRIL B. ROTHAM, Esq., MUS. DOC.
W. BARCLAY SQUIRE, Esq., M.A., F.S.A., F.R.G.S.,
Hon. Sec.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES HAVE NOW BEEN PUBLISHED:—

- | | |
|---|---|
| I. "The Yorkshire Feast Song." | XII. "The Fairy Queen." |
| II. "Dido and Æneas." [Athens.] | XIV. "Sacred Music"—Part II. |
| III. "The Masque" in "Timon of Athens." | XV. "Welcome Songs for Charles II. and James II."—Part I. |
| IV. "Ode on the Duke of Gloucester's Birthday." | XVI. "Dramatic Music"—Part I. |
| V. "Twelve Sonatas of Three Parts." | XVII. "Sacred Music"—Part III. |
| VI. "Harpsichord and Organ Music." | XVIII. "Welcome Songs"—Part II. |
| VII. "Ten Sonatas of Four Parts." | XIX. "The Indian Queen," and "The Tempest." |
| VIII. "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, 1692." | XX. "Dramatic Music"—Part II. |
| IX. "Dioclesian." | XXI. "Dramatic Music"—Part III. |
| X. "Three Odes for St. Cecilia's Day." | |
| XI. "Birthday Odes for Queen Mary"—Part I. | |

Subscription Price ... One Guinea per Volume net.

Most of the back numbers are offered to new subscribers at special rates.

Owing to the advisability of keeping, so far as possible, the chronological order of the Anthems, and of printing the contents of the important autograph volume from Buckingham Palace Library while it was deposited at the British Museum for the use of the Society, it has been decided to defer for the present the issue of Vol. XIII., which will contain earlier Anthems than those in the Buckingham Palace Manuscript.

The names of new subscribers should be sent to the Hon. Sec. (W. BARCLAY SQUIRE, British Museum), who will also be glad to hear from any members willing to assist in the Society's work, either by collating and copying, or by subscribing to a small fund which has been raised for defraying the editorial expenses.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF

THE ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC & THE ROYAL COLLEGE of MUSIC

FOR

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
ASSOCIATED BOARD:

ERNEST MATHEWS, Esq., Chairman.

SIR ALEXANDER C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., St. And., Cantab., et Edin., LL.D., D.C.L., Principal of The R.A.M.
SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Director of The R.C.M.
OSCAR BERINGER, Esq.
PROFESSOR PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
EATON FANING, Esq., Mus. Doc., Cantab.
FREDERIC KING, Esq.
SAXTON W. A. NOBLE, Esq.
SIR WALTER PARRATT, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Cantab. et Dunelm.
H. W. RICHARDS, Esq., Mus. Doc., Dunelm.
PROFESSOR SIR CHARLES V. STANFORD, D.C.L., LL.D., M.A., Mus. Doc., Cantab. et Oxon.
S. P. WADDINGTON, Esq.
H. WESSELY, Esq.

Secretary: JAMES MUIR, Esq.

Bankers: BANK OF ENGLAND, WESTERN BRANCH, BURLINGTON GARDENS, LONDON, W. 1.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout the United Kingdom and in the Colonies in both Theoretical and Practical Music. The Examinations are of two kinds, "Local Centre" and "School." The Local Centre Examinations are carried out by two Examiners chosen almost exclusively from the Staffs of The Royal Academy of Music and of The Royal College of Music. The School Examinations are conducted by one Examiner.

The Subjects for Examination are comprised in the following list:—

GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.	ORGAN.	DOUBLE BASS.
RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.	VIOLIN.	HARP.
HARMONY.	VIOLA.	WIND INSTRUMENTS.
COUNTERPOINT.	VIOLONCELLO.	SINGING.
PIANOFORTE.

Local Centre Examinations (Syllabus A). Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March–April at all Centres; and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November–December also. Entries for the November–December Examinations close Wednesday, October 13th, 1920.

School Examinations (Syllabus B) held three times a year: viz., October–November, March–April, and June–July. Entries for the October–November Examinations close Wednesday, October 6th, 1920.

Theory Papers set in past years (Local Centre or School) may be obtained from the Central Office, price 6d. per annual set post-free.

The Board offers annually Six Exhibitions tenable at The Royal Academy of Music or The Royal College of Music for two or three years. These Exhibitions are limited to Candidates under twenty years of age who fulfil certain conditions set forth in each Syllabus.

Syllabuses A and B, Forms of Entry, and any further information, may be obtained, post-free, from the Secretary—

JAMES MUIR,

TELEGRAMS:—"ASSOCIA, LONDON."
 TELEPHONE:—MUSEUM 1710.

CENTRAL OFFICE: 14 & 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON, W.C. 1.

No. 930

Price 6d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

AUGUST 1, 1920

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

HAVING acquired the West End Premises of Messrs. J. & J. Hopkinson, Ltd., are opening

NEW SHOW ROOMS AT 52, WIGMORE STREET

for the
Sale of Pianos

by the best
English Makers

WIGMORE HALL
32-40, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON · W · 1

Tunings & Repairs effected by a skilled staff of Piano Makers.

Pianos Stored in a special storage warehouse which is kept at an even temperature throughout the year. Insurance included in the storage rates.

Piano Removals

by experienced men in our own motor vans.

TELEPHONE:
MAYFAIR 1761.

The Name of

J. & J. HOPKINSON

*Stands for the HIGHEST ATTAINMENTS
in THE WORLD OF MUSIC*

REMARKABLE FOR THE EXQUISITE QUALITY OF TONE

J. & J. HOPKINSON, LTD.,

44, FITZROY ROAD, PRIMROSE HILL,
LONDON, N.W. 1

SONGS and MUSIC of DISTINCTION.

"The Harvesters' Night Song"

First introduced to the public by Mr. NORMAN ALLIN, the well-known Lancashire Bass. A great Blackpool favourite.

"The Minster Bell"

A song with a refrain that has positively jumped into fame. Ask your music dealer to play it over.

"Rest at Eventide"

An unusual combination of real musical merit and popular appeal. Suitable for all voices.

"My Lady Charming"

Charming by name and charming in character. Just a delightful little entr'acte for piano.

"Dream Sprite"

An intermezzo for pianoforte. Dainty in construction, melodious, and effective.

Of all Music Sellers, price 2/- net; or direct from the Publishers, post free, 2/1½.

THE NEWMAN PUBLISHING CO., Ltd.

7, Newman Street, London, W. 1.

THE MOST NOTED HOUSE FOR REALLY MUSICAL NUMBERS.

SAMES

HIGHEST QUALITY
GRAND & UPRIGHT
PIANOS

WILLIAM SAMES, LIMITED,
Ombersley Road :: BIRMINGHAM.
LONDON SHOWROOMS: 126 NEW BOND ST.

— THE — SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW

A Monthly Periodical devoted to the interests of Music in Schools.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

PRICE THREEPENCE

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, INCLUDING POSTAGE, FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 930.—Vol. 61
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

AUGUST 1 1920

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1920—1921.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and should be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins Monday, September 20th. Entrance Examination on or about September 16th.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

SCHOLARSHIPS in the following subjects will be competed for in September: Pianoforte, Singing, Organ, Viola, and the John Thomas (Welsh) Scholarship for Instrumentalists of either sex. Last day for entry, 30th August.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 13th, 1920.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., October-November, March-April, and June-July. Entries for the October-November Examinations close Wednesday, October 6th, 1920.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per annual set, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B (for 1920 or for 1921), Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.
Telegrams: "Associa, London."

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

(CORPORATION OF LONDON).

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LANDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and/or Orchestra.

Saturday Opera Class, "Veronique," in rehearsal. There are a few vacancies.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

Founded 1882.

Incorporated 1892.

OBJECTS OF THE SOCIETY.

The objects for which the Society is established are the promotion of whatever may tend to the elevation of the status, and the improvement of the qualifications, of all members of the Musical Profession, or may aid the musical education of the people.

ADVANTAGE OF MEMBERSHIP.

A Benevolent Fund for Members, the Regulations for which have purposely been made as wide as possible in order to meet the many and very varying contingencies which arise from time to time.

An Orphan Fund for the children of musicians, which is open to the dependents of all musicians, whether their parents were members of the Society or not.

Legal advice on all professional matters; Income Tax Claims; Copyright; The Recovery of Fees, &c.

Registers open to members of "Vacant Appointments" and "Engagements," and for the transfer from member to member of pupils moving to new districts.

Full particulars may be obtained upon application to the GENERAL SECRETARY, 19, BERNERS STREET, W. 1.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1919-1920.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications are again advanced as from June 30, 1920, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Twenty-eighth Year opened on October 6, 1919.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, and Art of Teaching, &c.

After the vacation Lessons resume on September 6th.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE PHILHARMONIC CHOIR.

Hon. Conductor: CHARLES KENNEDY SCOTT.

Arrangements for next season include performances of "Christmas Oratorio" (Bach); "Christmas Carols" (Vaughan Williams); "Schicksalslied" (Brahms); "Prometheus" (Scriabin); &c., &c.

Rehearsals will be resumed on Wednesday, October 6th.

Applications for membership should be addressed to—

GRANVILLE HUMPHREYS, 145, Elms Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS.

LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC held in JUNE and DECEMBER

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Y.M.C.A. MUSIC SECTION.

Chairman: SIR JOHN D. McCURE, LL.D., D.Mus.

Committee: Prof. Percy C. Buck, M.A., D.Mus.; Prof. H. Walford Davies, LL.D., D.Mus.; A. A. Fitzsimmons; Harvey Grace, F.R.C.O.; J. T. Lightwood; Sydney H. Nicholson, M.A., B.Mus.; Percy A. Scholes, B.Mus., A.R.C.M.; Miss Phoebe M. Walters, A.R.C.M.; Mrs. Z. F. Willis. Secretary: Major J. T. Bavin.

All information regarding its aims and plans for the introduction and maintenance of good music in the Y.M.C.A. as an educational and recreational feature, may be obtained from The Secretary, Y.M.C.A. Music Section, Shakespeare Hut, Malet Street, W.C. 1.

MR. TRAVERS ADAMS returns thanks for letters.

Vocal Classes shortly resumed. Intending pupils will receive copy, gratis, of latest work, "Physical Development in Relation to Perfect Voice-Production." Apply, 158, Holland Park Avenue, W. 11.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION

DR. HORTON ALLISON Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-five Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom in DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8th.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diplomas in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December. Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented. Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music. SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

ORCHESTRAL CLASS for Ensemble Playing, Thursdays, at 12 (noon). Terms, £1 11s. 6d. per course.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX.
THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.
THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

October 21st, 1920, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "Registration Enigma," by Dr. J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
Chairman: DR. J. H. LEWIS.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1920.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best INTRODUCTORY VOLUNTARY for the ORGAN, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, TE DEUM (Chantwise), Harmonized Setting of the GUILD OFFICE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL, Worcester.

SEPTEMBER 5, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

Patrons, T.M.G.M. THE KING and QUEEN.

Conductor—MR. IVOR ATKINS

Principal Soloists:

MESDAMES DE LA COTE, AGNES NICHOLLS, CARRIE TUBB, ASTRA DESMOND, PHYLLIS LETT, KIRKBY LUNN, MESSRS. JOHN COATES, GERVASE ELWES, STEUART WILSON, NORMAN ALLIN, HERBERT HEYNER, ROBERT RADFORD, FREDERICK RANALOW.

In the CATHEDRAL.

SUNDAY, 3.30 p.m.—Opening Service, with Chorus and Orchestra:
TUESDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"Elijah." At 7.30 p.m.—"Hymn of Faith" (Ivor Atkins); "The Music Makers" (Elgar); "Hymn of Praise."

WEDNESDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"Gerontius" (Elgar); "Motet," "There is an old belief" (Hubert Parry); "New work," "Fantasy," founded on Dante's "DIVINA COMMEDIA" (Walford Davies); Symphony in D minor (César Franck).

THURSDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"St. Matthew" Passion (Bach). At 7.30 p.m.—"New work, Four Hymns, for Tenor Solo and Strings (Vaughan Williams); "For the Fallen" (Elgar); "Requiem" (Verdi).

FRIDAY, 11.30 a.m.—"Messiah."

In the PUBLIC HALL.

WEDNESDAY, 8 p.m.—New work for Orchestra "Worcestershire Rhapsody" (A. E. Brent Smith), and works by Elgar, Julius Harrison, &c.

For Programme send STAMPED ENVELOPE
to Deighton, Worcester.

GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL,

1920.

PRESIDENT: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, BART.

DIRECTOR: RUTLAND BOUGHTON.

Holiday School (July 19th to September 11th), for the study of Opera, Dancing, Chamber Music, and String Orchestral Music. Performances daily from August 15th to September 11th.

SIX CYCLES of four distinct programmes, as follows:

1. THE BIRTH OF ARTHUR, a music-drama by Reginald Buckley and Rutland Boughton. First complete production.
2. THE ROUND TABLE (Buckley-Boughton).
3. DIDO AND ÆNEAS, opera by Purcell, preceded by MUSIC COMES, a choral ballet by P. Napier Miles, and the first production of THE CHILDREN OF LIR, a new ballet by Adela Maddison.
4. THE IMMORTAL HOUR (MacLeod-Boughton).

First Cycle, Aug. 16, 17, 18, 19. Fourth Cycle, Aug. 30, 31, Sept. 1, 2.
Second " Aug. 20, 21, 23, 24. Fifth " Sept. 3, 4, 6, 7.
Third " Aug. 25, 26, 27, 28. Sixth " Sept. 8, 9, 10, 11.

The performances on Wednesdays and Saturdays will begin at 3 o'clock; on other days at 8 o'clock.

Ticket for each Cycle of four distinct performances, £1 2s. 6d. (including tax).

Extra RECITALS, PERFORMANCES OF DANCES, &c., on Wednesday and Saturday evenings. CONCERTS of Chamber Music on Sunday evenings.

PRINCIPAL PERFORMERS:

Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies, Dorothy D'Orsay, Winifred Lawson, Edith Finch, Gladys Ward, Hamilton Harris, Clive Carey, W. Johnstone-Douglas, Tom Goodey, John Goss, Herbert Langley, Arthur Jordan.

Direction of Dance:

Laura Wilson (Mlle. Olkhina, late of the Russian Ballet).

Musical Direction:

Edgar L. Bainton, David Scott, and Reginald Paul.

Costumes and Scenic Decoration: Christina Walshe.

Booking Office: FRED. GILBERT, Goodall's Library, High Street, Glastonbury.

Details of Classes, Hotels, and Apartments: Miss PERCY, 86, High Street, Glastonbury.

HERBERT ANDERTON, Hon. Sec., Manor House Road, Glastonbury.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPosed AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

DANCING.—GENTLEMAN, with highest qualifications and many years' successful teaching experience, in all branches, is now concluding arrangements for conducting, Day or Evening, LONDON and SUBURBAN CLASSES, commencing Autumn, and wishes to hear from Principals of MUSICAL COLLEGES, &c., including, or contemplating the inclusion of this subject in their Syllabuses. "Alpha," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

CHARLES TREE.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON "LIFE OF THE VOICE."

Cathedral Organist writes, July 8, 1920: "I have proved, by careful experiments, the correctness of your method as shown in your book. My success in teaching voice-production dates from the time I studied your work."

Recitals already booked for next season include:—London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Tenby, Blackpool, Buxton, Felixstowe, Newport, W. Bromwich, Ashton-under-Lyne, Cockermouth, Greenock, Croydon, Todmorden, Bolton, Forfar, &c.

Daily Telegraph, July 8, 1920: "A pre-eminently capable artist, as skilful as he is experienced."

Newcastle Chronicle: "The art of Mr. Tree is as unmistakable as it is all-embracing."

Mr. Tree's book on "How to Acquire Ease of Voice."

If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.

Oratorio dates, &c.: Address, 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.3

CHARLES KNOWLES

BARITONE.

Now booking dates for 1920-21 Season.

For terms apply, Goff's Oak, Waltham Cross, N.

Telephone: Waltham Cross 247.

Telegrams: Knowles "Goff's Oak."

Or usual Agents.

CHARLES KNOWLES

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies," "Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists.

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Copy of letter from the eminent Spanish Pianist,
MONTORIOL TARRÈS.

"I have not written to you before as I wanted to try your 'Techniquer' thoroughly before giving you my opinion on it. I am glad to state that I find the 'Techniquer' a very ingenious method to develop the hand and gives it a most remarkable elasticity. Its daily use should shorten much the time that all pianists must devote to keyboard exercises."—E. MONTORIOL TARRÈS.

Send for full particulars and list of testimonials.

No earnest student should be without a Techniquer.

"Hand Development," post free, 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRS,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

"AUTOMATIC PIANO PLAYERS."

The owners of British Patents Nos. 12866/09 for "Improvements in Mechanically Operated Pianos," and Nos. 17738/15 for "Improvements in Automatic Piano Player," are desirous of entering into negotiations with one or more firms in Great Britain for the purposes of exploiting the above inventions either by sale of the Patent rights, or by granting licences to Manufacture under Royalty.

Enquiries should be addressed to—

MESSRS. ABEL & IMRAY, 30, Southampton Buildings, W.C. 2.

NOW IS THE TIME to become a good Pianist.

The Summer is just the time to begin. All drudgery is abolished when my System is used, and progress becomes rapid and certain. Advanced players improve without touching a piano, "average" become advanced in a few months, and the beginner soon "plays at sight" with pleasure. Equal success with all grades, for whom there are distinct Courses.

The System is a complete one of Touch and Technique, not one of finger gymnastics only. Command is given over trills, repeated chords, skips, and every technical difficulty, also Sight reading. Harmony is not taught. Pupils constantly express delight at the perfect control of the keyboard they now possess.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,
SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

MEMORY.—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON,
L.R.A.M., undertakes, by her method,
to develop perfect musical memory. Course of Six Lessons, £3 3s.
Lessons by correspondence if desired. 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

D.M.S. stands for DIAL (compass) MUSIC SHORTHAND. Composers, arrangers, and students save time and materials by drafting music on common paper.
Easily learnt and transcribed. Outlines, 1s. 2d.; Illustrated Supplement, 2s. 2d. Also—3—Shorthand for Harmony, 1s. 2d., post free.

A. SOUTHEY & Co.,
146, FENCHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C. 3.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).
Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

CHARLES T. BATCHELOR (BARITONE).
Oratorio, Recitals, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
10, Roche Road, Norbury, S.W. 16.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN (VOICE SPECIALIST).
Singing, Elocution, and Breathing.
Write for free audition, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.
COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—
Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."
Over 500 Successes at Exams.
"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MISS BETTY HADDOW SOPRANO.

Available for Oratorios, Concerts, Cantatas, &c.
For vacant dates, write, 74, Ollerton Road, New Southgate, N. 11.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.
15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS (TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. MAURICE VICCARS BARITONE.

41, Arvon Road, Highbury, N. 5.

WILLIAM COLEMAN

BASS (MANCHESTER).
Oratorio. Ballads. Lessons.
18, Plymouth Avenue, Manchester, S.E.

DR. NORMAN SPANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.); L.R.A.M.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) A.R.C.M. Paper Work
- (2) L.R.A.M. Paper Work
- (3) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (4) Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. Degrees.
- (5) Musical Appreciation.

For terms, lists of successes, &c., address—
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

A CORRESPONDENCE COURSE FOR TEACHERS

SPECIALLY ARRANGED BY

DR. NORMAN SPANKLING.

This Course is intended to serve as a guide to Teachers, either in their Class-Work, or in their private teaching.

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 4 FIRST MUS. BAC.
4 FINAL MUS. BAC.
2 FINAL MUS. DOC.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. NORMAN SPANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

L. R. A. M. (SEPTEMBER)

SHORT REVISION COURSE IN

- (1) RUDIMENTS AND HARMONY.
- (2) FORM AND TEACHING.

For terms, &c., address—

DR. NORMAN SPANKLING,
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FIVE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

*The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-five. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SINGING, PIANO-PLAYING, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Dr. A. P. Alderson visits 60, Berners Street, W., every week for Private Lessons. Coaching also by Correspondence. 34, Knight's Park, Kingston-on-Thames.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-20 ... 154 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-20 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition.

Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Corresp. And at FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

L. ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 370 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

(at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.

Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of

Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 32, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for

L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
- COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
- DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT and CANON. 5s. net.
- FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
- ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
- DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
- PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
- DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
- MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
- IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING

L. Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing) 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

- | | |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918 |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

THE CATHEDRAL CHORISTERS' SCHOOL, SALISBURY.

FOUNDED 1309.

Governors: THE DEAN AND CHAPTER

Organist: W. G. ALCOCK, Esq., M.V.O., Mus. Doc.

The Choir School for the Cathedral Chorists. A few Private Boarders other than Chorists are taken, also day boys.

Preparatory School for the Public Schools.

The School presents Exhibitions to Chorists on leaving for the Public Schools.

There are both Junior and Senior playing-fields, also boating and swimming in the river Avon which passes the School garden.

Next Term begins on September 18th. Vacancies for Probationers for the Cathedral Choir, also for Private Boarders and Day Boys.

Trial of voices shortly.

For full particulars apply—

Rev. A. G. ROBERTSON, M.A., Head-master, 57, The Close, Salisbury.

BASS, TENOR, ALTO, WANTED for All Saints',

Devonshire Road, South Lambeth. £12. Walter Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, West Norwood.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED

at the end of September. Devout Churchman. Must understand voice-production: Choral Eucharist. Silence negative. £50 "Rector," Friern Barnet, London, N. 11.

WANTED, for St. Andrew's Church, Oxford, in October next, an ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, chiefly for Sunday services. Mixed choir. Commencing salary, £50. Apply, with testimonials, to "Vicar," 13, Northmoor Road, Oxford.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED

for Holy Trinity Church, South Wimbledon, S.W. 19. Salary to commence, £60. Apply, The Vicar.

CATHEDRAL ASSISTANT-ORGANIST RE-

QUIRES similar POST elsewhere. "W. R. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

PROFESSIONAL ORGANIST (recitalist) desires

POST as ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, in London (S.W. preferred). Must be Church of England. Splendid references. Apply to Mr. A. H. Griffiths (Organist and Choirmaster, St. Paul's Church, Plymouth), 10, Collingwood Villas, Stoke, Devonport.

SOUTH AFRICAN SCHOOL OF MINES AND TECHNOLOGY, JOHANNESBURG.

(UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH AFRICA.)

The Council invites APPLICATIONS for the following APPOINTMENT:

A PROFESSOR for the CHAIR OF MUSIC in the University, who may be required later on to act as Director of a School of Practical Music organized in connection with the University. The appointment to be for three years, at a salary of £850, rising by annual increments of £50 to £950. In the event of the renewal of the appointment after three years, the salary will rise by further increments to a maximum of £1,100. £60 will be allowed for travelling expenses to South Africa, and half salary from date of sailing to arrival in Johannesburg. The duties to commence on date to be arranged. A medical certificate will be required before appointment. Applications in triplicate, stating age, professional qualifications, and experience, should, with copies of three recent testimonials, be sent not later than 14th August to the undersigned.

CHALMERS, GUTHRIE & Co., Limited.

9, Idol Lane, London, E.C. 3.

MUSIC-MASTER REQUIRES POSITION in Public or Private School. Thoroughly experienced in Teaching of Pianoforte, Organ, and Voice-Production. Write, Victor H. Burraston, Coniston, Hayward's Road, Cheltenham.

PIANOFORTE TEACHER REQUIRES POSITION in Girls' School. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Diplomas. Write, Elsie Wood, "Stanmore," Holly Bank Road, Lindley, Huddersfield.

WANTED.—Qualified MUSIC TEACHER for Girls' English Missionary College in South America. Only English necessary. Good climate. Write to A. W. Bevis, Mount Pleasant, St. Aubins, Jersey.

LITHOGRAPHING, DUPLICATING, COPY-ING, equal to printing. Send MS. and stamp for estimate. Ibbotson & Co., 25, York Street, Wakefield.

HYMNS, Chants, and Anthems neatly and legibly Duplicated in black ink, from 4s. 6d. per 100, post paid. Samples 2d. stamp. W. H. Ridd, 211, Station Rd., King's Heath, Birmingham.

WANTED immediately, First-Class TUNER. Permanency. Apply, Hime & Addison, 195 & 197, Deansgate, Manchester.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times, 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN, 2 Manuals, 17 stops, Swell pedal, full Pedal compass, 2 compo. pedals. Hand blown. Handsome case. Suit Church, Chapel, &c. Price, £115. Near offer considered for quick sale. "Mellor," 22, Halliday Place, Armley, Leeds.

CLAVICHORD, probably old German, about 1600. Perfect playing condition. £25. Also Set ORGAN PEDALS, and Duet PIANO STOOL. Cheap, to clear. "F. M. C.," 160, Brecknock Road, Camden Road, N. 19.

PIANO PEDALS FOR SALE, with Stool and Accessories. £10, or nearest offer. "B.," 10, Eaton Road, Hove.

OBOE.—Perfect Instrument. £20, quick sale. Bargain. Holland, Fairstowe, Ilkley.

DIGITORIUM, Four-octaves, strong. £5. "C. P.," Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MUSICAL TIMES, complete for 1918 and 1919, for DISPOSAL: half value. Miss Rothwell, Rockfield, Kells, Co. Meath.

FOR SALE.—Mus. Doc. (Oxon.) HOOD. As new. 5 guineas. Dr. Taylor, 39, Wolverhampton Road, Stafford.

THE FREEHOLD PREMISES, with possession, of an old-established PIANO AND GENERAL MUSIC BUSINESS, to BE SOLD by Auction, on Wednesday, August 11th, the Valuable Goodwill and connection included. Shop and ten rooms, back premises, with garden, &c. County Town. No opposition. Owner retiring. Stock optional. Unless previously sold by private treaty. A. E. Holloway, Auctioneer, Aylesbury.

YOUR MELODIES or LYRICS may be transformed into works of beauty by the addition of musicianly accompaniments or settings. Only really good music will do—not the cheap, flowery type, full of worn-out harmonic "tags."

Send short MS. to me, together with stamped addressed envelope, for FREE specimen accompaniment, arrangement, or setting.

HUGH P. LAMBERT, 77, Valley Drive, Harrogate.
MSS. Copied and Transposed. | Choral and Instrumental Compositions revised— | Arrangements.
Constructive criticism given. | (Terms moderate.)

BASS VOCALISTS should buy descriptive Song, "THE VOICE OF THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass G (or low E flat) to E flat. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

FINE THREE-MANUAL ORGAN AND ELECTRIC BLOWER.

HANDSOME FIGURED PITCH-PINE CASE.
14-ft. wide, 12-ft. 6-in. deep, 18-ft. high. 9 Stops Swell, 9 Great, 7 Choir, 4 Pedal.

Apply Temple, 200, Phythian Street, Liverpool

SET of ORGAN PEDALS. New. Straight. Standard size. Full compass. Fit any piano. £10, or nearest offer. 35, Gauden Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

EDWYN A. CLARE'S VERY POPULAR HARVEST ANTHEMS.

*All Thy works shall praise Thee 5th 1,000 4d.
*The blessings of Peace 5th 1,000 4d.

The above are two very attractive Anthems.

*Thou Crownest the Year 28th 1,000 4d.
*Sing unto God with Thanksgiving 32nd 1,000 6d.
*How great is His Goodness 23rd 1,000 4d.
*The Fruit of Thy Works 21st 1,000 6d.
*He gives us Fruitful Seasons 11th 1,000 6d.
*The Eyes of all Wait upon Thee 66th 1,000 4d.

Sung at a Festival of 1,500 at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Fear not, O Land 10th 1,000 4d.
*Sing Praises to His Name 15th 1,000 4d.
O Lord, how manifold are Thy Works 9th 1,000 6d.
Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem 45th 1,000 4d.

Sung at Choral Festivals, Wern and Downpatrick Cathedral.
Favourite Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D 28th 1,000 6d.

Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choir Festival.

Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

NEARLY SEVEN MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S COMPOSITIONS SOLD.

CALEB SIMPER'S NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS, &c.

Very effective and interesting. Not difficult.

Be thankful unto Him. (Just Published) 5d.
A Bounteous Harvest 4d.
Let every thing praise the Lord 4d.

New No. XI. Voluntary Book. Post free 2s. 2d. Contains Seventeen pieces on Two Staves. Very Useful.

Specimen of the three Anthems for 6d. (O.N. or Sol-fa).

CALEB SIMPER, Church Music Composer, Barnstaple.

CHANT (WITH MAGNIFICAT), AND VESPER HYMN ("Jesu, we thank Thee").

Composed by G. F. SEARLE for this year's Plymouth Competitive Musical Festival, and awarded Bronze Medal.

PRICE TWOPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Sacred Songs by Joseph Adams.

"DIVINE LOVE."
"THE GENTLE SHEPHERD."
"LEAD, KINDLY LIGHT."
"THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD."
"THE NAZARENE."
"THE PROMISE OF PEACE."
"SUN OF MY SOUL."
"JESU, LOVER OF MY SOUL" (A. C. BROOKES).

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS NET.

From all Music-Sellers, or direct from the Publisher—
JOSEPH ADAMS, 15, CANNON PASSAGE, BIRMINGHAM.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR SHAKESPEARE SONGS

1. HARK! HARK! THE LARK.
2. WHO IS SYLVIA.
3. TAKE, O TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY.
4. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

COMPOSED BY

REGINALD STEGGALL.

Op. 28.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S SONGS.

A. HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.
Price 2s.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR—

Sweet evenings come and go, love.

In F (Compass, D to E flat) and B flat.
Price 2s.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).
Price 2s.

LAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).
Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.
Price 1s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER—

Hark! Hark! my Soul.

In C (Compass, A to C) and E flat.
Price 2s.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.
Price 2s. each.

W. McNAUGHT—

The Piper.

In D (Compass, D to D) E flat, and F.
Price 2s.

W. G. ROSS—

A Daffodil Wedding.

In C (Compass, C to F) and D.
Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

The Summertime of Love.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.
Price 2s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR MILITARY BAND

Arranged by DAN GODFREY, GEORGE MILLER, Mus. Bac., and Others.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
BENDALL, WILFRED.—Pas Seul	5	0	HAYNES, BATTISON.—Westwood Gavotte	5	0
BREWER, A. HERBERT.—Auf Wiedersehen	5	0	HERVEY, ARTHUR.—"On the March"	9	0
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.—Four Characteristic Waltzes	15	0	HIGGS, H. M.—"Our Queen" (Quick March)	5	0
— "Onaway, awake Beloved" (Euphonium Solo)	5	0	HOFMANN, H.—"Kirmess" (Rustic Pictures). Book I.	15	0
COWEN, F. H.—Four English Dances (in the Olden Style)	15	0	— "Kirmess" (Rustic Pictures). Book II.	3	6
— Coronation March	10	6	LEMARE, EDWIN H.—Andantino in D flat	3	6
— Minuet d'Amour (from "Suite of Old English Dances," Second Set)	5	0	LLOYD, H. C.—An Eton Memorial March	7	6
CRESER, WILLIAM.—Wedding March	3	6	MACKENZIE, A. C.—"Benedictus" ("Six Pieces for Violin")	5	0
ELGAR, EDWARD.—Chanson de Matin	3	6	— Ballet Music ("Colomba"	15	0
— Chanson de Nuit	3	6	— Courante ("Ravenswood")	12	0
— Imperial March	9	0	— Funeral March ("The Story of Sayid")	3	0
— Mazurka	5	0	— La Savannah	7	6
— Sérénade Mauresque	5	0	— "The Empire Flag"	5	0
— Contrasts (The Gavotte, A.D. 1700 and 1900)	5	0	MACPHERSON, STEWART.—Orchestral Ballad	15	0
— Meditation ("Light of Life")	5	0	MILLER, GEORGE.—Solemn March	3	6
— Follow the Colours ("Marching Song")	3	6	MOLIQUE.—March ("Abraham")	7	6
— Pleading	3	6	MORLEY, CH.—Emperor Gavotte ("Cornflower")	2	6
— Wand of Youth (Second Suite)	15	0	OUSELEY.—March ("St. Polycarp")	7	6
ELVEY, G. J.—Festal March	5	0	POPULAR PART-SONGS	7	6
FANING, EATON.—"The Queen's Song"	7	6	— RAMEAU.—Gavotte	4	6
— Song of the Vikings	5	0	ROBECKEL, J. L.—Graceful Dance	7	6
FLETCHER, PERCY E.—The Toy Soldiers' March	7	6	SIX HYMN TUNES (composed for Commemorations of Queen Victoria's Long Reign)	4	6
— Valse Lyrique ("The Smile of Spring")	5	0	SMART, HENRY.—Festive March in D	7	6
FORD, ERNEST.—Grand Valse ("Faust" Ballet)	10	6	SPINDLER, FRITZ.—"Husarenritt"	7	6
— Scène Bacchanale ("Faust" Ballet)	15	0	SPOHR.—"Calvary" (Selection)	7	6
GERMAN, EDWARD.—Bourrée and Gigue ("Much Ado about Nothing")	12	0	SULLIVAN, A.—"In Memoriam" Overture	10	0
— Coronation March ("Henry VIII.")	7	6	— Onward, Christian Soldiers	2	6
— Gipsy Suite (Four Characteristic Dances)	15	0	— Ditto. For Brass Band	2	6
— Harvest Dance (from "The Seasons")	10	0	THREE SACRED PIECES, viz.:—	7	6
— Masque (Three Dances from "As you like it" Music)	15	0	— "Blessed be the God and Father"	S. S. WESLEY
— Overture to "Richard III."	12	0	— "O Gladsome Light" ("Golden Legend")	A. S. SULLIVAN
— Three Dances ("Henry VIII.")	15	0	— March ("Occasional Oratorio")	HANDEL
— Welsh Rhapsody	15	0	TSCHAIKOWSKY.—Marche Militaire	15	0
GLINKA.—Polonaise ("Life of the Czar")	12	0	WAREING, H. W.—Summergold Gavotte	7	6
GOUNOD.—Judeu ("Mors et Vita")	3	0	WENDT, TH.—Air de Ballet with Intermezzo	7	6
— Ditto. (For Brass Band)	2	0	WEST, JOHN E.—Maypole Dance	7	6
— "Mors et Vita" (Selection)	15	0	— Commemoration March	9	0
— Marche Solennelle	7	6	ZIMMERMANN, AGNES.—March	7	6
— Six Sacred Pieces	10	6	SIX CLASSICAL PIECES for SMALL Military Band	3	0
— "The Redemption" (Selection)	15	0	THE MILITARY CHURCH PARADE SERVICE BOOK	1	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

September 20th—Michaelmas Term begins.

September 22nd.—Inaugural Address by Mr. JOHN DRINKWATER, M.A., F.R.S.L. Subject: "The Meaning of the Artist's Life."

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student: pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EDWARD MACDOWELL.

FROM THE XVIIIth CENTURY

(TRANSCRIPTIONS FOR PIANO OF HARPSICHORD AND CLAVICHORD PIECES).

- | | | |
|------------------------|-----|-----------------------|
| 1. COURANTE | ... | Jean Philippe Rameau |
| 2. SARABANDE | ... | Jean Philippe Rameau |
| 3. TEMPO DI MINUETTO | ... | G. B. Grazioli |
| 4. LE BAVOLET FLOTTANT | ... | François Couperin |
| 5. GIGUE | ... | J. Mattheson |
| 6. SARABANDE | ... | Jean Baptiste Loeilly |

Nos. 1 to 5, 2s. net, each. No. 6, 1s. 6d. net.

These are of medium difficulty, and well varied. MACDOWELL was careful to preserve their original flavour in adapting them to the technique of the Pianoforte; and they will be found admirably suited either for recital or for teaching purposes.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LIMITED.

NEW ALBUMS FOR TEACHERS.

M. E. MARSHALL—	s.	d.
BOYS AND GIRLS COME IN TO PLAY ...	2	0
Nineteen Short Pieces—Easy and Instructive. Selected for the Syllabus London College of Music.
E. SACHS—
OLD FRENCH DANCES ...	2	6
OLD ENGLISH DANCES ...	2	6
ERIC FOGG—
FOUR PIECES FOR PIANO DUET ...	2	6
SEVEN PIECES FOR PIANO SOLO ...	2	6
PHANTASY FOR 'CELLO AND PIANO ...	5	0
E. GRUNDY—
MIDSUMMER EVE ...	1	6
J. SMITH—
CHILDREN'S PICNIC ...	1	6
O. BERINGER—
A SUMMER HOLIDAY ...	2	6

At any Music Sellers.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.
Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS' RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES,'
Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC
LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' Etc.

This adaptation has been made by Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., at the request of the LEAGUE OF ARTS, to whom it is dedicated. It is specially intended for the performance at the Dedication of the Cenotaph and similar ceremonies throughout the country.

WITH PROUD THANKSGIVING CHORUS

BY

LAURENCE BINYON

AND

EDWARD ELGAR

Arranged from "For the Fallen" for S.A.T.B., with accompaniment for Military or Brass Band, or Organ or Pianoforte.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

London. NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

AUGUST 1 1920

ADVANCE IN PRICES

We have to announce a modification of the notice which appeared on page 441 of the July MUSICAL TIMES.

The prices of all books and music will be double that charged before the war, with the following exceptions:

1. All publications originally priced at below 1s.
2. All publications originally priced at above 12s.
3. All Sheet Music.

The prices of all publications not now advanced remain as they were on June 30, 1920.

The price of THE MUSICAL TIMES will be Sixpence. The annual subscription (including postage) will be Seven shillings and Sixpence.

The price of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW will be Threepence, and the annual subscription (including postage) Four shillings.

MUSICAL NOTATION

BY EDWARD ELGAR*

'The press has in general a bad effect on the completion of one's works.' Here Gray (1762) expresses an opinion which, however correct it may be as to literature, is certainly untrue as to the printing of music.

A sense of gratitude to the author of 'System in Musical Notation,' for materially improving the 'completion' of some efforts of my own, leads me to offer some discursive paragraphs by way of preface.

Thanks are also given to the other editors and readers of the great publishing firm with which I have had such long and pleasant relations. I cannot say that I have ever submitted a work to these gentlemen in the exact terms of Swift—Swift very young, it must be said:—'. . . Before its seeing the world, I submit it wholly to the correction of your pens. I entreat, therefore, one of you would descend so far as to write two or three lines to me of your pleasure upon it.' Neither have I gone, with Roger North, so far in the opposite direction as this:—'They keep hirelings in garrets, at hard meat, to write and correct by the great.' Rather have I found them 'knowing and conversable men, with whom, for the sake of knowledge, the greatest wits were pleased to converse.'

At first sight a Primer which advocates clearness in the presentment of music and gives rules for the attainment of lucidity would appear to be unnecessary; but there is room for it. Attempts to make music look more interesting and, perhaps, astonishing, are by no means infrequent; a composition which first saw the light in the modest key of G minor, has been, with a few strokes of the pen, converted into a terrifying spectacle in G sharp minor; time-signatures are occasionally maltreated for the same purpose, and pages of quite seemly and pleasant music are made remarkably ugly by the unnecessary use of three or four staves, in the interests of those pianists who by intellectual right have succeeded to the position held in the 18th century by amateurs of the German flute.

The disappearance of the C clef from pianoforte music is to be regretted. The 'completion' of this example from Debussy:

is surely more pleasing, and the music more easily read, than in the original 'laying out':

Mr. Button's rule, which adopts the crotchet exclusively as the 'most convenient pulse-unit,' scarcely needs endorsement. It cannot be claimed that the use of long notes for quick movements, and of quick notes for slow movements, has any logical basis; the imagined gain in breadth or lightness rests on association only. In the advent of modern music, composers wavered between this system :

* This article is the preface to a forthcoming book by H. ELLIOTT BUTTON on 'System in Musical Notation.' [Novello.]

Three musical excerpts illustrating different notation styles for stems and beams. The first is Haydn's Largo. Cantabile alla breve. dolce. showing a quaver with a single stroke. The second is Haydn's Adagio cantabile. showing a quaver with a single stroke. The third is C. P. E. Bach's Poco adagio. showing a quaver with a single stroke.

and this :

A musical excerpt by Haydn, Andante. showing a quaver with a single stroke.

Mozart occasionally used the former method, but never in his greatest instrumental works; it seems to have died out about half-way through Haydn's career, and the practice of writing Andantes and Allegrettos, and calling them Adagios, ceased.

The real Andantes of Brahms must not be confused with the nondescript tempi exhibited above; in Op. 25, Op. 51 No. 2, Op. 60, Op. 67, and in some other works he has adopted the crotchet unit, but the Adagio of the String Quintet (Op. 111) is in 2-4, and may be compared with that of the Clarinet Quintet (Op. 115), which is in 3-4.

The 'manner' of a movement can sometimes be suggested by the time-signature, but not always. For a general working standard we need not look earlier or later than Bach, in whose 'Forty-eight' the exceptions to 'Button's Law' appear to be few. The work was written to exhibit all keys, and, apparently, all time-signatures; some of the latter are indefensible. Compare Preludes Nos. 6 and 15 (Book I.): the 24-16 of the latter is fanciful; the marking should be 4-4, as in the first-named. Fugue No. 13 (Book II.) should also be 4-4; the whole movement falls naturally into this measure, and several repetitions of accidentals are avoided—always an advantage. Other obvious exceptions need not be tabulated here, and nothing Mr. Button or anyone else can say will uproot my affection for the Alla cappella of Fugue No. 4 (Book I.) and the Alla breve of Fugue No. 9 (Book II.).

The mystery of 'stemming' is disclosed in the Primer. Of 'grouping,' Fugue No. 1 (Book II.) offers a simple example. In Bach's original MS. the theme is grouped throughout, thus :

A musical excerpt showing a quaver with a single stroke, illustrating the 'grouping' technique.

This is the easiest way to write it, as the quaver sign is made with one stroke; but editors agree in printing it thus :

A musical excerpt showing a quaver with a single stroke, illustrating the 'grouping' technique.

which is less tiring for the eye.

The difficulty of 'ranging' in rapidly-written MS. can be overcome by practice only. The full score of 'Tannhäuser,' printed direct from Wagner's own marvellous manuscript, lies before me. This extraordinary monument of industry, extending to four hundred and fifty large folio pages, was undertaken in the winter of 1844-45, when there was no probability of the opera being printed in the ordinary way.* Written in characters large enough to be easily read by conductors in theatres (this copy has been much used in Germany), the score presents an almost perfect example of 'ranging,' and the last bar is as firm and clear as the first. No feat of penmanship equal to this exists within my knowledge.

Accurate 'ranging' is imperative in complicated full-scores, and if the MS. is not correctly spaced by the composer a vast amount of thought and labour is laid, quite unfairly, on the 'reader.' Score-engraving is fine work; beautiful examples are now produced in England, and these compare most favourably with anything printed elsewhere. For a long time another country produced practically the entire output of scores, and as the opinion is held that the engraving of very small notes cannot be good for the eyes, it has been amiably suggested that the work might well remain where it flourished before the war;† however, as any damage to British eyesight seems problematical, it is to be hoped that the art of engraving full scores has found a permanent and not unremunerative home in England.

Care having been taken to follow Mr. Button's prescriptions, the ordeal of proof-reading may be approached with an easy conscience and a hope that any 'escapes' may be the fault of the printer.

But beware of throwing blame where it is undeserved—printers can retaliate in good and sufficient prose; witness the retort of William Jaggard,‡ who is decently angry with Ralph Brooke

* 'By dint of great energy, and by getting up very early, even in winter, I succeeded in completing my score of "Tannhäuser." . . . I made things particularly difficult for myself by using the specially-prepared paper which the printing process renders necessary. . . . I had each page transferred to the stone immediately, and a hundred copies printed from each, hoping to make use of these proofs for the rapid circulation of my works.'—('My Life.' R. Wagner. English Edition.)

† A sentiment presumably inspired by the same philanthropy which allowed Holland to hold the monopoly of feather golf-balls unchallenged. Pressing in the fillings by means of a chest-board was a laborious affair, and was believed to induce some interesting varieties of thoracic diseases.

‡ Printer of some Shakespeare Quartos and the First Folio.

(York Herald) for imputing his own errors, which were many and weighty, to the printer :

I ascribe no such infallibility to the Presse, as Master Yorke doth to his Pen, yet I am confident that these Errors, or the most part of them, looke so like the Author, as no man of judgement will father them vpon the Printer, inasmuch as they rather savour of Ignorance than Neglect.

For proof-reading I recommend the contemplative mood, and quote, via Longfellow :

Here . . . where we have no public garden and no Tivoli . . . in fine, nothing which, after a man's daily task is finished, can divert and refresh him, without his knowing or caring how,—I consider the sight of a proof-sheet quite as delightful as a walk in the Prater of Vienna. I fill my pipe very quietly, take out my inkstand and pens, seat myself in the corner of my sofa, read, correct, and now for the first time really set about thinking what I have written.

A pleasant picture, but a heavy bill for corrections and alterations would lead the author another time to 'really set about thinking' what he had written before the MS. was sent to the publisher.

Beethoven's method was, as we should expect, more vigorous: through the kindness of a friend* I have been able to examine the proof of the B flat Trio, corrected by Beethoven himself.

The passage beginning thus :

gave much trouble. Beethoven dug his pencil into the paper somewhat to this effect: 'N.B.—Although the copyist has abbreviated this, it will be better to engrave it thus.—Beethoven.'

The engraver humbly returned the proof with a remark which almost approaches a plea: 'If this must be done it would have to be a new plate.'

To this Beethoven has rejoined:

followed by a fierce and almost undecipherable scrawl which rather shouts than says 'the ASS'—i.e., the copyist—'ought to be . . .' Here, if nowhere else, the lowest musical spirit has been allowed to share, without any false humility, the mood of the giant.

Beethoven's last word is illegible, but this need not oppress us in the least; the accidental omission has all the horrific force of the calculated ellipses in 'Melmoth the Wanderer.'

It is worth adding that the pianoforte part is printed separately in the fashion of the time, not in score; on the cover Beethoven has written, 'Count the bars in each part correctly.'

Humility—associated with engravers as we have seen—seems to have deserted one of the craft in Paris, 1761: 'Sonata 1^a, en sinfonie, Gravé par le Sr. HUE,' heads the music in Schobert's Op. 9. The composer is not mentioned except in the dedication and on the outside title, where, however, the engraver again names himself.

I turn to Lafcadio Hearn for what he never fails to give—the human touch:

. . . I am now face to face with what I recognize as one of the most awful situations in life, the criticism of the proof-reader. I don't mean the commonplace proof-reader, who is a mere printer; but the terrible scholar who supervises proofs for a leading class of publishers, . . . who knows all rules of grammar, all laws of form, all the weaknesses of writers,—and whose frightful suggestions are often simply crushing! What you have spent a month in making a beauty-blossom of style, may suddenly fade into worthless dust at one touch of his terrific pencil, making the simple hook-mark '?' I can imagine I hear a voice asking: 'Do you desire to make a fool of yourself by having this line in print?' And then the after-thoughts, the premature hurrying away of proofs, the frantic rush to the telegraph-office to have them returned or corrected, the humble letters of apology for trouble given, the yells of anguish in bed at night when I think to myself, 'Oh! what a d—d ass I have been!' I have been now three times in front of this awful man, and like the angels he is without wrath and wholly without pity.

These rambling remarks must now end.

Long years of experience have not dulled the feeling that the shaping of a new work is like the coming of a child, and something akin to awe attends its birth. Printing, and all that belongs to it, has had a fascination for me since I was first permitted to pull a lever in Leicester's office in Worcester fifty years ago; with the same thrill I touched a similar machine in the Musée Plantin in Antwerp a month back. Some artists affect to despise a knowledge of the means, mechanical or otherwise, by which their ideas become realised; give me those who know the depths as well as the heights—those who can look 'unappalled upon the spears of kings, and undisdaining, upon the reeds of the river.'

December, 1919.

* Mr. Edward Speyer, who kindly assisted me in deciphering and translating Beethoven's crabbed handwriting.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

(Continued from July number, page 453)

By HARVEY GRACE

II.—THE WEIMAR PERIOD (continued)

Although it is natural and convenient to speak of 'the Weimar period,' even a casual survey of the organ music Bach wrote during those nine years shows that there were really two Weimar periods. To the first belong the pieces written in the Northern manner, works becoming more brilliant as Bach's organ technique developed, until the bravura side is at times unduly prominent. Towards the end of his stay at Weimar we find him adopting a severer style. The fugue subjects are shorter, slow of gait, and suggestive of mental rather than physical energy. The movements evolved from them have much of the architectonic structure and impersonal feeling that were to find their full exemplification in the great B minor, C major, and E flat fugues. We shall best realise this change of style by a glance at the subjects of half a dozen fugues written at this time:

Ex. 1.

We have here the very antithesis of the Northern type of subject, with its zigzag and repeated-note conventions, and its activity that too frequently ran to mere fussiness.

This sudden throwing over of early models was no doubt due largely to the influence of the more severe of the Italian church and organ composers. The Canzona and the Alla Breve showed Bach closely copying their style. In the fugues on the first five of these subjects we see the new idiom assimilated so thoroughly as to mark a new stage in his development. The sixth subject shows a lingering trace of the North, but its energy and compactness suggest the Bach who was nearing his prime. We will begin our survey of these works with a glance at this fugue and the Fantasia which serves as its prelude (iii., 76).

The Fantasia has none of the characteristics we associate with the title. It begins with imitative treatment of a simple theme over a tonic pedal. The delivery of the subject in the bass brings us to a half close out of which grows a second theme strongly suggestive of strings:

This having been worked, the opening subject reappears, now in the dominant, the second theme stealing in ten bars later, and giving us the most beautiful part of the movement. Its treatment by inversion is singularly graceful and natural:

Ex. 3.

In the whole of Bach's works there are few, if any, more expressive movements than this. Its texture and intimate character are so suggestive of chamber music that we may imagine it to have been written after a specially engrossing bout of string-playing with the Duke's band. Organists are inclined to neglect it in favour of its fugue, because it is too subdued for recital purposes, too long for an in-voluntary, and too quiet for a postlude. But need all postludes be loud and cheerful? If we regard the out-voluntary as an instrumental carrying on of the spirit of the preceding service, there must be many occasions on which such a nobly elegiac piece as this is exactly in keeping. We ought to use this type of music far more than we do; even though church-wardens and sidesmen rage furiously together, and the people imagine we are unable to play 'bright' things. Note that in playing the fantasia without the fugue we should end at the full close two bars before the double-bar, making a pause over both the F and E of the alto. The two bars that follow are merely a link between the two movements, and have no meaning unless both are played.

The fugue is a remarkably energetic specimen. The quaver movement is maintained from the fourth bar to the cadence, yet there is no impression of motion for its own sake. Structurally, it gives us something new in its long middle section and in the da capo Coda. At first sight the middle section appears to have no connection with the rest of the work. We think of it as a treatment of a new subject:

These five notes play so prominent a part for forty bars that we are apt to overlook the fact that they make their first appearance in the humble capacity of counter-theme. Bach probably began this section with the intention of writing an ordinary episode, choosing for development, according to custom, a fragment of matter previously used. The fragment appears first in bars 24-27, and again as the inner parts of a passage seven bars before the end of the first section:

It reappears in the treble three bars later, and so is fresh in our minds when the episode leads off with it:

But it worked so well, and the unpretentious counter-theme proved so fruitful in the way of modulation, that Bach went on and on until the episode became a movement of nearly fifty bars, with excursions so far afield as B flat minor and E flat minor. He then made a half-close on the dominant of the original key, repeated bars 4-18 of the opening section (adding a pedal part to the first six and slightly changing the last four), brought the subject in once more, and ended with a couple of bars of cadence. This da capo treatment is rarely used in fugal construction because mere repetition is foreign to the idea of the form. It succeeds here, as it does in the 'Wedge' fugue, because the repetition is preceded by a long and well-contrasted section, and so comes on with much of the freshness of new material.

Gripenkerl tells us that the only copy of this fine work was in a manuscript book of Bach's pupil Krebs, and that but for the intervention of a later organist named Reichardt (let his name be remembered therefor) would have been sold to a shopkeeper as waste paper. The fact leads to melancholy speculation as to the manuscripts that were less lucky. At the foot the copyist has written: 'Soli Deo Gloria, den 10 Januarii, 1751,' a date only a few months after Bach's death.

The Fantasia spoken of above has a five-part companion in the same key (iii., 57). It is said to have been originally attached to the fugue on the subject quoted above (Ex. 1 (e)). Probably Bach felt that a somewhat severe five-part fugue needed a freer companion than a closely imitative Fantasia, also in five parts. He wrote its present splendid prelude a good many years later.

The two Fantasias are remarkably alike in mood. There is even a likeness in material, the subject of the five-part work having much in common with the second theme of its fellow:

Both begin with an exposition over a tonic pedal, and both call for quiet expressive treatment, with a working up to a climax at the end—though the four-part work may well be played softly throughout. The five-part Fantasia is the more severe, having no second subject, and sticking so closely to its one brief theme that it almost suggests an ostinato. In bar 56 the bass and tenor should surely move in thirds. The subject nowhere else appears as in the pedal part:

Probably the mistake arose through the theme having been originally written throughout thus:

—a form still perpetuated in some editions, with confusing results in the more complex passages. We may safely surmise that the D, being a small note, was inadvertently omitted. The polyphony in this Fantasia, like that of its four-part companion, is of great beauty and interest.

In the Prelude and Fugue in C major (III., 70) we have two movements notable for compactness and spontaneity. The Prelude appears to have originally begun straight away with the subject, thus:

and ended rather abruptly one bar after the semi-quaver pedal solo. The very effective three bars of introduction and close were evidently added by Bach during one of the polishing processes to which most of his works were subjected towards the end of his life.

The subject of the fugue (Ex. 1, d) is simplicity itself, but from this modest text is evolved one of the freshest and most delightful of all the shorter fugues of Bach. There is not a bar that does not contribute to the discussion something worth while. As is fitting, the finest stroke comes at the close. We are made to prick up our ears by a new feature in the little flash of semiquavers, and, our attention having been gained, the subject comes rolling up in the bass :

EX. 11.

followed by a treble entry which barely reaches its final note before the whole is clinched by an uncompromisingly bold cadence.

A fine and weighty pair of works are the Prelude and Fugue in F minor (VI., 21). The Prelude, like the two Fantasias in C minor and the Prelude in C major, is a good example of Bach's rapidly-growing ability to write highly concentrated non-fugal pieces of moderate length. We have only to look at his early preludes and at those of his predecessors in order to realise the importance of this advance. The pioneers in organ composition were able to be coherent when writing fugues, passacaglias, and choral preludes, because they had a text which more or less kept them to the point. When they wrote free preludes and fantasias they were inclined to over-indulgence in showy passage-work and conventional sequences.

Of real invention and musical thought there was little, and even that was too often thrust into the background by the superficial element. Such a work as this F minor Prelude shows us Bach well on his way to such tremendous movements as the F major Toccata, and the B minor, E minor, C minor, and C major Preludes.

Like so many of his organ works, it lends itself to more than one interpretation. It may be made brilliant, or impressive, or thoughtful. Perhaps the rolling pedal part of a good deal of it points to breadth as being the effect at which to aim. There is a fine sense of spaciousness about most of the manual writing, e.g. :

EX. 12.

one of several passages in which Bach shows how much may be done in the laying out of the simplest of progressions. But mere ornamentation for its own sake is eschewed until the close, where three bars of cadenza follow the crashing discord and rest with dramatic effect. This fine movement deserves far more frequent hearing than it gets. It is equally good as a voluntary and recital piece.

The fugue is not an entire success. The exposition is very impressive, with a kind of sombre dignity all its own. It falls away afterwards, not only in the episodes, but in some of the treatments of the subject, e.g. :

EX. 13.

and even more at the left-hand entry a few bars later. The closing eighteen bars are splendidly sonorous. In spite of its inequalities, this fugue gets hold of one in a curious way. Its best parts are so fine that they atone for the weaknesses, and leave a balance on the right side.

(To be continued.)

THE ARTISTIC VALUES IN OPERA

BY ARTHUR L. SALMON

Careless thinkers may sometimes suppose that the union of several things great in themselves must result in something still greater. But the deduction is not a safe one; union does not always mean a strengthening. This may be asserted definitely in regard to the arts of music, poetry, painting; each at its highest is so strong that it needs no assistance from either of the others, and such assistance may become actually a disadvantage. Poetry at its best needs no music save its own; music at its best needs no articulate word; painting and the plastic arts are complete in themselves. One may almost say that it is a necessity for an art at its purest to be free from all external interference. There are undoubtedly secondary levels on which the arts may meet and form a sisterhood; there is the great bond of union between them that they spring mainly from the same emotions, and are only differing mediums of expression. But on their own peculiar ground, in their proper spheres, they can brook no intermeddling; they claim undivided attention. Each in her own time and place is a monopolist. They will admit preferences, but will hardly submit to comparison; and they really meet more intimately when each is fulfilling her own function, than when they are forcibly wedded in a limiting conjunction. For these reasons it may be affirmed that opera, that alluring hybrid of mediæval growth and primitive ancestry, does not reach such heights as either of her elements, taken separately, can attain. Music, poetry, painting, each in its own isolated purity, is greater than their combination.

The attraction of opera is its variety of appeal: the fact that it excites several sensuous and mental perceptions at once. We will admit that this is its strength and the source of its popularity. Its weakness lies in the fact that no two arts can be adequately appreciated at the same moment; the distraction from one to the other may be delightful in itself, but must induce a lack of the entire single-hearted absorption which each may rightly claim. The best operas are often best in spite of, or rather because of, their imperfection. They are not best because they have succeeded in attaining the unattainable—in presenting simultaneously great music, great acting, great scenic production; but they are best because the music is so good that we ignore the deficiencies of the verse, of the acting, or of the scene. In such a combination it is inevitable that some of the elements should be secondary; and in opera the predominant partner is obviously the music; the others are mere accessories. Therefore the mating, the union, is not a pure one; it has not succeeded in producing a unity. It is simply music with accompaniments; and those accompaniments must be a source of distraction unless they are ignored. Many opera-lovers contrive to ignore them; they care nothing for the acting (usually with good reason), and they try not to allow their eyes to distract their listening. But the majority of frequenters are on a lower level; sometimes they listen to the music, sometimes they are diverted by the scene; at no time do they touch the high places where art abides in its sanctuary. Opera has given these something that they may legitimately demand; but that something is not music at its best nor acting at its best. It is a composite product whose lawfulness we need not deny, but whose artistic rank we must class as secondary.

What opera has accomplished has been done by the unequal yoking not exactly of contraries nor even of incompatibles, but of elements that can never attain their highest in conjunction. Music has assumed the control of words, action, and scene: the words are slighted, the action degraded, the scene becomes a mechanical artifice. The result is a composite very dear to many, but which many of its lovers value for its music alone. It gives us what we may call dramatic music rather than lyric. The true lyric springs from emotion, passion, joy, sorrow, but not from action. Action induces a cry, not a song. It would not be fair to demand of opera that it should be natural, but it needs a strong illusion for us to tolerate singing accompanied by immediate action. Persons of only moderate imagination can accept the illusion and be satisfied with it; those of fuller imaginative power can transcend or ignore it. But the question is, Does not each one of these united arts suffer by its forcible union with the others? It is manifest that music suffers least, but her triumph is still won at some loss and is based on the humiliation of its accompaniments. The painter's art becomes obviously second-rate: we need not quarrel with this, for scenic effect has its legitimate place on the stage, though much of the best drama has been accomplished in the past without it. But action suffers a still greater deterioration; it is almost impossible to sing and act well simultaneously, even if good singers were always good actors. Certainly those who love good drama will not go to opera for it, nor will those who truly love painting. Drama will be sought on the stage; art in the exhibitions and studios. It remains that the only art-lover (using the word in its broader significance) whom opera can satisfy is the lover of music; and unless his enjoyment of music is really assisted by the accessories of scene and action, those accessories, artistically, have no justification.

Of course the subject is controversial, and there are many lawful divergences of taste. The blend that opera presents, that which is neither pure music nor pure acting nor pure pictorial art, may yet have its rightful place while it gives pleasure to many, even if it cannot claim to be artistically correct. But the fact remains that even the music, the paramount excuse for opera, is bound to suffer from its accompaniments, to fail of reaching its highest possibilities. The truest music does not need the support of action or of scene. If music depends in any measure on spectacle it is a failure as music, it falls short of its best, it becomes a part and not a whole. No lover of music desires to see it subordinated to anything else whatever. If the music is beautiful its true lover cares little for the scene or the acting; his own imagination supplies him with something far better, and his inward vision reveals far lovelier scenes. In so far as music calls for accessories, for assistance, its own suggestive power is proved deficient, or there is something deficient in the listener. It is fairly clear therefore that opera can only reach a high level in proportion as it neglects or rises above its imposed companions, and becomes concert-music, not stage-music, the utterance of pure emotion and not the limited interpretation of definite words or scenes. Even Wagner, with all his genius, condemned himself to be the supreme master of 'programme-music' by confining himself to the stage; he endeavoured to make his musical dramas literary, and his use of the leit-motif is merely a clever bit of stagecraft, an attempt at descriptive presentment. Music does not need to tell a tale; strictly speaking, in artistic purity, it cannot do so.

Must we conclude, then, that opera is false æsthetics, or that at least it is only completely satisfactory to undeveloped artistic tastes? To assert this may seem bigoted or pedantic: many whose taste may not be impugned find delight in opera. And yet, in an artistic sense, some of us must feel convinced that opera is not so legitimate as pure music or the pure drama. It has its part to play because the public still demands it. There are many who can only be brought to listen to good music by the attraction of scene and action; there are others to whom these things are encumbrances or distractions. To myself, personally, at its best opera is archaic; at its worst it is grotesquely absurd. In its alliance with drama it is mediæval, though that in itself need be no condemnation: the Cathedrals are mediæval. Treated in a modern spirit it degenerates to comic-opera. Wagner triumphed by his music alone, not by his drama, which is sheer romanticism of the 19th century or thereabout. If it be asserted that opera has to do with the ideal and not with reality, it may be asked whether stage-scenery and third-rate acting can possibly encourage ideals of true beauty. That opera has its own ideal must not be denied, but it is an ideal that demands much illusion. It remains clear that for the highest possible in music we must go to the concert-room; for the highest possible in drama we must go to the legitimate stage; for the best of poetry we must go to pure literature; for the best of pictorial art we must go to the great masters. Opera is a composite that does not ennoble its elements; artistically we can excuse it only as a transition.

A fund is being raised for the erection of a statue to Vincent Wallace, at Waterford, his native town. The hon. secretary of the London committee for the fund is Mr. William Meads, 7, Bow Street, W.C. 2.

Interludes

By 'FESTE'

Mr. Sydney Grew's article on 'Clichés' in the July Music and Letters, and Mr. Ernest Newman's supplement thereto in the Sunday Times of July 11 make very interesting reading. If they do not dispel the haze that hangs round the subject it is because there is no common agreement as to what constitutes a musical cliché. Mr. Clutsam wrote on this subject in the Musical Times of August, October, and November, 1914, giving numerous examples of what he described as clichés. But many of these were fine themes evolved from very simple and well-worn bases. To apply the derogatory term to them is to damn nearly all the great tunes ever written. Mr. Grew apparently wavers—so much so that it is not easy to reconcile some of his statements. For example, speaking of cadences, he says:

Though a piece of music may end with a plain key-chord, yet that chord cannot be approached by the former harmonic steps—at least if cliché is to be avoided.

Later:

There is no need for excessive novelty in art. The once dead cliché may be made to flower again if the man puts his true self into his music.

So that, after all, there is life in the old cadence yet, always provided it is used by a composer who puts his true self into the job. This is so true that in saying it Mr. Grew goes a long way towards knocking the bottom out of a good deal of his article. He says the same thing elsewhere. Thus:

It is obvious that 'pure music' must tend to become stereotyped in form; yet when an architectural feature is a necessity, and when the composition has life, the feature, though stereotyped, does not become a platitude.

In other words, a cliché ceases to be a cliché when handled by a composer of genius. But the verbal cliché can never be anything else, no matter who makes use of it, because, as Mr. Newman says: 'Ordinary language is a fixed thing, while the language of music is fluid.' The most threadbare progression may be transfigured by some slight rhythmical subtlety or an arresting harmonic touch, or by the manner in which it is approached or quitted. Hence the confusion that arises when we begin to argue from an analogy that at first sight appears convincing, but which soon wears so thin that it lets us down badly.

Mr. Grew begins by talking about clichés, but soon gets switched on to quotations. He seems to justify this by the assertion that 'the cliché seems always to begin in quotation.' No doubt 'the devouring element,' 'the sacred edifice,' and a hundred other discredited tags began life with all the advantages of distinguished parentage and unexceptionable surroundings. They are now a pretentious cant-phraseology, as Mr. Grew says.

But what he calls the 'real spell-words of genius' are on another footing, and are not so easily dragged down in the world as he thinks. At what point may a Shakespearian quotation be said to have 'lost all allusive power, and passed into a pointless, meaningless, piece of abstraction?' Though used millions of times there are few or none that are not still alive when rightly employed—that is, as aids to a clear and vivid expression of thought. Only when dragged in (especially when prefaced by 'as the immortal Shakespeare says') do they lose caste. So much depends upon taste and judgment in the use of them that we may venture on a formula, and say that although every cliché is a quotation, a quotation (even the most familiar) is not necessarily a cliché. And here again we see there is no analogy between the common-places of literature and those of music. The former almost all begin as deliberate quotations, whereas the latter are fashionable turns of melody, or harmonic progressions, or the 'architectural features,' which, as Mr. Grew admits, are a necessity in pure music.

Mr. Grew resisted the temptation to do more than merely touch the subject of quotation in music. He says the matter has never yet been adequately discussed by the critics. But is there enough of such quotation to make lengthy discussion worth while? How little there is was proved recently when Dr. Harding lectured on the subject before the Royal College of Organists. He was able to deal with all the familiar examples as well as with some out-of-the-way ones, in the course of a short paper. One of Mr. Grew's few remarks on musical quotation seems to show that he is still influenced by his delusive literary analogy. He says 'quotation in music easily descends into platitude.' However great the danger may be in literary quotation it hardly exists in music, because of the essential fluidity of the medium. A musical phrase is rarely or never quoted exactly. It is reharmonized, or its rhythm is modified, or it is given a new aspect by being combined with another theme. Moreover, it can rarely stand out like a literary quotation because it has to be woven into the texture of the music, and the process usually involves some slight change in rhythm or harmony. So far as there are any working principles in the matter, modification is certainly one. This being so, what we speak of as quotation is really allusiveness—a more subtle thing.

If Mr. Grew admits this, he will, I think, alter his view as to the danger of descent into platitude. A verbal phrase is weakened by immediate repetition, and becomes almost senseless with prolonged reiteration. But a musical phrase can not only survive repetition; it usually gains thereby. Indeed many themes of the briefer type have little or no meaning until they have been presented at least three or four times. The subject of a ground bass may be an unimportant string of notes when given out in puris naturalibus (a terrible cliché this, perpetrated with malice prepense—hullo! there's another!) It may even be the veriest platitude. Yet it is anything but commonplace by the time a Bach or a Purcell has repeated it a score of times.

There are good reasons why composers have made so little use of quotation. Probably they realised that such allusions are as a rule far more liable to miss than to hit. A verbal quotation usually has the advantage of inverted commas or special type. Even without such aids it would rarely be missed by the average reader, because the eye can take in at a glance not only the quotation but a good deal of the context as well. And if the quotation be not realised fully at first sight the reader can hark back and give himself another chance. The ear can hear only the sound of the moment; it knows nothing of what is ahead, and can call on the memory for little of what has gone before—a combined use of ear and memory possible only to the trained hearer. A musical quotation has to be very familiar, and must be given a good deal of prominence, before it has anything like the certainty of effect a verbal quotation can count upon. A further point so obvious as to need no more than mention is the fact that the classics of literature are more quotable than those of music, because they are more familiar to the average well-educated man. They have been a part of his education, whereas music

Mr. Newman points out that, roughly speaking, notes and chords are the musical equivalents of letters and words. The fact reminds us of yet another disadvantage under which the musical quotation labours. What can be done with one chord—or even two? But a single word may call to the mind of the reader a wealth of associations. If I read that a man is a Pecksniff I not only have his whole character in a nutshell; I also taste again, in a lightning-flash of time, the pleasure derived from the parts of the book in which Pecksniff appeared. Probably the only chord that can of itself remind us of a particular work is the tremendous dissonance with which Beethoven ushers in the final section of the ninth Symphony. Most musicians would identify this readily, but the occasions on which it could be used with point are so few as to be negligible. Even so it would need to be led up to in some way. As one of the ingredients of a passage it might easily escape notice. It is doubtful if there is any pair of chords that can be quoted, but there are innumerable pairs of words that have only to be combined in order to score with certainty. 'Multitudinous' and 'seas' used apart are merely two words doing their duty as constituents of a sentence. But if I bring them together, everybody knows I am drawing on 'Macbeth.' It is impossible to be so allusive in so small a space where music is concerned.

The most familiar of melodic fragments are apt to lose their identity unless accompanied by their original harmony. Even a wide departure from the original pitch may spoil them as allusions.

For example, this passage reminds us of nothing in particular :

Transposed down a sixth :

it has a somewhat familiar sound, though even such intelligent people as you yourself would be at a loss if I asked you what I was quoting. Not until we present it thus :

can we count on its being easily identified.

After all, the main reasons for literary quotation can never apply in music. We draw on an author for a phrase chiefly because we feel that it says once and for all in the best possible way something we in our turn wish to express, or because it backs up our own words, or because it gives the reader a short cut to our meaning. A composer who drew on another composer for (say) the treatment of a scale-passage because it struck him as being a good deal better than anything he himself could manage would find a harder term than 'quotation' applied to the process.

As was said above, the verbal cliché is unmistakable, and even the most skilful of craftsmen cannot make it appear better than it is. But we are so vague about the musical cliché that we may almost say there is no such thing. Thus Mr. Grew quotes a couple of cadences from Handel and Mozart, and says they are still beautiful and vital, but only when used by those composers. Let Pepusch and Abel write them, and they become 'withered' and 'like a bit of faded slang.'

Isn't this too sweeping? The cadences were the common property of the period. We still find pleasure in them when they are preceded by vital music. Sometimes this is the case with works by Handel and Mozart, but not always. Frequently the vital music is by the Pepusches and Abels, and the blighting and withering is done by the Handels and Mozarts, writing (as Mr. Grew says later) when they should have been resting. Fair play for the minnows!

We are again reminded of the haziness surrounding the subject when Mr. Grew says that 'the most vicious cliché in the middle of the 19th century was the chord of the diminished seventh, particularly as a modulatory step.' But a mere chord, like a word, cannot constitute a cliché. The excessive use of a striking chord or word is surely a mannerism. Nor is the whole-tone scale a cliché. It is a basis, like any other scale, and differs from them only in being singularly limited in scope.

As the possibilities of fresh tonal combinations diminish, this question of commonplace is likely to be more frequently discussed, so it will be well to get our mind clear. I make my modest offering towards a solution by the suggestion that progressions usually described as clichés are the musical equivalents of such phrases as 'on the other hand,' 'it goes without saying,' 'as a matter of fact,' 'beside the point,' and scores of other useful tags. A writer or speaker with anything vital to say may use these liberally and give no impression of platitude. Similarly, a composer may be original and yet employ the modulatory links, approaches to cadences, and melodies or figures based on scale and arpeggio passages. The most ordinary series of common chords may be made into a thing of beauty. Arcadelt's 'Ave Maria' is compounded almost entirely of such chords in root positions—that is, used in a way that the elementary harmony student regards as necessarily productive of dull squareness.

Anxiety to avoid these simple and natural constituents leads almost invariably to stilted and affected phraseology, both in literature and music. It is like trying to pay one's bus fares with nothing but five-pound notes. At such times the humble copper coin is a boon. When writing or composing we should not despise the occasional use of small change in getting from point to point. Of course if there are no points, we need not make the journey.

As to how far these legitimate commonplaces may be made to suffer a seachange by means of instrumental and other resources is a further consideration suggested by Mr. Newman's two quotations from Balfour Gardiner and Puccini. I shall try to discuss it next month.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XI.—JOHN BROWNE

John Browne was a not inconsiderable figure in English musical art during the closing years of the reign of Henry VII., and yet scanty details are available as to his biography; in fact, Mr. Barclay Squire says that 'nothing is known of him.' Some writers allege that he flourished in the early portion of Henry VIII.'s reign, while others place him as 'circa 1525.' His works are fairly numerous, and the British Museum can boast of over a dozen of his compositions. He is represented in the famous

Eton College Anthem Book* by a five-part 'O Mater venerabilis,' an eight-part 'O Maria salvatoris mater,' two six-part Motets 'O Marie plene gracie' and 'O Regina mundi clare,' and a five-part 'Salve Regina.' Dr. Ernest Walker, in his admirable 'History of Music in England' (1907), quotes with approval John Browne's 'Margaret meeke,' which he describes as written 'in a regular rondo form.'†

There has been much confusion over the period of Browne's activity, and this is heightened by the fact that there were two composers of this surname almost contemporaneous. However, their christian names were not the same, as William Browne of the Chapel Royal was a very different person from John Browne the composer now under notice; and, moreover, John Browne was dead fully ten years before the accession of Henry VIII., whereas William Browne was alive in 1516.

So far I have not been able to locate the early career of John Browne, but he appears to have been Rector of the Parish Church of West Tilbury in 1480. This post he held till the year 1490, when he resigned. From the printed Calendar of Patent Rolls of Henry VII. we learn that on July 20, 1490, Thomas Clerk, chaplain, was presented to the Parish Church of West Tilbury, in the diocese of London, 'void by the resignation of Master John Browne.'

The reason of Master John Browne's resignation was very natural, as he had been offered a vacant stall in St. Stephen's Chapel, Westminster. Probably this offer was gratifying, as the preferment gave him an opportunity for exercising his musical gifts in the Royal Chapel. He had already been in high favour in Court circles, and on July 29, 1489, there is an entry in the Patent Rolls which informs us that John, Archbishop of Canterbury, legate of the Apostolic See, John Browne, clerk, and Thomas Butler were granted the collation of the next void canonry and prebend in the Chapel of St. Stephen, in the Palace of Westminster. Three years later an Italian musical cleric, Peter Carmelianus, of Brescia, was also admitted to a canonry and prebend in the Collegiate Chapel of St. Stephen.

No other biographical data as to this early Tudor composer can be gleaned save the date of his death, which occurred early in February, 1498. The official reference in the printed Calendar places on record that on February 19, 1498, Stephen Berworth, one of the King's chaplains, was appointed to a prebend in the Collegiate Chapel of St. Stephen, in the Palace of Westminster, void by the death of John Browne.

Thus it is certain that John Browne, the composer, flourished in the reigns of Edward IV., Edward V., Richard III., and Henry VII., and was contemporary with Hothby, Lambe, Abingdon, Banester, Pashe, Davy, Aleyn, Gervays, Forest, Cooke, Fayrfax, Newark, and others.

If Browne composed nothing but the charming five-part 'O Mater Venerabilis' in the Eton MS., and the four-part carol 'Wofully arayed,' his fame as an early Tudor composer would be sufficiently evidenced. Indeed, the technique is much in advance of the writers at the close of the 15th century. Others of his 'Madrigals' are very interesting, notably 'That godly lass,' 'Her lusty cheer,' and 'My Margaret.'

Regarding his early career, Mr. Barclay Squire suggests that he may have been the John Browne, of county Bucks, who was admitted at King's College, Cambridge, aged nineteen, in 1445. And this surmise is not unlikely; but as to the actual facts, the only data at present available are what are here for the first time presented.

THE IDEAS OF M. VINCENT D'INDY

By C. SAINT-SAËNS, DE L'INSTITUT

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell)

(Concluded from July number, page 458)

One day, I was utterly stupefied to hear Gevaert, the famous director of the Conservatoire of Brussels, declare that the study of the fugue was unnecessary.

Strange ideas would at times come into his head; he regarded the Treaty of Berlin as an admirable piece of work; in architecture, he recognised nothing but the Greek style: all else, according to him, was non-existent. His edition of song classics is unqualifiable.

M. D'Indy is not of Gevaert's opinion as regards the fugue. He devotes to it a long chapter, admirably documented and detailed, dealing with its origin, its formation, its elements, particularly the canon style, which he considers separately. Amongst all the masters of the past whom he quotes in this connection—Italians, Spaniards, Englishmen, Germans, and Frenchmen—he naturally gives the place of honour to Sebastian Bach, the Jupiter of the fugue. Amongst the Italians, I looked in vain for the names of Clementi and Cherubini. And yet Clementi has interspersed his immortal 'Gradus' with numerous fugues and canons; and though the fugues may not claim to rival those of the 'Clavecin bien tempéré,' they are nevertheless very interesting; the canons are of rare merit and some are real masterpieces. Cherubini wrote a treatise on 'Fugue,' containing fugues with two, three, and four parts, and finally, a grand fugue with eight parts and two choruses, an admirable piece of work.

When M. D'Indy sets forth the various artifices in the fugue, we may note the ingenious and amusing comparison he makes between a theme dealt with by augmentation and by diminution, and the effect produced on an object by the apposition of divergent and convergent lenses.

M. D'Indy acknowledges that, in spite of the great changes that have taken place in musical art, the fugue, which has a great deal of vitality, still exists and has its admirers. The only thing is that it is less frequently used; we are no longer 'carried away' by it; and in these days I find no one capable of producing—as Händel did with the greatest ease—long fugued choruses; we are 'carried away' by other branches of the art.

Nevertheless the fugue has not altogether disappeared from modern compositions, and M. D'Indy names authors who have kept it alive. He honours me by including my name amongst them, though he finds fault with my fugues for being somewhat cold and conventional. I cannot well judge what concerns myself; still, I hardly think this criticism can be brought against the first movement of my Symphony in A minor, which affects the fugue form.

I remember that at the first performance of this movement the adoption of the fugue

* An excellent account of this MS., by Mr. Barclay Squire, appears in Archæologia, lvi.

† This Madrigal is in the British Museum (Add. MS. 5465).

form appeared scandalous to many of the listeners. This assuredly was not the opinion of M. D'Indy, who frequently throughout his 'Course' praises my works. I am sincerely and deeply grateful to him for this, as he is not lavish with his favours. And in this connection I cannot too strongly insist on the fact that nothing but my love for music is now prompting me in this task of criticism, and that the word 'criticism' must here be given its very highest interpretation. So important and conscientious a work as this 'Course of Musical Composition' frequently deserves admiration, and sympathy above everything. It would deserve both to a still greater degree if the author, instead of trusting to his own intuition, had not sought illumination from across the Rhine. Nothing could be better than to go to Germany for masterpieces, but do not go there for theories! Even Richard Wagner's theories are often pernicious; his works would not be what they are if he had always conformed to his theories; the harm they have done is incalculable. M. Debussy has been highly praised for avoiding them. True, his music in no way resembles that of the author of 'Tristan'; but he none the less applied, as completely as he could, the Wagnerian system, which consists in drawing all interest away from the singing and bestowing it on the orchestra.

Before leaving the fugue I cannot help remarking that this part of the 'Course' appears to me calculated rather to show the pupil how others have written fugues than to teach him to write them himself. In this connection, it is my opinion that Cherubini's ancient treatise might be put to more profitable use.

We will not follow M. D'Indy in his learned and circumstantial dissertations on the various forms which music has successively adopted throughout the ages: the suite, a series of dance airs; the sonata, of which Beethoven is the hero, as he is of the symphony (which is nothing more than a sonata for the orchestra); the variation, to which he rightly attaches great importance. All this is of the utmost interest.

With reference to dance airs, I am not sure that the author has been sufficiently informed on the pavane, which he simply mentions—in passing—as an air in duple time. With many others I have long thought that the pavane was an air of a dainty, elegant character, after the style of the famous Romanesca. A pavane of this description, by Auguste Durand, has long enjoyed considerable favour, whilst everyone is acquainted with the delightful pavane of M. Gabriel Fauré. I myself have introduced graceful pavanines in 'Étienne Marcel' and in 'Proserpine.'

Quite different is the origin of the pavane, which dates back to the 16th century. When I formed the idea of introducing contemporary music into the ballet of 'Ascanio,' I went to the Bibliothèque Nationale and undertook a certain amount of research work which culminated in an unexpected discovery: pompous and majestic pavanines in three- and four-time. Most likely they were intended to accompany a solemn march-past, or processions during which a certain amount of 'strutting' was indulged in, consisting, as they did, of a few bars repeated indefinitely, until the Coda brought the whole to a conclusion. The first morceau in the ballet of 'Ascanio' is a three-time pavane; the last a four-time pavane, both of them authentic as regards not only the melody but also the ensemble.

In the original, the first pavane is written in six real parts, which I have retained.

I am very pleased to find that M. D'Indy attaches great importance to Haydn's Sonatas. These are not known to the youth of the present day, who are ignorant of their beauty, their extraordinary fecundity, and that wealth of imagination possessed by the musician to whom we are indebted for Mozart and Beethoven. When we plunge into the score of his great Oratorio, 'The Seasons,' we imagine we have discovered a new planet. This many-sided work, ranging from comic opera to sacred music, representing as it does the thousand varied aspects of nature, the purity of the entire plan combining with the warmest and richest colouring—this work, so varied in form, ought frequently to be offered to the public, and every composer should study it thoroughly.

I regret to have to point out once more, in Beethoven's 'Farewell' sonata, Op. 81a, the tendency to substitute arbitrary indications for those given by the author. Where Beethoven wrote:

we find:

a very different thing, both from the point of view of style and from that of execution.

As regards variation and embellishments, M. D'Indy speaks of the Italian gruppetto which Richard Wagner so widely misused throughout his works—to such an extent that it was, quite incorrectly, designated the 'groupe Wagnérien.' He thought of remodelling this ornament in his latest works for the purpose of rejuvenating it. This gruppetto is quite worthless and antiquated, and was going out of fashion. Wagner would have done better not to restore it to a place of honour. I should have been glad to find M. D'Indy sharing this opinion of mine, but to every true Wagnerite Wagner is a god whose most insignificant acts are sacred. His will be done! Such is the rule, from which there can be no departure.

On the other hand, I find him very severe in his judgment on Dussek, and on the same composer's Sonata, 'The Return to Paris,' which enjoyed a temporary celebrity. The Scherzo (to which, however, M. D'Indy renders justice), with its enharmonic theme, is extraordinarily audacious for the period in which it was written.

Perhaps he does not attach sufficient importance to the mediant part in the movement in the ternary section, which begins the second part. In Mozart, it is frequently here that we find the main interest of the movement. For instance, at the beginning of the second part of an entrancing Sonata in C we find this amazing and delightful false relation:

which nothing in the first part had led us to expect.

It was left to Mozart to discover that there are two kinds of false relation: the one which offends the ear and must be avoided, the other which is a source of beauty, and was extensively used by himself.

M. D'Indy has a high opinion of the Sonatas of T. W. Rust, upon which he dwells at length, regarding them as superior to those of Haydn and of Mozart. It would be wise to proceed warily as regards Rust's compositions, concerning the authenticity of which there has been much dispute.

These Sonatas have been considerably altered. Probably M. D'Indy was not aware that musical 'faking' is a common practice in Germany. Amateur works which have reached the publisher and unfortunately bear traces of their origin, subsequently appear embellished with all the graces of the most refined composition. Was there not even published a posthumous Violin Concerto by Beethoven, of which the author had written no more than a few bars?

Rust's grandson has protested against the authenticity of the famous sonatas, but to no purpose; M. D'Indy had caught his great composer and was unwilling to let him go.

We may wonder at the inordinate height of the pedestal upon which he has erected the statue of César Franck, the 'gifted continuer of the great German symphonist, the greatest creator of musical forms along with Beethoven and Wagner.' It would be ungracious for me to dispute the merit of his works, as I was one of the first to give them a hearing, and at my own risk, at a time when the public had not come to know them. Further, Jules Simon, then Minister of Education, had consulted me on the choice of a professor for the organ at the Conservatoire, and I strongly recommended him to choose César Franck, so that the latter, with the help of the salary granted by the State, might not find himself compelled to waste in giving pianoforte lessons the time he might more profitably devote to composition. All the same, though I highly esteem his works, and endeavour to get them appreciated at their true value, I have never gone so far as to set them on a level with those of the great masters of music; they lack too many qualities for that distinction. Berlioz was more of an artist than a musician; Franck was more of a musician than an artist: he was not a poet. In his works we do not find that latent warmth, that irresistible charm which make us forget everything and transport us into unknown and supernal realms. The sense of the picturesque seems absent from them. At one moment we come up against an ill-timed modulation—as in his Sonata for pianoforte and violin—where we are forcibly carried away from E major to B flat minor, the latter key thus acquiring, as it were, an unpleasant bitterness*; at another moment we have a construction in which something is lacking, as in the 'Prélude, Choral, et Fugue,' 'an imperishable work, monumentum ære perennius,' a morceau that is ungrateful and inconvenient to play, where the choral is not a choral nor the fugue a fugue, for it loses courage, so to speak, as soon as the exposition is over, and continues in interminable digressions which no more resemble a fugue than a zoophyte resembles a mammifer. These digressions are scarcely atoned for by a brilliant ending. Assuredly it is not in this way that we shall, even at the present time, understand the possibilities of the ancient and venerable fugue.

César Franck made use very frequently—even too frequently—of the canon; but his canons are always either in unison or in octaves, thus presenting no difficulty of any kind. His much-vaunted work, 'Les Béatitudes,' is very unequal. Occasionally we meet with something quite insignificant; nor is the declamation invariably free from reproach. Speaking generally, we are more likely to find in him a violent and meritorious aspiration towards beauty than true beauty itself. His efforts remind us of Victor Hugo's act of faith in God:

'Il est, il est, il est, il est éperdument!'

His emotion is seldom communicative; I say seldom, I do not say never. It is a pleasure for me to cite the beautiful soprano air in 'The Redemption,' illuminating and cheering this austere landscape as does the sun with his genial beams.

At times a gloomy sadness hangs over his work, so that when listening to it we are conscious of a pleasure which may be compared with that afforded by the Psalms of David at a Church service. But this is neither the tragic and splendid sadness of Mozart in his Fantasia in C minor nor that of Beethoven in his celebrated Sonata in C sharp minor. His teaching did not always meet with brilliant results, consisting as it did, for the most part, of compliments and encouragement which, coming from so exalted a source, charmed his pupils and converted them into enthusiastic disciples, proselytes of the Master. One of them, who was very intelligent, not happening to find in César Franck the help requisite for completing the instrumentation of a work which he had outlined, called on me for advice. Three series of painstaking consultation-lessons enabled him to bring out the only orchestral composition by which he is known to the public. All the same, he did not advertise the fact, and, in the eyes of the world, he remained César Franck's pupil.

Franck's religious music, though eminently deserving of respect, calls to mind the austerities of the cloister rather than the perfumed splendours of the sanctuary.

There can be no doubt that M. D'Indy is the favourite disciple before whom the master unveiled the holy of holies and exposed the treasures of his doctrine, the result being that a sense of gratitude influences his judgment. The same feeling makes me regret that Liszt does not occupy a more important place in the 'Course of Musical Composition.' His great fantasia, entitled 'Sonate,' and the Symphonic Poems are disposed of in a few words and relegated to the Variations. The 'Sonate,' long neglected, is now likely to become famous, and the same might be said concerning his great Fantasia for the Organ on the Choral of the 'Prophète,' Ad nos, ad salutarem undam, were it easier to find an opportunity of listening to it in France. In England and America, however, where every concert-hall is provided with an organ and where Protestantism permits of sacred concerts being given in places of worship, it takes its rightful place. The creation of the symphonic poem would be sufficient in itself to immortalise its author. This genre, to which the most varied forms may be applied, shows a tendency to take the place of the symphony, strictly so called, which now seems to have reached its full expansion, and, like the sonata, no longer has anything of importance to teach us.

* The first part of this Sonata is delightful—but as for the rest! Still, it is famous: consequently there is nothing more to be said. I may, however, confess that I prefer M. Gabriel Fauré's admirable Sonata in A.

Like Haydn and Mozart, like most too prolific artists, Liszt has written things that are unnecessary; the purest taste does not always govern his style. The same may be said of many great artists and poets. It is scarcely necessary to do more than mention a few chance names that come to mind: Rubens, Verdi, Shakespeare, Goethe, Victor Hugo. The latter even went so far as to say that lack of taste was the mark of genius.

Liszt's music has long been calumniated and traduced. Whereas certain critics looked upon it as 'pianist's music,' others accused the author of introducing philosophical systems into music. At last justice is being meted out to him, and I congratulate myself on being one of the first to plead his cause against the general hostility.

In bringing to a conclusion this short critical survey, I wish to express my regret at being unable to carry it further, M. D'Indy's work being still incomplete. With his great erudition and his power of analysis, he has much more that is interesting to tell us, and I earnestly hope that I may see the completion of the 'Course of Musical Composition.'

It is also my desire, by this brief study, to draw attention to so fine a work and to increase the number of its readers.

ROBERT FAYRFAX

BY S. ROYLE SHORE

The present article is an attempt to raise the question of the true position of this eminent composer in the world of English music.*

The place and date of Fayrfax's birth are not precisely known. There is some evidence for Bayford in Hertfordshire, and about 1465 is usually suggested as the year. He became organist of the great Abbey of St. Albans, now the Cathedral of a modern diocese. The organ was a celebrated one, and had been presented in 1438 by Abbot Wheathamsted, while the post was doubtless of some importance and interest. Fayrfax took the degree of Doctor of Music at Cambridge in 1501 or 1502, and in 1511 was admitted ad eundem at Oxford. In 1509 he is found amongst the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, and in 1520 accompanied his King to the Field of Cloth of Gold. He doubtless kept up his connection with his post at the Abbey, for he was buried in a prominent place in the Presbytery, as also were his wife and children.

The stone over the grave has been despoiled of its brasses with figures, family arms, and inscription, but happily the full text of the last named is on record, and reads as follows: 'Pray for the soules of Master Robert Fayrefax, doctor of music, and Agnes his wife and her children, the which Robert deceased the xxiiij. day of October, the year of our Lord God mxxi. On whose soules Jeshu have mercy. Amen.'

The position of Fayrfax as the leading British musician of his day has never been questioned, and in recent times he has been increasingly appreciated, but it is clear that full justice has not yet been done to him. This is probably due to the fact that he is generally judged by the technical methods of the Netherlands School, that apparently only began to make itself felt shortly before the date of his death. He is frequently called the last of the conservatives, working on the methods of Dunstable, and had nothing in common with his great contemporary, that admitted genius, Josquin des Prés, whose anticipation of the methods of Palestrina—who was not born until after his death—is a perpetual source of wonder.

The musical situation at this time in England is thus usually summarised: At the death of Dunstable in 1453, under whom it is conceded that we led in the world of music—a leadership never since regained—we were content to go on reproducing his methods, whilst the musicians of the Continent, whom formerly we had taught under Dunstable, were developing their art on new lines. National conservatism and the disturbing influences of the Wars of the Roses were doubtless responsible for this stagnation. With Fayrfax the Dunstable School may be said to have come to an end, and the ideals and methods of the musicians of the Netherlands thereafter attained pre-eminence.

A record of recent estimates of Fayrfax's music, from those who have a right to be heard, would assist the present writer in his task. The late Mr. H. E. Wooldridge, in vol. ii. of his 'Polyphonic Period' of the 'Oxford History of Music' (1905), thus refers to the compositions of Fayrfax and his contemporaries:

It is evident, too, that a new and reactionary school is forming, sincere in its rejection of the Netherland methods, and convinced that pure counterpoint, together with an occasional short point of imitation in the body of the movement, is sufficient to supply the necessary interest in music; of such a school Fayrfax, whose work perfectly represents the aims of the men about him, is the natural head. And although composers were of course soon to learn that counterpoint alone is not sufficient to maintain the interest of music, yet for the moment the endeavour to justify their convictions occupied the whole of their attention, and it may be said that this concentration of effort upon a single means of beauty was often rewarded by the discovery of extremely fine effects of sound.

Dr. Ernest Walker, in his 'History of Music in England' (1907), thus refers to the subject:

Fayrfax himself, however, . . . while the most prominent figure of the time, is not altogether, to us, one of the most sympathetic. He shows little direct trace of Flemish influence; not very much imitative writing is to be seen in most of his works, and he has a distinct liking for pure note-against-note counterpoint, out of which he not infrequently produces results of smoothly massive sound that are thoroughly dignified, but at the same time (as a rule) decidedly heavy and inclined to be dull. But, though specimens of his work occur in well nigh all the numerous collections of MSS. of the period, he does not by any means completely represent his contemporaries; some, such as Turges, seem to have had the same general tendencies, but others—and indeed a larger number—show more affinity to Flemish methods, though, until about the accession of Henry VIII., these methods are adopted only tentatively. . . . Others show an expressiveness of style that we rarely or never find in Fayrfax.

Later on, in referring to Taverner's five-part 'Dum transisset Sabbatum' he says:

We shall see that, in spite of its being built on the basis of a plainsong melody, according to older fashion, there is yet a sort of real distinctiveness of utterance of which a pure conservative like Fayrfax was not capable.

By far the most valuable published utterances dealing with Fayrfax will be found in Mr. H. B. Collins's paper read before the Musical Association in 1917, and the discussion which followed, to which

* Dr. Gratian Flood made Robert Fayrfax the subject of No. IX. in his series 'New Light on Early Tudor Composers' now appearing in the Musical Times (see June number, p. 384).

Mr. W. Barclay Squire, the chairman, and Dr. R. R. Terry made some notable contributions. Mr. Collins, in referring to the Albanus Mass, evidently composed in honour of the Patron Saint of the Abbey about the year 1500, said:

I may say at once that I expected at this early period to find something that would sound crude and harsh to modern ears, or at least to ears accustomed to the finished style of Palestrina. In this I was agreeably disappointed. The counterpoint (of its kind) is fluent and melodious, and the harmony pure and clear. Except for an occasional passing dissonance on the accented beat, there is hardly anything that from this point of view Palestrina would have challenged. . . . It is impossible, I think, to resist the conclusion that Fayrfax was a great master-musician, and that he had at his entire command all the musical knowledge and resources of his age and country. Whether he can also be called a great genius, as his contemporary Josquin undoubtedly was, is much more doubtful. There is in Josquin's best work an originality and force that I cannot pretend to have found in that of Fayrfax. . . . Josquin's counterpoint, too, is altogether of a freer and more advanced character than that of Fayrfax, approximating more to the methods of Palestrina and Lasso. . . . In the case of Josquin and Fayrfax, . . . the Englishman certainly shows to advantage in this respect. Fayrfax always appears to express himself with perfect smoothness and facility, while Josquin's work often looks rough just because he was striving after an expression which was in advance of the technique of his time.

Dr. Terry, in the course of many valuable remarks, underlined the great importance of practical performance if the music of the period is to be judged truly. This too little regarded fact was prominent in the minds of Mr. W. L. Luttman—Fayrfax's worthy successor at St. Albans—and the present writer in connection with the recent lecture in the Cathedral on Fayrfax and his music, and the demonstrations by the choir. The impression made by the music was so great as to reveal more clearly than ever that the true position of Fayrfax—particularly as regards his modern feeling and artistic contrasts—had not yet been adequately realised. The examples sung were taken from the Magnificat of the First Tone, the Albanus Mass, and the Anthem 'Aeternae laudis lilium,' and were rendered partly in the original Latin and partly adapted English, Mr. Collins most kindly placing his scores at the service of the venture.

The first example now given is taken from the Magnificat, and shows Fayrfax in his massive harmonic mood, foreshadowing clearly the musical feeling of a later age. This appears to contain a suggestion of a plain-chant canto fermo in the upper bass part, founded on the solemn form of Tone I., appropriate to the canticle in question. The time and expression marks were those provided for the guidance of the choir. The verbal text of the examples is usually applicable to the Cantus part only.

Ex. 1. Ad . pa - tres nos

S.

A.

T.

B.

f to our fore . . . fa - thers,

Allegro.

Allargando.

ff our fore . . . fa - thers,

tros.

Maestoso.

A . bra ham.

A . bra . ham, A - bra - ham.

In marked contrast to this is the passage from the second verse of the 'Gloria Patri,' which Byrd himself might have written a century, more or less, later:

Ex. 2. sae . . . cu . . . la

S.

A.

mf is now, is now, and ev-er &c.

T.

B.

The Amen at the conclusion has a fine effect in a passing-note on an accented beat, and forms a wonderful conclusion to a composition which, as edited for use at St. Albans, ought to be heard in every Cathedral in the land. The rests in the Cantus and Tenor parts show that there were some limits to the composer's ability to anticipate modernity, but perhaps his singers forgot them sometimes, and gave, on their own account, an involuntary foretaste of other things to come:

Ex. 3. saeculorum. rall molto. A - men.

S.

A.

T.

ff A men.

B.

B.

Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright, to whose original research all students and experts owe so much, relates that on March 28, 1502, Fayrfax received twenty shillings from Elizabeth of York (the Consort of Henry VII.) 'for setting an anthem of oure Lady and St. Elizabeth.' There can be no doubt that the five-part Motet or Anthem 'Aeternae laudis lilium' was the resulting composition. It is extremely long. The middle part traces the relationships of those named in two-part writing only. When the word 'Elizabeth' occurs, the five voices enter one after the other, possibly in allusion to the Queen's name, which was thus rendered very prominent:

Ex. 4.

S.

A.

2-part writing. mf

T.

T.

B.

quo Pa . . . tre E li - sa .

E - li - sa - beth, E - li - sa - beth, E -

T. 1. E - li - sa - beth, T. 2. E -

• beth, E - li - sa - beth, . .

E - li - sa - beth, (2-part writing resumed.)

E - li - sa - beth.

Soon after this a beautiful passage occurs. Its sequential form and modern feeling are remarkable. English words are added to bring out both points with greater distinctness. As so often happens in Fayrfax's music, long passages are practically devoid of verbal text, and render adaptation very necessary whether the music is sung in English or Latin :

Ex. 5. in ma - tri - ce cis -

T. T. 1. T. 2. and she spake out, . . spake

T. B. and she spake out, . . spake

(9 bars) ta

out . . with a loud . . voice, &c.

Extracts from the Albanus Mass will now engage notice.

The following, from a few bars of the Agnus adapted to the conclusion of the Responses to the Commandments—the Mass, as usual with Masses of the period, contains no Kyrie—is a wonderful example of modern feeling. The Tenor has a canto fermo of plain-chant :

Ex. 6. re no -

S. us, and write all these thy

S. us, and write all these thy

A. us, and write all these thy

T. C. F. us, and write all these thy

B. us, and write all these thy laws in our hearts

pp rall. bis.

we be - seech thee.

pp rall.

pp rall.

In great contrast to this is the opening of the Gloria, which gives an example of what Mr. Collins describes as the composer's occasional resort to imitation of an 'innocent character.' The subject is a kind of motto theme, every movement of the Mass—save the Benedictus, which is really a part of the 'Sanctus'—commencing with it. The full form of the subject and its possible origin will appear in a later example :

Ex. 7. Et in ter - ra pax ho - mi - ni

S. Et in ter - ra

A. Et in ter - ra pax ho -

T. Et in ter - ra pax ho - bus bo - nae vo. &c.

pax ho - mi - ni - bus.

mi - ni - bus.

The next example seemed to be so orchestral in feeling, that the organist, Mr. Alleyne Warren, accompanied it, and was instructed to 'let himself go.' It was in marked contrast to the severity of the background he provided for the verses unset by Fayrfax, and sung to the proper plain-chant by the choir and a congregation of about six hundred :

Ex. 8. Maestoso. Gra - ti - as a -

S. Gra - ti - as a - gi - mus ti

A. Gra - ti - as a - gi - mus ti

T. C. F. Gra - ti - as a - gi - mus ti

B. Gra - ti - as a - gi - mus ti gi - mus - ti - bi - prop - ter

bi prop - ter - mag - nam

The concluding example from the Albanus Mass entirely consists of the last portion of the Agnus Dei, which closes the Mass. The full text of the passage will be found in Wooldridge, vol. ii, p. 320. The verbal text assigned to the twenty-three bars consists of the word 'pacem.' Adaptation becomes imperative. The English words used at the demonstration are therefore given without further apology. The upper Bass part contains the full plain-chant subject used throughout the Mass, repeated here five times over in succession, a note lower each time :

Ex. 9. Solennemente. Lamb of God, . . .

S. mf O Lamb of God, . . .

A. C.F. O Lamb of God, . . .

p Lamb of God, . . .

The C.F. is repeated three times, each time a note lower, and then—

Piu lento. grant us thy peace, grant thy peace, rall. thy peace. cem. peace.

p us thy peace.

The following, with others, may be possible sources of the plain-chant subject of which Fayrfax made so effective a use. The first is the opening phrase of one of the oldest forms of the Kyrie eleison as it appears in the Mass for the Dead from the Sarum Manuale. It was on this that Merbecke founded his Kyrie for the first Book of Common Prayer. The second is a phrase from the Introit to the same service. An allusion to the martyrdom of St. Alban may have been intended:

Ex. 10. Ky-ri-e e-lei-son.

Ex. 11. Do-mi-ne.

Fayrfax left behind him some six or seven Masses, two Magnificats, and perhaps a dozen and a half of Motets and Madrigals. If the above examples, culled from three of his compositions only, can be taken as fairly representing the rest, his position is not merely that of the last of the conservatives, or even the consummation of the work of those that preceded him—as was that of Palestrina, Bach, and Beethoven—but that of a commanding genius who anticipated the harmonic sense and musical feeling of centuries later. This alone should give him a pre-eminence that so far has not been assigned to this 15th and 16th century composer. Had he an equal in this respect at home or abroad? What is the opinion of the readers of the Musical Times?

Fayrfax had doubtless his lighter moments when off duty. It is not unfair to picture him a devoted husband, a great admirer of his wife, in whom he was much in love, and to suggest that he did not win her very easily, there having been ups and downs in his courtship. The quotations from the following delightful little Madrigals seem to warrant these reflections: 'I have loved, and loved would I be'—'What was my joy, is now my woe and pain'—'What was my woe, is now my most gladness'—'Most clear of colour, and rock of steadfastness'—'Welcome Fortune!'—'Alas, for lack of her presence.' There is such a pleasing touch of Mozart—or is it Haydn—about the opening of the last-named, that readers might like to have a further proof of Fayrfax's extraordinary ability to anticipate the future, and that in an unexpected direction:

Ex. 12.

A - las for lack of her pres -

A - las for lack of her pres - ence, ence, whom I serve, whom I whom I serve, and shall as long . . .

Perhaps Dr. Grattan Flood will try to find out something more about the life of this most attractive man and composer.

PURCELL IN HYDE PARK

The League of Arts gave two performances of Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' in Hyde Park on Saturday, July 3, in a roped-off space between the Magazine and the Serpentine. Mr. Thistleton, the Secretary of the League, acted as producer, and the music was under the direction of Mr. Geoffrey Shaw. There were several thousands of spectators at each of the performances, and luckily the weather was fine. The production was laid out on the broad lines which suit the open air, and the colour-scheme, bright without being aggressive, was designed with a view to harmonising with the background of greenery.

It was, from first to last, thoroughly enjoyable, but I could not help being reminded of the plaint of one of the founders of Toynbee Hall, who said to me, more years ago than I care to remember, 'The trouble of all these attempts to educate the masses is, that they are always annexed by classes somewhat higher than those for which they are intended. The things we do for the working classes,' he added, 'are generally patronised by the lower middle classes, and the things designed for them, in turn become the property of classes higher still.' Thus, in this case, the audience was largely composed of musicians and others who could scarcely be described as belonging to the masses, although there was a democratic sprinkling.

On the other hand, the members of the chorus were chosen from all strata of the population. An intimate acquaintance with Purcell cannot fail to have been of benefit to everyone of them. It is unfortunate, however, that the cost of the performance should have been so considerable as to make its frequent repetition very unlikely.

A large space was roped off, and there were two marquees, one used as dressing-rooms and the other to accommodate a contingent of the London Symphony Orchestra and their assistants. On the other side of the barrier was the rostrum, on which stood the conductor in monastic garb, and near him was the stationary chorus. The dancers and the other chorus moved on that part of the sward that was the stage. The grouping was picturesque and effective.

There is a great deal of music in 'Dido and Æneas' that is full of spontaneous beauty, and still sounds as fresh to-day as on the day it was written. Two solos of Dido are now becoming fairly familiar to concert-goers. It may be remarked, incidentally, that they seem to have been annexed of late by the tenors; for they have been sung at least four times within the last month in London by male singers. Even the least scholarly of musicians can enjoy 'When in death,' although they may not know that it has great historical interest as being the first instance of a chaconne. The music of Dido was excellently sung by Miss Epps, and as Belinda, Miss Violet Passmore sang with a good deal of fluency and appreciation of classical style. The part of Æneas was taken by a gentleman who preferred to observe anonymity. He sang with a good deal of dignity of expression.

The choruses in 'Dido and Æneas' have not yet become as familiar as they ought to be to the audiences of to-day, but the wedding chorus will never fail of its due effect by reason of its solidity and the expressive force of its melodies, while the music of the witches—very well represented by three ladies who sacrificed their vanity and wore appropriately hideous beards—is remarkably suggestive.

The renewed attention paid to music of previous generations is not without significance. It looks as though reaction in favour of simplicity, of which we have heard so much, were really coming to pass. Another sign pointing in the same direction is the extraordinary popularity of the revival of the 'Beggars' Opera.' It remains to be seen whether these things will have any lasting effect. It is to be hoped that they will not lead to a self-conscious affectation of naïveté such as we see in Eric Satie and others of the latest French reformers. A. K.

CANT IN MUSIC

BY CLAUDE TREVOR

Perhaps in no other art is so much cant talked as in music: about opera in particular. The superior musical person is ever dinning into our ears the absurdities of the old operas and their form—with set airs, duets, ensembles, &c.—and the immense fund of reality that exists in musical works written nowadays for the theatre. The good people of this way of thinking (and they are many) seem entirely to forget that opera, or music-drama, or whatever they like to call it, can under no circumstances be otherwise than ridiculous. In real life no one gives vent to his feelings—be they tender or violent—in song, accompanied by an orchestra to augment his sentiments. I could name half-a-dozen operas of recent years, written by popular composers who imagine they have made great strides in realism in opera by introducing their dramatis personæ dressed quite up-to-date in an up-to-date story. One of the composers who thus comes to mind seems to have a particular leaning to heroes (tenors, of course) who, on occasion, are given to ask for whisky. This presumably is considered a successful touch of realism in modern opera. Why, it may be asked, should it be considered more true to life to declaim and utter sounds which more often than not give no pleasure, than singing beautiful melody? To have cut-and-dried airs all through an opera of to-day would in truth be quite as tiresome as to have none at all; yet to exclude them from a score which it is reasonable to suppose is written with a view to pleasing the majority of the public, is surely just as annoying. Nothing can make any theatrical performance absolutely real, and yet truth can be conveyed through beautiful melody (or airs, or tunes if you will) just as it can by beautiful language. Take our immortal Shakespeare. Who ever uttered greater truths than he? Yet who goes about his daily occupations speaking in poetry and declaiming soliloquies aloud, unless bereft of reason? As sensible would it be to represent 'Hamlet' with the Prince of Denmark and the other personages in the tragedy dressed in the fashion of to-day as it is to endeavour to obtain greater realism in opera by adopting modern costume, and with the characters delivering their sentiments on all the notes of their voices. We may easily find plenty of examples of unreality in our plays of to-day. The villain of a drama can utter his most diabolical schemes and intentions towards the virtuous heroine, while she or her friends are within a couple of yards of him, and yet they know nothing, and fall victim to his machinations with the most delightful innocence. All the same, unreal as it is, certain situations, like beautiful melody, although not true to nature in their stage representation, will always appeal. Why? Because, the public wants what gives it pleasure. Within the last thirty years or so it would really be very interesting to know how many dozens—nay, hundreds—of operas have been produced in Italy, Germany, and France, not to mention other countries, and how few have survived, and the underlying reason. This would probably be found to be lack of melody, though by this I would not be misunderstood as implying that it is owing to the absence of the old modelled type of vocal air, which would be out of place in opera of to-day. All the learning and science in the world will not compensate for the divine spark, be it in music or in any of the arts. Surely in the above-mentioned period a score of successful works (and this is a generous margin) would sum up those operas that hold their own in the répertoires of the leading theatres not only of Europe, but of the world. Thanks to their fund of melody, they are successful, although handicapped by poor libretti. The absurdity of florid passages is likewise always a sore point with the superior person whenever an opera of the old school is mounted, and yet given that 'Barbière' or 'Traviata,' &c., be well executed, and the theatre will be full, and this in any country in the world. I recall that in the early 'eighties, that saw the height of the Wagner mania, the critics—always so prescient—in speaking of some appearances that Patti was then making in her repertoire, foretold the utter extinction of the florid school of opera on the retirement of the diva from the stage. Well, hardly a season of opera, in any language, passes without some of these operas being presented; and this is a pretty good proof that such are not dead, but are very much alive when adequately performed. These same critics I have spoken of always go into raptures over 'Don Giovanni,' 'Le Nozze di Figaro,' or

'Il Flauto Magico,' and there are very few florid airs in opera to beat those in the first and last of the works cited. It is but necessary to name 'Il mio tesoro' for the tenor, Donna Anna's air in the last Act of 'Don Giovanni,' and the music of the Queen of Night in 'Il Flauto Magico.' These are only a few cases. Those in authority will tell us that these are by Mozart, though why less ridiculous because of that, according to their argument, is not quite clear. It is simply musical cant and nothing else. I should be sorry for any to imagine that I am comparing the musicianship of the greatest musician of all times with the operas of Bellini, Donizetti, and their school. I speak purely of the vocalisation employed, and the illogical reasoning of those who are looked up to and who regard themselves as oracles on the subject. Surely a parity of absurdity with the topic under discussion may be found in the attitude that accepts without question the words and the sense of the action in certain masterpieces of music.

Take Mozart's chef d'œuvre 'Il Flauto Magico.' Was ever such rubbish wedded to divine music? Turn to Gluck's 'Orfeo,' and examine the lovely air 'Che farò.' I read lately in the musical Press that in the opinion of the writer 'a vocal piece of music in itself expresses nothing, since the sentiment in such comes entirely from the words therein employed, never from the music.' This seems at first sight, and no doubt is, an exaggeration; but at the same time it contains a good deal of truth. When Gluck wrote the beautiful air mentioned above—that, in the French version, runs as follows:

'J'ai perdu mon Eurydice, Rien n'égale mon malheur'— it moved the public to tears, including Jean-Jaques Rousseau; but Boyé remarked that the same melody might just as well, perhaps better, express the contrary:

'J'ai trouvé mon Eurydice,
Rien n'égale mon bonheur.

And be it remembered we are speaking of the great reformer, Gluck, from whom we hear so much concerning the absolute necessity for words and music being exactly suited each to other. At the same time, with all his theory, we know he plumped five airs from his Italian operas into 'Armide,' the situations in the latter, where they were used, being very different from those in the former. Bach drew upon his secular cantatas for the very different subject of his 'Christmas' Oratorio. As to Handel, it is well known with what calmness he borrowed from the secular duets—for the most part erotic—which he wrote for the Princess Caroline of Hanover between 1711 and 1714. Thus from one of them:

'No, di voi non vo' fidarmi
Cieco amor, crudel beltà,
Tropo siete menzoghere
Lusciughiere deita.'

he borrowed the air in its entirety, transplanting it—even to using the same key, we are informed—for the magnificent chorus in 'Messiah':

For unto us a Child is born.

Yet the very numbers referred to are some which one hears spoken of as so 'truly devotional,' along with the assurance that the composer of such must have been a deeply pious man to write such profoundly religious and appropriate music to the sacred words! Hanslick said: 'Change epoch, personages, and locality, and call Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" "The Ghibellines of Pisa," and the musical expression would remain the same.'

Another writer expresses himself thus: 'Music is like botany and zoology, and, like them, demonstrates its individual characteristics in its own categories, and thus expresses its ideas and sentiments in such a manner that the same motive can be applied to numerous ideas and sentiments, presenting the same general characteristics, but that can under other circumstances differ from them.' And indeed instances are not wanting in which composers could be named who, having written airs, duets, quartets, choruses—in fact the greater part of a work for the theatre—wait to have words put to their musical ideas!

Let us turn our attention from the grotesqueness of operatic representations to that form of which we as a nation are so justly proud—oratorio. The fashion of its presentation to an audience is surely as grotesque as any operatic 'show' ever seen. Take, as an example, 'Elijah.' The Prophet—attired in the newest-cut evening suit, with spotless shirt-front and white tie—jumps up like any jack-in-the-box to deliver his most impressive recitatives and dramatic airs—while the Widow is dressed (or the contrary, according to fashion) in the very latest thing in frocks. The other soloists affect similar styles of adornment, while the chorus, male and female, follows suit, except that the soprani wear pink scarves across their persons and the contralti blue ones, or vice versa. And why, in the name of all that is rational, should soloists and choristers be all armed with their music? Surely it would be reasonable to suppose they could sing their parts from memory, having had many rehearsals; and if it is an old work, they have probably sung it scores of times. To my mind the whole paraphernalia of orchestra and vocalists should be concealed from view, a thing only feasible in some of our magnificent Cathedrals, which are the only places artistically suitable to such performances and the only places where they can be in any measure devotional. There is this to be said, however, that as a money-making speculation the scheme would be difficult. It is obvious that it would be impossible to employ anything like the magnificent body of voices to be heard in our vast concert-halls, or at the Handel Festival, or a similar mass of instrumentalists.* Neither would such an overwhelming body of sound be desirable—or, indeed, bearable—and anything like the huge audiences could not be accommodated as at, say, the Albert Hall or at the Crystal Palace. As oratorio is presented now, it fares horribly, and to my mind ceases to have the faintest devotional character, its glorious interpretation in England lacking the devotional atmosphere. The suggestion that a fee should be levied for seats in Cathedrals in order to hear oratorio is met with a good dose of cant, objections being raised at the idea of turning sanctuaries into concert-halls. As so many of the objectors pay for their 'sittings' to listen to what is sometimes very much less edifying, I cannot see that the argument is much worth consideration. Then as to monetary gain there would naturally be comparatively little, and as no one imagines for an instant that the promoters who organise such

* Of course I know oratorio has before now been performed in some of our Cathedrals, but I urge that it should invariably be so performed when at all feasible. There was, however, it will be remembered, some controversy a few years ago when Elgar's 'Gerontius' was given in Worcester Cathedral, because of the Roman teaching of the text.

performances as at present obtain do it for aught else than profit, it does not seem very likely that the giving of oratorio in Churches will ever supplant the speculative enterprise that now exists. But as it exists it is to my mind inartistic and absurd, and to any who assert it is purely religious and devotional I retort—cant.

Occasional Notes

We are asked by the Lord Mayor of London (Sir Edward Cooper) to draw attention to the effort now being made to place the League of Arts on a firm financial basis. His Lordship points out that there is no other organization in this country working on the same lines as the League, which has during recent months arranged or assisted at the following events: National Peace Celebrations in the Royal Parks, July 19, 1919; Thames Pageant, August 4, 1919; Lord Mayor's Show (large costumed choir on the steps of St. Paul's Cathedral, together with a number of artistic banners); Carol Singers and Mummers, Christmas, 1919; a number of Old English Folk-Plays, produced in Hyde Park; Purcell's opera 'Dido and Æneas'—two performances—Hyde Park, on July 3 (see page 529), to audiences of ten thousand people. The League of Arts has also drawn up plans for the Dedication of the Cenotaph when it takes its permanent form in Whitehall, and Sir Edward Elgar has specially adapted for the occasion a portion of 'For the Fallen.' The above is by no means a complete list of the League's activities.

Sir Edward Cooper is confident that the public will desire that an organization which has done so much, and on such practical lines, should become a permanent part of the musical life of the country.

The appeal makes no reference to the important work of the League in various provincial centres. In many towns the peace celebrations were organized in connection with the League, which rendered help in various practical ways. Among the most important results was the impetus given to what is known in America as community singing. In addition to the stirring examples we have heard in London—all of which were directly or indirectly due to the League—there have been many no less successful 'sings' in the country. As a result chorus singing by the crowd is likely to be a regular feature at some centres where people are less easily abashed than in London. For example, we hear that at Portsmouth a series of municipal concerts is being arranged at which singing by the audience of popular songs and choruses will be made a more or less regular feature. This is a direct outcome of the work by the local League of Arts choir. The social and musical benefits of such amenities are too obvious to need underlining. We hope the Lord Mayor's appeal will meet with a generous response. Donations should be sent to the League offices, 37, Russell Square, W.C.1.

As usual, the most welcome musical announcement at this season of the year is that of the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts. They begin on Saturday, August 14, and end on October 23. The list of soloists is a very long one—far too long to quote, as it consists of ninety-three names. Not all the stars in the galaxy are of prime importance, but it is a notable list, and includes practically all our leading soloists. The programmes have not yet been issued. It will be interesting to see how far they have been affected by the enterprising character of recent and projected orchestral concerts. Meanwhile a list of novelties comes to hand just as we are going to press. There are twenty, ten being by native composers, viz., Templeton Strong ('The Night'), Montague Phillips (Pianoforte Concerto in E), Landon Ronald (Suite, 'The Garden of Allah'), Armstrong Gibbs (Suite from a Fairy Play), Eric Fogg (Ballet Suite), Arnold Bax (Symphonic Variations for Pianoforte and Orchestra), York Bowen (Violin Concerto in E minor), Herbert Howells ('Merry-Eye,' for orchestra), Eugène Goossens ('The Eternal Rhythm'), and Georges Dorlay (Valse Intermezzo). The novelties from abroad include works by Casella, Prokoviev, Catoire, Fauré, and Palmgren.

Bach's organ music has been drawn upon a good deal at choral weddings during the past few years, but we have heard of no such thorough-going homage to the old man as was paid at Kendal recently, when two members of the Bach Society were married. Before the service the organist played two choral preludes and the Prelude and Fugue in G major; the hymn was Carlyle's translation of Luther's 'Ein' Feste Burg,' sung to Bach's harmonization of the tune; during the signing of the register the choir sang the choral from Cantata No. 147; and the most recent husband and wife walked down the aisle to the strains of the Toccata in F. The allegiance to Mendelssohn's Wedding March and other familiar nuptial music has been weakening for some time, but there has been no more complete break away than this. Gone is the day when:

was almost as essential as the ring.

THE MUSIC AND MUSICIANS OF DICKENS

By C. EDGAR THOMAS

I.

Had Charles Dickens any musical sense? Did he care for, or understand, music? These are interesting queries. If they are to be answered in the affirmative—and we shall endeavour to do this—it is singular that he has given us no picture of a celebrated musician or singer; but, rather, has contented himself with hovering on the fringe of music—of dallying with amateurs, down-at-heel melody merchants, and third-rate concert artists. In 'Sketches by Boz' he has penned in his own inimitable way an amusing account of the seaside busker in the Tippin family, whose descendants are now legion—much to our sorrow. It will be remembered that Mr. Tippin followed the occupation of a comic singer at Ramsgate, and that his estimable spouse was a concert singer from the London theatres—seaside songsters mostly are—who rendered the popular cavatina of 'Bid me discourse' to her husband's accompaniment. After which, as an indication of her obliging nature,

Mrs. Tippin presided at the—seaside—pianoforte while Mr. Tippin unburdened himself of a comic song ; and last, but not least, Miss Tippin played an air on the guitar—not an ordinary air (that was beneath her abilities), but an air with variations. We hesitate whether to define Dickens's sketch as a character-study or a caricature, until it is remembered that these folk may always be found in the summer-time adding to our normal ills. Without doubt Dickens was himself a victim.

But to revert to our queries. As a youth Dickens had commenced to learn both the pianoforte and violin ; but his studies were not crowned with success, although this was probably due to lack of application rather than anything else. As a singer he possessed in his youth some vocal ability, and frequently contributed to the harmony of family 'musical evenings.' Dickens's sister, Fanny, was certainly musical, for she was elected a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, and the novelist afterwards related how keenly he felt her going away to commence her musical education, when he considered his own disregarded condition. Later he was present when his sister received one of the prizes given to pupils of the Academy : 'I could not bear to think of myself,' he afterwards wrote, 'beyond the reach of all such honourable emulation and success. The tears ran down my face. I felt as if my heart were rent.'

From the fact that most quotations in the novels refer to the fashionable ballads of early- and mid-Victorian days, it would seem that Dickens knew little or nothing of classical music. And yet he was certainly fond of opera, and when on the Continent neglected no opportunity of attending. This his letters prove, and in one of them he communicates an interesting note about Carrara :

There is a beautiful little theatre there, built of marble, and they had it illuminated that night in my honour. There was really a very fair opera, but it is curious that the chorus has been always, time out of mind, made up of labourers in the quarries, who don't know a note of music, and sing entirely by ear.

Thus it seems fairly clear that Dickens loved and appreciated music—even if he possessed no general musical education—but he loved it with a qualification. When writing he required absolute solitude and silence, and we find him complaining bitterly to Forster, when at Broadstairs in 1847 :

Vagrant music is getting to that height here, and is so impossible to be escaped from, that I fear Broadstairs and I must part company in time to come. Unless it pours of rain, I cannot write half an hour without the most excruciating organs, fiddles, bells, or glee-singers. There is a violin of the most torturing kind under the window now (time, ten in the morning), and an Italian box of music on the steps—both in full blast.

In 1850, Dickens was again at the Kent watering-place, when once more the scourge of vagrant music irritated him, and he resolved not to attempt any further serious work there.

Bells appear to have been the novelist's pet aversion, those of Genoa being thus referred to in 'Pictures from Italy' :

At Genoa the bells of the church ring incessantly—not in peals or any known form of sound, but in horrible, irregular, jerking dingle, dingle, dingle ; with a sudden stop at every fifteenth dingle or so, which is maddening. . . . The noise is supposed to be particularly obnoxious to evil spirits.

These same bells, however, yet possessed a redeeming feature, for they provided Dickens with the title of one of his best-known stories, as witness once more :

Sitting down one morning resolute for work, though against the grain, his hand being out and everything inviting to idleness, such a peal of chimes arose from the city as he found to be 'maddening.' All Genoa lay beneath him, and up from it, with some sudden set of the wind, came in one fell sound the clang and clash of all its steeples, pouring into his ears, again and again, in a tuneless, grating, discordant, jerking, hideous vibration that made his ideas 'spin round and round till they lost themselves in a whirl of vexation and giddiness, and dropped down dead.' He had never before so suffered, nor did he again ; but this was his description to me next day, and his excuse for having failed in a promise to send me his title. Only two days later, however, came a letter in which not a syllable was written but 'We have heard The Chimes at midnight, "Master Shallow!"' and I knew he had discovered what he wanted.—(Forster's 'Life of Dickens'.)

It may be convenient to mention here another letter to Forster, in which Dickens, then at Lausanne, gives an account of the miraculous cure by music of an idiot girl, born blind, deaf, and dumb. Says the novelist :

I never saw a more tremendous thing in its way, in my life, than when they stood her, t'other day, in the centre of a group of blind children who sang a chorus at the piano ; and brought her hand and kept it in contact with the instrument. A shudder pervaded her whole being, her breath quickened, her colour deepened—and I can compare it with nothing but returning animation in a person nearly dead. It was really awful to see how the sensation of the music fluttered and stirred the locked-up soul within her.

The musical instruments mentioned by Dickens are a curious collection. A depicter of lower-class life as he was, it is perhaps inevitable that the musical—in too many instances non-musical—instruments of the lower classes should predominate. The barrel-organ is to be anticipated, together with the drum, bagpipes, bassoon, and triangle, so beloved of street musicians. Blathers, the Bow Street officer in 'Oliver Twist,' plays a tune with his handcuffs as if they were castanets ; the versatile Mr. Inspector Bucket seduced Bagnet—of whom and his musical emporium more later—by his solicitude for a 'second-hand violinceller' ; Mr. Hardy, who figures in the 'Sketches' was a many-sided genius, a comic singer who could 'imitate hackney coachmen and fowls, play airs on his chin, and execute concertos on the Jew's harp' ; Caleb Plummer's room contained 'scores of melancholy little carts which, when the wheels went round, performed most doleful music,' besides 'many small fiddles, drums, and other instruments of torture' ; and delightful Tom Pinch, we read, was wont to spend half the night studying the 'jingling anatomy of that inscrutable old harpsichord in the back parlour.'

Among the now obsolete musical instruments of Dickens may be mentioned the serpent, which in his day was almost extinct, although he had probably heard it in churches during his boyhood. It was the natural bass of the ancient cornet family, and had a cupped mouthpiece similar to that of the bass trombone. Another is the key-bugle—also known as the Kent bugle—a very popular instrument in the last century, from the fact that by the addition of keys it possessed a greater range of notes than the ordinary bugle. The musical waggoner in 'Martin Chuzzlewit' performed on one, having 'a little key bugle in his pocket on which, whenever the conversation flagged, he played the first part of a great many tunes, and regularly broke down in the second.' Mention may also be made of the musical coachman who participated in Tom Pinch's supper party on the London coach. Marrow-bones and cleavers, for 'rough music,' have now all but disappeared, but in their day they were prime favourites of butchers' apprentices, &c. In 'The Cricket on the Hearth' we find they were to be provided at the marriage of May Fielding and the old toy merchant Tackleton, but there was no occasion for their use, May eventually marrying her old love, Edward Plummer. Along with the drum and bells, marrow-bones and cleavers were used at the wedding of Meg Veck and Richard, as all may read in 'The Chimes.' It was the custom so to grind the cleaver that when struck with the bone it gave out a certain note. The full complement consisted of eight men, their cleavers being tuned to give an octave of notes. Shakespeare's reference to a once popular family of flutes, known as recorders, is turned to account in 'Great Expectations,' in connection with the inestimable Mr. Wopsle, the parish clerk and would-be histrion. The recorder that is called for by Hamlet is slyly said to have been 'very like a little black flute that had just been played in the orchestra and handed out at the door.'

The flute was also the favourite instrument of Mr. Mell. David Copperfield tells us that the schoolmaster created 'the most dismal sounds I have ever heard produced by any means natural or artificial'; and that 'when he had put up his things for the night . . . he took out his flute and blew at it until I almost thought he would gradually blow his whole being into the large hole at the top and ooze away at the keys.' That Dickens was not insensible of an artist's regard for his instrument is indicated by his description of Mell's departure from Creakle's, packing up his few possessions with solicitous care for his flute.

The 'little fiddle' known as the kit, which dancing-masters, &c., were in the habit of carrying in their tail-coat pockets, has now almost disappeared from our ken. When Caddy Jellyby ('Bleak House') marries 'Prince' Turveydrop, the dancing-master, she quickly finds that a knowledge of the kit and pianoforte is necessary in more senses than one, and commences to practice accordingly.

It is not a little curious that although the guitar in Dickens's day was a very popular instrument, he mentions it but little. It was the guitar (in the 'Sketches') which vindicated the musical abilities of the Miss Briggses against those of the Miss Tauntons, for the latter could manipulate only the harp. And in 'Reprinted Pieces' Dickens amusingly refers to the guitar 'to which a boy or woman sings without any voice little songs without any tune.' Dora, too, in the hey-day of David Copperfield's infatuation used to charm her lover by singing French ballads and accompanying herself on this instrument.

Almost as little is said of the trombone. We are told that Dr. Strong's ('David Copperfield') knowledge of card playing and 'playing the trombone' had much in common, for it was little; and readers of 'Our School' ('Reprinted Pieces') may recollect the usher who was 'rather musical, and on some remote quarter-day had bought an old trombone; but a bit of it was lost, and it made the most extraordinary sounds when he sometimes tried to play it on an evening.'

In connection with the organ Dickens's references are both many and interesting. There is the organ—'the sweetest little organ you ever heard'—which Tom Pinch played at the village church. It was, too, an organ that Mrs. Finching ('Little Dorrit') was anxious to learn, explaining 'I have said ever since I began to recover the blow of Mr. F.'s death that I would learn the organ of which I am extremely fond but of which I am ashamed to say I do not yet know a note'; while where can be bettered Dickens's description of an organ in 'The Chimes'?

The organ sounded faintly in the church below. Swelling by degrees the melody ascended to the roof, and filled the choir and nave. Expanding more and more, it rose up, up; up, up; higher, higher, higher up; awakening agitated hearts within the burly piles of oak, the hollow bells, the iron-bound doors, the stairs of solid stone; until the tower walls were insufficient to contain it, and it soared into the sky.

Dickens, too, in the epilogue to 'Chuzzlewit,' proves that he was appreciative of the greater majesty of the organ—'What sounds are these that fall so grandly on the ear! . . . And that mild figure seated at the organ, who is he?'

There are other musical instruments mentioned by Dickens which are better reviewed in conjunction with the characters chiefly associated with them. This we shall hope to do in the second and concluding part of this article.

As a song writer Dickens is entitled to some consideration, and many of the songs and ballads in 'The Village Coquettes,' the libretto of which he wrote, became very popular. As is known, John Hullah composed the music, and the operetta was produced at the St. James's Theatre on December 6, 1836. To name a few of the songs, 'Autumn Leaves,' 'How beautiful at Eventide,' 'The Child and the Old man,' 'My fair home,' 'There's a charm in Spring,' 'Love is not a feeling to pass away,' 'The cares of the day,' and the duet 'In rich and lofty station'—each of these, although but little heard or even remembered now, in their day enjoyed a great vogue. The first named song was rendered by Mr. Bennett; 'How beautiful at Eventide' was sung by Miss Rainforth; John Parry delivered 'My fair home'; and Braham lustily voiced the tenor items.

There is another phase in connection with Dickens and music which is entitled to notice, and that is the great musical vogue he was the means of creating. This in itself is a sure proof of the novelist's popularity. The titles of his books, and many of the incidents, were borrowed by all and sundry in the cause of music. 'The Pickwick Quadrilles' cherished a coloured title-page representing the famous character. A second set of these quadrilles, labelled 'Original,' was written by 'Boz, Junior,' and, vide the title-page, 'danced at the Almacks' and Pickwick Balls.' There were also the 'Pickwick Waltz,' the 'Pickwick Tarantella,' and 'Mr. Stiggins, a song maliciously composed and written by Tony Veller.' Nicholas Nickleby gave his name to the 'Nickleby Quadrilles,' and Sydney Vernon wrote the 'Nickleby Galop,' humbly dedicating it to the Brothers Cheeryble.

Dickensian quadrilles abound: there are the 'Chimes Quadrilles,' composed by that redoubtable charlatan, M. Jullien; the 'Cricket Quadrilles,' by Lancelot; and the 'Dolly Varden Quadrilles,' by Marriott.

The fascinating Dolly Varden gave rise to a Schottische, by King, a Galop by Charles Coote, and a 'Dolly Varden Waltz'; while 'Dressed as Dolly Varden' was a famous song, written, composed, and sung by the inimitable 'Pony' Moore. The 'Great' Vance also essayed 'Vance's Dolly Varden Impersonation and Drawing-room Comic Song.'

From 'The Cricket on the Hearth' we have the 'Cricket Polka,' by the same Jullien, 'as performed with enthusiastic applause at the author's concerts'; and Beular, author of 'Gooseberry Wine,' 'Dancing Dairy Maid,' &c., wrote 'Master Humphrey's Clock, Did you hear anything knock?'

The aforementioned Charles Coote, jun., was responsible for the 'No Thoroughfare Galop,' 'The Mugby Junction Galop,' and 'A Ballad from "Great Expectations,"' all of which were written by 'kind permission' of the novelist.

Little Nell became every whit as popular as Dolly Varden. Is there not a 'Little Nell Waltz' by Dan Godfrey, and a 'Little Nell' pianoforte solo by Miss Hawley? Little Dorrit, too, had her musical devotees, and lent her name to a Polka by Jules Norman, a song written by Henry Abrahams, with music by C. Stanley, and a ballad, written and composed by John Caulfield.

'Dombey and Son' suggested the songs of 'Paul' by Edward Oxenford and A. J. Caldicott, and 'Florence,' by Charles Jeffrey; but the book is chiefly famous for its inspiration of Stephen Glover's 'What are the wild waves saying?' Similarly, 'David Copperfield' provided 'Dora's Waltz' and 'Dora's Song'; 'Dora and Agnes,' words by Jeffreys, music by Tully; 'Agnes; or, I have loved you all my life,' by Gerald Stanley; 'Little Blossom,' a ballad by Stephen Glover; the 'David Copperfield Polka,' by W. Wilson; the 'Micawber Quadrille,' composed by J. Winterbottom, the same composer's 'Little Em'ly Waltzes,' which were played between the Acts at the Olympic Theatre during the performance of Halliday's adaptation of the story, with the famous performance of G. Rowe as Micawber; and 'Dora, the Child Wife,' written by G. Linley, and composed by Gerald Stanley.

At the Globe Theatre a dramatic version of 'Bleak House' was brought out under the direction of Edgar Bruce, when many airs written by Edward Solomon were introduced. The crossing-sweeper 'Joe' lent himself to a ballad written by H. B. Farnie, and composed by C. F. R. Marriott; a song and chorus written by W. R. Gordon, with music by Alfred Lee; and Poor Jo's song, 'He was wery good to me,' written and composed by Alfred Allen.

Dickens's magazine was even set to music! 'Household Words' twice appeared as companion to the favourite song 'Hearths and Homes,' written by Charlotte Young; and there were 'All the Year Round' songs and quadrilles. The foregoing list is sufficiently long, but it has only touched upon the fringe of the subject, for there were undoubtedly many other songs, musical pieces, &c., suggested by Dickens's works.

The novelist's famous 'Ivy Green' song enjoyed great popularity, many editions being issued. The words are said to have been inspired by old Rochester Castle, and the song, composed by the well-known musician Henry Russell, was also sung by him. The American issue, entitled 'A Ballad by Boz,' was to a setting by Lynde Waller.

The contemporary songs and ballads mentioned in the novels provide an interesting link with the musical past. A notice of these will form a portion of the concluding part of this article.

(To be concluded.)

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL

The longer the war went on the more certain it seemed that there would be no more Handel Festivals. There was a feeling that we should never again have the stomach for such solid fare; that the Handel fetish would be dethroned, the natural action of time being hastened by the post-war combination of pro-British and anti-German musical feeling; that choralism would take so long to recover from wartime disorganization that a choir of thousands would be a hopeless project for many years to come. These and other reasons seemed to indicate that the 1912 gathering would prove to be the last of the long series. And yet about eighteen months after the signing of the armistice we have seen another Handel Festival, and one that on both musical and popular sides must rank among the best ever held.

The more some things change, the more others remain the same. This hardy triennial was so much like its predecessors that many of those present must have felt inclined to pinch themselves and ask if it were possible that since the last Festival the world had been turned upside down and had not yet recovered equilibrium. This sense of 'as you were' made itself felt even before a note had been sung. Thus we found once more that despite the labours of an excellent body of stewards, the attainment of one's seat was a kind of sport—a fatiguing blend of pedestrianism and the pleasures of the chase. And it was like old times to see the signallings between members of the choir and their friends in the audience. Of course the signals mostly went astray, as they always did. After all, when hundreds of people are semaphoring with programmes, at distances ranging from fifty yards to something less than half a mile, it is easy for the wireless to get crossed. But everybody is satisfied, and the soprano from Streatham who picked up and returned a far-off wave intended for a bass from Bacup was as well pleased as if it had come from the aunt to whom it was credited.

An orchestra containing about four hundred amateurs does not get in tune without prolonged travail, and not the least enjoyable part of the concerts is this rich and sonorous preliminary, far more interesting than some modern compositions that seem to have been based on it. Had the Shah of Persia been present, his famous 'Bravo! let the dogs do that again!' would have been very hearty.

The Festival occupied four days, as usual: June 19 (General Rehearsal), June 22 ('Judas Maccabæus'), June 24 (selection from 'Israel in Egypt' and a miscellaneous programme), and June 26 ('Messiah').

Perhaps the occasion was hardly one for new departures, but it seemed a pity that the ground covered should be over-familiar. The average Handelian knows really very little of the master's music, and one of the main functions of a Handel choir should be the rescuing and popularising of the fine works that have somehow got on to the shelf and been forgotten.

The bulk of the choir was provided by London, with a contingent from Yorkshire. The singing held, out rich promise at the General Rehearsal, and improved rapidly, reaching a very high standard on the third and fourth days. The florid passages in 'Sing ye to the Lord' ('Israel'), 'For unto us,' 'All we like sheep,' 'And He shall purify,' and 'Hallelujah,' were sung with astonishing fluency, and at a pace that one would have thought impossible with a choir of such size. This being so, it was odd that some of the choruses of a steadier type should have suffered from want of unanimity and attack. The pace adopted for several of these numbers was unnecessarily slow, e.g., 'And the glory of the Lord,' which was depressingly stolid. The tone was fine and ringing, though there were signs that a good deal more youth was needed in the soprano section: notes above F sharp gave a sense of effort, and were not always reached by everybody. So much was done in the direction of variety and expression that some of us felt that even more might have been accomplished. We heard no pianissimo so good as at the 1912 Festival, though perhaps other things were better. Thus the words came out with amazing clearness, and the tapering of the short, quiet phrases in 'For unto us' would have put many a small good-class choir to shame.

Solos in such a vast space are matter out of place, so criticism is uncalled for. Only a small proportion of the audience are able to do much more than see the soloist, and even the accompaniments of the solo orchestra are barely audible half-way across the transept. The singers who essayed the hopeless task of overcoming space were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Phyllis Lett, and Miss Esta D'Argo, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Walter Hyde, Robert Radford, Frank Mullings, Frederick Ranalow, and Norman Allin. The outstanding success was won by the veteran of the party, Mr. Ben Davies, who sang as if he were thirty years younger than he is. He had a memorable reception.

The London Symphony Orchestra formed the nucleus of the band, with Mr. W. H. Reed as leader, and Mr. Walter Hedgcock was at his usual place at the organ, helpful and unostentatious. Sir Frederic Cowen conducted with a little less authority than in 1912, we thought. But he was already a veteran then, and eight years (especially such years as the past eight) are no trifle to a veteran. Nevertheless he may look back on the Festival with pride. Not many men, young or old, could have carried through a revival at this difficult time with such success.

There was a good deal of curiosity beforehand as to the public attitude towards the Festival. The attendance appeared to be below the average on the first two days. The selection from 'Israel in Egypt' drew a much larger crowd, and on the closing day ('Messiah') there was an immense gathering. Clearly there is a place in our musical life for choral undertakings on a big scale. The question is whether the time has not come for an enlargement of the scheme of this particular institution. There is a good deal in the Morning Post critic's suggestion that such a fine choir should be heard annually, and that a yearly festival, with a programme including works by such composers as Parry, Elgar, and Bantock, would make a wide appeal. But whatever the future has in store, those responsible for the recent Festival deserve hearty congratulations on a difficult task splendidly carried out.

S. ISOL.

GRÉTRY

BY DENIS TURNER

Among musical people in this country one natural result of the war has been to quicken interest in French music. The more modern French musicians received even before the war some attention on this side of the Channel, but comparatively little interest appears to have been taken in French composers of the 18th century. Even in France Rameau had fallen into surprising neglect until Saint-Saëns and a few others stirred up a renewed interest in his work.

A French composer of that century who seems to be practically unknown in England is Grétry. Grétry was not a Rameau, but much agreeable music might be unearthed by anyone who would take the trouble to delve among his almost forgotten comic operas. An interesting account of Grétry's life and work will be found in a book by M. Pierre Lasserre, 'L'Esprit de la Musique française' (Payot, Paris), of which an English translation will shortly be available.

Grétry was born at Liège in 1741. As a boy he had a remarkable treble voice, and it is recorded that during his solos the orchestra would drop to a pianissimo the better to hear him. Through the help of a rich patron he was able to go to Rome to study music. He spent eight years there, and has left an interesting account of this part of his musical career, but it has little bearing on musical history. It is to be regretted that Grétry never had enough of what old-fashioned schoolmasters call application, and never carried his studies sufficiently deep to make a solid foundation for work which even without that foundation has a sort of greatness. He had a genius for melody, and had his musical education not been singularly incomplete, he might perhaps have been a lesser Mozart.

Speaking of Mozart, Miss Mitford is quoted in Miss Hill's recent book ('Mary Russell Mitford and Her Surroundings') as writing thus of entertainments given for the French émigrés:

'Trictrac superseded chess or backgammon, reversi took the place of whist, Grétry of Mozart, Racine of Shakespeare; omelettes and salads, champagne moussu (sic) and eau sucré (sic) excluded sandwiches, oysters and porter.'

Grétry had very definite views about music—views which, though interesting, would hardly find favour with musicians at the present day. In particular, he held that music is an imitative art, and that human speech is the proper subject of its imitation. According to him song is a higher power of speech. After reading this it is curious to turn to one of his most celebrated airs, 'Une fièvre brûlante,' from his opera 'Richard Cœur de Lion.' Anything less suggestive of a burning fever than this sweet old waltz-like melody, on which Beethoven composed a set of variations, it would be hard to imagine.

Another of his airs that long had a considerable vogue comes from the opera 'Lucile,' 'Où peut-on être mieux qu'au sein de sa famille?' The words, it has been remarked, are of a treacly sentimentality that almost puts one out of love with family life, but the music is healthy and robust. Napoleon's soldiers sang it on the retreat from Moscow. When Grétry in his old age went to the theatre the audience would

(Continued on page 545.)

Our Master hath a garden.

HYMN-ANTHEM FOR GENERAL USE.

Words translated from The Ecclesiologist, 1856.

Composed by HERBERT E. CRIMP.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante ed espressivo. ♩ = circa 72.

ORGAN.

pp Sw.Man.

FULL SOPRANO.

p

Our Mas - ter hath a gar - den which ten.Ch.poco rit.ppPed.p a tempo.Sw.Man.Ped.Sw. coupl.

fair .. flow'rs a - dorn;

There will I go and gath - er both at

Sw.Ch.Man.rit.mf Animato di più.

eve and morn.

Nought's heard there-in but An - gel Hymns, with

ALTO.

Nought's heard there-in but An - gel Hymns, with

TENOR.

Nought's heard there-in but An - gel Hymns, with

BASS.

Nought's heard there-in but An - gel Hymns, with

Animato di più.Gt. a tempo.rit.pp Sw.mfGt.Sw.Ped.Man.

Copyright, 1920, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Allargando. poco rit. a tempo. Meno mosso.

harp . . . and lute, . . . Loud trum-pets and bright cla - ri - ons, and the harp . . . and lute, . . . with harp and lute, Loud trum-pets and bright cla - ri - ons, and the harp . . . and lute, . . . with harp and lute, Loud trum-pets and bright cla - ri - ons, and the harp . . . and lute, . . . with harp and lute, and the Allargando. a tempo. Meno mosso.

poco rit. Ch. Ped. p Sw. Ped.

a tempo. p con espressione.

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . . The Li - ly white that bloometh there is

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . .

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . .

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . .

a tempo. dim. p Man.

Pu - ri - ty, The fra-grant Vi - o - let is sur - named Hu - mil - i - ty,

The fra-grant Vi - o - let . . is sur - named Hu - mil - i - ty,

The fra-grant Vi - o - let is sur - named Hu - mil - i - ty,

The fra-grant Vi - o - let is sur - named Hu - mil - i - ty,

The fra-grant Vi - o - let is sur - named Hu - mil - i - ty,

L.H.

Ped.

The rich and

The rich and

The rich and

(SOLO ad lib.)

The love-ly da - mask Rose is here called Pa - tience, The rich and

L.H.

Man.

Ped.

Animato di più.

cheer - ful Ma - ry-gold, O - be - dience. Nought's heard there-in but An-gel Hymns, with cheer - ful Ma - ry-gold, O - be - dience. Nought's heard there-in but An-gel Hymns, with cheer-ful Ma - ry - gold, . . O - be - dience. Nought's heard there-in but An-gel Hymns, with cheer - ful Ma - ry-gold, O - be - dience. Nought's heard there-in but An-gel Hymns, with Animato di più.

mf Gt. Man. Sr.

Allargando.

a tempo.

Meno mosso.

poco rit. ff p

poco rit. ff p

poco rit. ff p

poco rit. ff p

harp . . and lute, . . Loud trum-pets and bright cla - ri - ons, and the harp . . and lute, . . with harp and lute, Loud trum-pets and bright cla - ri - ons, and the harp . . and lute, . . with harp and lute, Loud trum-pets and bright cla - ri - ons, and the harp . . and lute, . . with harp and lute, and the Allargando.

a tempo.

Meno mosso.

Ch. poco rit. Ped. p Sr.

This Supplement is part also of the August issue of THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, and can be obtained with the REVIEW, price 3d.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 145

THE SOUTH-EAST LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

A well-attended meeting, called to consider the founding of a competitive Festival for South-East London, took place at the Browning Hall, Walworth Road, on July 15. The Rev. C. J. Beresford, one of the secretaries of the People's Palace Festival, was in the chair, and the audience included a good many South London musicians and representatives of institutions of various kinds. The meeting was addressed by Dr. Harold Darke, Mr. Harvey Grace, Mr. Gustav Holst, and the chairman, who in turn pointed out the various advantages and dangers of the competitive Festival. After a resolution in favour of establishing a South-East London Festival had been carried with enthusiasm, considerable discussion took place. The main decisions arrived at were that the Festival should operate in the South-Eastern postal district, and that it should take place during February. A strong committee is being formed. Choral conductors, heads of clubs and institutes, and others interested, are requested to send their name and address to the acting secretary (Miss Knight-Bruce, 131, Kennington Road, S.E.11), in order that notice of arrangements may be sent to them.

THE NORTH LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The organizers of this new Festival have lost no time in issuing their syllabus. To their credit the scheme is a wide one, and its seventy-nine classes include nearly all the branches and subdivisions that lend themselves profitably to the competitive idea. The one notable omission is folk-dancing. The success with which competitions in Morris, country, and sword-dancing have been taken up at several provincial Festivals—not always in country districts—suggests that the experiment might repay a trial in London.

For the rest the following provisional time-table will show the thoroughness of the arrangements:

November 23.—Pianoforte (Juniors), Men's Songs, Ladies' Songs (Gold Medal), Men's Choirs.

November 24.—Pianoforte (Seniors), Ladies' Songs, Men's Songs (Gold Medal), Boys' Choirs.

November 25.—Girls' Songs, Elocution, Mixed and Ladies' Choirs (Open), Vocal Trios.

November 26.—Boys' Songs, Strings (Solos, Quartets, Orchestras), Elementary School Choirs (Girls), Mixed and Ladies' Choirs (Local), Vocal Duets.

November 30.—Pianoforte (Gold Medal and Open Classes), Elementary School Choirs (Boys), Girls' Choirs, Church Choirs (Men and Boys).

December 1.—Organ, Sunday School Choirs, Sight-Singing Solos, Girls' Clubs, Vocal Quartets, Church Choirs (Mixed).

December 3.—Concerts by the Prize-Winners.

The competitions will be held in the large hall of the Northern Polytechnic Institute, Holloway. The hon. secretary is Mr. John Graham, 74, Park Hall Road, E. Finchley, N. 2, who will send the syllabus in return for twopence postage.

THE NORTH OF ENGLAND MUSICAL TOURNAMENT.

The second annual North of England Musical Tournament, which was held at Newcastle-on-Tyne during the week June 19 to 26, showed a distinct improvement on last year's effort. Apart from the more extended scope of the competitions themselves and the increased number of entries, there was generally a marked advance in the standard of performance. This was especially true of the elementary school and solo-singing classes. An encouraging feature about the school choirs, both elementary and secondary, was the good taste shown in the choice of the second test-piece, the selection of which was left to the competitors. Sight-reading, unfortunately, was shown still to be a weak point with the elementary schools, the secondary schools being much better in this respect.

The Bach arias proved to be a stumbling-block to most of the solo-singing competitors, being sung in many cases like glorified Concone exercises.

The choral performances of both mixed- and male-voice choirs revealed a high standard of excellence, though for a large and populous district like Tyneside the number of entries was disappointing, especially from the city itself.

In the instrumental classes some delightful playing was heard from quite youthful performers. It came, however, as an unpleasant surprise to learn that in a district where it is exceptional for even a small church to be without an organ the adjudicator found himself unable to award a prize to any of the organist competitors.

An interesting feature of the week was the performance, under the direction of Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, of Bach's Cantata, 'Give the hungry man thy bread,' by the winning choir (augmented). By a piece of practical wisdom that could well be copied elsewhere, the choruses, solos, and orchestral part of the Bach cantata had all been prescribed as test-pieces, with the result that the whole combined performance could be undertaken by competitors who had made a special study of the music.

Below we give brief particulars of the principal competitions.

PUBLIC ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

The choirs from public elementary schools were grouped according to standard. Eleven choirs of Standards VI. and VII. sang Holst's 'Coon Song,' the first and second places being won by Ryton Thorp School (Mr. John Weatherley) and Mason Dinnington Council School (Mr. T. Dixon). In Standards I., II., and III. the test was John Ireland's 'Child's Song,' and Mason Dinnington was the best of four choirs. Holystone, Longbenton (Mr. H. H. McIntyre), was first in Standards IV. and V., the test being Parry's 'The Owl.'

CHILDREN'S CHOIRS (open class).

The prescribed test was Ireland's 'There is a garden.' Eight choirs entered, the prize being won by Ryton (Mr. John Weatherley).

SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

(Four competitions were held.)

Age fifteen and under.—Test: 'A Croon' (Howells). Four entries. 1st, Bishop Auckland Girls' County School (Miss Agnes L. Sutherland).

Age fifteen and over.—Test, 'The Shepherd's Sirena' (Stanford). Four entries. 1st, Central Newcastle Girls' High School.

Boys, any age.—Test, 'The Song of the Lumbermen' (Holst). One entry. High School, Monkseaton (Mr. W. Morgan Hall).

Girls, age eighteen and under.—Test: 'Go ye, my canzonets' (Morley). Five entries. 1st, Atkinson Road Girls' Commercial School (Miss Annie Lawton).

FOLK-DANCING (JUNIORS).

This form of exercise seems to be widely cultivated in the schools of the neighbourhood, thanks to the persuasive power of the competitions and doubtless a strong local predilection. Mr. Cecil Sharp was called upon to adjudicate in eight sections.

The best-attended class was that for Country Dances by boys and girls of ages ten to fifteen. Two tests were prescribed—'Haste to the wedding' and 'Black Nag.' No fewer than fourteen teams entered—chiefly schools and Girl Guides. The best was Cornforth Lane Council School, the second Rutherford College Girls' School D.

Hirst East Girls' School was best of eight teams in Morris Dancing. Other first prizes were won by Rutherford College Girls' School (A) and (C), Cordwainers, Sunderland Chester Road, and Nunykirk.

The seven classes for Folk-Dancing by adults were also well attended. Mr. Sharp gave special praise to the sword-dancing of a team from Westerhope.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Feasting I watch' (Elgar) and 'Dominus illuminatio mea' (Walford Davies).

Ashington and District (Mr. W. H. Batey).

2nd. Carlisle (Mr. J. R. Cockbain).

Hawthorn Leslie (Mr. E. B. Jago).

3rd. 'Prudhoe Gleemen' (Mr. H. Harland).

1st. Shildon's Male-Voice Choir (Mr. H. Gibbon).

West Hartlepool Orpheus (Mr. H. W. Day).

The winning choir sang Elgar's 'The Reveille' as its third test.

FEMALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Away, thou shalt not love me' (Wilbye).

'Spring' (Holst).

Houghton-le-Spring (Mr. W. H. Lax).

Stanley Harmonic (Mr. W. J. Keskeys).

Newcastle Musical Club, Y.W.C.A. (Miss Gladys Strachan).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Young Cupid hath proclaimed' (Weelkes).

Choruses from 'Give the hungry man thy bread' (Bach).

2nd. Houghton Glee Party (Mr. W. H. Lax).

Stanley Harmonic (Mr. W. J. Keskeys).

1st. Sunderland Vocal Union (Mr. H. W. Walker).

CHURCH AND CHAPEL CHOIRS.

Tests: 'Then did priests make offering' (Byrd); or—

'I will exalt Thee' (Tye).

'Ascribe unto the Lord (Wesley).

St. Aidan's Parish Church (Mr. E. H. Hayward).

1st. Mainsforth Terrace P.M. (Mr. W. Walker).

Birtley P.M. (Mr. F. J. Allison).

Esk Winning P.M. Choir (Mr. W. Wilkinson) was the better of two church choirs from country districts.

ORCHESTRAS.

The prizes were awarded as follows: School orchestras, Whitley and Monkseaton (Mr. H. P. Young). String orchestras, Tynemouth Priory Orchestral Society (Mr. Robert Peel). Full orchestras, Elswick Works Orchestra.

The other competitions covered solo-singing, junior and adult; vocal duets, trios, and quartets; pianoforte, organ, violin, viola, violoncello solos; various forms of chamber music; brass bands; composition and history; elocution and reading. The syllabus contained a hundred and three classes in all. The adjudicators were Mr. Arthur Catterall, Mr. Herbert Fryer, Captain Francis Harford, Dr. R. R. Terry, Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, Mr. J. Weston Nicholl (brass bands), Mr. Acton Bond (elocution), and Mr. R. M. Mowat (Northumbrian pipes).

DEVON'S FIRST FESTIVAL.

Delayed by the war the organization of music competitions in Devon has now been accomplished, and the first events were held at Exeter on July 13 and 14. The Society, which is affiliated with the National Association of Music Competition Festivals, was initiated at a meeting held at the Deanery, Exeter, in October last, and addressed by Lady Mary Trefusis, chairman of the National Association, and Miss Retallack, hon. secretary. The outcome was the Festival now to be recorded, that occupied two full days under the adjudication of Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, with results showing that there is ample material in Devon awaiting development. Solo classes were not contemplated this year, but will be included in succeeding schemes. Only one adult choir came forward, and many classes remained without entries. Elementary and secondary schools responded in gratifying numbers, coming from such distant places as Ivybridge, Tavistock, Dartmouth, Pyworthy and Moretonhampstead (two very remote moorland villages), Crediton, and Exmouth, though the majority of schools represented Exeter.

All the music chosen represented British composers. Shields, a banner, and a picture were trophies offered for highest aggregates of marks for sight-reading and song singing, and first, second, and third class certificates were awarded on the bases of eighty per cent., sixty-five per cent., and fifty per cent. of marks. Mrs. Mildmay gave a shield to the choir gaining the highest aggregate in the Festival, and the Mary Wakefield Medallion was given for the highest marks in sight-reading. Both these trophies, as well as the Ross Banner for the highest marks in the class, were won by Crediton High School Senior Choir (conductor, Mr. C. G. Church). The standard of sight-reading was deplorably low. Among the best features of the Festival may be mentioned the singing of the massed secondary school choirs in the test-pieces and in Purcell's 'Nymphs and Shepherds,' under the baton of Mr. Shaw, and the very fine playing in the instrumental (ensemble) classes. Also a very notable success was the playing of the small orchestra, conducted by Mr. A. J. James, which obtained maximum marks. The pieces were two Irish jigs by Finucane, and the performance was altogether delightful. A concert was given each evening comprising massed singing of the test-pieces and the Purcell chorus, with solo items contributed by musicians as object-lessons to the competitors.

The following were the chief results:

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CHOIRS.

Small schools.—Tests: 'Where the bee sucks' (Arne) and 'Song of March' (Ireland). Three entries. 1st, Sandford Church School.

Larger schools.—Tests: 'Song of St. Francis' (Farrar) and 'In praise of May.' Girls—Seven entries. 1st, Tavistock. Boys—Seven entries. 1st, Tavistock.

SECONDARY SCHOOL CHOIRS (Girls).

Tests: 'The oak and the ash' (17th century Folk-song) and 'Over hill, over dale' (Harford Lloyd). Five entries. 1st, Crediton High School Seniors.

SIGHT READING.

The various prizes were won by Sandford Church School, Exeter Mint, Tavistock, Ivybridge, and Crediton High School Seniors. The entries totalled twenty-two.

WOMEN'S CHOIRS (Rural).

Test: 'Sound Sleep' (Vaughan Williams). One entry. Alphington Women's Choir.

INSTRUMENTAL CLASSES.

Pianoforte accompaniment at sight.—Test: Dance from 18th century Suite, 'The Jester' (arr. by Alfred Moffat). Ten entries. 1st, Mr. R. G. Rudd.

String Quartet.—Test: Slow movement from Phantasy in D (Frank Bridge). One entry, Miss Phyllis Smith, Mrs. Mathew, Miss Dean, and Mr. W. L. Sutcliffe.

Pianoforte trio.—Test: Miniatures, Set I (Frank Bridge). Two entries. 1st, Mr. R. G. Rudd, Miss Phyllis Smith, and Mr. W. L. Sutcliffe.

Orchestra.—Test: Two Irish jigs (Finucane). One entry. Exeter String Orchestra.

Other competitions are reported in the School Music Review edition of the Record.

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM

ANTHEM

Psalms cxii. 6; ii. 2 (abridged).

COMPOSED BY

REGINALD HUNT.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante piacevole. ♩ = 86.

p Sw. cres. Man.

SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO.

mp O... pray for the dim. p Ped. 16 ft. Sw. coupd.

peace of Je - ru - sa - lem, O... pray for the Man.

peace of Je - ru - sa - lem: they shall mf Ch. p Sw. Ped. sempre Ped.

Copyright, 1920, by Novello and Company, Limited.

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM

pros - per, they shall pros - per that love . . .

L.H. cres.

thee, they . . . shall pros - per that love . . .

f dim. Man. Sw thee.

SOPRANO. p sostenuto.
O pray for the peace of Je - ru - sa - lem:

ALTO. p sostenuto.
O pray for the peace of Je - ru - sa - lem:

TENOR. p sostenuto.
O pray for the peace of Je - ru - sa - lem:

BASS. p sostenuto.
O pray for the peace of Je - ru - sa - lem:

Gt. (Sw. coupd.)
Ped.

Un poco più mosso.

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

slargando.

they . . shall pros - per,

they . . shall
*slargando.*they . . shall, they . . shall pros - per, shall *slargando.*they shall pros - per, they shall *slargando.*they . . shall pros - per,
Un poco più mosso.

they shall pros - per, they shall add Sw. reeds.slargando.Ped. Gt. coupd.

pros - per that love . . thee.

pros - per that love . . . thee.

pros - per that love . . thee.

pros - per that love thee.

close Sw.Sw.accel.cres.Gt. to Ped. off.Allegro con brio.

The

The

The kings of the

The kings of the earth stand

Allegro con brio. ♩ = 140.fGt.Gt.Gt. to Ped.

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

kings of the earth . . stand up, and the ru - lers take coun - sel to - kings of . . the earth stand up, and the ru - lers take coun - sel to - earth . . stand up, and the ru - lers take coun - sel, take coun - sel to - up, stand . . up, and the ru - lers take coun - sel, take coun - sel to - geth - er a - gainst the Lord and His A - noint - ed,
 geth - er a - gainst the Lord and His A - noint - ed,
 - geth - er a - gainst the Lord and His A - noint - ed,
 - geth - er a - gainst the Lord and His A - noint - ed,
 a - gainst the Lord and His . . A - noint - ed,
 a - gainst the Lord and His A - noint - ed, the kings of the a - gainst the Lord and His . . A - noint - ed, the kings of the a - gainst the Lord and His A - noint - ed,

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

stringendo.

stringendo.

stringendo.

stringendo.

stringendo.

dim.

dim.

dim.

dim.

dim.

a tempo. (Allegro con brio.)

f

a

f

a f a - gainst the Lord,

a

a tempo. (Allegro con brio.)

a - gainst the Lord,

a

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

Tempo giusto. f mp

gainst the Lord, and His A - gainst the Lord, and His A - gainst the Lord, and His A - gainst the Lord, and His A -

Tempo giusto. f mp molto dim. Sw. Man. Gt. to Ped. off.

Doppio Ped.

Tempo 1mo. (Andante.) p

noint - ed. O

noint - ed. O

noint - ed. O pray, O pray, O

noint - ed. O pray, O pray, O

Tempo 1mo. (Andante.)

rall. pp Ch. to Sw. Sw. Ped.

pray, O pray, O pray, O pray,

pray, O pray, O pray, O pray,

pray, O pray, O pray, O pray,

pray, O pray, O pray, O pray,

dolce. O pray,

Man.

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

p rall. a tempo.

O pray, O pray for the peace of Je -

p rall. a tempo.

O pray, O pray . . . for the peace . . . of Je -

p rall. a tempo.

pray, O pray, O pray . . . for the peace of Je -

p rall. a tempo.

O pray, O pray for the peace of Je -

Sw.

pp rall. a tempo.

Ped.

- - ru - - sa - lem, O pray for the peace of Je - ru - sa - dolce.

- - ru - - sa - lem, . . . O pray for the peace of Je - ru - sa -

- - ru - - sa - lem, O pray . . . for the peace . . . of Je - ru - sa - dolce.

ru - - sa - lem, O . . . pray for the peace of Je - ru - sa - lem, O pray, O pray, . . . O . . .

Sw. add Full Sw.

Man. Ped.

O PRAY FOR THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM.

lem, . . . O pray, ... O pray, ... O

lem, O pray, ... O pray, O pray, . . . O

lem, O pray, O pray, O

The first system consists of four vocal staves and a grand piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in treble clef with a key signature of three sharps (F#, C#, G#). The piano part is in bass clef with the same key signature. The lyrics are: 'lem, O pray, O pray, . . . O . . .', 'lem, . . . O pray, ... O pray, ... O', 'lem, O pray, ... O pray, O pray, . . . O', and 'lem, O pray, O pray, O'. The piano accompaniment features a steady eighth-note pattern in the right hand and a more complex bass line in the left hand.

rall. al fine.
pray, ... pray, ... O pray.

rall. al fine.
pray, ... pray, O pray.

rall. al fine.
pray, ... pray, O pray.

rall. al fine.
pray, ... pray, ... O pray.

rall. al fine.
pray, ... pray, ... O pray.

rall. al fine.
espress.

The second system continues the musical piece with six vocal staves and a grand piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in treble clef. The lyrics are: 'pray, ... pray, ... O pray.', 'pray, ... pray, O pray.', 'pray, ... pray, O pray.', 'pray, ... pray, ... O pray.', and 'pray, ... pray, ... O pray.'. The piano part is in bass clef. The first four vocal staves are marked 'rall. al fine.' and the piano part is marked 'espress.'.

a tempo.
mp

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . . One Plant is there with crown be - dight, the

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . .

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . .

gen - tle, sooth - ing flute. . . .

a tempo.
Sw. p rest a - bove, With crown Im - pe - ri - al, and this plant is Ho - ly Love ;

With crown Im - pe - ri - al, and this plant is Ho - ly Love ;

With crown Im - pe - ri - al, and this plant is Ho - ly Love ;

With crown Im - pe - ri - al, and this plant is Ho - ly Love ;

With crown Im - pe - ri - al, and this plant is Ho - ly Love ;

mf p mf mf Git.

con devozione.

But still, of all the flow'rs, the Fair - est and the Best, Is con devozione.

But still, of all the flow'rs, the Fair - est and the Best, Is

Gt. coupd. p uncoup.

dim. e rit. con espress.

Je - sus Christ, the Lord Him-self, His Name be blest. . . . O

dim. e rit. con espress.

Je - sus Christ, the Lord Him-self, His Name be.. blest. . . . O

dim. e rit. con espress.

Je - sus Christ, the Lord Him-self, His Name be . blest. . . . O

dim. e rit. con espress.

Je - - - sus Christ, His Name be blest. . . . O

dim. e rit. rall.

Je - - - sus Christ, His Name be blest. . . . O

Je - sus, my chief Good and sole Fe - li - ci - ty, Thy lit - tle ..

Je - sus, my chief Good and sole Fe - li - ci - ty, Thy lit - tle ..

Je - sus, my chief Good and sole Fe - li - ci - ty, Thy lit - tle

Je - sus, my chief Good and sole Fe - li - ci - ty, Thy lit - tle gar - den

Animato di più.

gar - den make my read - y heart to be ; So may I once hear An - gel Hymns, with gar - den make my read - y heart to be ; So may I once hear An - gel Hymns, with gar - den make my read - y heart to . . be ; So may I once hear An - gel Hymns, with make my heart be ; So may I once hear An - gel Hymns, with Animato di più.

make my heart be ; So may I once hear An - gel Hymns, with harp and lute,

Loud trumpets and bright cla - ri - ons,

harp and lute, with harp and lute, Loud trumpets and bright cla - ri - ons,

harp and lute, with harp and lute, Loud trumpets and bright cla - ri - ons, harp and lute, with harp and lute, Loud trumpets and bright cla - ri - ons, Allargando.

a tempo.

Largamente.

And the gen - tle, sooth - ing flute, the gen - - tle flute.

And the gen - tle, sooth - ing flute.

And the gen - tle, sooth - ing flute, the gen - - tle flute.

And the gen - tle, sooth - ing flute.

Meno mosso.

uncoupd.

(Continued from page 536.)

salute him by singing it; and after the Restoration it used to be played in Paris as a public greeting to the royal family.

Grétry seems to have been what is vulgarly called 'un type.' He was of somewhat humble origin, and retained to the end of his life a pleasant trace of Liège accent. Several quaint examples of his Walloon shrewdness are on record. In Italy he heard of an exacting amateur flautist who was fond of asking musicians to compose a concerto for him. As a rule he would express himself dissatisfied with the work produced, and would pay the young composer a small sum and send him away. Grétry saw his way to do better than this. He asked the patron to play him something, made a mental note of the style of music he seemed to prefer and of his favourite tricks of execution, and adapted his concerto accordingly. The result was that he was offered a salary on condition of composing a concerto at every town that he visited with the flautist. We hear of him indulging later in life in a delightfully simple form of self-advertisement. He would go out muffled up to avoid recognition, and stand in front of a bill announcing the performance of one of his own operas. This he would read with every outward sign of rapture and enthusiasm. When a few bystanders had collected to see what the excitement was about, he would exclaim, 'Ah, I see they are performing Grétry's "Epreuve villageoise" to-night. I mustn't miss that! I'm off to book my seat.' Then he would go off and repeat this innocent manoeuvre at another posting station, and so on.

Strict judges of conduct will find more serious ground for criticism in the adaptability which he displayed during the Revolution. He certainly went rather far in adjusting the tone of his work to the altered circumstances. The fact is that he had strongly developed that keen eye to the main chance which so often marks the peasant. He was no politician, and he had to earn his bread. He was practically forced to make a fresh start by the fact that most of his pre-Revolution work simply could not be performed. A song like 'O Richard, O mon roi' would cause an uproar merely because it contained the word 'roi.'

Grétry's best period was the twenty years preceding the Revolution. During all this time he was at Paris producing quantities of comic operas. It was a performance of Pergolesi's 'Serva padrona,' seen at Liège, which had originally turned his genius into this channel, and Pergolesi was the dominant influence in the development of his style. There is little likelihood nowadays of Grétry's operas being revived as originally presented. For one thing the libretto is in many cases weak if not fatuous, and an audience accustomed to modern orchestras would not take kindly to work scored for twenty-five instruments at most. But it would certainly be interesting to hear some of his operas in a small theatre, though such a revival could hardly be commercially successful. It appears that 'Richard' was last heard at Paris in 1897, and that no opera of his has been publicly performed since that date, apart from a production about 1907 of the 'Tableau partant' at the small Théâtre de Monsieur of those days.

A fine but very expensive edition of Grétry's works was brought out in modern times by Gevaert under the auspices of the Belgian Government. Apart from that they survive only in a pianoforte arrangement published some fifty years ago by Michaelis. This edition is practically out of print, though it is believed that a German publisher bought up the plates shortly before the war. Yet, even so, during that period they may, metamorphosed into munitions, have gone to serve the harsh music of the guns—a fate reserved for so much metal of this description in all the belligerent countries.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

The end of the London concert season came more suddenly than most of us had anticipated. The July harvest was meagre both in quantity and quality, and, generally speaking, the apathy of audiences was even more marked than it usually is. Nor is there any reason to wonder at this: it is the fashion in some quarters to base an indictment of the London public on their customary concert-weariness; but it should be remembered that there is no city in the world where the season lasts so long, though there are others where it rages no less violently while it does last. The respite will be brief, for the Promenade Concerts begin on August 14, and it may not be out of place to refer here to a new series of concerts by the British Symphony Orchestra, to be given on Saturday afternoons at the Kingsway Hall in Holborn. We already have the Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts, the Queen's Hall Ballad Concerts, the Ballad Concerts at the Albert Hall and Central Hall, Westminster, in the afternoon, and I hear that there is hardly a free Saturday afternoon at Wigmore Hall, Æolian Hall, and Steinway Hall. The net result is that we may expect seven concerts nearly every Saturday from October to July. The concert-halls mentioned have a total seating capacity of over twenty thousand. How many of the seats will be filled regularly? And if there are, as is more than likely, matinées at Covent Garden as well, how will it fare with the concert-givers? They have an additional cause for anxiety in the prospect of increased railway charges, which will certainly affect the number of concert-goers who come to London by train. The small percentage of concerts which have paid their way since October last is likely to shrink still further, in spite of the undoubted growth in the number of concert-goers—which, however, is not so considerable as optimists are pleased to contend. Mutatis mutandis, similar complaints come from the big provincial centres. The number of tours of orchestras and eminent soloists announced is larger than ever, and those responsible for the old-established Societies speak gloomily of the outlook. They always do, it is true; but there seems better reason for it this year than ever before.

A POOR RECORD

As said before, the number of concerts deserving permanent record is small. On June 22 Busoni gave an orchestral concert and produced a Suite taken from the music to his 'Bridal Quest' ('Die Brautwahl'), founded on Hoffmann's fantastic tale. There is no doubt that Busoni is a great master of sombre orchestral colouring, and that some of his experiments in this direction are successful; but his music is very cerebral. At the same concert his 'Indian Fantasia,' founded on American melodies, led to a scene of enthusiasm: the last section had to be repeated. This however, was due rather to his wonderful playing. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted this number.

Busoni also gave two recitals of which it can only be said that his own 'Sonatinas' were interesting. The one called 'Super Carmen' (note the pun in the title, for carmen in Latin means poem) is the one best worth remembering.

There have been some new pianists from abroad. M. Montoriol Tarrès, from Spain, is brilliant but erratic; M. Zavadsky, a Pole, has a very powerful technique and dramatic, if not subtle temperament. Two French ladies, of no mean technical accomplishment and unusual strength of style, are Mlle. Aussenac and Madame Germaine Polak van Göens. The latter played an able but portentously long Sonata of Dukas, and astonished us by placing an arrangement of Beethoven's seventh Symphony on her programme.

It is significant of the general character of this last stage of the season that no new native work of importance has to be chronicled.

M. Rosing gave a recital at Queen's Hall, understood to be a farewell before his departure on an Australian tour. He is always interesting, whatever may be said of his production, and his handling of the English language was in particular full of unexpected thrills. At this concert Mlle. Chemet, the French violinist, made a welcome reappearance, playing with great finish and charm.

We come now to the singers. The recitals of Dame Melba, Madame Calvé, and Madame D'Alvarez should be mentioned because of their great reputations and as showing how faithful the British public is to its established favourites and not because of any novelties in the programmes. From the large number of new young singers, I should be disposed to single out Mr. Eric Oulton, a tenor, who suffers from the usual complaint of over-refinement, but who can sing excellently when he is content to be manly and straightforward. Miss Diana Lawrence is a singer of great taste and refinement, with a voice of much charm; her talents seem capable of some development. Much promise was also shown by Miss Judith Litante, who appeared to me to have the unusual gifts of characterisation and imagination, though in her case much further study is needed.

THE FRENCH REFORMERS

One other musical happening should be mentioned, though it is difficult to know into which category to place it. It is the wordless musical farce, 'The Nothing-Doing Bar,' which was produced at the Coliseum, of which the music is by M. Darius Milhaud, one of the new school of French reformers, the scenario being by M. Jean Cocteau. We are not yet in full possession of the facts about this movement, but we have heard some of the music of Satie as well as this farce, so that indeed we have ground to go upon. From what we have heard, it is difficult to understand how any importance can be attached to such music, which seems to require Sam Weller's microscope to discover any distinctive characteristics in it. As far as we have been able to test the matter, the music of Satie is childish rather than child-like, and in the case of M. Milhaud, though he is no doubt a competent craftsman in the orchestra, this affected coyness alternates with ultramodern commonplaces which may be a satire on Stravinsky or a replica, and in either case it would not be difficult to find several students in each of our colleges who could do it as well. At the same time, M. Milhaud does show some skill in preserving a certain unity of style throughout his score, in spite of the too easily separable elements.

Too late for notice in this number, there was a concert of Stravinsky's newest Chamber Music at Wigmore Hall on July 20. It requires careful consideration, but one's first impulse is to sum up his impressions in one word—Why?

THE PATRON'S FUND

Two of the orchestral rehearsals of the Royal College of Music Patron's Fund remain to be chronicled. At each of these, four works were rehearsed. At the first, one lady, Miss Janet Salsbury, and at the second, two ladies, Miss Adelaide Thomas and Miss Ina Boyle, were represented, the last-named being her of whom the Carnegie Trustee speaks in such eulogistic terms. Miss Boyle's contribution, which did not disappoint the expectations thus raised, was a Rhapsody, 'The Magic Harp.' Its poetic basis is the Celtic legend of the 'Durd Alba' (the wind among the apple-trees), and 'the magical harp which has three strings, the iron string of sleep, the bronze string of laughter, and the silver string, the sound of which made all men weep. These three strings were also supposed to evoke the three seasons into which the year was then divided.' Mr. Paul Kerby's symphonic poem, 'The Seekers,' with a programme akin to that of 'Ein Heldenleben,' is also highly spoken of.

The first experimental season of these rehearsals has undoubtedly been successful, and it has gone further towards fulfilling the ultimate objects of the Fund than systems previously pursued. A further sign of success is that more than one of the works thus brought to a hearing have already obtained by this means a wider publicity.

The number of composers represented has been thirty-one, of whom five were ladies, and the number of works played thirty-six. Of the composers, some were already well-known, but the majority made their first appearances in public. It is not without significance that they have come from all parts of the United Kingdom and Ireland. The compositions have on the whole revealed a good deal of undiscovered talent.

For purposes of reference, a complete list of the works rehearsed during the season is appended:

- (1.) NOVEMBER 13, 1919. Frederick Laurence, 'A Miracle,' Poem; Jane M. Joseph, 'Bergamask'; Albert Cazabon, 'Nocturne'; R. T. Woodman, Keats's 'Ode on Melancholy' (set to music without words); Edric Cundell, 'Serbia' Symphonic Poem.
- (2.) NOVEMBER 27, 1919. Edgar Bainton, 'Paracelsus,' Symphonic Poem; Greville Cooke, 'Jabberwock,' Suite; John Greenwood, Two Miniatures; Harold E. Darke, Symphony in D, Op. 12 (one movement); Edric Cundell, 'Serbia,' Symphonic Poem.
- (3.) DECEMBER 8, 1919. Franklin B. Sparks, 'Geraint,' Tone Poem; Thomas F. Dunhill, Symphony (movement from); Ernest Farrar (the late), Three Spiritual Studies for Strings; F. Laurence, 'A Miracle,' Poem.
- (4.) FEBRUARY 5, 1920. Eric Fogg, 'Scenes from Grimm,' Suite; Miss E. Scarborough, Scherzo for small Orchestra; H. D. Statham, 'From the Hills,' Overture; Joseph Speaight, Two songs, (a) 'Lubin is away,' (b) 'Sister, awake'; Arthur Barclay, 'Cortège Royal,' Symphonic Poem.
- (5.) FEBRUARY 27, 1920. W. McNaught, Fantaisie-Overture; L. A. Collingwood, Poème Symphonique; Felix White, Song, 'Cyclops'; H. Balfour-Gardiner, Ballad for Orchestra.

(6.) MARCH 23, 1920. Edmondstone Duncan, A Symphonic Tone-Poem; J. R. Heath, 'The Valley of White Poppies,' Suite; C. Armstrong Gibbs, 'Crossings,' Suite; Ernest Farrar (the late), Heroic Elegy.

(7.) JUNE 1, 1920. Harold C. Lake, 'Paphnutius,' Symphonic Poem; J. Gerrard Williams, Three Miniatures; R. T. Woodman, Keats's Ode on a Grecian Urn'; Ernest Farrar (the late), Heroic Elegy.

(8.) JUNE 17, 1920. H. H. Albino, Slow movement; Edric Cundell, Song, 'Our Dead'; Janet Salisbury, Two movements from Suite (a) Despondency, (b) Hilarity; Paul Kerby, 'The Seekers,' Symphonic Poem.

(9.) JULY 8, 1920. Thomas F. Dunhill, Symphony (2nd and 3rd movements); Adelaide Thomas, 'Summer Idylls,' Suite; Frederick Laurence, 'Milander,' Symphonic Poem; Ina Boyle, 'The Magic Harp,' Rhapsody.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

THE NEW PUCCINI—OLD ITALIAN OPERA—THE CARL ROSA SEASON

My first business in dealing with opera in London is to describe the production of the new works by Signor Puccini, which took place at the end of June, too late for notice in the July number. These operas demand close attention, for they are by far the most notable effort Signor Puccini has made since 'Madama Butterfly.' His intention, evidently, was to set before his audience a choice, for the production—styled 'Il Trittico'—is intended to stand as a whole, indivisible. But this arrangement was not observed after the first two representations, doubtless because it made too long an evening's entertainment. All three operas deal with human nature in its various aspects. In the first, 'Il Tabarro,' its aspect is in connection with illicit love; in the second, 'Suor Angelica,' it is mother love that is unsatisfied in the Nun, who commits suicide; in the third it is human greed that prompts the delightful comedy that the piece becomes. Thus the audience can make selection of which phase it prefers. The music of all offers like choice, save that apart from the subject it is invariably attractive and representative of the composer at his best.

The story of the first opera is enacted by those humble but picturesque people the Seine barge workers. Giorgette, the wife of Michele, has a lover who, coming to her signal of a lighted match, finds himself in the arms of the husband, who strangles him and hides the body in his cloak, which he opens when the erring wife keeps her appointment. The horrified sinner is compelled to kiss the lips of the corpse. Thus we have full-flavoured melodrama. Incidentally we meet several Seine-side characters in La Frugola the wife of one of the unloaders, and make the acquaintance of sundry typical figures like the ballad singer and the organ-grinder. Signor Puccini depicts all these people with fine skill, and with a sure hand that not only reveals a perfect sense of the stage but also the means of realisation: e.g., his outline of the organ-grinder with his out-of-tune organ, piquantly represented by A natural in the lower octave against A flat in the upper; the street singers who quote from 'La Bohème'; and the harp that plays in the typical style of the maestro of the kerb. These incidentals show a very keen sense for the sights and sounds of a great city, and throw the bigger writing into greater contrast. The main part of the music is decidedly powerful. When 'The Girl of the Golden West' was produced it was feared that Puccini had said all he had to say, and was reduced to quoting from himself; but it must have been lack of sympathy with the story that left him uninspired. Certainly 'Il Trittico' gives no indication that he is written out. Many passages are the finest music he has written. The soliloquy of Michele is an example. It rises to a moving climax of passion, yet does not create anything like an anti-climax, as it might have done. The whole is a masterly piece of work, making valuable addition to modern operatic literature because it is genuine music and not the ersatz variety of which we have had so much. As the bargee M. Dinh Gilly distinguished himself greatly by his fine singing. Mlle. Quaiatti made much—but, as was shown later, not all—of the part of the wife, a more vivid because more natural representative being found when Mlle. Jeanne Broila took the character. Mr. Thomas Burke was the lover, and a delightful sketch was given by Madame Bérat of La Frugola, the bibulous but very human 'old woman' of one of the débardeurs, with a strong affection for her cat, Caporale, whose vocal attributes are represented in the score. A word must be added for the setting, a striking view of the Seine side—somewhere near the Arsenal, I should think—with Notre Dame in the background. Although not well put on, it was really a very fine piece of legitimate stage illusion.

CONVENTUAL OPERA

The action of the second opera, 'Suor Angelica,' takes place in a convent, where the owner of the name has retreated after too marked a lapse into worldliness. There she learns that her son is dead, and, throwing all her religious teaching to the winds, in her despair and in the hope of joining her much-loved offspring she poisons herself. As she is dying the enormity of her sin comes home to her, and she prays for pardon, which is granted, the Madonna appearing leading her son by the hand. The music is very fine, convincing in its atmosphere, and intensely dramatic at the proper time. But in England, at least, the convent is not well understood, and the listener is inclined to say 'Why?' to the whole business, more especially when at the end Mlle. Dalla-Rizza (the Suor Angelica) appeared before the curtain with the child. Considered as music it is not unworthy, but the story lacks the necessary quality of attraction for this country.

A DANTE COMEDY

The third and last and best of the operas is 'Gianni Schicchi,' a comedy imbued with the spirit of Dante. Buoso Donati, dying, has left his property to the Church, much to the chagrin of his numerous relatives, discovered weeping crocodile tears round his bed. The will, whose silent reading has tickled all London, confirms the fact, and the covetous ones see the saw-mill, the mule, and the house all lost to them. One has a brain-wave—send for Gianni Schicchi! He comes, and soon settles matters by impersonating Donati, whom no one knows is dead, and by making a will more favourable to the survivors. He disposes of small things, and leaves the bulk to—Gianni Schicchi. The composer has entered fully into the spirit of this joke, and has invested it with a wonderfully effective musical setting. He reveals himself as a musical humorist of the first order. The inspiration is high, and supplies some passages of a melodic charm the world had almost forgotten could be written. Each of the lovers has a striking air, that of the girl, Lauretta, 'O mio babbino,' being one of those things that stick. Signor Ernesto Badini gave a delightful picture of Schicchi, entering fully into the spirit of the piece. His attitude of mind when forging the will—'I may be hanged for this'—which the music depicts so cleverly, is admirably presented. As the lovers, Mlle. Dalla-Rizza and Mr. Burke sang their music well, and the crowd of relatives, aged from seven to seventy, led by Madame Bérat and M. Cotreuil, was wonderful.

Signor Bavagnoli directed the operas to good purpose, and at the first representation Signor Puccini made his appearance before the curtain. It is unfortunate that the three works make too long an evening for British opera-goers, otherwise the bill has all the elements of success. Subsequently 'Il Tabarro' and 'Gianni Schicchi' were given separately.

REST OF THE RÉPERTOIRE

The remainder of the répertoire has been made up of familiar matter. There has been a strong move in the interests of Massenet, both his 'Thaïs' and 'Manon' having been given. Certainly his 'Manon' is an improvement on the Puccini version, and in both Madame Edvina was able to show how well qualified she is and how well ordered are her methods. The 'Thaïs' was excellent, as Madame Edvina had the assistance of M. Anseau as Athanaël, the same artist supporting her in 'Manon.'

Dame Clara Butt has duly made her promised appearance in opera, her choice falling upon Gluck's 'Orphée'—sung, for no special reason, to the French text. Dame Butt went about her work with great seriousness and no small effect, since there is always sufficient in her voice to hold the attention of her hearers, no matter what she may be doing. She enters the operatic field with a reputation made, which is always a deterrent factor. She was supported by British singers—Miss Miriam Licette as Eurydice and Miss Madeline Collins as Amor. Neither distinguished herself save by her 'Stratford-atte-Bow' accent. Many opportunities seem to have been lost in the setting, which was by no means so good as it might have been in view of the resources of Covent Garden. Sir Thomas Beecham made his reappearance at the conductor's desk to direct. There were many subsequent repetitions. Other matters of note were the appearance of a new-comer in Mlle. Tina Poli-Randaccio as Floria in 'La Tosca,' and the revival of Ravel's charming opera 'L'Heure Espagnol,' with Miss Desirée Ellinger and Madame Maguenat, MM. Cotreuil and Oger.

THE RUSSIAN BALLET

M. Diaghilev can congratulate himself upon putting a different complexion on the opera season in more senses than one. In the artistic sense, which is the only aspect with which I am here concerned, the new complexion derived from a development of his operations so as to include opera. He has very rightly realised that the old Italian operas are unjustly neglected. Many of them are masterpieces in their way, and only require proper presentation to be acceptable. He has given at least one such presentation, i.e., Cimarosa's 'Le Astuzie Femminili.' This he has re-dressed in the quaintest way with the assistance of M. Massine. The music—chiefly the score—has been retouched by the wholly sympathetic hand of Signor Ottorino Respighi, and the whole vivified into a decidedly attractive thing. It is no act of vandalism, for here is all the 'internal evidence'—so dear to theologians—to justify the introduction of the ballets, &c., that are presented. With the aid of some excellent singers in Madame Malfade de Voltri, Mlle. Rosowski, MM. Masini-Pieralli, Anglade, and Gino de Vecchi, with Mlles. Karsavina and Sokolova and M. Idzikovsky as dancers, and M. Ansermet as conductor, the fine old work was made to live again—as many another may be.

The production itself proved very popular with the public, and was much appreciated by the management, who promptly took up the idea of combining ballet with opera as an entirely new arrangement, whereas it is about a century old. No more of M. Diaghilev's delightful operatic productions have been seen down to the time of writing, but ballet plus opera has been a regular feature of the proceedings. Parts of the Puccini Trittico have been employed for the purpose of making up the evening, and 'Pagliacci' has been dragged into service. The ballets have included 'Good Humoured Ladies,' 'Scheherazade,' 'Papillons,' 'La Boutique Fantasque,' 'The Midnight Sun,' and M. Stravinsky's 'Nightingale,' abbreviated in the form of a ballet-opera.

OPERA IN ENGLISH

With Covent Garden given up largely to ballet the opera-loving public has had to content itself with the performances of the Royal Carl Rosa Company at the Lyceum Theatre—and very content it has been. A familiar répertoire has been followed, the promised addition in the shape of a revised version of Mr. Stephen Philpots's 'Dante and Beatrice' not having materialised. The all-round and well-ordered nature of the representations, and the excellence of the voices, have more than vindicated the policy of the prolonged season that came to an end on July 10. The organization will be seen again in London, at Hammersmith, during the current month. I fancy that if the Company took up a permanent home in London, the story of 'Opera in English' would be somewhat differently written, as knowledge and experience must always prove controlling factors in the complex formula of successful achievement. Indeed, not only would the story be different, but it seems to me that the present state of English opera would also undergo a beneficent change, especially if the development I have already suggested, namely, a season of British opera only, were carried out in the same well-controlled manner in which the Lyceum performances have been given.

Choral Notes and News

BY W. McNAUGHT

With Choral Societies universally inactive and the Handel Festival described in another column there is little to provide news for this month's record. One of the brightest events in the waning London season was the concert of the Oriana Madrigal Society at Æolian Hall on June 29. True to their habits Mr. C. Kennedy Scott and his choir gave their attention to some music that is less known than it deserves to be. 'Ce moi de mai' (four parts) by Clement Jannequin, 'Petite Camusette' (six parts) by Josquin des Prés, and 'Au joli bois' (four parts) by Charles Tessier contained as much melody, humour, and captivating rhythm as will be found in most of the better-known madrigals and part-songs. Equally attractive were two examples of William Byrd—'Let not the sluggish sleep' and 'Though Amaryllis dance in Green.' Weelkes's 'As Vesta was from Latmos' hill descending,' with which the programme opened, of course needs no adjectives. Tomkins's five-part ballet, 'Fusca, in thy starry eyes,' completed the choir's dealings with old music. The modern selection had a ring of the past in it, being largely folk-song arrangements. There were three north country folk-tunes arranged by W. G. Whittaker—'Ca Hawkie,' 'Bonny at morn,' and 'Noble Squire Dacre' (the last a dirge without words)—and two from the south, arranged for solo and chorus—'The trees they do grow high' (from Hertfordshire) and 'Sing Ivy' (from Hampshire). Of original modern music there were Walford Davies's 'Magdalen at Michael's gate' and Holst's 'Bring us good ale.' Space is well devoted to these programme details, for the Oriana Society sets an example worthy of wide attention in its policy of making its own search for hidden treasures, past and present. Between the old and new choral music came a welcome little diversion, borrowed from the Glastonbury repertory, in the shape of Rutland Boughton's choral dance, 'The Moon Maiden.'

Yet another choral resuscitation is to take place in London. The London Welsh Choral Society, with which the London Welsh Male Choir is incorporated, is to meet next season under the direction of Mr. Merlin Morgan. Two hundred choraleists have been enrolled, and in connection with the choir a London Welsh Symphony Orchestra will be brought together. The first venture is to be the Choral Symphony, and later programmes are to be laid open to Welsh composers, especially such as have modern ideas.

The city of Norwich is privileged in its choral light and leading. It has a Handel Society which works out the responsibilities of its name by giving its supporters a wider view of Handel than the public usually learns from the common round of 'Messiah,' 'Israel,' and 'Judas.' Recently 'Deborah' was made known to Norwich for the first time. Now it is to be 'The Triumph of Time and Truth.' Not content with so obvious a plan as concert performance, Mr. Ernest Harcourt, the leading spirit in these enterprises, is welding it into a pageant. The work certainly seems to lend itself to the treatment. The music of course has the breadth for open-air performance, the libretto is full of fine fat allegory, and the five solo parts—Beauty, Pleasure, Time, Deceit, and Truth—can easily be characterised in the flesh. The pageant takes place in the Palace Grounds on August 26, twice during the day.

There is fruitful suggestion in this scheme of putting choral works to processional and dramatic uses. Old and discarded oratorios and cantatas could be revived in this way, just as on the stage M. Diaghilev has made a living thing of 'Le Astuzie Femminili.' The fancy also wanders to some modern works in a similar dress. 'Hiawatha,' for instance, would set well in a sylvan glade with the local choral society enjoying sturgeon, pemmican, and yellow cakes of the Mondamin, and many a famous tenor would look handsome singing 'Onaway' in the full panoply of a redskin brave.

CHORAL ORCHESTRATION

There is at the present day a steadily growing tendency towards the use of an orchestra in Church on special occasions. It may be a full orchestra, consisting wholly or in part of professionals, or it may be a very incomplete affair comprising only a few instruments and minus several members of the orchestral family. In any case, however, the movement is one to be encouraged. This is especially so in small provincial towns, where opportunities for performing orchestral music are rare. It must often happen that an organist has the means, more or less complete, at hand, but through lack of previous training and experience is unable to score the music. He may consult the ordinary text-books on orchestration, but in the matter of scoring an accompaniment to a choral work he will find little practical help.

There has just been published a book expressly designed to meet this want.* It may be said at once that no such illuminating work on the subject as Mr. Forsyth's 'Choral Orchestration' has hitherto appeared. The author is eminently practical. He has the gift of getting to the heart of things without any beating about the bush, while his 'live' literary style makes the book a real pleasure to read.

The plan of the volume is probably unique. The author presumes the case of an organist desirous of scoring an anthem or other choral work for orchestra, but lacking the necessary knowledge. At the end of the book is printed a Festival Te Deum for S.A.T.B. with organ accompaniment composed by Walter Henry Hall for the Peace Celebrations in America, and first performed at Columbia University, New York, in 1919. The reader is taken through this composition bar by bar, almost as if in conversation with a friendly critic. First, the musical difficulties of the work are considered in large blocks, as it were; the orchestral possibilities of each passage are then balanced one against the other; then, when a decision has been made, the details of the orchestral execution are taken up and explained. In this way the whole of the Te Deum is orchestrated from start to finish. Each right-hand page contains a few bars of the new scoring, the bars being numbered. At the top of the opposite page are the corresponding bars from the vocal score, showing the voice and organ parts. The space beneath is taken up by extremely terse and lucid comments and suggestions.

Mr. Forsyth does not hesitate to express his own convictions vigorously on occasions. * Discussing the filling-in of the orchestral parts, he says:

'As a rule, writers on orchestration—either from want of experience or from too much experience with bad music—lay it down as almost axiomatic that holding-notes should be plastered in everywhere. The mental state of the listener who is quite able to appreciate beautiful musical contours is wholly forgotten . . . This plastering business . . . is at the root of almost all orchestral uncertainties in the minds of composers.'

Again, after some valuable remarks concerning the relative 'placing' of the brass and wood-wind

* 'Choral Orchestration,' by Cecil Forsyth. (New York: The H. W. Gray Co. London: Messrs. Novello.)

instruments—usually a source of anxiety and trouble to the beginner—we are told that ‘wood-wind unisons and octave-combinations are much more frequent in orchestration than in orchestration-books. In the latter, too, there is a hoary mediæval legend that perfect 4ths on one tone-colour plunge an audience into deep mental distress. I confess that, though I have often tried, I have never been able to feel unhappy on this subject. It seems to me to be a Hucbaldian hallucination which might well be allowed to perish.’

At the end of the volume some excellent advice is given on the accompaniment of solo voices, especially in the use of the wood-wind. It will probably surprise some to learn that ‘it is an undeniable fact that, when an injudicious vocal accompaniment has to be lightened for public performance, nine times out of ten the best way of doing so is not by cutting out the horns and trombones, but by blue-pencilling the flutes and oboes.’

Such practical matters as the laying-out of a score, the relative virtues of lead-pencil and pen-and-ink, the advisability of neatness and legibility, are not deemed unworthy of consideration. The reader is reminded that ‘bad writing is no more a proof of good musicianship than a dirty collar is proof of poetical ability. It is true that Beethoven wrote villainously. But then, Mozart didn’t.’ With regard to the use of pencil,

‘one knows that the indiarubber is always at hand; and that fact deters one from acquiring the genuine orchestral habit-of-mind—the habit of pouncing down hawk-like on the inevitably right notes. Ink corrects this mental flabbiness. If we were ancient Assyrians, compelled to score on wet clay, and send our symphonies to the baker every evening, we should attain a remarkable level of orchestral certainty.’

Everyone desirous of the growth of musical culture will heartily endorse the author’s hope ‘that organist-composers may be encouraged to a better study of the subject of orchestration, not as a platonic text-book affair that is wholly outside their own sphere of action, but as a practical part of their profession. An organist who can give even one performance a year of a work written and orchestrated by himself may find that he is sowing seeds that will produce a crop of musical fruitfulness far beyond his anticipations. In small towns, remote from the great centres of national activity, he really owes this to the community in which he lives. And it is a species of healthy “provincialism” to which every lover of art should accord his heartiest support.’

Though written primarily for organists, this very readable book—packed as it is with wise, practical advice and commonsense—is one that will afford pleasure and profit to musicians generally.

G. G.

Mr. Edward Lewis, 20, Byron Street, Cwmaman, Aberdare, will be grateful if any of our readers can tell him where he can buy a full score of ‘Elijah,’ either first or second-hand.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Thoroughly experienced Viola player (lady) would give services in orchestra and chamber music concerts, &c., for expenses.—‘Viola,’ c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist desires to join trio or quartet for practice of good music.—V., 108, Norbury Crescent, Norbury, S.W.

Violinist (amateur) required to complete trio for chamber music practice.—Apply to Mr. C. W. SCOTT, B.A., 2, Buxton Road, Thornton Heath; or to Mr. A. WEBEL, 133, Langdale Road, Thornton Heath.

Violinist and ‘cellist (male), good sight-readers, wanted to join flautist and pianist in weekly practice. Good-class miscellaneous music. Fine practice room and all music found. Muswell Hill district.—F. H., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist desires to join quartet, violinist and ‘cellist. Good music.—GEORGE DAY, 10, Little Oak Road, Aston, Birmingham.

Birmingham amateur orchestra requires deputy leading violin and ‘cello. Also oboe and horn. Central practices, Fridays.—Apply to Secretary, Stafford House, The Retreat, Aston Manor, Birmingham.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist and ‘cellist. Classical and modern music. Margate and Cliftonville district. Most evenings free.—‘Allandale,’ c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist desires to meet other players, or good singer. Sheffield and Rotherham district.—‘Pianist,’ c/o Musical Times.

Ladies and gentlemen, all instruments, with good orchestral experience, are invited to attend the Symphony rehearsals held on Tuesdays at 7.45 at the Philological College, 248, Marylebone Road, N.W. 1 (near Great Central Station).

Chamber Music for amateurs in Italy. For particulars of a means of bringing together amateur players and singers, apply by letter to the Consul of the Independent Theosophical Society, 65, Via Mario Cutelli, Palermo, Italy.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist or ‘cellist for practice; most evenings free.—FRED MEERS, 165, Galton Road, Bearwood, Birmingham.

Pianist (male) wishes to meet good violinist, for practice, Grieg (Sonatas), Coleridge-Taylor, &c.—J. C. BIRD, 1, Spooner Road, Broomhill, Sheffield.

Lady (violin and viola player) and gentleman (‘cellist) wish to meet two violinists, or one violin and one viola player, for a weekly evening practice of classical quartets. Must be experienced and good sight-readers.—Mr. and Mrs. MARTIN, 5, Amblecote Road, Grove Park, S.E. 12.

Experienced violinist wishes to join good pianist for sonata playing, and also for pianoforte trios.—S. H. GOWING, 11, Salisbury Road, Leyton, E. 10.

Pianist (19) desires to form trio (pianoforte, violin, and ‘cello) for study of good music. Saturday afternoon and evening.—A. W. W., c/o Musical Times.

The programme of this year’s Festival at Glastonbury, to be held from August 15 to September 11, consists of ‘The Birth of Arthur,’ ‘The Round Table’ (both by Reginald Buckley and Rutland Boughton), Boughton’s ‘The Immortal Hour,’ Purcell’s ‘Dido and Æneas,’ a choral ballet by P. Napier Miles entitled ‘Music Comes,’ and ‘The Children of Lir,’ a ballet by Adela Maddison. Six cycles will be held. Information is obtainable from Miss Percy, 86, High Street, Glastonbury.

Church and Organ Music

THE PRECES, RESPONSES, AND LITANY OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH: A BY-WAY OF LITURGICAL HISTORY

By J. M. DUNCAN

[The writer wishes to acknowledge the help kindly given him by the librarians of the various libraries named in this article, and also by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright.]

It is well known that towards the end of the second quarter of the 16th century, as part of the general Church reformation then in progress, the use of Latin in public worship was being gradually discontinued and the English language substituted. In the summer of 1544, the country being at the time disturbed both by the effects of a Continental war and by domestic scarcity, it was decided, by way of stimulating the devotions of the public, to issue an English Litany for use as a general intercession. The translation and adaptation of the text from the traditional Latin, and some addition of fresh material, were made by Archbishop Cranmer; and the result, which has undergone but little modification from that day to this, has always been regarded as one of the finest products of English literature.

The music was likewise adapted from traditional sources and was published a few weeks later. But while the text was enriched by the adaptation it underwent and by Cranmer's additions, the music unfortunately suffered at his hands, as will at once be seen when the eight responses which occur in the first half of the English Litany are set out in the original Latin and the traditional tones reproduced*:

(1.) The opening invocations:

Pa - ter de cae - lis De - us mi - se - re - re no - bis.

(2.) Spare us and (3.) Good Lord deliver us:

Par - ce no - bis Do - mi - ne.
Li - be - ra nos Do - mi - ne.

(4.) We beseech thee and (5.) Son of God:

Te ro - ga - mus au - di nos.

(6.) O Lamb of God:

Ag - nus De - i. qui tol - lis pec - ca - ta mun - di:

mi - se - re - re no - bis.

(7.) O Christ, hear us:

Chris - te au - di nos.

(8.) Lord, Christ } have mercy upon us:
[]

Ky - ri - e e - le - i - son.
Chris - te e - le - i - son.

In the English Litany, however, for the sake of simplicity, only the first of these tones was used, and the rest thrown aside.

Again, Cranmer's arrangement of the latter part of the Litany, from the end of the Lord's Prayer onwards, has involved the sacrifice of much traditional music. The Amen to the collect after the Lord's Prayer was omitted; the antiphon, 'O Lord, arise,' became a mere response to the collect; the psalm-verse 'O God, we have heard,' became a versicle, and its Gloria a versicle and response, while the second repetition of the antiphon disappeared altogether. The Suffrages became mere versicles and responses. Those who wish to see the original musical setting of this section may find it in the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society's edition of the Litany and Suffrages; the original arrangement of the text is given here:

PRIEST. O God, merciful Father through Jesus Christ our Lord.

ANSWER. Amen.

THE ANTHEM

CHOIR. Full. O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thy Name's sake.

Vers. O God we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have declared unto us:

The noble works that thou didst in their days, and in the old time before them.

Full. O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thy Name's sake.

Vers. Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost:

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end.
Amen.

Full. O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thine honour.

THE SUFFRAGES

CHOIR. Vers. From our enemies defend us,
O Christ.

Full. Graciously look upon our afflictions.

Vers. Pitifully behold the sorrows of our hearts.

Full. Mercifully forgive the sins of thy people.

Vers. Favourably with mercy hear our prayers.

Full. O Son of David, have mercy upon us.

Vers. Both now and ever vouchsafe to hear us, O Christ.

Full. Graciously hear us, O Christ; graciously hear us, O Lord Christ.

PRIEST. O Lord, let thy mercy be shewed upon us.

ANSWER. As we do put our trust in thee.

PRIEST. Let us pray. We humbly beseech thee, &c.

ANSWER. Amen.

* 'Processionale ad usum ecclesie Sar4' (= Sarum.) The edition here used is the Rouen edition of 1555, a copy of which is preserved in the British Museum.

When in 1549 the first English Prayer Book was published, the preparation of a corresponding musical edition was entrusted to John Merbecke, a lay-clerk of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and his 'Boke of Common Praier noted' appeared in 1550. The inflexions of the versicles and responses at mattins and evensong follow the old Latin rules, of which the object was to make the notes reproduce the rise and fall of the natural voice. Merbecke has, however, made a couple of mistakes which must be noticed. The scansion of the final syllables 'upon us' is trochaic (— $\cup$), not iambic ($\cup$ —), and their inflection should therefore be :

This mistake occurs three times, once in the priest's part, once in the Lesser Litany, and in the response 'And mercifully.' The first of these is easily corrected; the two others, being incorporated in Tallis's harmony, can scarcely now be rectified. A similar false inflection occurs at the words 'within us,' and can be corrected, but Merbecke was not the author of the mistake. He gives the inflection right; the mistake has arisen since his time.* For the Lord's Prayer in the Communion service an adaptation was made of the traditional tone, having regard to the condition insisted upon by the ecclesiastical authorities that not more than one note should be assigned to each syllable. But the tones of the Sursum Corda apparently refused to comply with this condition, so that for these two responses Merbecke was obliged to content himself with monotone, leaving to modern times the adaptation of the Sursum Corda plain-song to the English text. Musicians of the 16th century had only an imperfect understanding of plainsong, and the rule assigning one note to each syllable had some justification in the inartistic and ponderous performances of the more ornate plainsong melodies which the long-suffering public of the day no doubt had to endure. Those whose lot obliges them nowadays to listen to dull and elaborate Church music will be able to sympathise with Archbishops Crammer and Holgate. But the rule was a disastrous one for the composers, who after a few experiments seem for the most part to have forsaken Anglican Church music in despair. It is this rule which is responsible for the dullness, as compared with their Latin Church music, of the services of Tallis and Byrd, and for the dreary wastes of so many settings of the 18th century.

Before the Reformation, as upon the Continent at the present day, the Preces and Responses† appear to have been sung in simple unison; at least no pre-Reformation harmonized version of them has come down to us. And on week-days, when no great number of singers was accustomed to be present in the choir, this unison treatment continued until the early years of the 19th century. Dr. Jebb,‡ who about the year 1840 investigated the matter thoroughly and made inquiries of old Cathedral organists and singers whose recollections dated back sixty years before, relates that several of them—for example, Dr. Chard of Winchester, Dr. Corfe of Salisbury, and Dr. Camidge of York—remembered the unison responses well; that Dr. Camidge remembered having harmonized them for the York Minster choir about the year 1815, and that at Winchester and Salisbury the harmonized versions were still more recent. Probably they were at first extemporised by the singers, and then committed to writing for uniformity's sake; in fact, Dr. Jebb states that in his time the Gloucester choir still sang the responses from oral tradition. In this connection mention must be made of the curious use of Wells Cathedral, a combination of Tallis and the Westminster use. It was arranged by C. W. Lavington, organist from 1842 till 1895. When the choral service was revived there in the middle of the 19th century, Lavington used to travel to London and attend service at Westminster Abbey to hear how it was done, and on returning home wrote out the music as he recollected hearing it. Another curiosity is the inflected and harmonized General Confession sung at Ely, which was composed by Robert Janes, organist from 1831 to 1866. It is the use of the three London choirs* which in the middle of the 19th century was published as the Ferial Responses, and has been almost universally adopted throughout the country, the various local uses now only surviving in a few instances. As might be expected from the circumstances of their origin, the Ferial Responses exhibit few signs of inspiration, and could without much difficulty be improved upon.†

But while unison responses continued to satisfy the Elizabethans on week-days, their interest in polyphony, then at the height of its enterprise, created a desire for something richer to be sung on Sundays and Holy-days. Fragments of a harmonized Litany believed to date from the years 1547-48 are preserved in the British Museum,‡ and within a year of Queen Elizabeth's accession and of the restoration of the new English services after their suppression in Queen Mary's reign, John Day the printer issued a collection of English services and anthems which included a harmonized Litany.§ It is to be observed that though Tallis contributed anthems to this collection, the Litany is not his work, but is one in a style already old-fashioned, from which it may be conjectured that Tallis's Litany was not yet ready when Day went to press. But it must have been written not long afterwards. We have indeed no copy surviving that is contemporary, or even nearly so. But according to Prof. Wooldridge,|| the somewhat archaic style of the counterpoint—he instances the descending figure in the counter-tenor at the end of each opening invocation—indicates that the music belongs to the period before the polyphonic method in England reached its maturity, and can scarcely have been composed later than 1560. The Preces and Responses were no doubt written at the same date.

(To be continued.)

* In those days there were only three fully-equipped choirs in London, namely, the choirs of the Chapel Royal, St. Paul's, and Westminster Abbey. As several of the adult singers served simultaneously in all three, the use of each would tend to be similar.

† As, for example, in J. W. Elliott's 'Choral Service Book' (Seeley, 1892).

‡ MSS. Royal Appendix, 74-76. The harmonized Litany cited by Rockstro in Grove's Dictionary, art. Litany, as printed in 1544, seems to be a mistake. No such publication took place.

§ Apparently composed by Robert Stones, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in Edward VI.'s time.

|| 'Musica Antiqua,' Part 3 (Oxford University Press).

* It dates back at least to the Restoration; see Lowe's Direction described later in the article.

† In this article the term 'Preces' denotes the versicles and responses at the beginning of the service, and 'Responses' those which follow the Creed.

‡ See the prefaces to his book 'The Choral Responses and Litanies of the United Church of England and Ireland.' 2 vols., 1843-57.

THE RHYTHM OF THE CHANT

BY SYDNEY GREW

The serious intellectual and artistic defects of the singing of the psalms to the Anglican chant, come about because the rhythm of the chant-form is misunderstood. The analysis that is accepted, and that naturally has governed pointing, is wrong not only as regards abstract musical form but also as regards prose-rhythm. Each section of the double error would be enough to make chanting difficult and in result unsatisfactory; combined, the error makes good work impossible.

There is nothing defective in the Anglican chant as a form of music. It is intrinsically fluid, and—when analysed as below—quite as adaptable as the Gregorian. It is far more practicable than its elder companion, and is not likely ever to be put aside. But as at present analysed, the Anglican chant is neither fluid nor adaptable.

I offer a new explanation of the form, and suggest how the psalms should be pointed to make words and music congruent. I make the offer with considerable nervousness, because my idea, if adopted, means the scrapping of every pointed psalter in existence.

The chant has been variously explained as an eight-bar sentence with one bar missing, also as an 'irregular' form. Such explanations lead nowhere. A thing exists by virtue of what it is, not by virtue of what it would be were it something else; and there are no irregularities in art—the leaning tower of Pisa obeys mathematically exact laws. The chant truly is a seven-bar sentence, containing two clauses, the first three bars long, the last four. Such forms are not rare: they abound in Bach; Beethoven and Schubert use them freely, and Brahms uses them fairly readily. From Weber to Wagner they were rather infrequent.

The chief error in the accepted analysis of the chant, however, is in respect of its rhythm, i.e., its cadential character, or accentuations. It is explained as ending with a strong bar in each of the two clauses, which means that if barred to show the 'strong' bars it would stand thus:

The theory of rhythm applied in this analysis is that which was finally formulated by Riemann and adopted in England by Prout. It is that all rhythm is a progression forward, and that the last bar (or pulse) in a phrase is the point of strongest cadential power—in other words, that all rhythm is iambic (a), never trochaic (b):

or, in other words again, that all cadential progressions (and each complete rhythmical unit of a piece is a 'cadence') are rising movements (c), never falling (d):

I have satisfied myself by a general study of rhythm that this theory is erroneous, and that falling rhythm is as natural and as largely used as rising. The chant contains both rising and falling motives.

A measure of rhythm is made up of either two or three pulses (or bars) of equal length. These particles are cadentially related according to the rising or the falling power. The two-pulse measure may be either iambic (a) or trochaic (b); the three-pulse must resolve itself into either an iambus or a trochee, naturally with one of its particles twice as long as the other:

In the case of the two-pulse measure, either of the pulses may be broken into half-beat notes:

The falling anapest is the foundation of most modern rhythmical measures, and the rising anapest is the foundation of most four-pulse phrases or clauses:

The dactyl is not often used as an independent movement in the measure or in the phrase. It is unstable and impulsive, requiring to steady itself with whole-pulse measures (i.e., spondees):

Schubert, Op. 94, No. 5.

or with anapests and spondees:

Brahms, Op. 119, No. 4.

One of the more frequent rhythmical patterns for the four-pulse clause is the alternation of dactyl and anapest, with the point of cadential stress striking on the beginning of the anapest:

Now this is the rhythmic pattern of the latter half of the chant; and so the chant, barred to show its rhythm, stands thus in its second half:

The pointing or scanning of the psalms should be so devised as to throw on the strong cadential point of the phrase the last strong syllable of the verse, be that syllable the last, or the last but one, two, three, or even four:

	for	he	hath	done	marvel-	lous	things-
	build	thou	the	walls	of Je-	ru - sa -	lem.
	the	day	of	tempt-	ation	in the	wil - der -
	and	cleanse	me	from	my . .	sin.
	rejoice	in the	strength	of	our sal-	va - -	tion.
	visited	and re-	deemed	his . .	peo - -	ple.
	we	will	go	into	the	Lord. . . .
				house	of the	Christ. . . .
				O

In general, the cadential balance of the three-pulse measure is iambic:  not trochaic:

 The long particle is generally made anapestic:  This three-pulse measure comes regularly in Beethoven as an expansion of the movement of the music at the moment when a new section is entered upon (especially at the point of recapitulation). It appears regularly in all composers when the rhythm is to be changed from falling to rising:

In nearly all such cases the cadential stress agrees with the long particle of the so-formed iambus, i.e., with the first half-beat note of the resultant anapest:

thereby converting that anapest into itself a falling rhythm, exactly as in the case of the regular dactyl-anapest phrase given above.

The fore-phrase of the chant is thus rhythmically iambic, with its 'long' rendered anapestic:

The text of the psalms should therefore be so scanned as to bring the last important syllable upon the beginning of the anapest:

.. throughly from my	wick-ed-ness.
thou art the King of	glo - - ry.
.. and gracious unto	Si - - on.
let us sing unto the	Lord
.. harden not your	hearts. . . .

If the organist will take a psalm and read it in flowing monotone, first fixing in mind the rhythm of the chant as thus accented and stressed:

he will find that with a little thought the ends of the half-verses fit into the rhythm as beautifully as in grave emotional reading the verses cadence themselves according to the natural rhythm of the speaking voice. He will find that new meanings and fresh poetic beauties and significances enter into the text, and also that the words move with a curious combination of rapidity and leisure. Particularly will he find that the innumerable false antitheses and illogical suggestions made by the present system of scanning and prolongation of syllable, are all abolished.

Mr. Harry Alexander Matthews, of Cheltenham, who has long been a prominent musician at Philadelphia, has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Music from the Lutheran University College of Muhlenburg, Allentown.

ELECTRIC ORGAN AT THE LETTISH CHURCH, LIBAU, RUSSIA

In our January issue we published a short note, with photograph, of the very large, old-fashioned organ in the Lutheran Church at Libau. We now give the specification and a short description of the wonderful electric organ built in 1913 in the Lettish Church in that town.

The specification is as follows:

ECHO ORGAN (In box)		Ft.	SWELL I. (continued)		Ft.
Super-Octave			Leiblich Gedakt	...	8
Octave			Harmonica	...	8
Super-Pedal			Dolce	...	8
Bourdon	...	8	Voix Celeste	...	8
Echo Gamba	...	8	Æoline	...	8
Vox Angelica	...	8	Flöte	...	4
Spitzflöte	...	4	Piccolo	...	2
Campanella	...	4	Planifeir	...	8
Vox Humana	...	8	Oboe	...	8
Tremolo			Trompette	...	8
			Clarion	...	4
			Bassoon	...	16
			Sub-Octave
			Super-Octave
PEDAL		Ft.	SWELL II. (In box)		Ft.
Principal Bass	...	16	Principal	...	4
Violone	...	16	Principal I.	...	8
Sub-Bass	...	16	Fugara	...	4
Leiblich	...	16	Principal II.	...	8
'Cello	...	8	Leiblich Gedakt	...	8
Octave	...	8	Salicional	...	8
Quintaton	...	10 3/4	Leiblich Gedakt	...	16
Posaune	...	16	Flautina	...	2
Super-Octave			Mixture	...	3 rks.
			Horn	...	8
			Clarinet	...	8
			Super-Octave
			Sub-Octave
GREAT		Ft.	COUPLERS
Principal	...	8	Great to Pedal
Gedakt	...	8	Swell I. to Pedal
Gemshorn	...	8	Swell II. to Pedal
Postunal Flöte	...	8	Echo to Pedal
Flöte Harmonique	...	8	Swell I. to Great
Principal	...	16	Swell II. to Great
Quintaton	...	8	Swell I. to Swell II.
Bourdon	...	16	Swell II. to Echo
Hohlflöte	...	4	Echo to Swell
Octave	...	4	Subs and Supers as above
Octave	...	2
Rausel Quint	...	2 3/4
Mixture	...	3 rks.
Cornett	...	8
Trompette	...	8
SWELL I. (In box)		Ft.
Doppel Flöte	...	8	26 Combination pistons
Quintaton	...	8	6 Composition pedals
Fugara	...	8	120 Adjustable pistons

The Echo organ is played from the top manual and the Great organ from the lowest of the four manuals, there being no Choir organ. In place of the ordinary draw-stops we find the knobs common to most electric organs, these being arranged on either side of the keys and placed to correspond with the manuals they control. Above each 'stop' are two small ivory draw-stops. These are about 1/4-in. diameter and draw to about 1/2-in., and control the stops over which they are placed. Their purpose is for preparing beforehand any special combination which may be desired, and which becomes operative as soon as a corresponding piston—placed underneath the keyboard—is pressed. The pistons and miniature draw-stops are coloured red, green, yellow, and white. The combination required is therefore brought into play by pressing the coloured piston underneath the keyboard which acts upon the stops already pre-arranged by the 'small' stops. The colour scheme is merely a means of selecting at a glance the combination which it is desired shall be used. There are in all a hundred and twenty of these small 'stops,' and at first the effect is distinctly bewildering: a mastery of their use however is essential to control the full resources of variety obtainable; infinite variety can be derived from them.

Immediately above and directly in the centre of the pedals is a revolving wheel about 16-in. wide, with a diameter of about 6-in., covered with india-rubber. As this is moved backwards or forwards so the full power of the instrument is gradually brought into play from the softest stop to the full organ. A small dial is installed in front of the player, and shows the position of the wheel at any given moment. The player, commencing with the dial at zero (on the upper Swell), slowly moves the wheel round. When the full power of this manual is reached, the hands are then lowered to the Swell (II.) below. Similarly, when the full power of this Swell is reached the player continues on to the Great until the wheel finally brings on the full power of the organ. The graduation is arranged in such a way that the transition from manual to manual is made with no apparent break—gradual crescendo being unbroken throughout. The effect is very wonderful, and nothing approaching it is possible on any ordinary organ fitted only with composition pedals and pistons.

Absence of diapason work will be noticed. This does not, however, have so much effect as one would expect; still it must be admitted that the full organ certainly suffers from it—the pressure being enormous, and the volume of sound far greater than usual.

Each of the Swell organs is in its own box, the Echo organ also being enclosed.

Wind is supplied by a powerful electric motor, a separate motor being used for the Echo organ.

Finally, it may be stated that no department of the instrument is on orthodox lines, novelty being manifest in every detail throughout.

The builders are E. F. Walcker & Co., of Germany.

Owing to the internal state of the country Libau is at present almost inaccessible with any degree of comfort—the journey from Berlin taking about a couple of days to perform. An organ enthusiast, however, should he be at Berlin would be well repaid by a visit to Libau to see these two organs, and should pay a visit also to Riga, where there is a very fine organ by Messrs. Hill & Son, of London.

A. P.

The music at the Patronal Festival of Leeds Parish Church (St. Peter's Day) should be recorded. The service music was Stanford in B flat (Communion Service, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, and Te Deum), and the anthems were Nares's 'The Souls of the Righteous,' Ireland's 'Greater love hath no man,' Walmisley's 'If the Lord Himself,' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' Organ music played a prominent part, the voluntaries and a recital by Mr. Willoughby Williams including Wesley's Choral Song and Fugue, Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue, Franck's Choral in B minor, Reubke's Sonata, and the recitalist's own Sonata in C minor. Miss Lesbia Harrison played the Andante from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and Mr. John Dunn contributed to the recital the Introduction and Adagio from Bach's Concerto in G, the second movement from Elgar's Concerto, and two short pieces by Mr. Willoughby Williams. Evidently the musical traditions of this famous Church are being worthily carried on.

The London Society of Organists held a combined picnic and conference at Erith on June 26, when a large gathering enjoyed papers by the Rev. M. Williams ('The Organist as Colleague'), the Rev. G. Hartley B. Coleridge ('The Claims of the Congregation'), and Mr. Herbert Westerby ('The Organist as Hymnologist'). A list of the proceedings of the Society since its inception (1913) shows that much excellent educational and social work has been done. London organists who are not yet members should write to the hon. secretary, Dr. J. Warriner, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill.

The Choral Society organized by Dr. Harold Darke in connection with St. Michael's, Cornhill (known as the 'St. Michael's Singers'), gave three concerts in the Church on July 7 and 9 (mid-day) and July 12 at 6 p.m. Conducted by Dr. Darke, they were heard in excellent performances of his setting of 'England, Awake,' Bach's 'Jesu, joy of man's desiring' (the beautiful choral that made such an impression at the Bach Festival), Vaughan Williams's 'Towards the Unknown Region,' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' Mr. Thalben Ball accompanied, and played Dr. Darke's Prelude on a Theme of Tallis. There were good attendances, especially at the evening performance. This practical attempt to give City workers a chance of making music as well as of hearing it is deserving of every encouragement. At present the singers number about sixty. We hope that before long there will be many such Societies in the City.

At a recital given at All Saints', Southampton, on June 23, the Nocturne from Borodin's String Quartet in D, and the Lento from Dvorák's in F, were played by Mrs. Bernard Gotch, Messrs. F. W. Trott, F. Long, and L. A. Ladbroke. Two anthems were sung by the choir, and in addition to playing cello solos and assisting in the quartets, Mr. L. A. Ladbroke gave organ solos, including a Prelude and Fugue by Glazounov.

Mr. F. W. Sheffield has received a presentation on the completion of twenty-one years of service at Earls Barton Baptist Church. A few years ago each of the three places of worship at Earls Barton had a Sheffield as its organist—surely a record.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Miss Florence Pope, Hednesford Wesleyan Church—Concert Overture in C, Hollins; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Diatonic Study, Cyril Scott; Fugue, Reubke.
Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Three Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Gaudete, W. G. Ross; Prelude on 'London New,' Harvey Grace; Berceuse and Cortège, Vierne; Choral in A, Boëllmann; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge.
Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Three Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Pastorale Sorrentina, Yon; Scherzo-Caprice, Alec Rowley.
Mr. Frank H. Mather, First Presbyterian Church, Rutherford, New Jersey—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Gethsemane,' 'Golgotha,' and 'Easter Morn,' Malling; Fountain Rêverie and Festival Toccata, Percy E. Fletcher.
Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Overture to 'Samson'; Air with Variations and Final Fugato, Smart; Sonata in E flat, Bach; Marche Heroïque, Saint-Saëns. St. Laurence Jewry—Concert Overture in C minor, A. Hollins; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Meditation, Bonnet.
Mr. Fred. Gostelow, Ilford Baptist Church—Overture in E flat, Faulkes; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Barcarolle, Wolstenholme; 'Finlandia'; Overture in C, Hollins; Fugue in D, Bach; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Meditation, Gostelow.
Mr. A. G. Mathew, St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta—Fantasia and Toccata, Stanford; Air, Bach; Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger; Cathedral Prelude, Harwood; Allegro con Spirito, Frank Bridge.
Mr. H. C. L. Stocks, Manchester Cathedral—Toccata in C, Bach; Pastel in B, Karg-Elert; Maestoso and Fugue (Sonata No. 1), Harwood.
Mr. William Robson, Yarm Parish Church—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Toccata and 'In Paradisum,' Dubois; Recessional March, R. Rogers.
Mr. Paul Rochard, St. Stephen's, New Hutton—Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Variations, Bonnet; Symphony No. 5 (first movement), Widor.
Mr. Julian Farmer, Andover Parish Church (two recitals)—Introduction and Pastorale, Sterndale-Bennett; Toccata in F, Bach; Fantasia in F, Mozart; Siegfried Idylle; Finale (Symphony in D), Widor.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Prelude and Fugue on the name 'B A C H,' and Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Finale from Sonata in F sharp minor, Rheinberger; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Minuetto from the Oboe Concerto, Handel; Air with Variations and Finale Fugato, Smart.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (three recitals)—Pæan, Pearce; Serenade, Purcell Mansfield; Grand Chœur, Wheeldon; Moderato e Maestoso, Henry Hiles; Elegy, Parry; Gothic March, Salome.

Mr. C. Hugh Rowcliffe, St. Dunstan-in-the-East—Overture in C, Boyce; Fantasia in F, Best; March in D, Lemmens.

Dr. M. P. Conway, St. Dunstan-in-the-East—Sonata in G, Rheinberger; 'On a bass,' Stainer; Marche Solennelle, Lemare; Cantabile, Bossi; Intermezzo and Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. Lewis M. Jones, St. Dunstan-in-the-East—Petite Litane de Jesus, Grovelez; Sonatina, Bach; Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Two Choral Preludes, Karg-Elert; March in C, Silas.

Miss Tuck, St. Mark's, Highcliffe—Toccata in C, Bach; Fantaisie, Guilmant; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (four recitals)—Sonata No. 1, Harwood; 'Le Cygne,' Saint-Saëns; 'The Curfew,' Horsman; Theme with Variations, Faulkner; Fantasia and Toccata, Stanford; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach.

Dr. George Grace, Royal Albert Hall—Prelude in C minor, Bach; Pontifical March, Widor; Postlude on 'Old Hundredth,' Harvey Grace; Serpizetto, Vierne; Chorale Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (four recitals)—Introduction, Air, and Variations in G, Guilmant; Toccata in A, Purcell; Choral Prelude, 'Jerusalem on High,' Karg-Elert; Prelude in B minor, Bach; Rhapsody No. 3, Howells; March and Fugue (Sonata No. 6), Rheinberger; Légende, Vierne.

Mr. Herbert E. Knott, St. Anne's, Moseley—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Old French Carol and Madrigal, Quef; Minuet Nuptiale, Lemare; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (four recitals)—Overture to 'Rienzi'; Selection from 'Acis and Galatea'; Schiller March, Meyerbeer; Prelude and Death Song ('Tristan and Isolde'); Prelude, Theme, Variations, and Finale, Guilmant; Coronation March from 'Le Prophète'; March for a Church Festival, Best; Toccata in F, Bach; Coronation March, Frederic Cliffe.

Mr. G. F. Robertson, Hinckley Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Marche Nuptiale, Guilmant; Chant Pastorale, Dubois; Finale Jubilante, West.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Prelude on Hanover, Parry; Intermezzo Symphony No. 3), Vierne; Evening Song, Bairstow; Final, Frank.

Mr. Leitch Owen, St. Mary, Edge Hill—Suite in F minor, Driffill; Cloche du Soir, Chauvet; Coronation March, Meyerbeer.

Mr. Hugh Fowler, St. Peter's, Budleigh Salterton—Sonata in C minor, Lyon; Question and Answer, Wolstenholme; Andante, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. J. F. Shepherdson, King's College Chapel, Cambridge—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Study in B minor, Schumann; Pæan, Harwood; Pastorale, Frank; Elegiac Rhapsody on an old Church melody, Rootham; Choral Fantasia, 'O God, our help in ages past,' Parry.

Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Concerto No. 2, Handel; Two Ballads, Wolstenholme; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; March in B minor, Schubert.

Mr. Alan Burr, Cromer Parish Church—Introit and Elevation, Vierne; Overture 'Jephtha'; Two Studies on old English Hymn Tunes, Charlton Palmer; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant.

Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, St. Andrew's, Holborn (four recitals)—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Pastorale (Symphony No. 1), Widor; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Funeral March, Guilmant; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Mr. Allan Brown, Crystal Palace (six recitals)—Sonata Britannica, Stanford; Toccata in C, d'Evry; Concert Rondo, Hollins; Romance in D flat, Lemare; Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Fugue in G minor (the 'Great'), Bach; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme; Symphony in D minor, Guilmant; Triumph Song, Baynon; Schiller March, Meyerbeer.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. W. S. Hall, organist and choirmaster, Braccwell, Skipton.

Mr. Richard H. Kay, organist and choirmaster, Church of the Annunciation, Chislehurst.

Mr. Percy Moore, organist and choirmaster, Wimbledon Parish Church.

Mr. R. Birkett Musgrove, Lecturer and Professor of Music, Macdonald College, near Montreal, Canada.

Mr. Edward Watson, organist and choirmaster, Holy Trinity, Tulsa Hill.

Mr. Warner Yeomans, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Harrogate.

New Music

BY WILLIAM CHILD

Pianoforte sonatas by modern British composers are so few that we may count them on our fingers and still have a few digits to spare. The latest, by John Ireland (Augener), had the advantage of being published a few days before its first public performance—a happy arrangement that ought to be common, but which is so rare as to excite comment. Thanks to Mr. Lamond's sponsorship, the work has had so much notice in the daily and weekly press that a monthly reviewer can afford to be brief. The music, as a whole, is of the tough and manly fibre we expect from the composer. Perhaps Mr. Lamond laid undue accent on the toughness. I had an impression that there was rather more feeling in the Sonata than he allowed to come out. No doubt Ireland does not wear his heart on his sleeve, but I do not think he keeps it buttoned up so tightly as Mr. Lamond's performance implied. The Sonata is very difficult, and neither my acquaintance with the printed page nor my hearing of the music convinces me that the difficulties are all worth while. Much of the writing for the left hand is very ungrateful—e.g., bars 2 and 3 on page 21, where the awkward clumps of notes yield an inadequate return for the work involved. Will none of our composers write a sonata modern in spirit, and yet no more difficult than the early and middle ones of Beethoven? Why produce works that only first-rank recitalists can handle? However, as most of us can never hope to play this fine Sonata, we must pray that the few who can will give us frequent opportunities for hearing it.

We shall ask for no such opportunities in the case of Stravinsky's 'Ragtime,' a pianoforte version of which is now available. (Chester.) It was bad enough in its orchestral form, though there some of the more acute dissonances were tempered by the variety of instrumental colour. On the pianoforte it is far worse. Fortunately there is another and better Stravinsky than the one who speaks—or creaks—in 'Ragtime.' Josef Holbrooke's 'Barrage' (Chester) has the initial merit of being pianistic, though the pianism is of the kind with which only the lions can grapple. On paper the work appears to live up to its fearsome title. But do we want any more barrages, even on the keyboard? I have enjoyed some orchestral works by Malipiero so much that I opened his 'Maschero che passano' (Chester) with interest. I closed it with disappointment. It consists of five short pieces and all are hideously discordant. Music need not be an affair of sugar and spice, but neither should it be a progress over tin-tacks and broken bottles.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

It is a pleasure to turn from these unwholesome eccentricities to such a work as Ernest Farrar's Celtic Suite. (Novello.) Farrar was one of our most promising young composers, and the works now appearing posthumously remind us of the loss our native music suffered when he fell in the war. The Suite is in three well-contrasted movements, each dealing with a subject from Celtic mythology. But the poetic basis really matters little. The music is so expressive and attractive that one can enjoy it apart from its title. It is moderately difficult, the call being for imagination rather than technique. The Suite shows the graceful talent of Farrar at its best.

SONGS

John Gerrard Williams calls his 'Love outwitted' (Novello) a 'Fantasy duet for voice and pianoforte,' and so prepares us for a liberal measure of independence between the vocal part and the accompaniment. The fanciful words (from E. Wyville Home's 'Songs of a Wayfarer') are set to music that is vivid and descriptive without being eccentric or forbiddingly difficult. A point worthy of note is the composer's care in the matter of verbal accentuation. The result is a flexibility usually attained only in recitation. Whereas the discords of Mr. Williams are justified by the text, those in which Rebecca Clarke indulges appear to be dragged in for their own sake. In the second bar of her 'Shy one' we have a grinding dissonance on the word 'shy,' used later for 'dishes,' 'candles,' and 'rabbit.' This is only one of the features that make the song seem far-fetched. Again in 'The Cloths of Heaven' the complexity and pungency of the accompaniment seems out of keeping with the tender simplicity of the words. Both songs are published by Winthrop Rogers.

Lord Berners's Lieder Album consists of three songs in the German manner. (Chester.) We have his word for it, otherwise we should have described them as being in the Berners manner. True, they are a good deal less cacophonous than his other recent works, but the hand is unmistakable. They are parodies, and the humour of the first two is chiefly of a rather elementary type, the grunt of a pig and the moo of a cow being prominent features. The third song is a Christmas carol, and is in bad taste if intended to be burlesque. If it is serious it will pass muster as a good specimen of modern treatment of a quasi folk-song.

Not often do we come across such a beautiful sacred song as the 'Ave Maria' of Fred Barlow. (Chester.) It is a setting for high voice, of the Latin text, and both in its freely-waving vocal line and in its simple but subtle pianoforte part is of rare beauty. The song is published also with organ accompaniment.

ORGAN MUSIC

When Elgar's String Quartet was produced, the beauty of the slow movement—Piacevole—was at once realised. It should make many new friends now that it has been arranged for organ. (Novello.) John E. West is responsible for the transcription, so its practicability is assured. The movement has been shortened with the approval of the composer, about eighty bars of the recapitulation having been omitted. Mr. West has done well to add a foot-note reminding players that although the original dynamic marks are used, the mf, f, and ff marks applied to the Great organ should be regarded as calling for less power than usual. Transcribers and players too often forget that the fortissimo of a string quartet and that of an organ are very different things. The work is laid out for three manuals, but it can be played effectively on two. It is to be hoped that this transcription will be followed by an organ version of the even more beautiful slow movement from the Quintet.

Boëly was an excellent French composer who died about sixty years ago. He is little known in England, and was neglected in France until Guilmant and Saint-Saëns recently revived interest in his organ works. Among the best of these is a Toccata in B minor, a new edition of which has just been published by Novello. Here is a sterling piece of music that will serve well either as voluntary or recital item. It is a striking example of the possibilities of the simplest of themes when taken in hand by a composer who has something to say. The Toccata is fairly difficult, and though it was composed for pedal-pianoforte, and so may be played on a small organ, it is best suited by an instrument of ample resource, not for registration purposes, but because the music is of a type that calls for great sonority. It has been edited by John E. West. There are already many organ works founded on 'O Filii et Filiae,' but there is always room for one more when it is so good as Charles W. Pearce's Phantasy. (Winthrop Rogers.) Dr. Pearce is an excellent hand at treating Church themes, and this free and attractive example is in his best vein. Alan Gray is another composer whose organ music maintains a high level. His six short pieces—published by Augener in two sets of three—are simpler than most of his previous works, but not less admirable. Particularly good are No. 2 (a charming Allegretto in F), No. 4 (a prelude on 'Abridge'), and No. 6 (a brief fugue 'on an old subject'), a model in its easy fluency.

Letters to the Editor

IS MUSIC AN EXPRESSION OF ITS COMPOSER?

SIR,—Mr. Sydney Grew, in his letter in the July Musical Times, on the above-named subject, opens out a wide and interesting subject for discussion; one that is best served, it seems to me, by applying to it some of the thoughts of those poets and philosophers who have made the most important contributions to the vexed theory of aesthetics.

Benedetto Croce, in his volume entitled 'Æsthetic as Science of Expression and General Linguistic' (English translation by Douglas Ainslie), thus describes artistic production:

'The complete process of æsthetic production can be symbolised in four steps, which are: (a) impressions, (b) expression or spiritual æsthetic synthesis, (c) hedonistic accompaniment, or pleasure of the beautiful (æsthetic pleasure), (d) translation of the æsthetic fact into physical phenomena (sounds, tones, movements, combinations of tones and colours, &c.).'

In his 'Biographia Litteraria,' by some considered the greatest book of criticism in the English language, Coleridge, writing of Shakespeare's poetic power remarks:

'It has been before observed that images, however beautiful, though faithfully copied from nature, and as accurately represented in words, do not of themselves characterise the poet. They became proofs of original genius only as far as they are modified by a predominant passion; or by associated thoughts or images awakened by that passion, or when they have the effect of reducing multitude to unity, or succession to an instant; or lastly, when a human and intellectual life is transferred to them from the poet's own spirit, which shoots its being through earth, sea, and air.'

Again, speaking of Shakespeare and Milton, he says:

'While the former darts himself forth, and passes into all the forms of human character and passion, the one Proteus of the fire and the flood; the other attracts all forms and things to himself, into the unity of his own ideal. All things and modes of action shape themselves anew in the being of Milton; while Shakespeare becomes all things, yet for ever remaining himself.'

Thus in truth it was with Palestrina, Bach, Handel, and Beethoven. Their utterance was more expansive than that of Chopin, Tchaikovsky, and Schumann. These last three failed, perhaps, to comply with Coleridge's 'second promise of genius' which, he says, 'is the choice of subjects very remote from the private interests and circumstances of the writer himself.' Mr. Grew feels that their music is more immediately derived from their own personal sensations and experiences.

Nevertheless their romantic music, as well as the wider utterance of the great classicists, that of Shakespeare as well as that of any minor poet, is equally the expression of the impressions made on their several individual minds.

But can one forget Chopin's tone-poems illustrative of his beloved Poland? Le moi est haïssable, said Pascal; but Chopin dropped le moi when portraying the characteristics of his nation and gave proof of dramatic and descriptive qualities. In his Polonaises, his Mazurkas, his Etude in C minor Op. 10, the past glory, the drama, the sufferings, the heroism of the Poles and Poland predominate. To these several examples of his music I would apply Wordsworth's words on 'the Poet' in his preface to his 'Lyrical Ballads.' They apply equally to Chopin as tone-poet, for in the above-mentioned works he had 'a disposition to be affected more than other men by absent things as if they were present . . . to bring his feelings near to those of the persons whose feelings he describes, nay, for short spaces of time, perhaps, to let himself slip into an entire delusion and even confound and identify his own feelings with theirs. . .'

Mr. Grew says he cannot find Shakespeare in his plays (except of course in the way you find all humanity in them). But all humanity is in Shakespeare, therefore Shakespeare is in each and all of his characters. He is like the single note which contains all harmony being indivisible from its overtones and undertones.

There certainly are examples at hand of music that is not the expression of an individual. Rather are they expressions of the impressions of the expressions of other individuals. Their existence is usually a short one. This needs no elucidation from the writings of any Wordsworth, Coleridge, or Croce!

I will conclude with one more quotation from an article in the April Quest which made a great impression on me. Mr. Gustav Holst, writing on 'The Mystic, the Philistine, and the Artist,' describes his recent impressions of the Parthenon at Athens:

'The first sight of it [he says] was a direct and intimate realisation: it seemed to sing to me in the sunlight. That was the only way in which I was able to express its effect on myself. I certainly did not try to express the effect to anyone else until long after.'

To my mind this is surely a good exemplification of Croce's four steps in æsthetic production. Mr. Holst's impression of the Parthenon expressed itself at once lyrically. This expression evidently gave him æsthetic pleasure, for he kept the impression and the expression until 'long after' in his mind. And may we not presume that when he expressed the effect of his impression to someone else he translated the æsthetic fact into sound? And may we venture to express to Mr. Holst the hope that he will permit us all soon to share in the exquisite impression given to him by the beautiful Greek temple by hearing his expression of that impression?

If Mr. Holst does elaborate the singing or lyrical quality of the Parthenon, will Mr. Grew eliminate Mr. Holst from his work, or will he sense it as an expression of its composer?—Yours, &c.,

Kensington,

L. SHIRLEY LIEBICH.

July 4, 1920.

DR. R. R. TERRY AND THE CRYES OF LONDON

SIR,—The reply to your four points is delightfully simple: (1.) You say (a) that the omission of 'a few bars' in the Dering work was due to the indecency of the words. Well, Sir, the actual omitted words are these: 'And there your snowte,' innocuous enough in themselves surely? But their context (i.e., the previous phrase) is indecent in itself, and it thereby makes the subsequent phrase an added indecency. (b) You suggest that 'Sir Frederick would have done better to have retained the music (i.e., to the words 'and there your snowte') and modified the text. Well, Sir, that is exactly what he has done with the preceding indelicate phrase. Your readers will naturally inquire why a whole 'chunk' of the composer's music set to an innocuous phrase has been scrapped, while the really indecent part of the sentence is retained with a 'modified text'? (c) You say also that 'nothing of musical importance has been lost.' I reply that the omitted bars are the only ones in the whole composition where all the voices are singing together. I leave it to your readers whether the omission of the only chorus in the whole work is or is not a 'loss' of considerable 'musical importance.'

(2.) Your analogy in the case of Beale's 'Come, let us join the Roundelay' is hardly applicable, since Beale was a modern composer, and it is ancient music that we are discussing. Beale starts by using the modern tempo of one crotchet to the beat. In the 16th century the beat was never a crotchet. I therefore agree with you that Beale's employment of minims—when he intended them to go as fast as the previous crotchets—is a meaningless anachronism, and that crotchets would have given the requisite 'appeal to the eye' which you advocate. But the case of Dering is quite different. Here (in the triple-time movement) the editor does not wish the beat to go faster, but slower (for he marks the music 'rather slow'). Why then does he change the beat to a note which is twice as fast? Truth to tell, Sir, you destroy your own argument in the next paragraph.

(3.) You say 'Sir Frederick was guided in his choice of minims for the second movement of the Weelkes Cryes by the fact that the music appeared to call for a slower pace, and that minims conveyed this idea more readily than crotchets.' Your readers will therefore naturally ask; Why could they not have 'conveyed this idea' in the Dering movement also?

But all this argument as to editorial inconsistency is rendered futile and irrelevant by the fact that although the editor (whom you support) directs these two movements to be sung slowly, the composers whom he is editing have directed unmistakably in the MSS. that they shall be sung three times as fast. If (as you say) it is a point 'of no practical importance' that an editor should mark movements 'slow' when the composer had already marked them 'fast,' one may reasonably ask why the process should stop short at 16th century composers? Why should not any other editor be at liberty to mark the Scherzo of the 'Eroica' 'rather slow,' and be done with it? To ask the question is to answer it.

(4.) Here I must thank you for the frank way in which you now accept the evidence that a certain movement in the Novello edition is an adaptation, and is therefore not 'Weelkes's own harmony written for the viols,' as stated in the preface. This generous admission alone is sufficient to dispose of the charge of trivial and captious criticism on my part, which was, I fear, implied in your article of June.

In conclusion, I feel sure that few of your readers will agree that it is necessary to hack a composer's music about in order to make it practical for 'average choral societies, or that a performing edition should be less accurate than one prepared 'for the student or the librarian.' Most people, I think, would say that tinkering with a composer's text is not so much an exhibition of practical choir-mastership as of vandalism.—Yours, &c.,

R. R. TERRY.

[1.] The main point is that some modification of a passage which we described as 'over-frank' was necessary. Sir Frederick Bridge followed the course which seemed best to him. Dr. Terry would no doubt have adopted a different one, and probably half-a-dozen other editors would have arrived at their solutions. Dr. Terry is entitled to his opinion, so is Sir Frederick. The fact that the few omitted bars happened to be in four-part harmony does not make them important. If the worth of a passage is to be estimated by the number of voices, Tallis's forty-part Mote is of more value than the finest melody ever written. Moreover, who is Dering, that every bar of his music must be held inviolable, while the great composers, from Bach to Wagner, are freely 'cut'? We repeat that 'nothing of musical importance has been lost.'

(2.) We are aware that Beale was not an ancient composer, though we should hardly call him a modern one. We quoted his well-known work as an easily accessible example of a case sufficiently analogous to use as an illustration.

We did not say that an editor's changing the original direction 'fast' to 'slow' was a 'point of no practical importance.' We used the expression in regard to the choice of notation. The pace of the 'Eroica' Scherzo is settled by a metronome mark attributed to Beethoven himself, so no editor is likely to make any great change. But even Beethoven's indications do not bar conductors from adopting widely different tempi for the Symphonies. In old music, even such terms as 'fast' and 'slow' were a good deal less definite than they are to-day, because as a rule their 'fast' and 'slow' were respectively slower and faster than ours.

Dr. Terry finds his reply to our note in the July Musical Times 'delightfully simple.' The article in the June number is apparently a less easy matter. In it, as our readers will remember, we did more than 'imply' that Dr. Terry had indulged in captious criticism. We made a definite accusation. We stated that he had compiled a formidable list of thirty-two charges of incorrectness, and we described the bulk of these thirty-two charges as 'puerile complaints,' supporting our assertion by half-a-dozen of the most easily quotable examples. This was the point of the article, and in neither of Dr. Terry's subsequent letters has it been answered. Two opportunities should have been sufficient, so we must now close the discussion—Ed., M. T.]

'LOVE IN A VILLAGE'

SIR,—Miss Muriel Silburn's interesting article in the July issue of the Musical Times on this old English ballad-opera needs some modifications. Evidently the article is based on the ordinary sources of information, but there are a few inaccuracies that it may be well to point out. I shall take these seriatim:

(1.) Although the names of sixteen composers appear on Walshe's edition, yet in another contemporary vocal score the number is quoted as eighteen—that is, with the addition of Oswald and Larry Grogan.

(2.) The 'Frenchman, Agus, born in 1749,' had nothing to do with the tune in the ballad-opera, and of course would have been 'very young when "Love in a Village" was produced.' The composer was another individual of the same name, i.e., Joseph Agus (the Frenchman's Christian name was Henri).

(3.) Doubt is expressed as to whether the opera was printed in 1762, and the suggestion is made that Agus's song 'may have been introduced later.' The libretto and the vocal score were both issued late in December, 1762, or early in 1763; in fact, a second edition was issued in 1763.

(4.) It is scarcely accurate to say that 'of the plot nothing is known.' The text was based on 'The Village Opera' and other old plays by Wycherley and Marivaux.

(5.) Chappell's opinion is quoted to the effect that 'There was a Jolly Miller' appeared for the first time in print in this work. The fact is that this air—which is probably Irish—was printed in the 'Quaker's Opera' (1728), 'The Fashionable Lady' (1730), the 'Devil to Pay' (1731), &c.

(6.) As to the tune of 'Larry Grogan,' it was printed several times before the production of 'Love in a Village,' and the composer was a gentleman piper of Johnstown Castle, Co. Wexford, who flourished in the second quarter of the 18th century. The tune was called after the composer, and it was published in 1730.

(7.) 'When I followed a lass' is considerably older than Bickerstaffe's time: it is the Irish tune of 'Joan's placket is torn,' and was printed by Playford in 1686. Both the words and the music were lifted by the author from Colley Cibber's 'Love in a Riddle' (1729); but in 1758 it appeared as 'Jumping Joan.' Its antiquity may be gauged from the fact that it is alluded to by Pepys under date of June 22, 1667.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

Rosemount, Enniscorthy,
July 6, 1920.

GRAMOPHONE 'WHY-NOTS?'

SIR,—I have read Mr. Daubeney's article on 'Gramophone "Why-Nots?"' in the July Musical Times with great interest. My opinion of the gramophone is almost identical with his.

I am a poor bank clerk (and music-lover), buried at present in a very sleepy provincial town, and find that my gramophone supplies me with a good selection of music and unlimited encores whenever I wish to turn it on—and particularly during those all too-frequent days when Erin's 'tear' has superseded her 'smile.'

I do not, however, agree with Mr. Daubeney that vocal records compare favourably with orchestral records, or with those of instrumental solos. A bass, tenor, or even a contralto, is fairly satisfactory; but I generally find even the best soprano harsh, and frequently cracked on the higher notes.

Personally, I have strong preference for good music, and I find, as a rule, that the chum who shares rooms with me shows a liking for it which surprises him more than it does me! Still, I must confess to some 'Parsifal' excerpts which I play only when alone (or when I wish to be alone).—Yours, &c.,

M.

Queen's County, Ireland.

PACHMANN

SIR,—Your correspondent 'Pachmannite' will find a short biographical sketch of Pachmann in a book entitled 'Modern Pianists and Composers,' or words to that effect, published by Augener. This book contains also a photograph of the pianist in his younger days, without long hair and bearing a somewhat striking resemblance to George Robey.—Yours, &c.,

C. V. CASSAL.

8, Stanley Mansions, Balham, S.W. 17.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of August, 1860:

COGENHOE (Northamptonshire).—On Sunday, the 15th ult., being the annual village feast, a number of professional singers from the surrounding villages attended, and joined the Cogenhoe Choir, and in the evening met in the School-room, where several pieces of sacred music were performed. Mr. James Shermer conducted.

HOXTON HOUSE ASYLUM.—A musical entertainment was given on the 13th of July to the inmates of this asylum, by Mr. Coventry's Singing Class. Several choruses, quartetts, and solos were sung during the evening very creditably. Mr. Coventry conducted, and Miss Potter accompanied throughout the evening. The patients, who appeared to enjoy the evening very much, were subsequently regaled with refreshments.

LEEDS.—Mr. W. Spark has been elected organist for the Town Hall of this place. There were 22 candidates, and the judges upon the occasion were Mr. J. Goss, Mr. G. Cooper, and Mr. W. T. Best. Two other players, Messrs. Parratt and Taylor, were returned by the judges, from whom the election of Mr. Spark was ultimately made. The salary is £200 per annum.

WASH-LEATHERS of superior quality, for Under-clothing, Jewellery, the Pantry and Stables, at 6s., 8s., 10s., and 12s. per dozen, and upwards, can be purchased at W. A. Taylor's Leather Warehouse, 70, Dean Street, Soho, next door to Novello's Cheap Music Warehouse.

NEW BALLAD, sung by Miss Poole—"Charley, tap gently when mother's asleep." 2s.; free for stamps. Charming melody. H. Schroeder, James's Grove, Peckham.

NEW NATIONAL SONG; compass, D to F#—'Come, then, join the Soldier Band,' by the Author and Composer of 'Wellington and Victory'; sung by Mr. Weiss. Price 2s. 6d.; half-price of W. T. Belcher, Birmingham.

I GUESS YOU'LL BE THERE.—Song. Price 2s.

HOPE.—Andante for Pianoforte, by SMALLWOOD. Of moderate difficulty. Price 1s.

MOUNTAIN SPRAY, by S. GLOVER.—Mazurka brillante for the Pianoforte; being a very elegant piece, with but slight difficulty; the title splendidly illustrated in colors. The great success of 'The Echos of the Lake,' and 'The Moonlight Serenade,' Pianoforte pieces by the same Author, has induced B. Williams to publish the present piece.

TWO NEW HYMNALS*

As a rule, the compilers of a new hymn-book may confidently anticipate an abundance of criticism from two opposing camps. There are those who ask that our hymnals shall contain nothing that is unworthy, whether in the matter of words or music. They would ruthlessly exclude the weak, the sentimental, and the slipshod. All tunes should be real tunes, interesting and effective as such, and not requiring the addition of harmonies—especially luscious ones—to render them palatable.

Any attempt at reform in this direction is, however, invariably met with an outcry from those who fiercely resent any interference with long-cherished associations. The work of compilers, therefore, however lofty their aims, has to be more or less in the nature of a compromise.

In the case of the 'Public School Hymn-Book,' however, the position was somewhat different, the compilers being a representative body of schoolmasters, and the book intended primarily for use in their own schools. They were therefore able to set about their work unhampered by the vexatious restrictions which are ordinarily the lot of less fortunate compilers.

A careful examination of the book makes it clear that the committee fully realised the importance of providing young people with good, wholesome fare. There is an unfortunate idea, only too widely prevalent in our Churches, that in collections of hymns for the young, examples of the so-called 'popular' type must predominate, along with a quite unjustified feeling that really good music would not be appreciated and would be voted dull. The result is that even 'Hymns A. & M.' is considered by many to be too severe, and specially attractive fare has to be provided by means of sundry fearful and wonderful MS. tunes—usually the work of misguided amateurs.

One may safely say that if only the 'Public School Hymn-Book' were in general use amongst the boys and girls of to-day, the standard of taste in our Church congregations a few years hence would be immeasurably higher than it is at present.

The compilers have taken a strong line, and tunes of the 'part-song' type are conspicuous by their absence. As in the 'English Hymnal,' English traditional music has been freely drawn upon, and the collection includes also several of the tuneful old French Church melodies, some Welsh and Irish melodies, and examples from the Genevan and Scottish Psalters. Some admirable new tunes by living composers appear, many of these being written for unison-singing, with free accompaniment for organ. A welcome feature is the freshness of rhythm frequently to be met with. A number of tunes contain alternative settings for occasional faux-bourdon use by Ravenscroft, Dowland, and some modern composers.

Though compiled primarily for school use, we feel that this fine collection might be used with advantage by churches in conjunction with their own particular hymnal. The only drawback to its general use as a Church hymnal is its non-liturgical arrangement. Though the hymns are obviously grouped, the various seasons of the Church are not indicated.

On turning to the 'Irish Hymnal,' the spirit of compromise quickly becomes evident. This was of course to a certain extent inevitable. In the present case, also, it has to be admitted that the circumstances were somewhat exceptional. The compilers were faced with the task of revising and enlarging a book which was the only hymnal in use in the Irish Church, and one, moreover, with which the people had been long familiar. The result is that of the six hundred and forty-two hymns in the old edition, five hundred have been retained. Many will feel that the book would have been the better for a more drastic weeding-out. The committee, however, appears to have endeavoured to satisfy both the older generation and the new by retaining many tunes that are obviously weak, while at the same time admitting much new matter of a type to satisfy more critical tastes. The book is therefore of necessity rather a bulky affair, containing over seven hundred hymns.

Very few new tunes have been introduced, but many fine melodies nevertheless make their appearance for the first time in this edition. These include traditional English, Irish, and Welsh airs, a distinctive feature being a number of old Irish melodies for the most part very little known. A welcome addition, also, are numerous examples of the more severe type of tune from the old English, Scottish, and Genevan Psalters, whose intrinsic beauty does not always lie on the surface, but which only require to be well known for their solemn impressiveness to be appreciated. New also to the hymnal are several of the Church 'Songs' of Orlando Gibbons, and some German Chorales harmonized by Bach.

An interesting recommendation put forward in the book is that the congregation should sing the melody only. To enable them to do this comfortably, many of the tunes have been transposed to a lower key.

The musical editorship has been in the safe hands of the late Dr. C. J. Marchant and Dr. C. H. Kitson, two Dublin Cathedral organists—the latter now resident in London—to whom high praise is due for the measure of success they have achieved in an undoubtedly difficult task. G. G.

IRISH PRESBYTERIAN PSALMODY A HUNDRED AND FIFTY YEARS AGO

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

Although organs were rigidly excluded from the Irish Presbyterian Churches till about the year 1878, psalm singing—with occasional hymns—found an honoured place in the various 'meeting houses.' From 1645 the 'Psalms in Metre,' by William Barton, gradually became popular, and the Dublin musical editions of 1698 and 1706 developed psalmody. But it is a well-known fact that no printed books specially for Irish Presbyterian use were published prior to 1787 and 1788, when collections without music appeared for the use of the congregations in Lisburn and Londonderry. I may add that no musical edition appeared till the year 1834. However, it is equally well-known that the precentors of the several Presbyterian Conventicles in Ireland had manuscript copies of the metrical psalms which, either handed down or re-written, were based on the Scotch 'Psalms of David in Metre' (1615).

Of the manuscript tune-books of the 17th and 18th centuries not many copies have survived. These, as a rule, were small oblong books containing not more than a dozen tunes, and of course when printed books came into use the little manuscript copies tended more and more to disappear. In some cases the choir-leader or precentor made a special copy of the tune-book for a favoured lady friend, and it is doubtless owing to this custom that a few manuscript tune-books of the mid-18th century have survived the hurly-burly of a hundred and fifty years.

One of these Irish Presbyterian tune-books, written in 1774, is preserved in an Ulster family, and is well worth describing. It is a tiny book laboriously and neatly copied, the initial letters of the titles of the tunes being in exquisite penmanship with ingenious interlacements. It has been suggested that the scribe was evidently an ardent admirer of the young lady for whom the work was penned and whose name it bears. The inscription on the title-page runs as follows:

MARGARET McELHENNY

Her Musick Book

1774. Made by J^{no}. Mar.

* 'The Public School Hymn-Book' (with Tunes). Novello. 'The Irish Hymnal' (with accompanying Tunes). Dublin: The Association for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

The notation of the tunes is somewhat remarkable, but doubtless the user of the book knew the correct rendering, and merely regarded the cabalistic signs—all minims—as an aid to memory. By way of illustration I give herewith the notation of the tunes 'Savoy' and 'Martyrs':

'SAVOY': Proper to the 100th Psalm Tune.

'MARTYRS' TUNE.

But the great feature of this interesting manuscript tune-book is the Supplement, which gives secular words to be sung at rehearsal of the services, and for use at choir practices. The reason of this is that the Presbyterians would not tolerate the sacred words of the Psalms being sung otherwise than in Church or for God's worship, and hence secular—very often doggerel—verses were invented by the precentors or the leaders of psalmody for use at choir practices, until the tune was well memorised. Six specimens of these quaint verses for use at choir practices will no doubt be of interest:

Tune: 'SAVOY'

'Beneath the Alps Savoy doth stand,
And Piedmont valley doth command;
There the Waldenses felt the stroke
Of Papal power and Papal yoke.'

Tune: 'MARTYRS'

'This is the tune the Martyrs sang,
When they were going to die,
When they were to the scaffold brought
The truth to testify.'

Tune: 'YORK'

'The reason that this tune's call'd York
I never yet could know;
They might as well have called it Cork,
Carmoney or Raphoe.'

Tune: 'BRUNSWICK'

'O! Brunswick, but I love thee well,
Thy harmony is sweet,
Thou'rt set upon the treble clef
In common time complete.'

Tune: 'FRENCH'

'The first of all begins with French;
The second measure low;
The third extendeth very high;
The fourth doth downward go.'

Tune: 'LONDON'

'O! London, thou art threatened sore
By France, to pull thee down,
But Providence is thy defence,
Thou city of renown.'

VIENNA, 1920

A FEW NOTES BY A MUSICAL VISITOR

'Musical Vienna,' but what a change from pre-war days! True the Opera, the Volksoper, and the concert-halls are still open, but the change is remarkable.

No longer at the Opera do we see the long line of carriages of the great personages of Vienna, and the boxes filled row upon row with Grand Dukes. To-day in the place sit crowds upon crowds of war and after-war millionaires.

The Opera now begins at from five to six—in fact, during the winter months this hour was put forward to from three to four—and ends at nine.

These hours are necessary, as all the trams stop running between 9.30 and 10, and after that hour the only means of conveyance are taxis and horse cabs, the charges for which have been raised to such a price that no one but a war millionaire uses them save under exceptional circumstances.

Inside the Opera the change is no less marked. The gorgeous carpets on the main staircase have been removed and just the 'dust carpet' laid in their place. The Imperial State Box in the centre of the first circle is now described as the Mittelloge and sold as separate seats, the charge for which is eighty to a hundred and twenty kroner, varying according to the work that is mounted.

With regard to the productions, these have certainly not lost any of their pre-war brilliance. Of those attended by the present writer, the mounting, lighting, dressing, and performance generally have all been up to pre-war Viennese standards.

One of the most annoying things to an ardent opera-lover is the recently inaugurated scheme of 'workers' performances.' At these operas—which, by the way, are generally those that an English visitor wishes to see—the whole house is allotted to the 'workers' and ordinary visitors are unable to attend. Recently performances of 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Rozenkavalier' have been given in this way.

At the time of writing the Volksoper is holding an Italian season—sung, of course, in German—and owing to the large number of Italians now in Vienna these performances are full every evening.

The concert-halls are as full as ever, but the prices are much higher than in pre-war days. Owing, however, to the rate of exchange, these music-makings are really exceptionally cheap to visitors.

The orchestras here, after an absence of seven years, would seem to be very 'ragged.' Even the Opera orchestra was inclined to lag behind the conductor, and this in well-known works, while at symphony concerts the fault has been very marked. When commenting upon this I was informed that it is mostly due to war losses, but also in a lesser degree to the lack of enthusiasm now shown by all classes in Vienna. In fact the state of Austria can be generally summed up in the words of one of the English colony there, 'They are too exhausted to work and too exhausted to revolt.'

S. W.

KIDNAPPED CHORISTERS, OR SORROWS OF OLD-TIME CHOIR-BOYS

BY MURIEL SILBURN

Some years ago a correspondence took place in the Notts and Derbyshire Notes and Queries on the subject of Dr. John Blow. This celebrated musician had been traditionally claimed as a native of the village of North Collingham in Nottinghamshire, but a modern Dictionary of Musical Biography disputed this, asserting that John Blow was born at Westminster, where he died. Search in the registers of North and South Collingham failed to find Blow's name, but parish registers were so notoriously badly kept until modern times, that that fact alone proved nothing. It is possible that John Blow was born at North Collingham, kidnapped in his childhood, and removed thence to London. This theory is not so far-fetched as might at first appear, when one reads the rhymed autobiography of Tusser, the author of 'Five Hundred Good Points of Husbandrie.' His sad experiences are thus set forth:

'I yet but young, no speech of tong . . .
Could pity make good father take,
But out I must to song be thrust . . .
Thence for my voice, I must (no choice)
Away of force, like posting horse,
For sundry men had placards then Such child to take.'

The 'placards' referred to the writs issued for the purpose of pressing men and boys with good voices into the services of the Cathedrals or Royal choirs. This musical 'press-gang' existed in the time of Richard III., a warrant being issued by him to John Melyonek, a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, entitling him to 'take and sease for us and in our name all such singing men and children being expert in the said science of musique, as he can finde.' This system prevailed under 'Good Queen Bess,' and commands were issued by her 'to the bearer of this to take any singing men or boys from any chapel, our own Household and S. Paul's only excepted.'

In 1585 Elizabeth granted to the Master of the Children of St. Paul's a roving commission to kidnap: 'Whereas we have authorised our servante Thomas Gyles . . . to take up suche apte and meete children as are most fit to be instructed and framed in the arte and science of Musicke and singing, as may be had and founde out within any place of this our realm of England or Wales.' The duties of the choristers so pressed into service were not confined to the Church alone—they were in frequent requisition for the stage also. The advent of women on the boards belongs to post-Restoration days, as readers of Pepys' Diary will remember. In 1378 the choristers of St. Paul's presented a petition to Richard II., beseeching his Majesty to prohibit 'ignorant and inexperienced persons from acting the History of the Old Testament to the great prejudice of the Clergy . . . who had expended considerable sums for preparing a public presentation of that play at the ensuing Christmas.' In 1554 Queen Mary visited Princess Elizabeth at Hatfield House, and amongst other entertainments was a play presented by the Children of Paul's. The Children of the Chapel Royal were very famous actors, all Lilly's plays, and many of Shakespeare's and Jonson's being originally performed by these boys. Evidently the kidnapping system was prevalent also amongst the rival theatrical masters: in 1575 the Privy Council wrote to the Master of the Rolls: 'Whereas one of Sebastian's boys, being one of his principall players, is lately stolen, and conveyed from him; they be required to examine such persons as Sebastian holdeth suspected, and to proceed with such as be found faulty according to law and the order of the realm.'

Theatrical performances by the Children of Paul's were suppressed at some period prior to 1591, judging from the printer's address prefixed to Lyly's 'Endymion' in that year, which states: 'Since the plays in Paul's were dissolved, there are certain Comedies come to my hands.' This interdict was removed, at any rate temporarily, in 1600, for 'The Maid's Metamorphosis' was 'acted by the children of Powle's' at that date. But in 1626 it was evidently again deemed unsuitable for Church choristers to perform secular works, for in this year a Commission for taking up 'well-singing' boys for the Royal Chapels enjoins: 'that none of the said choristers . . . so to be taken by force of this Commission, shall be used or employed as Comedians or Stage Players . . . for that it is not fit or desent that such as should sing the praises of God Almighty should be trained or employed in such lascivious and profane exercises.' The coarseness both in plot and language of many early plays makes the objection readily comprehensible.

All this being taken into consideration, it is extremely probable that John Blow suffered from the practice of kidnapping. A local authority declares most conclusively that Blow was born at North Collingham, and we know that he was a Child of the Chapel Royal at the age of twelve, on its re-establishment in 1660. Hence we may presume that Tusser's sorrowful lot was shared by Blow:

'Thence for my voice, I must (no choice)
Away by force.'

The conviction strikes us forcibly that the possession of a 'well-singing' voice in those times must have been an extremely doubtful advantage.

A number of successful competitors of the recent Birmingham Festival took part in a concert at the Central Hall on July 1, given under the auspices of the Winwood-Russell School of Singing.

Madame Agnes Larkcom left England on July 10 for a tour of the world via California, Japan, Hong-Kong, and Australia.

The honorary degree of Master of Arts was recently conferred on Dr. Henry Coward by the University of Sheffield.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

The Birmingham City Police Band is certainly entitled to keenest encouragement from our citizens when such remarkable programmes as the following—that were heard recently at Cannon Hill Park—are brought forward. Such an attempt to present representative répertoires of Tchaikovsky and Wagner has never before been possible, but Mr. Appleby Matthews as director and conductor has shown us what can be done when zeal and ability supply the motive power. The afternoon concert was entirely devoted to Tchaikovsky, when the following excerpts were given:

1. 'March Slave.'
2. (a) 'Chanson Triste' and (b) 'Chant sans paroles.'
3. Suite, 'Casse Noisette.'
4. 'Caprice Italien.'
5. Suite, 'The Swan Lake.'
6. Excerpts from the Opera, 'Pique Dame.'
7. Overture, '1812.'

The Wagner concert in the evening comprised:

1. Overture, 'Meistersinger.'
2. Overture, 'O Star of Eve' ('Tannhäuser').
3. 'The Rheingold.'
4. Overture to 'Tannhäuser.'
5. Good Friday Music from 'Parsifal.'
6. Bridal Chorus from 'Lohengrin.'
7. Prelude and Liebestod ('Tristan').
8. Prelude, Act 3, 'Lohengrin.'
9. March, 'Tannhäuser.'

Madame Clara Winwood and Mr. George Russell—the principals of the Winwood-Russell School of Singing—held their annual students' concert at Central Hall on July 1, when an attractive programme of music was submitted to a large and appreciative audience. The scholars achieved quite an artistic success, and justly so. The principals are to be congratulated on their efficient work. The vocalists were Mesdames Ethel Heaton, Miriam James, Finch, Mills, Stella Franks, Nancie Collier, Nellie Barber, Muriel Brown, Irene Cumberland, Marjorie Brittain, J. M. Beddoes, Claire Davis, Clutterbuck, Helena Millington, and Ethel Hutchinson, Messrs. Ernest Clark, George Teece, and R. A. Pritchard. A pleasing item was the performance of movements of Grieg's Sonata in C minor, for violin and pianoforte, by Mrs. C. Zimmer and Miss Nancie Bashford.

Madame Minadiou gave two interesting and instructive lectures at the Society of Artists Exhibition Rooms on July 7 and 14 on 'Vocal Culture and Training,' with vocal interludes by Miss Dorothy Silk and others. Madame Minadiou has also made arrangements for her coming series of Matinées Musicales, and among the artists already engaged are Madame Donald, Mr. Lionel Tertis, the Philharmonic String Quartet, Miss Sybil Eaton, and Mr. Harold Samuel, who will be heard in some Sonatas for violin and pianoforte. Miss Rosemary Savage, Miss Eveline Stevenson, and Mr. Michael Mullinar will also appear. Other engagements are pending with eminent artists, and it is hoped that the coming season will be even more successful than those of previous years.

The local musical season will start in September, and promises to be the busiest on record. All our principal artists are now en vacance, but many have accepted engagements at prominent seaside resorts. The writer of this column was agreeably surprised recently at hearing so excellent an orchestra at Llandudno Pier, conducted by Mr. Walter Haigh. He is a capable chef d'orchestre, a sound musician, and a man of tact. Mr. Payne is the conductor in chief for July, August, and September, and has now for many years been associated with music at Llandudno. Mr. Darnley, principal double-bass, is an artist of great experience and a thorough master of his instrument.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

Under the leadership of Mr. Alfred Petty, the Centaur Orchestra, an organization 'manned entirely by boys,' gave an interesting concert at the Coventry Hippodrome on July 3. This Orchestra of youthful players is now an established feature in the musical life of the city, and acquitted itself well on the occasion in question. The programme included Haydn's 'The Clock' Symphony.

After two postponements, owing to inclement weather, Coventry Philharmonic Society gave an open-air fête in the grounds of the ancient Charter House, Coventry, on July 15, when Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was performed in character.

At the annual meeting of the Coventry Amateur Operatic Society it was announced that 'Merrie England' would be the next production staged. The work will be put into rehearsal in due course. Hitherto the Society has always elected to be heard in the popular Gilbert and Sullivan series.

Kenilworth Choral Society selected 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' for its summer concert in the Parish Hall, Kenilworth. Part-songs were also a feature in the programme, and Mr. Walter White (a vicar-choral of Coventry Cathedral) and Miss Vera Hathaway (violin) contributed solos.

DEVON

The most important event of the month has been the revival of Church Choral Union Festivals. North Devon led the way with a highly successful Festival at Barnstaple on June 16, when a choir of over three hundred voices represented fifteen parishes. A number of surpliced choristers walked in procession to the Church singing the processional, 'Blessed City, heavenly Salem,' to a plain-song melody. Mr. T. Roylands-Smith, diocesan choirmaster, conducted the whole of the singing, and Dr. H. J. Edwards was at the organ, his masterly playing (chiefly his improvisation before the anthem) being an outstanding feature of the occasion. The book used was the diocesan Choral Festival Book compiled but not used in 1914. The service was Rogers in D, and the anthem Elvey's 'I was glad.' Considering that no combined rehearsal had been held the singing was remarkably good and at some points deeply impressive.

The Festival of Exeter Diocesan Choral Union took place in the Cathedral on July 6, when the parishes in the Arch-deaconry of Exeter participated. Mr. T. Roylands-Smith conducted. This was the first such Festival in which Dr. Ernest Bullock, organist of the Cathedral, had assisted since his appointment, and few will ever forget the beauty of his accompaniments and the artistry of his improvisations. The book was that compiled in 1914, and used at the North Devon Festival already referred to. The procession numbered five hundred surpliced choristers and clergy, and, with the unsurpliced singers, represented the Cathedral choir and those of about twenty parish churches.

In spite of the seven years' interval since the last Festival the singing on this occasion touched a high-water mark in the history of the Union. The choristers, well-controlled by the conductor-in-chief, sang with understanding and very good observance of light and shade.

The music study circle formed at Honiton by Mr. Lancelot Holden now numbers twenty-five members. He has inaugurated a series of lectures on great composers, an address on 'Music before the time of Palestrina' being announced for June 28. Mr. Holden will shortly vacate the organistship of the Mint Church, Exeter, to take up a similar post at St. Andrew's, Exmouth.

As part of a war memorial the organ in Ebenezer Wesleyan Church, Plymouth (organist and choirmaster, Mr. David Parkes) has been reconstructed and enlarged.

DUBLIN

On June 17 an interesting presentation was made to Mr. W. E. Hopkins, sub-organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral, by the vicars-choral, in recognition of his valuable services during two years owing to the prolonged illness of the late Dr. Charles Marchant.

The famous Handel organ, one of two which the composer brought over to Dublin in 1741, was sold at the auction of Lieut.-Col. Johnston of Kilmore House, Richill, Co. Armagh, on June 18, for the sum of two hundred and thirty guineas. This organ, made by Snetzler, was offered for sale by Handel before he left Dublin, in August, 1742, and was purchased for the first Earl of Ely, whose son acquired Rathfarnham Castle in 1767. There it remained till 1811, when it came into the possession of Francis Johnston, and it was subsequently removed to Kilmore House. On this instrument Handel had performed many of his Concertos at Dublin, including some choice selections at the first performance of his immortal 'Messiah,' on April 13, 1742. Considering its age it is in wonderful preservation, and bears ample testimony to the workmanship of Snetzler, who is described by Burney as 'that truly eminent builder.' The business that he founded is carried on to-day by Messrs. W. Hill & Son.

Notwithstanding the exceptionally fine weather during the second half of June and the first week of July, the O'Mara Opera Company had a most successful after-season at the Gaiety Theatre. Four weeks' performances were given to packed houses, the audiences fully enjoying the old 'Rose of Castile' and 'Figaro,' as well as 'Lohengrin' and 'Tannhäuser,' and 'Madama Butterfly.' There was also a revival of Balfe's 'The Puritan's Daughter.'

Dr. J. E. Larchet, music-director at St. Francis Xavier's, has been appointed senior professor of harmony at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in succession to Dr. C. H. Kitson, resigned.

At a recent meeting of the Feis Ceoil Association, the prize for the best composition for voice and pianoforte was awarded to 'Nemo.' Mr. Hamilton Harty was the adjudicator. The piece was entitled 'An Irish Elegy,' and the composer turned out to be the Rev. W. H. C. Walford Turl, of Kilglass, Co. Sligo.

The forty-second East Meath Choral Festival took place at Trim on June 29, when a good display of choral training was evidenced. Dr. Gater, of Dublin, was the organist. On the same day the Ferns Diocesan Choral Festival, which had been suspended during the war, was held at Enniscorthy, the united choirs being under the capable direction of Mr. P. Aloys Kimber.

At the conferring of degrees in Dublin University on June 30, that of Mus. Bac., nondum graduatus in artibus, was bestowed upon Mr. John Thomas Horne.

Mr. Henry Harden, principal alto of Christ Church Cathedral, and who came here from Durham Cathedral seven years ago, has been appointed alto lay-clerk of Westminster Abbey. Mr. Harden is an accomplished musician as well as an alto of singular sweetness, and will be missed in Dublin social circles.

As hinted in last month's notes, the formal sale of the stock of Messrs. Cramer & Co., Westmoreland Street, to Messrs. Pigott & Co., has taken place. The house was founded by William Power in 1803, and is inseparably associated with the original publication of Moore's 'Irish Melodies,' 1808-30. In 1833 it was acquired by Marcus Moses, who was succeeded by Michael Gunn, after whom came Cramer, Beale & Co., and finally the late Mr. J. Clementi Collard (1883-1920).

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT

Unless many acute observers are entirely at fault in their judgment as to the effects of economic pressure in the coming winter there cannot be much doubt that the next eight or ten months will furnish a searching test of the measure of loyal support upon which our established musical associations can depend. There is in the North no longer the absurdly free expenditure which prevailed at this time last year; and undoubtedly some shrinkage has overtaken many incomes which this winter will have to meet still higher costs in vital necessities. The transport charges that are announced will make extended orchestral tours almost prohibitive in cost, coming as they do on the top of increased remuneration recently granted to players. Much as we would like to see the return to numerically larger orchestras, the practical financial obstacles would seem to be all against such a consummation; similarly it would be imagined that the outlook for the tall-priced international 'celebrity stars' would not be too rosy, because Societies engaging artists will be compelled to pursue a policy of 'better safe than sorry.' Their oratorio performances must be orchestrally accompanied, and the alternatives presented will be either restriction in size or an amateur admixture of varying proportions. Altogether the problems confronting our provincial Societies are little if any less perplexing than those of the early war years. Small wonder, then, if men's minds are revolving around the possibilities of municipalization of music in such centres as Manchester. The well-known critic of the Manchester Guardian, Mr. Samuel Langford, wrote recently: 'Music at Manchester has arrived at a difficult pass when some really pivotal action by the municipality seems demanded.'

If through some unhappy mischance our Free Trade Hall, now understood to be on offer, should fail to pass into the hands of the City Council, then matters would indeed look black. But leaving this aside, can it be contended that the Hallé Orchestra, with all its fine traditions, is really fulfilling its destiny, is really answering the call of to-day's imperious demands, when it is playing here only once or even twice a week during the winter? Why, after Easter, should it be dispersed to seaside and spa? Our Parks sub-committee of the City Council includes musically enlightened persons. Wherein, then, lie the obstacles to the erection in our parks of platforms of the alcove variety (no other form is any good in our climate) which would accommodate the Hallé band? There are natural amphitheatres that seem providentially made for such purposes. Unless I am greatly mistaken current conditions are, in various ways, all leading in one direction, and before long there will have to be an all-the-year-round orchestra employed by the municipality, playing at larger or lesser strength in the suburbs no less than the centre, according to the needs—indoors during autumn, winter, and spring, and out-of-doors at midsummer. One is convinced that the truest economic solution will be found along these lines, but the rub will come when artistic control has to meet the demands for what may be called 'popularization.'

The Parks committee has got to work on the suitability of our open spaces as venues for the instruction of children in dancing. A teacher of dancing is to attend one night a week at each of the ten parks, and it is interesting to note that a trial is to be made of the gramophone to supply the necessary music. In the May number of the Musical Times I suggested that a gramophone with high magnification would furnish a wider selection of appropriate dance tunes than the street piano-organ. The experiment should yield some informing results.

Recent noon-tide concerts have brought into prominence a new Manchester Ladies' Trio—Misses Jo Lamb (violin), Kathleen Moorhouse (violinocello), and Dorothy Crewe (pianoforte), all young players. They have invariably given the impression of a natural sense of balance and animation, conspicuously present in Brahms's C minor (Op. 101).

The Manchester Diocesan Church Music Society held its first post-war Festival on July 3, when Manchester, Blackburn, and Oldham choirs were heard in music drawn from the 1914 Festival Book.

From time to time comments in this column have indicated that in the writer's view the most considerable contribution of the Royal Manchester College of Music to the musical life of S.E. Lancashire has lain in the exceptional number of really competent chamber musicians who have emerged. The three ladies mentioned above are all past-students, and Mr. Arthur Catterall's recent offer from the Boston Symphony Orchestra is one more addition to the many world-wide tributes to Dr. Brodsky's violin teaching. The summer College examinations (July 7-9) again emphasised the strength of the instrumental side. One has often wondered whether competence of a decently high level is sooner attained by instrumental students than a similarly high degree by vocal students, and if there is any well-founded reason for such—always excluding from both classes the pure prodigy.

The death of Edmondstone Duncan at the end of June removed Manchester's chief creative musician, whose recent issue of songs deserves the widest recognition by those who would get away from the commonplaces of lyric art. I shall not soon forget the sheer joy of finding President Wilson's war-speech (Congress, April, 1917)—the 'God helping her she can do no other'—handled with such convincing freedom and dignity as in Mr. Duncan's setting. How comes it that such stuff is apparently so little esteemed by our men-singers. Aird & Coghill publish them in five books—this is No. 10 in vol. 1.

PORTSMOUTH

The suggested municipal concerts for Portsmouth seem now to promise a definite scheme, the Town Hall committee, after taking counsel with local musicians, having at length published a report recommending a season of twenty-four Saturday evening concerts for the coming winter, with Mr. Hugh A. Burry as musical director.

In outlining the character of the concerts the committee has had in mind the necessity for both orchestral and choral programmes, and puts forth the suggestion that extracts from oratorios and cantatas should be given from time to time, with, at Christmastide, selections from 'Messiah,' along with carols. A first-rate London singer is to be engaged at each concert, and the orchestra will be partly professional and partly amateur.

It has been realised that these concerts might come to be regarded as being of educational value if 'short talks' descriptive of the music to be performed were made an attractive item in the programmes, and if 'community singing' were encouraged. With this idea in view, the committee's report suggests that a feature might be made of teaching the audience to join in the singing of unison songs of a good and robust character, such as folk-songs and sea chanties, and further advocates that many orchestral pieces could be preceded by a brief survey of the composer and the character of the piece to be performed. When possible, a singer would be asked to proffer brief elucidatory remarks upon the songs to be sung.

The financial side of the undertaking has also been satisfactorily investigated, there being good ground for believing that it will pay its way. The largest possible deficit on the season is worked out at £250, but under the new Corporation Bill power is taken to levy a halfpenny rate for the purposes of a municipal orchestra and concerts, which is estimated to produce £2,350.

The committee's report will have come up for discussion by the Town Council at the moment the Musical Times is proceeding to press, but although there may be criticism of details and probably a surfeit of new suggestions, there is every possibility that the recommendations will be confirmed.

Last season the Portsmouth and Southsea Amateur Operatic and Dramatic Society produced 'Rip Van Winkle' at the Theatre Royal, and the accounts just issued show that the Society's share of the receipts amounted to £308, and that its balance in hand has increased from £24 to £50.

SOUTH WALES

The visit of their Majesties to Swansea, July 17-19, to lay the foundation-stone of the new Swansea University College at Singleton, afforded an opportunity for discoursing Welsh music. Saturday evening's programme on board the Royal yacht, consisting mainly of Welsh airs, was undertaken by the Swansea and District Male-Voice Choir, under the leadership of Mr. L. R. Bowen, and the Swansea Cymric Operatic Society, with Mr. Ivor Bowen as conductor. On Sunday evening Welsh hymn-tunes were sung by the Swansea United Choir of mixed voices under the conductorship of Mr. T. D. Jones. On Monday, at the Singleton ceremony, a massed choir of six hundred voices (conductor, Mr. Harry Williams) were heard in a programme comprising the National Anthem, the Welsh National Anthem, 'God bless the Prince of Wales,' various hymn-tunes, and the 'Hallelujah Chorus.'

At the annual break-up of the Summerfield High Schools for Girls, Maescywmmer, near Newport, Mr. E. Howard-Jones gave a pianoforte recital. The programme consisted of the 'Appassionata' Sonata, Chopin's Polonaise in a flat, and various works of Bach, Handel, Mozart, and Brahms. He also gave the students some valuable and inspiring advice on the prosecution of their musical studies.

On July 1, Harlech Musical Festival was revived after suspension during the war, the proceedings being held in a tent in the courtyard of the Castle. The amenities of the occasion were greatly marred by the inclemency of the weather, the programme having in consequence to be curtailed. Nevertheless, the Festival is stated to have been a financial success.

One of the most stirring scenes in the music life of Wales was enacted at Aberdare, when, on July 10, before a large and distinguished assembly, Lord Aberdare unveiled the statue erected by public subscription (at a cost of £1,600) to the memory of Griffith R. Jones. Better known as 'Caradog,' he was the most celebrated choir conductor Wales has produced, and Welshmen from all parts of the world, even from far-off China, were there to do honour to his memory. The statue, in bronze, on a Derbyshire granite pedestal, is the work of the eminent Welsh sculptor, Mr. Goscombe John, and is a life-like representation of the great leader in his prime.

Caradog was elected conductor of the South Wales Choral Union (Y Cor Mawr) of five hundred voices specially selected from South Wales, which succeeded in winning the chief prize in each of two successive years (1872-73) for choral singing at the Crystal Palace and thereby annexing outright the thousand guinea challenge cup open to the world. No less than £3,000 was raised by public subscription to defray the expenses of the choir. Caradog flourished in the classic period (1860-73) of choral singing in the Principality, and his statue should be an inspiration to the rising generation, which is served with educational facilities that surely were beyond the ken of the blacksmith and his working-men choir of half-a-century ago. Vivat Memoria!

At Newport (Mon.) the borough organist, Mr. J. A. Gaccon, is to give organ recitals and lectures at the Town Hall to classes from the elementary and secondary schools of the town. This is decidedly progressive.

At the neighbouring village of Rhiwderin it has also been decided to erect an organ at the Tabernacle Church as a memorial to the local men who served with the forces in the war.

On June 20, at the Grand Theatre, Swansea, an orchestral concert was held for the benefit of the family of the deceased cornetist, Charles Hughes, by which £90 was secured for the purpose in view. The performers were local musicians, under the direction of Dr. Vaughan Thomas, and it is suggested that the orchestra should become a permanent establishment.

On the same date, but further west, at Gorseinon, an evening concert was held at Brighton Hall in aid of Swansea General Hospital. The programme was furnished by the Gorseinon and District Choral Society (conductor, Mr. E. Maddock), assisted by the Gorseinon Orchestra with Mr. Oliver Watkins as leader.

On July 7 a representative meeting of musicians at Morriston (Swansea), with the view of fostering music in that town decided to form an Operatic Society. Mr. D. J. Rees was appointed conductor.

Musical Notes from Abroad

ROME

The regular season of concerts at the Augusteo closed with two programmes directed by Toscanini, in which were played the Symphony from Rossini's 'Cenerentola,' Beethoven's No. 1, two selections from the 'Valkyrie,' D'Indy's 'Istar,' and two extracts from Franck's 'Psyche.'

These concerts were immediately followed by the visit of the New York Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Walter Damrosch, and the Roman public was invited to give its judgment on the ensemble of this famous band, which was heard in two performances. Mr. Damrosch gained a fair success, but it cannot be said that the public was impressed either by the animation or by the expression produced by the visitors. The second concert, in which Mr. Albert Spalding was the solo violinist, was the more successful of the two. Doubtless the extreme heat at Rome at this period helped to explain the impression of listlessness made by the players—who probably also reacted to the strenuous itinerary to which they had subjected themselves.

MASCAGNI'S NEW OPERA

'Piccolo Marat' ('The Little Marat') should have been presented at the Costanzi last winter. Instead, it is still undecided where the first presentation will take place, and Mascagni, in an interesting interview with Signor Belli, the critic of the Corriere d'Italia, gives some curious sidelights on the ways of managers in Italy. 'Piccolo Marat' was announced on the Costanzi playbill in November last as one of seven new pieces to be presented in that theatre during the season 1919-20. In fact, on November 20 the head of the publishing house of Sonzogno signed the contract with the Costanzi, in which was included 'Marat,' when the firm's own contract with Mascagni had yet to be drafted. As the contract between Sonzogno and Mascagni has never been made, the management of the Costanzi has been 'let down.' It is probable that the opera will be presented at the San Marco Theatre at Leghorn, but this is still uncertain.

One of the interesting features of the score is that it demands a new instrument in the orchestra, i.e., the 'Mustel,' which Mascagni thus describes:

—'It is an instrument between pianoforte and harmonium, with three keyboards, eleven "giuochi," five hundred and eighty-six "voices," and twenty-five stops. The principal inventions, besides the Double espressione and the Forte-espressivo, are the Prolungazione and the Percussione. With the Prolungazione one or more notes can be sustained at pleasure, and with the Percussione splendid effects are obtainable.'

Asked as to the utility of the new instrument, the Maestro replied:

'The orchestra to-day has grave defects of equilibrium, and there are enormous differences between the timbres of different families of instruments. Another defect is the absence of instruments a percussione, and we have to rely on the pizzicato of the strings and of the harp, with doubtful results. The "Mustel" supplies these deficiencies in a wonderful way. Reproducing exactly the sounds of the orchestra, it entirely eliminates the differences of timbre, and with the percussion arrangement one can obtain at will all the effects of oboe, clarinet, &c.'

In reply to a demand as to who would play the instrument, Mascagni replied, 'The only person in Italy capable of playing it with authoritative art is Maestro Ghedini, of Turin.'

LEONARD PEYTON.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES'

SIR,—May I say Mr. E. Evans's articles on our young composers have been most interesting to your readers. There is, however, one statement he makes which is difficult to digest. In explaining his omission of the works of Josef Holbrooke and Cyril Scott, he says of the former that 'he does not fill the position in the musical world to-day that was promised him when he first enlivened the Promenade concerts with "Three Blind Mice"'; and that 'he is not at present of those who take a significant part in forming the repertoire of this generation,' &c. May I ask Mr. Evans what he knows of the later works by Mr. Holbrooke? So far as I can ascertain, no new works by this composer have been performed for many years. If a composer keeps his works, and they are not performed, should a critic make such statements? Neither can I understand the statements made on Mr. Scott's work. As I am sure Mr. Evans does not wish to be unfair, he ought to give us more solid reasons for his obvious preference for the ultra-modern output. Some of us decidedly obtain more nutriment from the splendid melody found in works like 'Ulalume' or the 'Raven,' or Scott's 'Aubade,' but if Mr. Evans really prefers the Stravinsky 'copy' found in the effusions of Lord Berners and Mr. Goossens, I have nothing more to say.—Yours, &c.,

G. H. SAUNDERS.

23, Oakley Crescent, S.W.3.

[The above letter was received too late for insertion in our correspondence columns.—ED., M.T.]

Miscellaneous

The report of the first season of the Manchester and Salford branch of the National Sunday League proved to be a successful one from a financial point of view, the forty Sunday evening concerts organized by the League having been attended by upwards of 61,000 persons, and there was a surplus of nearly £200 to be handed to the local Hospital Sunday fund. The band concerts however were the only functions that paid, there being a deficit on the ballad and orchestral nights—facts which prove how difficult it is to maintain concerts at a high standard and yet make them pay. The secretary stated at the meeting that they had been accused of pandering to the public taste—that was true, but it had to be true. His committee would not have been willing to bear the cost of educating the public of Manchester, with which it had to deal, until the public was instructed up to, say, the standard of music at the Hallé Concerts. The first object had been for entertainment instead of ennui. Little by little more classical performances might be introduced, and so gradually the very best might be achieved.

CONTENTS

	Page
Musical Notation. By Edward Elgar	513
The Organ Works of Bach.—II. The Weimar Period (continued). By Harvey Grace	516
The Artistic Values of Opera. By Arthur L. Salmon	519
Interludes. By 'Feste'	520
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XI.—John Browne. By W. H. Grattan Flood	522
The Ideas of M. Vincent D'Indy (concluded). By C. Saint-Saëns	523
Robert Fayrfax. By S. Royle Shore	526
Purcell in Hyde Park	529
Cant in Music. By Claude Trevor	530
Occasional Notes	532
The Music and Musicians of Dickens.—I. By C. Edgar Thomas	532
The Handel Festival	535
Grétry. By Denis Turner	536
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	545
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	547
Choral Notes and News. By W. McNaught... ..	548
Choral Orchestration	549
Chamber Music for Amateurs	550
Church and Organ Music	551
The Preces, Responses, and Litany of the English Church: A By-way of Liturgical History. By J. M. Duncan... ..	551
The Rhythm of the Chant. By Sydney Grew	553
Electric Organ at the Lettish Church, Libau, Russia	554
New Music. By William Child	550
Letters to the Editor	557
Sixty Years Ago	559
Two New Hymnals	560
Irish Presbyterian Psalmody a Hundred and Fifty Years Ago. By W. H. Grattan Flood	560
Vienna, 1920: A few Notes by a Musical Visitor	561
Kidnapped Choristers, or Sorrows of Old-time Choir-boys. By Muriel Silburn	561
Music in the Provinces	562
Musical Notes from Abroad	565
Miscellaneous	566

MUSIC:

- "Our Master hath a garden." Hymn-Anthem for General use. By Herbert E. Crimp 537

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. "O pray for the peace of Jerusalem." Anthem. By Reginald Hunt.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BURNHAM, R.—"Music when soft voices die." Song. English and French words. 2s.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"Bread of the world in mercy broken." Anthem. (No. 1082, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S.—Suite, "Néro." Wind Parts, &c. 24s. 6d.

CRIMP, H. E.—"Our Master hath a garden." Anthem. (No. 930, The Musical Times.) 1½d.

FARRAR, ERNEST.—Celtic Suite for Violin and Pianoforte (Op. 11). 3s.

HUNT, R.—"O pray for the peace of Jerusalem." Anthem. (No. 1081, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.

MACLEAN, MALCOLM.—"From the lone Shieling." (Canadian Boat Song.) Four-part Song. (No. 1377, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

ST. AUDRIES' CHANT BOOK.—Paper, 2s. 6d. net.; Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 338) contains the following music in both notations:—"I attempt from love's sickness to fly." Unison Song. PURCELL. 1½d.

SWEETING, E. T.—"Tewkesbury Road." Four-part Song. (No. 1378, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

TOOTELL, G.—"The Evening Star." Four-part Song. (No. 1376, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

VAN DYCK, C., JUNR.—"All hail the power of Jesus' Name." Tune, "Ebenezer." 1d.

— The Church Service (Part I.). Six Chants. 2d.

— "When our heads are bowed with woe." Tune, "Etsiapa." 1d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, I. F. H.—"God that madest earth and heaven." Sacred Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

ERSKINE, J.—"Weep ye no more." Part-song for T.T.B.B. 10 cents (4d.).

SAAR, L. V.—Morning and Evening Service, together with the Office for the Holy Communion, in A. $1 (4s.).

SOWERBY, L.—Madrigal. For Organ. 50 cents (2s.).

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

THE THREE T's Technique—Touch—Tone in Modern Piano Playing

TO TEACHERS OF MUSIC

- ¶ During the holiday season you will have an opportunity to improve your playing and your methods of teaching.
- ¶ The Advanced Course of the Gillett School is just what you need to invigorate your playing after the strain of months of teaching.
- ¶ It will bring your methods up to date. It will help you to overcome your individual difficulties.
- ¶ One student writes: "I have found a vast improvement in tone and ease," while another says: "I can now play octaves for an hour on end without my arms aching."
- ¶ You cannot afford to let this opportunity of improvement go. A postcard will bring you booklets and full particulars of Mr. Gillett's tuition.

CHARLES A. GILLETT,

School of Piano Playing,

(Room 108) 11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,
NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THREE CHORALE PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN.

1. ST. PETER.
2. DARWELL'S 148TH.
3. THEME BY TALLIS.

COMPOSED BY

HAROLD E. DARKE

(Op. 20).

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE (AUSTRALIA.)
CONSERVATORIUM OF MUSIC.

WANTED, a male TEACHER OF SINGING. Must be a good Concert performer, and also qualified to act as examiner.

For remuneration and conditions of appointment apply to the Agent-General for Victoria, Victoria House, Melbourne Place, Strand, London, W.C. 2.

Applications, including medical certificate and copies of testimonials, should be made to Mr. J. P. Bainbridge, Registrar, University of Melbourne, Victoria, Australia.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

*To ensure insertion in their proper positions,
Advertisements for the next issue should reach
the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1,
not later than*

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19 (FIRST POST).

JUST PUBLISHED.

CYRIL SCOTT. YOUNG HEARTS

(PIECES FOR CHILDREN).

Series I., 2s. 6d. net.

1. SEE-SAW.
2. LAMENT FOR A BROKEN DOLL.
3. MUSICAL BOX.
4. EVENING PRAYER.
5. QUICK MARCH.

Series II., 2s. 6d. net.

1. MARCH OF A TIN SOLDIER.
2. SUNDAY MORN.
3. CONCERTINA.
4. LONELINESS.
5. THE BOY WITH THE PIPES.

These pieces are quite short and quite easy—easier even than the same composer's well-known "SUMMERLAND" Suite. Their aim is to familiarize young players with the modern idiom, so that they will be able to pass on to more complex works in due course.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

By the author of "Orchestration," "A History of Music"

(with Charles Villiers Stanford), &c.

Choral Orchestration

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

WITH MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth, Price, 7s. 6d. net.

A practical text-book on the grounding in scoring compositions, especially anthems; a complete composition analysed bar by bar; musical difficulties considered; orchestral possibilities of each passage balanced against the other; orchestral execution explained.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

New York: THE H. W. GRAY COMPANY.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.; Words only, 10s. per 100; String Parts, price 9s.; Wind Parts, 14s. 6d.

A GOLDEN HARVEST FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

HENRY KNIGHT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling; Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.
Words only, 5s. per 100. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

GEORGE GARRETT.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS.

THE WORDS BY

EDWARD OXENFORD

THE MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Two Shillings; Paper Boards, Three Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Choruses only, 1s. Book of Words, 5s. per 100.
Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 5s. per 100.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings.
Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. M. VON WEBER.

Price One Shilling.
Full Score, 21s.; String Parts, 8s.; Wind Parts, 7s.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST SONG FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 5s. per 100.
String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS, Etc.

TWELVE HYMNS FOR HARVEST

Selected from THE HYMNARY.

Price One Penny.

LET ALL OUR BRETHREN JOIN IN ONE

HARVEST HYMN BY J. BARNEY.

Price One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

SOWING AND REAPING

HARVEST CAROL BY J. MAUDE CRAMENT.

Price Three-Halfpence. Words only, 1s. per 100.

THE JOY OF HARVEST

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE

By J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE SOWER WENT FORTH SOWING

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. BARNEY.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

MAKE MELODY WITHIN YOUR HEARTS

HARVEST CAROL BY F. A. J. HERVEY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

O LORD OF HEAVEN, AND EARTH AND SEA

By J. BARNEY.

On Card, Price One Penny.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

By WALTER B. GILBERT AND J. BARNEY.

Price One Penny each.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

By A. M. GOODHART.

Price Threepence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

By HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

FEAR NOT, O LAND

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LORD OF THE HARVEST

COMPOSED BY
R. REDHEAD,
EDITED BY ALFRED REDHEAD.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

COMPOSED BY
H. A. CHAMBERS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

COMPOSED BY
GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

COMPOSED BY
E. W. NAYLOR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

AND GOD SAID

COMPOSED BY
CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

COMPOSED BY THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Threepence.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY

COMPOSED BY OLIVER KING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

COMPOSED BY
E. C. BAIRSTOW.

Price Threepence.

THE ETERNAL GOD IS THY REFUGE

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

(From the 100th Psalm.)

COMPOSED BY
EBENEZER PROUT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

COMPOSED BY
CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THOU, O GOD, ART PRAISED IN SION

COMPOSED BY
CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
HUGH BLAIR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

By ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

COMPOSED BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

COMPOSED BY
W. G. ALCOCK.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE VINEYARD OF THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN GOD

(FROM "SEEDTIME AND HARVEST")

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

COMPOSED BY BRUCE STEANE.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

COMPOSED BY
MYLES B. FOSTER.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
W. WOLSTENHOLME.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE JOY OF THE LORD IS YOUR STRENGTH

COMPOSED BY
HUGH BLAIR.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

COMPOSED BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

COMPOSED BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O HOW GREAT IS THY GOODNESS
(FROM "THE RAINBOW OF PEACE")

COMPOSED BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."
 —Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.		Staff	Tonic
		Notation.	Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	...	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	...	3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	...	3d.	2d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	...	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	...	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	...	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	...	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	...	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	...	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	...	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	...	3d.	2d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	...	1s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	...	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	...	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	...	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	...	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	...	3d.	1 3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	...	3d.	2d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	...	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	...	1/6	1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR HARVEST

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

ANTHEMS.
BLESSED BE THOU—(HARVEST)	...	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA	...	2d.
THINE, O LORD—(SHORT ANTHEM)	...	2d.
O CLAP YOUR HANDS " " " " TONIC SOL-FA	...	4d.
I WAS GLAD—(FESTIVAL)	...	2d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA	...	4d.
HARVEST OR FESTIVAL HYMN: "SING TO THE LORD"—With Words }	...	1d.
SERVICES.
TE DEUM IN E—FOUR VOICES	...	4d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, IN E	...	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, IN E	...	4d.
CANTATA AND DEUS, IN E	...	4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE VOICE.

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

BY GEORGE HENSCHEL.
IN TWO PARTS

		s.	d.
PART 1. High Voice	...	2	6
" Medium Voice	...	2	6
" Low Voice	...	2	6
PART 2. High Voice	...	2	6
" Medium Voice	...	2	6
" Low Voice	...	2	6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLAND

AN ODE

BY ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

SET TO MUSIC FOR
SOPRANO AND BARITONE SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY
ERNEST CAMPBELL MACMILLAN.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO PASTORALS

COME YOU, MARY.
WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES FORSAKE?

THE WORDS BY NORMAN GALE.

THE MUSIC BY
ERNEST BRISTOW FARRAR
(Op. 21, Nos. 2 and 3)
TWO KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S

ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

- No. 1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY
The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the student becomes more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 6d.
- No. 2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand Part I. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 6d.
- No. 3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 6d.
- No. 4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 6d.
- No. 5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS by C. EGERTON LOWE Price 1s.
- No. 8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys), by E. D. RENDALL. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 2s. (The Appendix, published separately: Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 2d.; Sol-fa, 2d.)
- No. 10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES by ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL. by MARGARET A. HUGHES. Price 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CATHEDRAL STRINGS

... SUMMIT STRINGS ...

THE NEW VIOLIN "G."

Every Violinist should try our new "Cathedral" and "Summit" Violin "G" Strings, covered by a new process on the finest, selected English gut. The wire is spun evenly and true, and the rare craftsmanship displayed is far ahead of the best Continental makes. We test every "Cathedral" and "Summit" String before it leaves the Factory. There are thirteen different kinds of "Cathedral" and "Summit" Violin "G" Strings, selling at 6d. upwards for "Summit," and 9d. upwards for "Cathedral." Any Music Dealer can get them for you. Don't be put off with substitutes. There are no other "G" Strings of the same high quality as "Cathedral" and "Summit." We also manufacture Steel and covered Strings for every description of Musical Instrument. Here are two unsolicited testimonials from experienced, accomplished Violinists :

14, Archer Street, Shaftesbury Avenue, W. 1.,
21st November, 1919: "Gentlemen,—The sample 'G' String you forwarded me a few weeks ago has been subjected to a considerable amount of hard wear and is as good as ever. It is a very fine string, beautifully made, and the quality of the tone is excellent, and I shall most certainly use them for the future."—(Signed) OSCAR DUDLEY.

79, Scott Street, Garnethill, Glasgow, 30th May, 1920 :
"Dear Sirs,—Received sample all right yesterday, for which I thank you. I am very pleased with it, and think it one of the finest 'G' Strings I have used for sweetness of tone. I will certainly get more from your Agent in Douglas Street, and recommend them to all I know in the profession."—(Signed) JOHN MCGREGOR.

Of all Music Dealers.

Send for a Sample String.

This offer of a Sample String applies to Violin, Mandoline, and Banjo. State exact String required.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS:

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD.,
MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

Telegrams: "CELLO, FINSPARK, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2594.

FOUR ENGLISH DANCES

SET I.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

	s.	d.
Full Score	10	6
String Parts	6	0
Wind Parts	12	0
Ditto (small orchestra)	9	0
Military Band	15	0
Pianoforte Solo	2	6
Violin and Pianoforte	3	0
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings)	2	6

Extra Strings, 6d. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees, and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured base for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

No.		s.	d.
1.	SONATA in G major JAMES LATES	2	0
2.	SONATA in D minor HENRY ECCLES	2	0
3.	SONATA in B flat major WILLIAM BABELL	2	0
4.	SONATA in G minor JOHN STANLEY	2	0
5.	SONATA in A major JOHN COLLETT	2	0
6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	3	0
7.	SONATA in D major RICHARD JONES	2	0
8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
9.	THREE PIECES WILLIAM BOYCE	2	0
10.	SONATA in E major CHARLES MACKLEAN	2	0
11.	SONATA in G minor WILLIAM CROFT	2	0
12.	SONATA in D minor JOSEPH GIBBS	2	0
13.	SONATA in D minor JOHN HUMPHRIES	2	0
14.	SONATA in A minor THOMAS VINCENT	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EDITED BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

THE CRYES OF LONDON

HUMOROUS FANCY

THREE SETTINGS FOR S.A.T.B. BY

(1) RICHARD DEERING, (2) ORLANDO GIBBONS,

AND

(3) THOMAS WHEELKES.

NOS. 1 AND 2, PRICE 6d. EACH; NO. 3, PRICE 4d.

String Parts may be had on hire.

The Daily Telegraph says:

" . . . What Sir Frederick Bridge doesn't know about the great madrigal period in English music is surely not worth knowing. . . . Once more he puts us all in his debt by the publication of 'The Cryes of London.' . . . Perhaps the most attractive of the three is Richard Deering's: 'Have ye any wood to cleave?' Sung by a bass voice to a beautiful tune, it is one of the many delightful details that make up this patch-work composition. The variety of songs and cryes is bewildering."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Frederick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO
FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REFLECTIONS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD GERMAN.

Full Score, 2Is.; String Parts, 9s.; Wind Parts, 23s.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo ... 3s. 6d.
,, ,, Pianoforte Duet ... 5s. 0d.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Diversions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Diversion, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Diversion is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed. The Fifth Diversion is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Dispatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE'S WORKS.

JUST ISSUED.

VOCAL.

NOVELLO & CO.

Price net
£ s. d.

THREE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 69), for Tenor Voice and Piano, with String Quartet Accompaniment ...	...	0	5	0
TALIESSIN'S SONG, Two Keys ...	...	0	2	6
"DYLAN" (Drama)—Vocal Score ...	...	1	1	0
" " Full Score ...	...	5	5	0
"DON" (Drama)—Vocal Score ...	...	1	1	0
" " Full Score ...	...	5	5	0
"PIERROT" (Operetta) ...	...	0	8	0
FIVE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 59) ...	each, net	0	2	6
Part-Songs, &c., see List.

INSTRUMENTAL.

"DYLAN." Brass Band Selection (Arr. by J. Weston Nicholl) ...	1	1	0
Each part separately, 1s. 6d. Conductor's part, 4s. 6d. (Test-piece at the B. B. Tournament, Newcastle, in June.)
REELS AND STRATHSPEYS, for Strings and Wind ...	0	1	0
(Played before The King and Queen at Buckingham Palace, 1919.) (British Symphony Orchestra.)
"BRONWEN" (Overture)—Full Score (in the Press) ...	1	1	0
"WILD SEA FOWL" (Orchestral Fantasia), Score In the Press ...	0	15	0
"BYRON" (Orchestral and Choral Poem) ...	0	1	6
" " Full Score ...	0	15	0

J. & W. CHESTER.

BRONWEN'S SONG, Soprano and Tenor ...	0	2	0
"THE PICKWICK CLUB" (Humoreske), String Quartet Score ...	0	6	6
PIANOFORTE CONCERTO (Op. 52) ...	0	8	0
" " Full Score ...	1	1	0
(London Symphony Orchestra, 1920.) (BENNO MOISEWITSCH. ALBERT COATES.)

POEMS.

"THE RAVEN"—Poem. Full Score ...	0	15	0
" " Piano ...	0	5	0
(London Symphony Concert, 1919.)
"THE VIKING"—Poem. Full Score ...	0	15	0
" " Piano ...	0	5	0
(British Symphony Orchestra, 1919.)
"LES HOMMAGES"—Suite. Full Score ...	2	0	0
" " Piano ...	0	6	0
(Royal Philharmonic Society, 1919.)
DRAMATIC CHORAL SYMPHONY (Op. 48) ...	0	3	0
Full Score ...
PIANO SUITE ...	0	2	6
"BARRAGE" } Piano Solos ...	0	3	6
"TALSARNAU" }
CHAMBER WORKS (see full list).

RICORDI & CO.

VIOLIN CONCERTO	...	...	...	...	...	0	8	6
TEN PIANO ETUDES	...	...	...	...	each	0	2	6
THREE VIOLIN AND PIANO, OR CLARINET	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
"Mezzotints"	...	...	...	...	each	0	2	0
STRING QUARTET (No. 4) on Folk-songs of Great Britain	...	...	...	...	...	0	6	0
PIANO SOLO (Arr.)	...	...	...	...	...	0	3	6
DANCES FOR PIANO AND STRINGS (Op. 20)	...	...	...	...	...	0	8	0
ARRANGED FOR PIANO DUET	...	...	...	...	...	0	6	6

CARY & CO.

"EILEAN SHONA"—Organ	...	...	...	0	1	6
FOUR MEZZOTINTS—Violin and Piano, or Clarinet and Piano	...	...	...	0	3	0
STRING QUARTET (No. 4), Songs and Dances	...	Score	...	0	5	0
SUITE MODERNE—Piano (Op. 18)	...	each	...	0	3	0
"ANNABEL LEE" (Ballad)	...	...	...	0	2	6

BOOSEY & CO.

SIX CHARACTER SONGS ...	0	6
FIVE BOHEMIAN SONGS, ETC. ...	0	2	6

ENOCH & SONS.

THREE SONGS (Op. 71), for Voice, String Quartet, and Piano, &c. ...	0	6	0
SIX ROMANTIC SONGS ...	0	2	6

JOHN COATES' RECITAL (QUEEN'S HALL), 1919.

"The Second Romantic Song of Holbrooke was repeated Three times—owing to prolonged encores"—Liverpool Post.

BREITKOPF & HAERTEL.

"ULALUME" ...	0	5	0
(Royal Philharmonic Society, 1919.—A. Coates, Conductor.)
"QUEEN MAB" ...	0	3	0
(London Symphony Orchestra, 1919.)
"THE BELLS" ...	0	3	0
(Birmingham Festival.)

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY
EDWARD ELGAR.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR

FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS
(Op. 84).

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

QUARTET

FOR STRINGS

(Op. 83)

SCORE PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.
PARTS " EIGHT SHILLINGS

SONATA

FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE
(Op. 82).

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CONCERTO

IN E MINOR

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD ELGAR.
(Op. 85).ARRANGEMENT FOR
VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire only.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

POT-POURRI

A CYCLE OF FRAGMENTS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

ON VERSES BY

ISOBEL SCOTT BREMNER

COMPOSED BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW AND COMMENDED PIECES.

'RECOLLECTIONS.' Song-Cycle:

1. The Afterglow. 2. Beyond. 3. A World of Grey.
Music by SYDNEY C. C. JONES. Ten pages and 4-page cover, 3s. net.

'SONS OF THE PEOPLE.' W. H. WATTS.

A capital Song. Healthy and vigorous in tone. 2s. net.

'SONG TO ENGLAND.' ALBERT UNSWORTH.

Patriotic, and well-written. 2s. net.

'THE SOLDIER'S RETURN.' CHARLES MARKS.

A capital March for the Piano. 2s. net.

'THE DORAL VALSE.' IRVIN COOPER.

A splendid Waltz. 2s. net.

MUSIC MSS. of all descriptions are desired by Mr. Stockwell.
No charge for advice.LONDON: ARTHUR H. STOCKWELL, 29, LUDGATE HILL, E.C. 4.
Above pieces may be ordered at any Music Store.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CELTIC SUITE

FOR

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

BY

ERNEST FARRAR

(Op. 11.)

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

TO

STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S DRAMA

NERO.

PRELUDE:

s. d.

Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
String Parts	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3	0
Wind Parts MS.

PROCESSIONAL MARCH:

Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
String Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	6

FIRST ENTR'ACTE ("NERO"):

Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	6
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1	6
String Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3	0
Wind Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	9	9

SECOND ENTR'ACTE ("POPPÆA"):

Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
String Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	6
Wind Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	9	6

INTERMEZZO ("Singing Girls' Chorus"):

Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1	6
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	0	6
String Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	3
Wind Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3	3

EASTERN DANCE:

Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	1	0
String Parts	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	2	6
Wind Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6	3

SUITE OF FOUR PIECES:

Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4	0
String Parts...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8	0
Wind Parts (just published complete)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	24	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BY

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S LATEST SONG PUBLICATIONS.

GUY D'HARDELLOT—

MIDSUMMER MADNESS.
IN ENGLAND NOW.
MINE, ALL MINE.

TERESA DEL RIEGO—

HOMING.
RECONCILIATION.
THE MERRY HEART.

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS—

SING, JOYOUS BIRD.
THE SILVER LAMPS.
SING, SING, BLACKBIRD.

EDRIC CUNDELL—

IN THE SILENCE OF THE NIGHT.
HOLD THOU THE MORN FOR ME.
SUMMER DAYS AND NIGHTS.

SAMUEL LIDDLE—

FULFILMENT.
A WOODLAND BOUQUET.

FRANK BRIDGE—

WHEN YOU ARE OLD.

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE—

GOLDEN DANCING DAYS.
REAPING.
YOU IN A GONDOLA.
A VENETIAN LULLABY.

HERMANN LÖHR—

THE ROAD OF LOOKING-FORWARD.
THREE LITTLE SPANISH SONGS.
THIS SONG OF OURS.
LITTLE HOUSE OF BLESSING.

HAYDN WOOD—

THERE'S A SONG DOWN EV'RY ROADWAY.
A LEAFLAND LULLABY.
FLEURETTE, I SHALL NEVER FORGET.
I LOVE YOUR EYES OF GREY.

ERIC COATES—

THROUGH ALL THE AGES.
AT SUNSET.
SINCE YESTERDAY.

GRAHAM PEEL—

THE CHALLENGE.

THURLOW LIEURANCE—

BY THE WATERS OF MINNETONKA.

GERALD CARNE—

PROVENCE.

H. LYALL PHILLIPS—

THE STRING OF PEARLS.
A DEVONSHIRE WEDDING.
WIMMEN! OH, WIMMEN!

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And may be had of all Music Sellers.

NEW YORK, MELBOURNE, AND SYDNEY.

AS PERFORMED BY THE RUSSIAN BALLET, COVENT GARDEN.

"PULCINELLA"

MUSIC BY IGOR STRAWINSKY, AFTER PERGOLESI.

Piano Score.

Price, 10s. net cash.

BALLETS PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

SCARLATTI-TOMMASINI.

ROSSINI-RESPIGHI.

THE GOOD-HUMOURED LADIES LA BOUTIQUE FANTASQUE

Price each, 10s. net cash.

IN THE PRESS.

MANUEL DE FALLA

THE THREE-CORNERED HAT

(Advance orders may now be given.)

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough Street, W. 1.

THE
ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W. 1.

INSTITUTED 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors, Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the letters A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors, Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter.

A Special Teachers' Training Course, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted, prospectus of which is now ready.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON,

Secretary.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B. STUDIES ... (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	2B. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 6d.
3A. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.	3B. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4A. DITTO ... (all Positions)	2s. 6d.	4B. DITTO ... (all Positions)	3s. od.
5A. DITTO ... Do.	2s. 6d.	5B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.
6A. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.	6B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.

CLOTH BINDINGS.

Book 1. (1A and 1B, bound together) in Cloth	... 5s. od.
" 2. (2A and 2B, bound together) Do.	... 5s. 6d.
" 3. (3A and 3B, bound together) Do.	... 7s. od.
" 4. (4A and 4B, bound together) Do.	... 6s. 6d.
" 5. (5A and 5B, bound together) Do.	... 6s. 6d.
" 6. (6A and 6B, bound together) Do.	... 7s. od.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a number of Pieces are published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part is furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

No. 13. TWELVE FOLK DANCES FROM DENMARK (1st Position)	2s. od.	No. 21. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. J. S. BACH (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.
No. 14. SONATA IN G MINOR. G. TARTINI (All Positions)	2s. od.	No. 22. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. PIERRE RODE (Op. 9). (All Positions)	2s. 6d.
No. 15. OVERTURE TO SAMSON. G. F. HANDEL (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 23. TWELVE CAROLS ... (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 16. SONATINA IN D. FRANZ SCHUBERT (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 24. SONATA IN A (KÜCHEL, No. 305). W. A. MOZART (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 17. EIGHT HYMN TUNES. VARIOUS COMPOSERS (1st Position)	1s. 6d.	No. 25. RÊVERIE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 22, No. 3). (Advanced)	2s. od.
No. 18. STYRIAN DANCES (LANDLER) (Op. 165). JOSEF LANNER (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.	No. 26. FOUR LITTLE PIECES. (From Op. 8). IGNAZ FLEWEL (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 19. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR. J. S. BACH (Advanced)	2s. od.	No. 27. SARABANDE AND TAMBOURIN. JEAN-MARIE LECLAIR (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 20. SONATA IN G (No. 8). JOSEPH HAYDN (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.	No. 28. BOURRÉE AND GIGUE. J. S. BACH (1st and 3rd Positions)	1s. 6d.
		No. 29. BALLADE AND POLONAISE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 38) (Advanced)	2s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

No.
931

Price
6d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

SEPTEMBER 1, 1920

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS ▽ UPRIGHTS ▽ PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON · PORTSMOUTH · SOUTHAMPTON
FOLKESTONE · DOVER · CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM · CAMBRIDGE

WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON.

“The World’s Piano Centre.”

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN

LTD.

ALSO 12, Park Row,
LEEDS.

CECILIAN HOUSE.

• 65 Wigmore Street •

• LONDON W.1. •

PIANOS

“NEW PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID” FOR GRAND PIANOS.

We have already converted over 600 Grand Pianos with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

FOUNDED

1837.

AGENTS
THROUGHOUT
THE WORLD.

GRANDS-UPRIGHTS.

AWARDS

for Good Tone:

LONDON - - - 1851
PARIS - - - 1867
LIMA - - - 1872
CHRISTCHURCH,
N.Z. 1882
LONDON - - - 1885

PLAYER-PIANOS.

SHOWROOMS:

ALLISON PIANO FACTORY, LEIGHTON ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, LONDON, N.W.5

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

AN IMPORTANT NEW EDUCATIONAL WORK.

101 ORIGINAL STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

COMPOSED BY

G. H. CLUTSAM

Book I. - Nos. 1 to 32

„ II. - „ 33 „ 66

Book III. - Nos. 67 to 92

„ IV. - „ 93 „ 101

PRICE 2/6 NET EACH BOOK.

ENGLISH OR CONTINENTAL FINGERING.

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

METZLER & CO. (1909), LTD.,

42, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Copyright 1920 by Metzler & Co. (1909), Ltd.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 931.—Vol. 61
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

SEPTEMBER 1 1920

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1920—1921.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES of GOOD QUALITY, and should be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins Monday, September 20th. Entrance Examination on or about September 16th.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted. A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Initiative, Southkens, London," Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The CHRISTMAS TERM will commence on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1920.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.
CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PATRON'S FUND

Founded by Sir S. ERNEST PALMER, Bart., for the encouragement of British composers and executive artists.

NOTICE TO BRITISH COMPOSERS.

The next date for SENDING IN COMPOSITIONS will be OCTOBER 4th, 1920.

Full particulars may be had on application to the Registrar, Royal College of Music, Prince Consort Road, South Kensington, S.W. 7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

(CORPORATION OF LONDON).

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

AUTUMN TERM begins MONDAY, 20th SEPTEMBER.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and/or Orchestra.

Saturday Opera Class, "Veronique," in rehearsal. There are a few vacancies.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent. 4459

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

Founded 1882. Incorporated 1892.

OBJECTS OF THE SOCIETY.

The objects for which the Society is established are the promotion of whatever may tend to the elevation of the status, and the improvement of the qualifications, of all members of the Musical Profession, or may aid the musical education of the people

ADVANTAGE OF MEMBERSHIP.

A Benevolent Fund for Members, the Regulations for which have purposely been made as wide as possible in order to meet the many and very varying contingencies which arise from time to time.

An Orphan Fund for the children of musicians, which is open to the dependents of all musicians, whether their parents were members of the Society or not.

Legal advice on all professional matters; Income Tax Claims; Copyright; The Recovery of Fees, &c.

Registers open to members of "Vacant Appointments" and "Engagements," and for the transfer from member to member of pupils moving to new districts.

Full particulars may be obtained upon application to the GENERAL SECRETARY, 19, BERNERS STREET, W. 1.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1919-1920.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students. Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year. Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications are again advanced as from June 30, 1920, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Twenty-eighth Year opened on October 6, 1919.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, and Art of Teaching, &c.

After the vacation Lessons resume on September 6th.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE PHILHARMONIC CHOIR.

Hon. Conductor: CHARLES KENNEDY SCOTT.

Arrangements for next season include performances of "Christmas Oratorio" (Bach); "Christmas Carols" (Vaughan Williams); "Schicksalslied" (Brahms); "Prometheus" (Scriabin); &c., &c.

Rehearsals will be resumed on Wednesday, October 6th.

Applications for membership should be addressed to—

GRANVILLE HUMPHREYS, 145, Elms Road, Clapham, S.W. 4.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS.
LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE AND DECEMBER

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Y.M.C.A. MUSIC SECTION.

Chairman: SIR JOHN D. McCURE, LL.D., D.Mus.

Committee: Prof. Percy C. Buck, M.A., D.Mus.; Prof. H. Walford Davies, LL.D., D.Mus.; A. A. Fitzsimmons; Harvey Grace, F.R.C.O.; J. T. Lightwood; Sydney H. Nicholson, M.A., B.Mus.; Percy A. Scholes, B.Mus., A.R.C.M.; Miss Phoebe M. Walters, A.R.C.M.; Mrs. Z. F. Willis. Secretary: Major J. T. Bavin.

All information regarding its aims and plans for the introduction and maintenance of good music in the Y.M.C.A. as an educational and recreational feature, may be obtained from The Secretary, Y.M.C.A. Music Section, Shakespeare Hut, Malet Street, W.C. 1.

MR. TRAVERS ADAMS returns thanks for letters.

Vocal Classes shortly resumed. Intending pupils will receive copy, gratis, of latest work, "Physical Development in Relation to Perfect Voice-Production." Apply, 158, Holland Park Avenue, W. 11

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION:

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(Staff of Fifty-five Examiners. For full list see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at over 400 Local Centres in the United Kingdom in DECEMBER. Last day of entry, November 8th.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date.

For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

ORCHESTRAL CLASS for Ensemble Playing, Thursdays, at 12 (noon). Terms, £1 11s. 6d. per course.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.

Victoria, Cap. cxxx. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX

THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.

THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

October 21st, 1920, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "Registration Enigma," by Dr. J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

Chairman: DR. J. H. LEWIS.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1920.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best INTRODUCTORY VOLUNTARY for the ORGAN, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, TE DEUM (Chantwise), Harmonized Setting of the GUILD OFFICE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden, 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS.

President: S. W. PILLING, Esq.

FIRST CONGRESS,
SOUTHPORT, SEPTEMBER 7, 8, and 9, 1920.

Tickets and programmes will be sent to members who signify their intention of attending the Congress.

Full particulars, Organists' Quarterly Record for July.

Hon. Sec.: COUNCILLOR BROOK, Southport.

BATTERSEA POLYTECHNIC

LONDON, S.W.11.

COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

SPECIAL CLASSES FOR SCHOOL TEACHERS,

A.I.S.C. and F.I.S.C. DIPLOMAS.

E. E. DOUGLAS SMITH, F.R.C.O.

LESSONS IN

SOLO SINGING, PIANO, AND VIOLIN.

Next Term begins on Monday, September 27th

Particulars on application to the Secretary.

A. E. MILGROM

CONCERT DIRECTION.

RECITALS, CONCERTS, "AT HOMES" ARRANGED AND PERSONALLY SUPERVISED.

Concert Givers, Theatre and Opera Managers, please note above Agency have over 400 artists on their books containing Operatic and Concert Vocalists, Instrumentalists, Accompanists, Entertainers at the Piano, and Concert Parties in costume.

For terms, please apply to—

A. E. MILGROM, Concert Agency,
324, REGENT STREET (near Queen's Hall).

'Phone: Mayfair 4123.

Practice rooms can be rented by the hour, day, or week.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches: Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3,
and 117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORKE-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examination in Music and Elocution, July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

THE ALEXANDRA PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

Conductor: ALLEN GILL.

CONCERTS

TO BE GIVEN AT THE

NORTHERN POLYTECHNIC, HOLLOWAY ROAD, N.

Each Concert to commence at 7 p.m.

1920.

October 23 ...	"Hiawatha" ...	Coleridge-Taylor
November 27 ...	Mass in B minor ...	Bach
1921
January 1 ...	"Faust" ...	Gounod
February 5 ...	"Israel in Egypt" ...	Handel
March 5 ...	"Merrie England" ...	Edward German
	• "Wedding of Shon Maclean" ...	Hubert Bath
March 25 (Good Friday) ...	"The Messiah" ...	Handel
May 7 ...	"The Apostles" ...	Elgar

The following artists have been engaged:

Mesdames Helen Anderton, Elsie Chambers, Ida Cooper, Ethel Fenton, Mary Fielding, Phyllis Lett, Florence Mellors, Gladys Moger, Norah Scott, Dorothy Silk, Eva Sparkes, Laura Evans Williams.

Messrs. John Adams, John Booth, David Brazell, John Collett, Seymour Dossier, Kenneth Ellis, Stewart Gardner, Alfred Heather, Herbert Heyner, Charles Knowles, Leonard Lovesey, Samuel Mann, Robert Radford.

Full Particulars may be had from

MR. C. J. DUNN, Hon. Secretary,

Telephone: Dalston 812. 33, Thornby Road, Clapton, E. 5.

THE HAMPSTEAD CHORAL SOCIETY.

SECOND SESSION.

President:

LORD LEVERHULME.

Conductor:

MR. RICHARD J. C. CHANTER, Mus. Bac.,

Music Master, University College School, N.W. 3.

AND

Conductor G.W.R. Old Oak Choral Society.

New members are required, and are invited to apply to The Secretary, 31, Church Road, Craven Park, N.W.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON VOCAL EASE.

Mr. Tree is now booking "fit-in" dates for the coming season.

Felixstowe ...	Sep. 3	Markinch ...	Jan. 14
Maidstone ...	" 21 (?)	Greenock ...	" 17
Pontefract Festival ...	" 30	Kirkintilloch ...	" 18
Farnborough ...	Oct. 7	Glasgow ...	" 24
Newport Salop ...	" 12	Edinburgh ...	" 25
Halstead ...	" 27	Grimsby ...	" 31
W. Bromwich ...	Nov. 2	Leicester ...	Feb. 1
Ashton-under-Lyne ...	" 22	Mansfield ...	" 2
Cockermouth ...	" 24	Nottingham ...	" 3
London ...	" 27 (?)	Grantham ...	" 4
Felstead ...	" 30	Todmorden ...	" 8
Horwich (Lancs.) ...	Jan. 5	London ...	" 10
Bolton ...	" 8	Croydon ...	Mar. 3

Mr. James Moodie (an Edinburgh professor), who wishes his name mentioned, writes, August 9, 1920.—"I feel the greatest difference in my voice after the study I did with you. I have had lessons untold from distinguished teachers, but I shall always regard the lessons I had from you as, in some respects, the most valuable of them all. I wish your little book a continuance of its wonderful success. I have read scores of books on singing, but only three of them benefited me in the least, and yours was one of them."

How to acquire ease of voice "by Charles Tree (5s.).

(If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Mr. Tree begs to state that his chief interest in singing tuition lies with the vocal trainers who come to him for personal instruction in the two or three most vital points of the art. The matter of vocal placement alone is of the utmost importance to enunciation, colour, and the long life of the voice: and this point is perhaps the simplest yet most difficult of them all.

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

NOW IS THE TIME to become a Good Pianist.

Begin now to become a Good Pianist. All drudgery is abolished when my System is used, and progress becomes rapid and certain. Advanced players improve without touching a piano, "average" become advanced in a few months, and the beginner soon "plays at sight" with pleasure. Equal success with all grades, for whom there are distinct Courses.

The System is a complete one of Touch and Technique, not one of finger gymnastics only. Command is given over trills, repeated chords, skips, and every technical difficulty, also Sight reading. Harmony is not taught. Pupils constantly express delight at the perfect control of the keyboard they now possess.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

THE IDEAL METHOD OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.

A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND
STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,
SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists.

Invented and Patented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, MUS. BAC.

Copy of letter received from R. WALKER ROBSON, Esq., Mus. Doc.,
L.R.A.M., F.T.C.L., A.R.C.M.

Crouch Hill, N

"I have been using the 'Techniquer' for about three months, and I have found it a great time-saving device. To those who, like myself, have to give regular recitals and have little or no time for technical practice, it is indeed a boon."—R. WALKER ROBSON.

Send for full particulars and list of testimonials.

No earnest student should be without a Techniquer.

"Hand Development," post free, 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.); L.R.A.M.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) A.R.C.M. Paper Work
- (2) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (3) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (4) Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. Degress.
- (5) Musical Appreciation.

For terms, lists of successes, &c., address—

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol. Telephone: Bristol 3033.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 4 FIRST MUS. BAC.
4 FINAL MUS. BAC.
2 FINAL MUS. DOC.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

A CORRESPONDENCE COURSE FOR TEACHERS

SPECIALLY ARRANGED BY

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING.

This Course is intended to serve as a guide to Teachers, either in their Class-Work, or in their private teaching.

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES.

LATEST SUCCESSES:

A.R.C.M., APRIL, 1920.

Paper Work	...	...	...	...	SEVEN.
Practical	...	...	...	...	FOUR.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.); L.R.A.M.,
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: MR. A. MCALISTER, B.A. (Cantab.)

SUCCESSSES - - 48.

Mus. Bac.	GUARANTEE COURSE—ONE FEE. Matric. 1st M.B. Ex. Final.
A.R.C.O. F.R.C.O.	ONE FEE—BOTH DIPLOMAS. Special Papers on Modal Counterpoint.
L.R.A.M. A.R.C.M.	RUDIMENTS—HARMONY. ORNAMENTS. ART OF TEACHING.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT (TENOR).

Assistant Vicar-Choral, St. Paul's Cathedral.
44, Cranbrook Park, Wood Green, N. 22.

OSWALD PEPPERCORN (VOICE SPECIALIST).

Singing, Elocution, and Breathing.

Write for free audition, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M. (Double Dip.), L.R.A.M. (Double Dip.), Class A.

COMPLETE TRAINING BY CORRESPONDENCE:—

Courses of "Singing Papers," "Form and Teaching," "Touch,"
and "Accompaniment"; also "The Art of Teaching."

Over 500 Successes at Exams.

"Recitative and its Rendering," 1/6. "The Singer's Vade Mecum," 6d.
Prospectus and particulars, 21, Boundary Rd., St. John's Wood, N.W. 8.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W. 6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

MR. HARRY EDMONDS

TENOR.

Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

70, Brentham Way, Ealing. 'Phone: Ealing 103.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address: 164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

JOSEPH MCLEAN

BARITONE.

Queen's Hall (Royal Philharmonic Society); Crystal Palace;
Alhambra; National Sunday League; and Principal Halls.

Oratorios, Concerts, Lessons.

22, Leathwaite Road, Clapham Common, S.W. 11.

WILLIAM BARRAND

BASS (ETON COLLEGE).

Now Booking for 1920-21 Season.

For Terms, &c., apply—

35, Ragstone Road, Slough;

or usual Agents.

WILLIAM COLEMAN

BASS (MANCHESTER).

Oratorio. Ballads. Lessons.

18, Plymouth Avenue, Manchester, S.E.

VOICE CULTURE.

MR. WILLIAM WOLLER'S

SYSTEM OF BREATH CONTROL AND FUNDAMENTAL TONE PRODUCTION

ensures fullest Vocal development. Complete readjustment of misused voices. Coaching in oratorio and opera.

Address, 75, Gunterstone Road, West Kensington, W. 14.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now
demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte
Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore
Street, W. 1.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FIVE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

* The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear,
along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly
permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WILFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

MR. EDWARD OXENFORD

(Author, "I FEAR NO FOE," &c.)

Submits popular and attractive LYRICS.

Haddenham, Bucks.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates
who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916),
and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-five. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SINGING, PIANO-PLAYING, AND AURAL
TRAINING. Dr. A. P. Alderson visits 60, Berners Street, W.,
every week for Private Lessons. Coaching also by Correspondence.
34, Knight's Park, Kingston-on-Thames.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-20 ... 154 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-20 ... 39 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

DR. CROSSLEY.—Singing, Piano, Composition.
Special Coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons by Corresp. And at FORSYTH BROS., Manchester. Terms, &c., Radcliffe, Manchester.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
L. ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 380 Successes. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) for £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

L. R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr.
W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for
F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

- | | |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920. |
- "Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher); Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler. Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE (AUSTRALIA.)

CONSERVATORIUM OF MUSIC.

WANTED, a male TEACHER OF SINGING. Must be a good Concert performer, and also qualified to act as examiner.

For remuneration and conditions of appointment apply to the Agent-General for Victoria, Victoria House, Melbourne Place, Strand, London, W.C. 2.

Applications, including medical certificate and copies of testimonials, should be made to Mr. J. P. Bainbridge, Registrar, University of Melbourne, Victoria, Australia.

MEMORY.—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, L.R.A.M., undertakes, by her method, to develop perfect musical memory. Course of Six Lessons, £3 3s. Lessons by correspondence if desired. 21, Upper Cheyne Row S.W. 3.

DANCING.—GENTLEMAN, with highest qualifications and many years' successful teaching experience, in all branches, is now concluding arrangements for conducting, Day or Evening, LONDON and SUBURBAN CLASSES, commencing Autumn, and wishes to hear from Principals of MUSICAL COLLEGES, &c., including, or contemplating the inclusion of this subject in their Syllabuses. "Alpha," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

PIANIST, skilled Musician and Sight-reader, accompanies singers in practice. Hints on French, German, and Italian diction, and interpretation of modern songs. Terms, 7s. 6d. an hour. "X," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

YOUNG LADY PIANIST, late Student Royal Academy of Music, REQUIRES POSITION practising or concert accompanist to lady or gentleman singer. Write, Shirley Field, 49, Broomfield Avenue, Palmer's Green, N. 13.

LADY, Good Pianist, quick Sight-Reader, SEEKS POST. Music Stores, or Music Academy. A. Bastoul, 71, Barnwell Road, Brixton, S.W. 2.

EXPERIENCED TEACHER (Singing and Piano) seeks TEACHING CONNECTION in or near London or South Coast; or Partnership in School of Music. Good organizer, and able to introduce good pupils for concerts. Address, "Progress," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

Vacant, through preferment, the office of Minor Canon. WANTED, Graduate preferably Oxford or Cambridge. Salary £335. Duties: besides intoning Services, certain Pastoral duties are expected. Apply immediately to The Dean through the Chapter Registrar.

BASSES and TENORS WANTED, St. Mary's Church, West Kensington. Apply, Choirmaster, Fridays, 8 p.m., at the Church.

ST. LUKE'S, Sydney Street, Chelsea. MALE VOICES REQUIRED for Choir. Alto, Tenor, Bass. Salaries, £16 to £20. Apply, Choirmaster, c/o Vestry Clerk.

WANTED, First and Second TENOR, and First BASS, for Quartet R.C. Church, West. One Mass, one practice. Apply, "F. R.," c/o Novello & Co., Limited, 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Willesden Presbyterian Church, London, N.W. Apply, giving full particulars, to David Davidson, 62, Craven Park, Willesden, N.W.

ORGANIST WANTED soon, for Christ Church, Brussels. Offered 2,000 frs. yearly. Other work in bank or school available. Apply, "S.," 52, Warwick Park, Tunbridge Wells.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Eastbourne Catholic Church. Salary £120. Apply, Rector, 2, Grange Road, Eastbourne.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Union Street United Free Church, Greenock. Salary £75. Binns Two-Manual Organ. Applications, with testimonials, to Andrew Rae, 40, Finnart Street, Greenock, Renfrewshire.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Penninghame Parish Church, Newton Stewart. Salary, £50 per annum. Applications, with testimonials before September 15th, to Rev. James M. Inglis, The Manse, Newton Stewart, Scotland, or Mr. R. Mirrev, Session Clerk.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for St. James's Presbyterian Church, Wood Green, N. Two Sunday Services and weekly choir practice. Apply, giving particulars as to experience, with copies of testimonials, and also stating salary required, to Mr. George Lloyd, 48, Vallance Road, Alexandra Park, N.

FOR SALE.—PIPE ORGAN, by Bevington & Sons. 4½ octaves. Twelve Stops: Great, two 8-ft., one 4-ft.; Swell, three 8-ft., one 4-ft., one 2-ft. Pedals (2½ octaves), one 16-ft., three couplers. £200. Apply, "Shaw," 2, Buckland Crescent, London, N.W. 3.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son. The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times, 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGAN WANTED.—Modern action. Good condition. French makes also considered. Price and particulars to "H. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN PEDALS, Norman & Beard's. Piano attachment, platform, bench. £5. 168, South Road, Erdington, Birmingham.

TO AMATEURS AND COLLECTORS.

FOR SALE.—VIOLIN, by Gagliano, 1730. Very valuable instrument. Offers to M. Henri Wiltberger, Notaire, Lauterbourg, Alsace.

FOR SALE.—AMERICAN ORGAN, by Mason & Hamlin. Two Manuals and Pedals, 24 Stops, including 4 couplers. Swell pedal: blown by foot or hand. Handsome walnut case. Fine instrument in perfect order. £95. Suit small Church. Apply, "Shaw," 2, Buckland Crescent, London, N.W. 3.

PLEVEL DIGITORIUM: superbly made; solid mahogany; ivory and ebony keys. Additional finger exerciser, 2½ octaves, in well-made travelling case, lined baize. 10 guineas. 175, Clarence Gate Gardens, N.W. 1.

FOR SALE.—VIRGIL Practice CLAVIER, in excellent condition. Cost 16 guineas. £10, or near offer. Also Maelzel METRONOME. Apply, Miss Hutchinson, Tisbury Vicarage, Wilts.

VIRGIL practice CLAVIER for SALE. New condition. £10 10s. With two books of Foundation Exercises. "A. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

FOR SALE.—GRAND PIANO, by Broadwood. First supplied to Queen Victoria on her Marriage. Rosewood case, inlaid with 12 panels, painted by Italian artist. Write, Colonel Sir J. Gildea, 11, Hogarth Road, S.W. 5.

WANTED.—Good Boehm Concert PICCOLO, open G sharp key. Mr. Copley, Queen Street, Retford.

FOR SALE.—A Large Library of Male-Voice Music. For particulars apply, A. Thompson, 18, Eaton Rise, Ealing, W. 5.

FOR SALE.—"The Art of Organ Building," by Audsley. Arthur Spencer, Chippenham.

HYMNS, Chants, and Anthems neatly and legibly Duplicated in black ink, from 4s. 6d. per 100, post paid. Samples 2d. stamp. W. H. Ridd, 211, Station Rd., King's Heath, Birmingham.

BASS and BARITONE VOCALISTS should buy Song, "THE SILENT LAND" (Oakley). Compass A to D. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

THE SINGER'S ART (just Published). By Agnes J. Larkcom. Price 1s. London: Novello & Company, Limited.

YOUR MELODIES or LYRICS may be transformed into works of beauty by the addition of musicianly accompaniments or settings. Only really good music will do—not the cheap, flowery type, full of worn-out harmonic "tags."

Send short MS. to me, together with stamped addressed envelope, for FREE specimen accompaniment, arrangement, or setting.

HUGH P. LAMBERT, 77, Valley Drive, Harrogate.

MSS. Copied and Transposed. Choral and Instrumental Compositions revised—Arrangements. Constructive criticism given. (Terms moderate.)

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRS,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments arranged.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London Address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 91.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

SYSTEM IN MUSICAL NOTATION

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON

WITH PREFACE BY

SIR EDWARD ELGAR.

EXTRACT FROM INTRODUCTION.

As musical compositions get more complicated, elaborate, and difficult of execution, it is increasingly incumbent upon the composer to present his meaning in a manner that will help the performer to grasp that meaning with as little trouble as possible.

The object of this book is to point out to composers, arrangers, and editors, the difficulties they often unwittingly place in the path of executants, and to suggest various means of obviating those difficulties.

Price - - One Shilling and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A VALUABLE BOOK FOR TEACHERS AND STUDENTS.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety, and gradation of tone, the use of pedals, et cætera.

WITH NUMEROUS MUSICAL EXAMPLES FROM THE WORKS OF THE GREAT MASTERS.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

- No. 1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY
The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the student becomes more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 6d.
- No. 2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand Part I. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 6d.
- No. 3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 6d.
- No. 4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 6d.
- No. 5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS by C. EGERTON LOWE Price 1s.
- No. 8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys), by E. D. RENDALL. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS. A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 2s. (The Appendix, published separately: Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 2d.; Sol-fa, 2d.)
- No. 10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES by ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 1s. 6d.
- No. 11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL. by MARGARET A. HUGHES. Price 4s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College in July last:

LICENTIATES (L. Mus. T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Randolph G. Ball, F.R.C.O., William J. Hill, Ernest J. Stone, Wilkinson Townsend, LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Doris L. Abrahams, Ethel Barnett, Phyllis Birchall, Lucy T. Bussey, Laura I. Davies, Ella Fairall, Jessie J. Fiedler, Winifred Fitchett, Winifred M. Gardner, Jack Green, Violet E. Hosking, Bathin Howard, Ethel F. Hunt, Madeline E. Lack, Nora Langham, Barbara F. M. McMillan, Laurie W. Mitchell, Hilda G. Payne, Ethel M. Pearce, Alan M. Rhodes, Doris M. Riminton, Lillian V. Rogers, Martha Thornton, Clifford H. Trotman, Primrose Wood.

SINGING.—Elsa F. Gow.

ELOCUTION.—Emma Cleator.

ASSOCIATES (A. Mus. T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Elsie Farnworth, William S. A. Johnson, William L. Smoldon, Ethel M. Winfield.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Nellie Allen, Margaret E. Bagguley, Amy E. Bowen, Gertrude S. P. Burrows, Pollie Cooke, Beatrice M. Eve, Mary Easter, Alice Eddison, Gladys D. Everitt, Irene P. Godbert, Rebecca Gouldman, Douglas C. Hart, Eva D. Hoare, Marjorie J. Hopkins, Elizabeth C. Hughes, George A. James, Constance J. Jarrold, Dorothy C. Kenyon, Samuel Kerry, Hilda E. Kine, Harry Kram, Harold P. Lewis, Mabel Mellor, Emilie Menut, Hilda M. Parker, Kathleen V. B. Pratt, Olive Procter, Elsie L. Ridgwell, Eva Robinson, Lilian V. D. Salmon, Doris M. Silvester, Winifred R. E. Sifton, William H. Slater, Jessie M. Smith, John M. Smith, Muriel W. Stopes, Harvey A. W. Strange, Ivy M. Stribling, Linda M. Tyrrell, Winifred H. White, Muriel G. Wileman, Ethel G. Worrall.

SINGING.—Percival G. Adams, Irene G. Mills, Wilkinson Townsend.

ORGAN.—William R. Davey, Cyril A. Marks.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Mrs. E. Booth, Gladys A. Brown, Violet R. Cleverley (Honours), Dorothy Hill (Honours), Ida Johnson, Mildred A. Jones, Emily F. E. H. Lewis, Nellie Portas.

ORGAN.—Reginald B. Bright.

EXAMINERS.—Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., Dr. J. C. Bridge, M.A., F.S.A., Dr. Percy C. Buck, M.A., Sir Frederic Cowen, Mus. D., E. d'Evry, F.R.C.O., Dawson Freer, Fred Gostelow, Morden Grey, Dr. H. A. Harding, Charlton Keith, L. Lebell, S. Myerscough, Mus. B., Dr. C. W. Pearce, L. Pecskaï, E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Alec Rowley, F.R.C.O., Mrs. Helen Trust, Dr. C. Vincent, and Dr. J. Warriner.

The next Diploma Examinations will take place in January, 1921, at the College in London, and at certain Local Centres. Last day of entry, December 6.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LIMITED.

ALBERT KÜSSNER

AMERICAN TONE-POET

Messrs. BOSWORTH & Co., Ltd., London, have acquired the publishing rights of the music of Albert Küssner, and the following works for pianoforte solo by this delightful composer, have been sent out by them: "Moon Moths," 3s.; "In Forest Nook," 2s.; "In the Arbor" (Romance), 2s.; "Woodland Flowers," 1s. 6d.; "By Candle-Light" (a melody for little fingers), 1s. 3d.; "Dawn," 2s.; "The Evening Hour" (Revery), 2s.; "Memories" (also a Revery), 2s.; "At Parting," 2s.; and "Autumn Revery," 2s. Mr. Küssner is a composer of the Romantic School, as may have been surmised by his titles, and he possesses a rare gift of melody. But the works are essentially, and above all atmospheric, and while they are only moderately difficult, when estimated from the technical point of view, they nevertheless demand the exercise of sound musicianly qualities on the part of their interpreter. As teaching studies, and factors in the imparting of genuine culture, they have probably never been excelled.—From The Scottish Musical Magazine.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS' RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSONS,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

This adaptation has been made by Sir Edward Elgar, O.M., at the request of the LEAGUE OF ARTS, to whom it is dedicated. It is specially intended for the performance at the Dedication of the Cenotaph and similar ceremonies throughout the country.

WITH PROUD THANKSGIVING CHORUS

BY

LAURENCE BINYON

AND

EDWARD ELGAR

Arranged from "For the Fallen" for S.A.T.B., with accompaniment for Military or Brass Band, or Organ or Pianoforte.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOLK - SONGS OF ENGLISH ORIGIN

COLLECTED IN

THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

BY

CECIL J. SHARP

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

FIRST SERIES.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

SEPTEMBER 1 1920

PRIZE COMPETITIONS

The Proprietors of THE MUSICAL TIMES and THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW offer Two Prizes, of the value of Twelve Guineas each, for:

- (1.) The best Unison School Song, with pianoforte accompaniment;
- (2.) The best Two-Part School Song, with pianoforte accompaniment.

The words chosen for setting must either be non-copyright, or the option of using them must have been secured by the composer.

The copyright of the prize compositions will become the property of the prize-givers. The right to withhold the prizes is reserved if none of the compositions submitted attains a good standard. The proprietors may negotiate for the purchase of the copyright of any unsuccessful work.

The authorship of each composition must be indicated only by a motto or nom-de-plume written at the top of the manuscript; such motto or nom-de-plume must also be written outside a sealed envelope accompanying the composition and containing the name and address of the composer.

The awards will be made known in the January issues of both journals.

Compositions, which must be received not later than December 1, should be addressed to:

THE EDITOR OF THE SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW,
160, Wardour Street, Soho,
London, W.1,

and endorsed 'S.M.R. COMPETITION.'

WILLIAM EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN

BY SAMUEL LANGFORD

William Edmondstoune Duncan died at his native home and almost life-long residence at Sale, Cheshire, an outlying suburb of Manchester, on June 28, aged fifty-four years. Fame had seemed to smile on his early career as a composer. Yet though he had not only genius, a great love of poetry, and in a rare degree the rectitude of the musical art itself, which is so often wanting in our English musicians, he failed (perhaps for personal reasons, and perhaps more truly from the chaotic conditions of our English musical life) to 'make good' in his prime all the bright promise of his earlier life. In his later years not only had the world begun more or less to neglect him, but also he had in a measure turned his face from it, and in this aloofness he achieved the work which it is the object of the present article to bring more fully to the consideration of its readers. It is thought proper nowadays to congratulate our English public on the possession of many fine song-writers, though the grounds are slight enough, and the debasement of English song, both by our composers and our singers, is still one of the crying evils of our musical life. If we are to take the patronage of our singers in their public work as any criterion of judgment, then William Edmondstoune Duncan is almost wholly negligible as a composer of songs. Few, certainly, would regard the neglect of singers as any testimony of demerit in an English song-writer. Criticism also has shown itself negligent, rather than appreciative, of Duncan's recent rather ambitious and extensive efforts in song. I am not prepared to say that these efforts merit an unmixed adulation, for they contain too many signs of a mind no longer very careful even of its own approval, and disposed almost to thwart the close communion of others. But I hold they are in the mass an achievement for which it is hard to find a comparison in English song, except it be that of Parry, since the days of Purcell, and that whatever their defects there is in them something of permanent value, which to the matured rather than to the youthful experience will bring the true solace of art.

The songs I propose to consider are the six volumes last published, beginning with that issued by the firm of Thomas J. Doulan, of Boston, in 1910, followed by the 'Six Declamatory Songs' (The Walter Scott Publishing Company), and ending with the four volumes published by Aird & Coghill, of Glasgow, and completed shortly before his death. Let us admit, first of all, the grave general fault that the songs appear far too much in the loose state of quasi-improvisation, and, with all their merits, are far too much alike in their general temper to represent adequately the variety of poetry to which they are set. That they are born of a sincere love for the poets they illustrate is nevertheless apparent everywhere. And what other composer comes before us with such a garland of poets in his hair? True, many will think the composer has tried not only his own powers, but the powers of music too far, in essaying on the one hand such a dramatic monody as 'To be or not to be,' or 'Angels and ministers of grace,' and, on the other, to enliven by music the prosaic artlessness of a fable by Bewick in the manner of Æsop, or the political rhetoric of President Wilson's speech on the entry of America into the war. But I think a close examination of these opposite experiments will reveal the fact that they one and all represent a triumph which, if not complete, has many points of admirable fidelity and truth which must win our esteem for the composer. But if such things are undertaken to flout ordinary notions, or for the composer's delight in his own dexterity, they do not represent the whole of his art—or exhaust it. The book of songs published in America are pure lyricism. The keen yearning, without which songs cannot reach a very high standard, is by no means absent here. Duncan was not a modern harmonist in the sense that his music contains any questionable element of dissonance. He was a modern only in his harmonic progressions, which have a boldness and resource that strengthen both his argumentative and emotional expression. The lyrical and reasoning qualities are most happily blended in Sir Philip Sidney's song, 'My true love hath my heart,' where the music not only matches the ingenuity of the poem, but breathes a soul and fullness into its passion without injury to its artifice. 'I arise from dreams of thee' is neither so sentimental as the music of Salomon nor so violent as the fine setting by Delius; but it has a warmth and closeness, a more personal feeling than either—beautiful, though not to our conviction strictly derivable from the poem. 'My silks and fine array,' by Blake, is set with a more true poise, and here the distraught manner of the composer suits well a song which is probably intended to recall the madness of Ophelia, and to gain part of its force from this Shakespearian allusion. A second ingeniously passionate poet is called into service in Campion's 'Give beauty all her right,' but here I think the composer's habit of restricting his songs to the medium voice tells against him, and the setting is too low for complete emphasis. We feel less in this book than in the later songs the limitation that the composer identifies every song with himself—his own personal manner, which is a sign perhaps that the songs are, after all, not very obviously meant for the public, but are more in the nature of a personal indulgence. This limitation detracts greatly from the range of the 'Six Declamatory Songs,' and not only gives a commonalty of mood to such diverse things as Browning's 'Prospice,' Shakespeare's 'To be or not to be,' and Byron's 'Maid of Athens,' but makes the composer lose all sense of the worlds which divide these dark musings from the brightness of 'Hark, hark! the lark.' Surely it is a fatal error to put the last in a book of declamatory songs, and the error is unfortunately confirmed by the nature of the music. The marybuds wink in deadly earnest here, and the poor syllables are stretched cruelly to make them do it. It is not credible that such a lapse is made purely from a lack of critical power. Now that 'the strong man' that Duncan looked has gone from us, the choice of Browning's 'Prospice' and the dramatic excerpts seems so thoroughly in the character of the composer as to be almost a dramatic act. We can no longer smile at this music, so forcible and in many of its details so true, and failing only as we believe every composer would fail who set music so flatly against the animation and sustained power of speech. Let the best who would scorn this music try to surpass it, and his scorn will cease. Having ventured on the impossible, Duncan, in his last books of songs, knows no let or hindrance to his attempts. He felt the war savagely, and his choice of Rupert Brooke's sonnet 'If I should die' and of President Wilson's speech should surprise no one at all acquainted with his attitude towards it. The first hardly rises above a fine, march dignity, but time will do much to remove what may now seem presumptuous or banal in the last, which has an admirable prosaic nobility. The doubt that Duncan cannot by any means free his fancy from heaviness is shown to be mistaken, by the two charming songs from Swinburne's 'Golden Bells' and 'Fly, white butterflies.' These are trifles in which the greatness of the poet is as surely preserved as in the words themselves, and for once the music walks on air. A touch as light, and a breath as soft, are felt in Byron's song 'So we'll go no more a-roving'; and who would not be moved by the reconciled sense of regret that breathes through this lovely music? This short song illustrates perhaps better than any other the ripened sense of humanity that we find in all Duncan's music. The poetry of middle age is a less tangible thing than the poetry of youth, or at the other extreme, of death. It has to be earned by years of constant reflection, and whatever Duncan lacked, he had, in a rich measure, this habit of humane reflection. He was the familiar of none, yet none could doubt his complete urbanity and sympathy. In curious ways his music kept the pleasantness and grace of the 18th century manner. His predilection for the pleasaunces rather than the enigmas of poetry may be seen in his choice of songs from Blake—'When early morn walks forth,' 'Memory, hither come,' where matter and manner are as happily suited as could well be by a composer of our day. These songs are no artificial effort at an historical aptitude of style, but the natural expression of a man who has the 18th century suavity in his blood. We find the style as aptly used, and with more lightness, in the songs from Herrick, 'I dare not ask a kiss' and 'Charm me asleep.' The composer's fondness for this vein goes so far even as to make him redeem Goldsmith's song, 'Child of summer, lovely rose,' from the urn into which it had fallen. When Duncan sets the verse of Byron, or even Tennyson, we find he convicts them of a like partiality. The 'Jacqueline' of Rogers, bound up with 'Lara,' is not more damning evidence of Byron's connection with the past than is Duncan's music to 'She walks in beauty'; nor is the music to 'Come into the garden, Maud' and 'The splendour falls on castle walls' any less effective in bringing down the poet's fine sentiments to recognisable levels. That Duncan's music is a solvent in which we may recognise such distant relations and derivations of literature is not merely due to the persistence of his personal manner, but as much to his ripened knowledge and love of literature. He is as far as can be from the eclectic composer who can imitate the style of any period. But he has made every period of our literature his own, and a song of Dekker or Campion strikes as sure a response in him as the poetry of Rupert Brooke or the prose of Wilson.

If only for this cultured fidelity of his art to literature in its broadest sense, his example is worthy to be remembered and even revered by our younger writers. The earlier exploits of Duncan are told with sufficient detail to convince musicians of his musical merits and scholarship in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music.' That the opus numbers of his works run up to well over a hundred will show that he was as industrious a composer as England in our times can supply. Throughout his life, too, he was also an assiduous compiler of popular and traditional music, and his two volumes of English songs compiled and arranged for Messrs. Augener are likely to remain now for some time the most generally useful and comprehensive of English collections. Also he had been continually engaged as a writer on music and musical subjects, and as became one who was himself a composer, was always a most generous and appreciative musical critic. As is told in Grove, he was one of the earliest to gain a scholarship at the Royal College of Music, on its foundation, and studied there under both Parry and Stanford. He was also greatly attached to the late Marshall Hall, and constructed his manuscript opera 'Perseus' upon a libretto by that writer.

SHALL WE RETAIN THE BAR?

By ARTHUR L. SALMON

As in the writing of verse there has been a tendency to discard metre and formal rhythm—a tendency that has been carried into actual application by the abandonment even of vers libre for that which is not verse at all—so we are meeting a tendency in music to discard the bar. The definite abandonment has not yet been fully brought into practice, yet the bar as a controller of measure is being more and more slighted. The old accentual teaching is largely discounted—that teaching which impressed on a beginner the necessity for emphasising every first and third beat in common time, for instance. We fully realise to-day that the bar must not be allowed to tyrannise over us, and that it has no uniform right to control the accent; all music must not be a marching-tune, an occasion for beating time or walking in step. There is much that is clear gain in this development; a greater gain still might be achieved if it was recognised that every piece of music should be performed ad libitum—that is to say, entirely under the control of its own emotion and that of its performer. But this in itself does not justify the abandonment of the bar as a structural measure-mark, and such abandonment can only lead to a formlessness which must ultimately mean disaster.

Yet frankly we must recognise that the bar is only there for our weakness. It is there because music is partly rhythm. But rhythm is not the whole of music, nor should it ever, unless in the actual march, be permitted to assume a mechanical despotism. Accent or stress is a different matter, and can never adequately be indicated by the bar-measure; it obeys the necessities of emotion, the rightful and varying claims of emphasis. Poets have repudiated the rigid sing-song of unchanging longs and shorts, incessantly regular strongs and weaks. Our present Laureate has said much to justify and done much to illustrate this rebellion; and we all realise how completely the rhythm of verse is moulded and influenced by its burden, the thought or emotion that it articulates. In music the burden is inarticulate, but the shaping and controlling feeling should be there just the same, and monotony of utterance must mean a dead emotion. Our feelings are not to be ruled by the metronome; even the conductor's baton is a danger unless wisely wielded. We can imagine a performer so filled with the genius of interpretation, so swayed and impelled by the emotion with which, in a sense, he composes anew that which he is interpreting, that the bar becomes meaningless, or at least entirely unnecessary to him; he discards it as a man discards his crutches when he can walk without them, or casts away the supporting bladders when he can swim. That this is possible to some does not mean that it is possible to all, nor can we expect a time when it will ever become general. Besides which, music, though it be the most formless of the arts, has still to retain some form for its perfection, some structural basis. Irregular rhapsodies, the so-called fantasias of a past fashion, do not permanently satisfy us. As in the greater complexities of construction, so in this simple feature of the bar-measure, some adherence to form is a necessity. The bar must be retained as an indication, not a command.

The desire to discard the bar does not come from the greater men. There are natures of loose artistic impulse who desire to follow that impulse wherever it may lead them, and who would make all art an improvisation. They reject all supports, all limitations. We will go with them so far as to admit that the bar is a convenience only, and that a piece of finely written music would lose nothing of its true significance if every bar-indication was removed. In itself the piece would remain the same, all its possibilities undiminished; the right performer would render it as before. But the right performer in such an instance would be rare; the average interpreter would stumble and blunder hopelessly. Not every eye would detect the invisible measure-rulings, the rhythmical complexities or simplicities which the bar can unobtrusively indicate. If a lyric of Shelley were printed as prose, could the average ear be trusted to detect its melody? It may be urged that in music the actual note-values give all necessary guidance, and that accent may rightly be left to the control of the feeling; but note-values in themselves are not enough to convey the perfections of rhythm, nor is every performer's feeling sufficiently constant, sufficiently correct, to determine the desirable stress. If we left everybody to spell the words they use according to the sound those words convey to their own ears, an extraordinary jumble would result, an absolute chaos of orthography. Neither can we be trusted to spell out our music without the use of the visible barring. The bar must remain—as our servant, not our master. Formlessness has gone far enough; carried further it would mean disintegration.

THREE UNPUBLISHED PORTRAITS OF HENRY PURCELL

By WILLIAM A. SHAW, D. Litt.

The portraits here reproduced are as follows:

- (1.) Anno 1685, aged twenty-six; size, 29-in. by 23-in., on canvas. Inscription 'Henry Purcell, 1685.'
- (2.) Anno 1689, aged thirty-one; size, 9-in. by 6-in., on panel. Inscription 'Henry Purcell, ætat 31, An. 1689.'
- (3.) Anno 1695, aged thirty-seven; size, 12-in. by 10-in., on panel.

Nos. 1 and 2 are of native English workmanship, but being unsigned, as such native work comparing it with the original as here shown, it is invariably was, the question of attribution is insoluble. No. 3 is the original of the well-known Closterman portrait.

No. 1

These three pictures are remarkably congruous and consistent with each other. The physical development between No. 2 and No. 3—that is between Purcell's thirty-first and thirty-seventh year—is doubtless accentuated by the fact that No. 2 shows him in his own hair, whilst No. 3 shows him wearing a wig. Apart, however, from this single item of the wig the development of feature as between No. 2 and No. 3 is demonstrably harmonious. Indeed No. 2 serves admirably to authenticate No. 3, and without such authentication No. 3 has hitherto been a puzzle to Purcell lovers. The National Portrait Gallery Closterman copy has always seemed hopelessly impossible as the instantly apparent how far the Gallery copy has falsified the age. And not only are the three portraits as here reproduced congruous with each other; they are equally consistent with all that can be reliably known as to those of the engraved portraits which have a claim to authenticity.

During Purcell's lifetime only one engraved portrait of him was published, viz., that prefixed to the first part of the Sonnatas of iii Parts, 2 violins and basse. 1683, folio. The engraving is lettered 'vera effigies Henrici Purcell ætat suae 24.' From the fact that the music plates of the work were engraved by Thomas Cross, jun., the engraved portrait has been ascribed to his father, Thomas Cross. The name of the painter of the original picture from which it has been engraved is not stated, nor is any painting corresponding thereto now known. The subject has manifestly suffered at the hands of the engraver, for the face looks like that of a man of fifty-four, not of a boy of twenty-four. The original portrait is certainly not one of the three here reproduced; but allowing for the engraver's ill-treatment it is easily reconcilable with them.

Within three years of Purcell's death the engraved Closterman portrait was prefixed to the first volume of the first edition of 'Orpheus Britannicus' (1698). This was engraved by R. White, and is inscribed aetate suae 37/95. The painting was doubtless done not long before Purcell's death. The engraving is done direct, so that the print shows in the reverse, facing dexter instead of sinister as does the original. The engraver has omitted the scroll and the group of organ-pipes which in the original as here shown break the rich dark background. These features are also omitted in the copy in the National Portrait Gallery. But on the other hand the Gallery copy correctly faces sinister, so that it cannot have been painted from the print. But in one respect, as already stated, the Gallery copy exactly reproduces the main defect of the print. They both make the subject too old. The original is credibly the portrait of a man of thirty-seven years, but the print and the Gallery copy both make him considerably older.

No. 2

If the original painting is an average specimen of the art of Closterman, then he is to be ranked immeasurably above Kneller both for technique and for the art of portrayal.

The only other authentic type of Purcell portraiture is that furnished by the engraving by W. A. Gardiner in 1794 after a drawing by S. Harding, taken from the original, then at Dulwich. The type of this version is completely reconcilable with the types Nos. 1 and 2 reproduced above. Indeed one can hardly resist the conviction that the face in both the drawing and the engraving is derived direct from that in No. 1.

Turning from the question of portraiture to that of technique, there is no possibility of doubt as to the native origin of pictures Nos. 1 and 2 here shown. They have all the characteristics of the native English manner as described in an article on that school which appeared in the October, 1911, number of the Connoisseur. The stiff formality of the composition and of the arrangement of the subject is entirely after the manner of the 16th century English school. The pigments are distinctively English, and the colouring is extraordinarily bright and natural; in particular the smaller one not only employs a gesso ground, but even contains gold-work in the scroll.

No. 3

Another interesting feature about these portraits is that they are virtually whole-lengths, and so afford valuable details as to the full-dress of the King's musicians in 1685 and 1689.

It was not until August 31, 1685, that Purcell was admitted to the King's Private Music, so that the dress in No. 1 probably represents him in his costume as one of the King's musicians and composer-in-ordinary to the King; whereas that in No. 2 represents him in the costume of a member of the King's Private Music. In No. 1 he wears a satin doublet of English pink (a colour peculiarly English); a plain band; a coat of green velvet, lined white, embroidered cuffs; puffed wristbands; and knee breeches of English pink. In No. 2 he wears a satin doublet of golden yellow; a lace band; green velvet coat, lined yellow; embroidered cuffs; puffed wristbands, and golden yellow knee breeches.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

(Continued from August number, page 518)

BY HARVEY GRACE

II.—THE WEIMAR PERIOD (continued)

Consideration of fugues apart from their preludes is likely to lead to confusion. It will therefore be advisable to put aside the fugues in C minor and F major until we come to the prelude and toccata which Bach wrote for them in after years. This leaves us with three important Weimar works—the Passacaglia and Fugue, the Dorian Toccata and Fugue, and the Prelude and Fugue in A major.

Like the Trio-sonatas, the Passacaglia (x. 214) was written for a two-manual clavicembalo with pedals. We may easily imagine the sonatas to have been composed with such a slender medium in view, but the Passacaglia is so magnificent as organ music that it requires an effort to think of it as anything else.

The work is supposed to owe something to Buxtehude. Certainly a few passages recall Buxtehude's Chaconne in C minor, but in the size of his scheme and in variety and power of treatment Bach leaves the older composer so far behind as to be out of the reckoning. It is rather too readily assumed that Bach borrowed the idea of a passacaglia and fugue from Buxtehude, modifying it by placing the fugue at the end instead of at the beginning. But when Buxtehude combines the two forms the passacaglia is merely one of the brief sections of a fugue, and is quite an insignificant affair. For example, his C major Prelude and Fugue consists of four loosely defined sections, the fourth being a ground bass of twenty-eight bars, on a theme derived from the fugue subject. In the G minor Prelude and Fugue we have a string of five short movements of which the last is an ostinato of thirty-one bars, having no apparent connection with the rest of the work. There is the minimum of relationship between these sketchy attempts and the lengthy and highly organized work of Bach.

We have seen Bach experimenting with forms, and it is easy to imagine him trying his hand at a big two-movement work based on a single theme. Instinctively he must have felt that the order of the movements settled itself. The fugue, as the freer of the two, should obviously come to provide relief after the passacaglia's insistence on one theme and one key. Perhaps, however, the fugue was an after-thought. The passacaglia ended, Bach may have said, 'Still the possibilities are not exhausted. But instead of adding more variations, why not approach the subject from a fresh angle? The problem is, how to manage this infusion of new life without destroying the consistency of the work as a whole.' He found the solution in a double fugue, one of the subjects being the first half of the passacaglia theme, the other something quite new—a thrice-repeated little phrase so characteristic and persistent that it pushes its companion into the background, and so prevents the already well-worked motive from becoming monotonous.

The work thus owes nothing to anybody on the formal side. The first half of the theme, however, was borrowed from a 'Trio en Passacaille' by Andre Raison, a French composer, c. 1650-1720. Here is the acorn from which grew so mighty an oak:

As Bach sometimes places the subject at the top, his work is a combination of the passacaglia and chaconne. He is stricter than Buxtehude, in that he sticks to one key throughout, whereas Buxtehude freely uses attendant keys. Not though he presents the subject disguised by figuration, does Bach become diffuse as does the older writer. Curiously, although he is so much less strict and consistent, Buxtehude's Passacaglia and two Chaconnes are distinctly monotonous, whereas the interest is maintained throughout the Bach work. Buxtehude begins splendidly in each case—the first page of his E minor Chaconne is one of the most expressive things in old music—but he is too ready to fall back on the complacent type of figuration that spoils so much of his work.

Bach's Passacaglia presents so many difficulties in the matter of registration that most organists succumb, and neglect the work. If we are blessed with an organ of ample resource (not only in stops, but in pistons) we may subscribe to the general principle that each variation calls for some change of colour, but if our organ is small or clumsy, we should remind ourselves that the work was written for an instrument of very limited possibilities both in power and variety. The only contrast possible on the clavicembalo was that presented by two manuals, one loud and one soft. Moreover, we find the music full of interest even when played on our own pedal-pianoforte. This being so, it is clear that its success depends a good deal less on the organ-builder than is generally supposed. One point is indisputable: there must be no break in the flow of the piece. If we cannot change the registration without a halt—even the slightest—we must let the registration go. Fortunately a good deal can be done by taking the variations in blocks, so to speak. Thus 1-3, p or pp; 4-7, mf or mp; 8-9, f or mf; 10, R.H. Choir p, L.H. Swell, p; 11, both hands, Choir; 12, Great and Swell diapasons (easily prepared during 11); 13, full Swell; 14, both hands on Choir, or R.H. Choir, L.H. Swell; 15, both hands Choir or Swell; 16-20, ff or f, increasing to full organ for 20. Some such plan as this avoids monotony on the one hand and restlessness on the other, and presents little difficulty on an average organ. The chief trouble will be the avoidance of change or increase of tone on the last note of the theme in the pedals. Clearly the change should be on the first note. It may be necessary to shorten the last note occasionally before it can be affected by manual changes through the manual to pedal couplers. On an organ with a large pedal department of course this difficulty scarcely exists, as we are able to avoid the couplers for all save the loudest variations. Variation No. 17 is sometimes played as a delicate two-manual affair. But if Nos. 14 and 15 are light and soft, a very quiet treatment of No. 17 makes No. 16 stand out too aggressively. Moreover, it is difficult to get two quiet, well-contrasted manuals ready, and to drop on to them quickly, at the same time reducing the pedal. There is a good deal to be said for making No. 17 loud and brilliant. The laying out shows that Bach played it on the two manuals of his cembalo. If we adopt the one-manual idea, it is worth while pencilling-in this arrangement of bars 5 and 6, as printed in the Widor-Schweitzer and Peters editions:

Ex. 2.

Ped.

The least satisfactory variations are Nos. 14 and 15. They so clearly belong to the cembalo that they seem mere fidgety trifling on the organ, besides which they interrupt the building-up which began at No. 12 and which should be more or less continuous to the end. They may be left out, and the join easily made, with decided improvement on the score of continuity.

I have dwelt at some length on this matter of registration because, as was said above, there is a tendency to regard the difficulties as all but insuperable on small or ill-equipped organs, with the result that this splendid work is less played than it should be. There are a hundred workable methods, and my suggestions will do most good if, instead of adopting them, players will spend a quiet half-hour at their consoles improving on them. In the long run I fancy a good many will incline to a simple scheme—perhaps an even simpler one than that given above. For the sake of completeness I add Schweitzer's* views:

There is no organ work that makes such demands as this in the matter of registration. Each of the twenty sections constructed on the repeated bass must have its characteristic tone-colour, and yet, if disconnectedness is to be avoided, no colour must be too sharply differentiated from its predecessor or successor.

Unfortunately these slight changes of tone-colour are usually the very ones that call for a spare hand or an assistant.

The preface to the Widor-Schweitzer edition of the organ works gives a very elaborate scheme, but the editors hint that the registration may well take second place:

The player may adopt either of two methods. He may either strive—without wasting much thought on the broader possibilities of grouping—after interesting tonal combinations for effectively setting off the several variations; or he may endeavour, even in these latter, to obtain his effects by means of lines rather than colours, and to present distinctly the construction of the whole composition. This way is probably the better of the two.

The Passacaglia and Fugue are such a lengthy affair that we may wish to play them separately. In this case, how are we to end the former? The effect of the final chord, with the minor third at the top, is inconclusive. Here are three ways:

Ex. 3.

(a)

(b)

* Schweitzer's 'J. S. Bach' (I, 280). (The references to this work apply to the English translation by Ernest Newman.)

The third is not so vandalistic as it appears to be at first sight. It merely gives us a tierce de picardie—which was always more or less at the discretion of the player.

Coming to the Fugue, if we play it as written the first note of the subject is bound to be lost. There is something striking in this emergence of the subject, but we may safely surmise that had Bach written the work for the organ he would have announced the theme a bar later, preceding it with two crotchet rests. The player who adopts this plan does a commonsense thing at which only the strictest of purists will be pained.

The fugue is an excellent specimen of a double type in which both subjects are given out together:

Much of its success is due to the strongly-marked character of the new theme. Had Bach written a semiquaver counter-theme to the passacaglia subject the result would almost certainly have been less happy, because the latter would have been the predominant partner, and we should at times have had the effect of further variations. But the rests in the new theme help it to prominence, and so the centre of interest is shifted sufficiently to establish the fugue as a new movement.

A good deal may be done in the way of soloing, but the gain is small, and there may even be some loss. A vigorous straightforward treatment seems to be called for. Despite a few weak passages, this is a far finer work than is generally realised. When played after the Passacaglia it must suffer from some lack of freshness in the hearer, and perhaps in the player as well. That is why we should study it and play it as a separate work. Structurally it is so clear that little need be said, but a few points call for mention. Thus the double shake at bars 101 and 102 was necessary on the cembalo. It is not so on the organ, and sluggish speech on the part of one or two stops will make it into a hideous noise. In this case we should omit it. Even under the most favourable conditions we shall perhaps do well to shake the upper part only. In bars 92 and 93 we shall save ourselves trouble if we re-write the inner parts for a couple of beats. Of course we ought not to be bothered by this sort of thing:

but we usually are, so we may help ourselves thus:

Consecutive octaves between treble and bass? Yes, but they are very little ones, and only to the eye.

The Neapolitan sixth at bar 117 looks very thin, but we shall resist the temptation to fatten it if we remember that the startling effect is made by the chord itself, and is independent of the number of notes employed. It needs no underlining.

The Fugue, like the Passacaglia, is unexpectedly difficult, owing to a few awkward patches, but both movements yield ample return for the trouble. Indeed, they have a fascinating quality that grows with study.

Parry, on the ground that 'a form which depends so much upon a rhapsodical quality, like a brilliant improvisation, does not gain by too thoughtful and premeditated an air,' considered that the Dorian Toccata (x. 196) 'is not so interesting as the earlier one in the same key.' This seems convincing until we remember that there is nothing of the rhapsody or brilliant improvisation about the F major Toccata—a work surely far superior to the early one in D minor. The fact is the form suffers from 'faint individuality,' as Corder says in Grove. Most modern examples are brilliant and showy, but the old composers applied the label to all sorts of movements. Here, for instance, is the scheme of a five-movement work by Muffat—a majestic Alla breve, a quick Fugato, a canonic Adagio, an Andante, and a Fugato finale in 12/8 time, very jig-like. One would call it a Suite had not the composer already told us it was a Toccata—one of six from the 'Apparatus Musico Organistus' (1690). The Dorian work really is more in line with modern examples than is the earlier toccata, being a moto perpetuo. It is not so brilliant as its more popular companion, but there is fine vigour and plenty of interest in other ways. In passing it may be noted that, like the Passacaglia, it contains a link with old French organ music. Pirro points out that the main idea seems to have been suggested by a Duo of Andre Raison, from whom, as we have seen, Bach borrowed half of his Passacaglia theme. Here is the beginning of Raison's little movement:

The resemblance is not confined to the opening bars. The Dorian Toccata is one of the few works in which we have Bach's own indications as to the use of the organ. Unfortunately, as in other cases, we are not able to carry them out owing to differences between the organs of his day and ours. Our Swell is generally deficient in diapason tone, and our Choir is too often a small collection of solo stops, a very different affair from the Positiv of Bach's day. The two-manual conception of the Toccata can as a rule be realised only by playing the Oberwerk passages on a fairly loud Great and those for Positiv on contrasted Swell stops of about the same power. The Pedal should be coupled to Great, unless it is so rich in telling stops as to be independent—an unlikely contingency. The manuals should be coupled together and to the Pedal after the last call for separate use, and the ending worked up to full organ. The effect of the whole work is that of antiphony between two contrasted sections of a band, with a tutti at the close. There are not many effects in Bach's organ works more satisfying than the passages where the antiphony is close, especially in the sections over the long grandly-rolling pedal scale:

Brilliant and exciting, too, is the intertwining two-manual passage over the dominant pedal twenty-two bars from the end, and the fine bit of contrary motion a few bars later. Altogether, despite the conventional figure on which it is largely founded, there is a splendid life about this movement. It wears rather better than its more popular and brilliant companion.

The nobly melancholy fugue is one of the greatest things in music. Even the group of masterpieces Bach wrote later contains nothing more thoroughly purged of display or superficiality of any kind. It is abstract music raised to its highest point. In the thematic index at the end of Forkel's 'Life of Bach' (English translation of 1820) the E, G, B, and D of the first half of the subject are embellished with inverted mordentes. These may or may not have been in the originals. Griepenkerl tells us that the autograph was missing, and that the work as we know it was pieced together from various imperfect copies. We may be thankful that the subject was left free of the twiddles which were probably added by some dashing young capellmeister who thought the subject needed brightening.

As a mere piece of fugal writing the work is remarkable, though when playing it we shall do well to overlook the science and think only of the music. Parry points out its likeness to the last fugue in Part I of the 'Forty-eight,' in that the greater part of the interest is provided by development, of a fragment that, written casually, later revealed unexpected possibilities. In this case the fragment appears in the second and third bars of the counter-subject. At the Codetta preceding the tenor entry the treble imitates the alto in the sixth above. The hint was enough, and Bach proceeded to develop all the episodes save one (the last) from this canonic germ. The result is fifteen canons, all different. (I have not counted them; Prout has.)* Far more important is the fact that this canonic writing leads to some amazingly daring and modern use of passing-notes. Too rarely does ingenuity give us music such as this final canon:

* 'Fugal Analysis,' p. 64.

The syncopations in the subject also lead to some very attractive roughnesses.

By the way, all editions agree in giving bar 61 as :

But surely the first C should be sharpened.

This lofty fugue should be played as a voluntary by every organist at least six times in the year. This seems over-frequent, until we remind ourselves of the number of repetitions allowed in the case of very indifferent hymn-tunes and service settings.

Passing from this work to the Fugue in A major is like stepping from a cathedral into a garden. We find Bach expressing a great variety of moods in his organ works, but nowhere else do we meet with anything like the sunny happiness of the Fugue in A (iii., 66). (The Prelude is of so little interest as to be negligible.) The fugue last discussed is an epic; this is a lyric—not because it is shorter and slighter, but because it is full of the intimate personal feeling that belongs to the lyric. The walking character of the subject must have struck most of us, and the point is of interest because it is a good example of Bach's susceptibility to the pictorial suggestion of words. The origin of the subject is to be found in the introduction to the Cantata, 'Walk in the way of faith,' where this theme is treated fugally :

Ex. 11. Oboe.

We may be sure that what Schweitzer calls 'the curious step-rhythm' was suggested by the word 'walk.'

Spitta thinks the A major fugue was written very soon after the Cantata, though its present form belongs to a date considerably later. The earlier form (printed as an appendix to vol. ii. of Peters) was in 3-8 time, and inferior in a good many respects. We miss especially the effective high pedal passages.

(The Widor-Schweitzer edition, by-the-by, contains some bad slips. The G in bar 141 has no natural—an omission fatal to one of the most beautiful passages—and the pedal cadenza at the end appears in a very clumsy form.)

We are not able to subscribe to all the more emotional of Spitta's descriptions of Bach's works, but we may do so in this case. He says :

The fugue is quite unique . . . he has given it something of a peculiarly feminine character, and this runs through every thread of it with pure depth of feeling. Broken harmonies in the counterpoint, soft sixths, and passages of thirds, breathe into it something of the character of the G major aria in the Cantata, 'Walk in the way of faith'; the playful suggestions of stretto are quite delightful, till at last one is fully developed with infinite grace. From bar 135 the feeling acquires a wonderful intensity; the counterpoint seems to cling in a loving embrace to the theme, which from bar 161 appears again in smiling beauty.

It is to such works as the A major fugue, the 'Little Organ Book,' and the genial dances of the Suites, that we owe the personal attachment most of us feel for Bach. We speak of him familiarly as 'Old Bach' because of this, and not on account of his wig or period. Few of the great composers enable us to get on such terms. We shall never apply the 'old' to Beethoven, Brahms, or Wagner, for example. They unbent too rarely, and with something of an effort, whereas Bach unbent with a smile.

(To be continued.)

Interludes

BY 'FESTE'

I left off interluding last month with a threat to discuss the extent to which a musical commonplace may be transfigured by its orchestration. The point, you will remember, was suggested by Mr. Ernest Newman's quotations from an early work of Balfour Gardiner and Puccini's 'Suor Angelica.' Mr. Newman followed Mr. Grew in giving this :

as 'a specimen of the harmonic cliché of the first decade of the present century.' I should have described this addition of a foreign note to a string of common chords as a mannerism rather than a cliché. The genuine harmonic cliché is some such progression as that with which 'The Rosary' begins its bilious progress—in itself a beautiful bit of colour when used in a less obvious manner. This by the way. As Mr. Newman says, the sequence of added notes strikes us now as entirely lacking in originality. He then quotes this from Puccini :

and says, 'It never strikes us as being a cliché.' I have not heard 'Suor Angelica,' but I went through the pianoforte score of the work soon after its publication, and I remember this very passage striking me as a double-barrelled commonplace—a stereotyped fragment of bell-music supported by triads, each one bearing a pimple in the shape of an added note. On paper, and played on the pianoforte (especially if put into the same key), there is but a pinpoint difference in the value of Exx. 1 and 2. In both cases the procedure is the same. The pinpoint goes to the second, perhaps, because it is more pleasing melodically; but, as we see, its little bit of tune is borrowed from the belfry.

Some of Mr. Newman's Sunday Times readers must have been puzzled at his saying of the first that 'to-day, as a rule, nothing sounds more obvious, more ludicrously unoriginal than this sort of sequence,' and of the second, 'it never strikes us as being a cliché.' The explanation of course is to be found chiefly in the orchestration. Overhauling the full score, I find Puccini begins by announcing the chime twice, first on the bells, second on the celeste. The passage quoted at Ex. 2 is then given to the strings, the tune and chords played by first and second violins divisi, with a solo 'cello playing the lower F, D, E, C, &c., pizzicato, the added notes being given to the violas. Later the passage is scored for strings in eight parts, with softly clashing seconds in octaves picked out on the harps:

This is an excellent example of a phrase trite when played on a keyboard instrument, with only one colour and sonority for all the parts, but fascinating when shared by even so few instruments as in this case.

When I said above that the salvation of the Puccini passage lay 'chiefly' in the scoring, I had in mind the fact that it also gained a great deal through the significance it acquires as a dramatic element. Mr. Newman says it suggests, 'in a curious, inexplicable way, the blending of peace and pain in the atmosphere of the convent.' It does, but there is nothing inexplicable about it, and I'll be bound that if you had buttonholed Mr. Newman at Covent Garden while the passage was being played, and had asked him why it suggested the blending of &c., &c., he would have given you the reason in a brace of shakes. The bell-like theme suggests the convent, the common chords security and peace, and the added note hints at the pain from which even the cloistered cannot entirely escape. Nothing subtle about this, you will say. Exactly; but Puccini is not subtle. On the contrary, he is the most successful stage composer of to-day.

We see, then, that the platitude of the pianoforte not only blossoms on being transferred to the orchestra; shifted from the drawing-room to the operatic stage it becomes charged with a power of suggestion as convincing as anything in pictorial art. So brilliant and dashing an adventure can very rarely happen to a verbal platitude. Occasionally a Shaw or a Chesterton will take some well-worn expression and use it in a freakish manner, with the startling effect of a worm-cast changing into a cracker. But such feats are not only rare: they are almost invariably confined to the humorous, whereas their musical counterparts have unlimited emotional possibilities.

The late Herbert Campbell—or was it Dan Leno?—made a great success with a song the burden of which was 'It's the seasoning that does it.' To a great extent, it always was the seasoning, in music as in everything else. The only change has been in the kind of seasoning. We are apt to generalise and say that the old composers always wrote tunes, and that the modern ones, finding the melodic possibilities of the scale exhausted, are driven to serving up thematic crumbs so flavoured with harmonic and instrumental sauce as to pass for highly original dishes. But the best works of the old writers are by no means those that appear to be richest in thematic invention. What are the most interesting portions of Beethoven's fifth Symphony? Many of us have little use for the second subject of the first movement, or for any part of the Andante, and we can spare the Finale. All these are definitely tuneful. The still vital moments in the work are those concerned with the hammering motive of the first movement, the bustling bit of fugato in the Scherzo, and the passage over the drum leading into the Finale. The first is as insignificant a scrap as can easily be found, the second scores heavily by an effect not really musical—the rough and tumble of the double-basses playing so quickly that we cannot hear the notes for the noise—and the third says nothing, but grips us with the vague menace of something round the corner. These two latter are typical Beethoven seasoning—a frank, almost uncouth humour, and an arresting use of the drum. The four-note motive from which the greater part of the first movement is evolved still holds us because of the dramatic effect produced by its insistence—also a kind of seasoning. It owes a great deal, however, to the attractive 'Fate knocking at the door' yarn. As we know, Beethoven noted it down from the cry of some small wild-fowl—a yellow-hammer, wasn't it? But how many hearers think of the yellow-hammer? They are all Werthers for a brief spell, and invest the music with a significance far more profound than the composer ever gave it. What verbal commonplace can ever come to mean so much as this trivial birdcall? It is as if such an expression as 'I'll trouble you for the salt' suddenly became so charged with tremendous and shattering import that on hearing it people would fall into an agony of remorse. You would wait in vain for your salt, and while waiting you would speculate as to the strange power that has in a moment changed a phrase into a spell. If a composer happens to be at hand, he will tell you that he and his fellows have done the thing so often that it is taken for granted. As a matter of fact, they have been doing it for generations. One of the infallible signs of greatness in a composer is this power of producing something from nothing. Some of the finest of Bach's fugues have short subjects of no moment until the old man gets to work on them. Bach and Purcell took a scrap of the chromatic scale, put it in the bass, and are still wringing our hearts with a 'Crucifixus' and Dido's lament. Handel saw that the plagal cadence was the very thing for a shout of Hallelujah, and shouted accordingly, and we still shout with him, though the thematic material of the whole chorus is elementary, and the music hardly ever leaves the tonic and dominant. Beethoven heard a yellow-hammer deliver a major third, and in his turn produced his best known symphonic movement. You may save me trouble and space, and spend a profitable ten minutes, by writing down at least twenty more examples of this power of transmutation. You will then see that there is one prime difference between the verbal and the musical cliché—genius can do nothing with the first; it works miracles with the second.

But the miracles have usually been worked by means of development or by some other process that gives us an impression of growth on the part of the material. Our ample orchestral and harmonic resources are perhaps responsible for the signs of a revolt against development. No doubt the old composers—and some modern ones—have overdone things in this way. Similarly, many an eloquent orator sits down five minutes later than we wish him to. But we do not therefore despise coherent and well-ordered habits of thought and expression in our public speakers. The fact is, composers find it so much easier to toss a theme from one part of the orchestra to another, or to make it a peg on which to stick no end of spicy chords (with or without pimples), that they grudge the mental effort called for by the older methods. They are content to give us a demonstration of the possibilities of the orchestra, and very fascinating the result may be. But it has the fatal defect of making us dissatisfied with the next demonstration unless that goes one better. A work that depends so much upon its power of astonishing is dangerously like a large and elaborate joke—repeat it a few times, and the interest fades with the surprise. The 'Forty-eight' is a safe volume to open, but I never find it saying so much with so little fuss as when I come to it after an overdose of the Stravinskys, Poulencs, Bernerses, and the rest of those who sniff at the idea of expressing anything like emotion unless in connection with the joys and sorrows of goldfish, tin soldiers, cats, and goliwogs. The 'Forty-eight' will be played by millions yet unborn; the 'Berceuses du Chat' will tickle a few smart and blasé audiences and be heard no more.

A correspondent asks a question bearing somewhat on the subject of this article. He says:

'Is not the contention (first made by Stanford, I think) that an orchestral composition ought to be able to stand the test of transcription for pianoforte duet far too sweeping?'

At first sight it appears to be, but if you apply it mentally to a batch of modern works you will find very few generally acknowledged successes likely to fail. More: you will probably be surprised at the ease with which some of the most gorgeous works shed their orchestral trappings and become at home on the keyboard. For a good example take the 'Enigma' variations. So brilliant and vivid is the scoring that at first sight we should think the work would be nothing without it. But play it in the pianoforte duet arrangement, and you will be amazed at the wealth of beauty and interest that is quite independent of any kind of colour. On the other hand, it is easy to imagine that Stravinsky's 'Fireworks' would become a very damp squib played by anything else but an orchestra. Even as an orchestral piece it has long since ceased to startle, and pyrotechnics that do not make us feel inclined to emit a long-drawn admiring 'o-o-o-o!' may be crossed off the list at once—as, in fact, the Stravinsky squib is, for I do not find it in this year's 'Promenade' scheme.

However, we must not push the transcription test too far, or we shall find ourselves up against an awkward snag in Chopin, whose best music is so pianistic that we cannot imagine any other medium for it.

But as a general rule the Stanford theory will be found to provide a good working test. It will exclude all the duds and a lot of eccentrics, but it will easily admit all but a very few of the composers who count or are likely to count.

More and more we see that wealth of orchestral resources, like other wealth, is apt to prove a snare. After one of our young bloods had occupied ten strenuous and strepitous minutes in saying nothing at a Patron's Fund Rehearsal the other day, I found myself wishing that composers could be caught in the advanced-student stage and compelled to spend at least a year in writing for nothing but string quartet, unaccompanied four-, five-, and six-part chorus, and for an organ of one manual and pedals. A year of this would develop their powers of invention to such an extent that a body of composers so trained and then let loose together would change the whole course of modern music—and for the better. I believe that the first discovery we should make (with a good deal of surprise) would be that the thematic possibilities of the scale, so far from being used up, are almost as rich as ever they were. Men trained, even for a year, to realise that the body is infinitely more important than the clothes would soon prove that the modern decline in invention is due, not to the exhaustion of the material, but to the fact that composers find it far easier to shake a kaleidoscope than to paint a picture.

Coda.—A new song has just come my way, and provides a good example of what happens when a composer sets his teeth and really makes up his mind that he will at all cost avoid the cliché. The cost, you will agree, is heavy. The song is quite short, but contains discords enough to furnish forth a whole normal symphony. I quote a couple of bars, choosing them not because they are the worst (or the best, it depends on the palate), but because they are most quotable:

Ex. 4.

See, . . . I have brought you love - ly

mf

. . . brought you what, do you think? Not a torn and bleeding heart, a distraught mind, or a soul racked with doubt, as the music might suggest. No; I bring you 'toys.' Just toys. Among them is a balloon, which—but you shall sing and play it (if you can: I can't):

Ex. 5.

Meno mosso. f Molto tranquillo.

and a won - drous balloon, that floats, -

Meno mosso. mf p

(My pianoforte being a bit old-fashioned, I cannot distinguish between the B natural and C flat in the opening chord of Ex. 5.) Of course, a composer must write as he feels, but he must not be surprised if he finds very few of us feeling quite like this, especially when playing with our youngster—unless we play wi' deeficulty. And if the composer writes thus of a child and his toys, in the world will he give us when dealing with a grown man and his troubles?

But perhaps the whole thing is merely an expensive and elaborate bit of leg-pulling—a ballon d'essai sent up in order to discover how much the really advanced and elect ear will stand. It will stand so much that if 'Toys' had been sung at the recent Stravinsky concert, and labelled as one of the master's works, most of those present would have swallowed it without turning a hair.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XII.—JOHN TAVERNER

The works of John Taverner—especially his Masses—have been much in evidence during the past fifteen years, and the list of his printed and manuscript compositions, as given by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright in the revised edition of Greve's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (edited by Mr. Fuller-Maitland) can readily be consulted by all students of Tudor music. This list includes eight Masses, numerous Latin Services and Motets, various Nomines, and four English secular part-songs—overwhelming evidence of Taverner's activity. But, alas! as to the man himself the biographical data hitherto published may be described as meagre. Furthermore, the accounts given by Wood, Fuller, and other authorities are all based on Foxe's 'Acts and Monuments,' published in 1563.

Therefore, inasmuch as the information hitherto available has for its source Foxe's extraordinary book, it may be well to warn the reader against accepting all the statements made by that renowned martyrologist, whose 'more than a hundred and twenty lies uttered by John Foxe in less than three leaves of his "Acts and Monuments"' have been exposed by Father Parsons, S.J., in his 'Three Conversions of England.' As Dr. Gairdner mildly puts it, 'Foxe's credulity was ready to accept stories that could not possibly have been true,' and 'his bias makes him untrustworthy.'

Fortunately the publication of the 'Calendar of Letters and Papers of Henry VIII.' (1862-1910), and the discovery of other first-hand sources, make it possible to penetrate the obscurity which for so long hid the career of this remarkable Tudor composer—an obscurity which had baffled even the researches of Dr. R. R. Terry.

We are fairly safe in assuming that John Taverner was a native of Boston, Lincolnshire, but I can find no corroboration for the statement that he was organist of that church, nor for Foxe's mention that he was organist of Cardinal Wolsey's College at Oxford at its first erection in 1525. He was born about the year 1490, and we find him as Master of the Choir and Stipendiary of Tattershall Collegiate Church in 1525. This Collegiate Church, in the diocese of Lincoln, had been founded by Sir Ralph Cromwell in July, 1439—for seven chaplains, six clerks, and six choristers, one of the chaplains to be warden—and was completed in 1459. Under John Gyur, Warden in 1478, the musical services were of a high standard, and it is of interest to note that this Warden was the owner of the valuable Sloane MS. 1210 which afterwards passed to Dom. William Stokes, O.S.B.

Taverner's reputation in 1526 must have been considerable, because in September of that year Cardinal Wolsey wrote to the Bishop of Lincoln to try and secure him a good choirmaster 'for my College at Oxford,' hinting that Taverner would be acceptable. On October 17, John Longland, Bishop of Lincoln, replied to Wolsey's letter to the effect that he had sent for 'Taverner, a singing man, to be Informator of the Children of Wolsey's Chapel in his college at Oxford, but cannot induce him to give up his living at Tattershall and the prospect of a good marriage which he would lose by removal.' Bishop Longland suggests to Wolsey that the man to be appointed should have 'both his breast at will [that is, have a good chest voice], the handling of an instrument [organist], pleasure, cunning, and exercise in teaching, and to be there four or five days before your appointed day [of formally opening the College Chapel] for the ordering of the children, and to be acquainted with such songs as shall be the day of solemnity there sung.' He also recommends Wolsey to procure 'Rectors' Staves' [conductors' batons] and a 'good pair of organs: less than two pair will not do.'

After some parleying, John Taverner consented to take the post at Oxford, and entered on his duties in November, 1526, at a salary of £10 a year, with livery and commons. John Higden was Dean of Cardinal College, and on February 24, 1528, he wrote to Wolsey's chaplain that new statutes should be framed for the choir owing to the negligence of some of the ministers of the Chapel, and that fines of 1*d.* and 2*d.* should be inflicted for absence from Matins, Prime, High Mass, Evensong, Compline, and Processions.

In February, 1528, owing to the dissemination of heretical books, several students were imprisoned, including Garret, Clarke, Fryer, Fryth, Dyott, and Delaber. Foxe gives a wrong list, and states that Taverner was also 'imprisoned in a deep cave under the ground,' but he afterwards mentions that the Cardinal excused Taverner, 'saying that he was but a musician, and so he escaped.' Dean Higden, in his letter of March, 1528, tells Wolsey that he has not committed to prison Taverner or Radley, because 'they were not to be regarded,' and the worst charges against Taverner were 'hiding Mr. Clarke's books, and being privy to the letter sent to him by Garret after his flight.' A month later (April 2) Thomas Cromwell writes to Wolsey that 'his College chapel at Oxford is most devoutly and virtuously ordered: the daily service is solemn and full of harmony.' As against Foxe's account of Fryer's harsh treatment, it is pleasant to quote Fryer's own letter to Wolsey, dated September 16, thanking the Cardinal for having released him 'from that destruction occasioned by my own folly.'

Taverner resigned his post as Director of the Choir at Cardinal College in April, 1530, and was paid £5, being his half-yearly salary to March 25. On May 20, Dean Higden engaged the services of John Benbow, from Manchester, as successor of Taverner, who evidently had found a better post, and doubtless had followed the rising star of Master Thomas Cromwell. His contributions to Wynkyn de Worde's Song Book, published on October 10, 1530, are three, namely, 'The bella' (four parts), 'My heart, my mind,' and 'Love will I' (three parts each).

One of Taverner's friends, John Wendon, Mus. Bac., organist of Boston Parish Church, sent Cromwell a present of 'a fat swan and a fat crane' on January 8, 1535. Taverner himself secured a lucrative 'job' from Cromwell, and was appointed with another courtier called Jones to arrange matters for the suppression of the four friaries at Boston in August, 1538. Richard Ingworth, Bishop of Dover (an official receiver of the suppressed houses), wrote to Cromwell under date of February 2, 1539, that 'he received to the King's use the four friary houses in Boston, and gave them to Taverner and Jones.' The last notice of Taverner is on May 2, 1540, when he wrote to Cromwell on behalf of a relative. Less than two months later, on June 28, Cromwell was executed on Tower Hill, 'unwept and unpitied,' as Cardinal Gasquet writes. Probably Taverner did not long survive his patron, and, according to Baldwin's MS. (Ch. Ch., Oxford), 'he died at Boston, and there lieth.'

THE CHORAL WORKS OF S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

BY GEORGE LOWE

It is now more than twenty years since Coleridge-Taylor's first choral work, 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' was written, and since that time many new features, largely borrowed from the modern French school, have appeared in British music. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' 'The Apostles' and 'The Kingdom,' Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam,' 'Pierrot of the Minute' and 'The Great God Pan,' and Holbrooke's great dramas 'The Children of Don' and 'Dylan' are all of later date than 'Hiawatha,' whilst such men as Scott, Ireland, Vaughan Williams, Bridge, Bax, and Goossens, have since tinged British music with a new individualism.

Yet amid all the changes of idea and method we can ever look back to the work of Coleridge-Taylor as one of the beacon lights of British musical progress. He gained his high position by simple, natural means. As far as his technical equipment went, 'Hiawatha' was by no means complete, though the constructive skill evidenced in it is of no mean quality. Many composers of lesser fame, however, have possessed a far more comprehensive and ingenious technique than he, but have lacked the great essential that inspires and vitalises art, with which he was gifted—creative genius. His inspiration was born out of a power of expressing the simple, elemental things of life—love, joy, distress, sorrow, and despair. There was no laboured subtlety in his methods. The founts of his emotion welled up in clear streams straight from the heart, and the effect on his music was one of spontaneous sincerity. Another great quality of his gift of creative genius was his sense of the picturesque. He visualised his subjects with an eye that probed their many poetical possibilities and opened up new worlds of romance. Both these fine qualities were doubtless largely due to the strong atavistic strain in his nature. Born of an African father and an English mother, his subconscious self retained the instincts of his primitive paternal race and translated their spirit into music. It has been said that we inherit from everything that has preceded us, and Coleridge-Taylor had two main sources of inheritance; it was his black ancestry, however, that had the most vitalising effect on his work. He was always interested in anything connected with his father's race, and one of his most characteristic works for pianoforte, a set of twenty-four negro melodies, cleverly elaborated and varied, testify to that interest, whilst the greater part of his best work treats of primitive, elemental life. Its very picturesqueness alone appealed to him and stirred his brain to inspired thought, whilst his hand was graced by the cunning whereby to paint its scenes very vividly to the senses. When his British heritage roused him to action, the result was generally far less satisfactory. Though the work thus generated was often pleasing and gracefully conceived, it was also rather conventional and artificial in type.

One of the strong features of Coleridge-Taylor's music is its beautiful and unsophisticated melody, that flows through it freely and spontaneously. It is not introduced sporadically and with a half-apologetic air to lend relief to music of vague rhythm or of recitative-like phraseology. It is introduced unblushingly, supported by a conviction that vocal music should be lyrical in quality and of a sustained melodic pattern. In rhythmic development too Coleridge-Taylor's music shows much ingenuity of construction, though, so far as rhythmic variety in general goes, it is far outdistanced by the work of many of our modern men. In harmonic construction it follows the via media between the older and newer art, and though it makes no lavish employment of tonal experiments, it is nevertheless remarkably well varied and interesting. His vocal music, from a polyphonic point of view, shows many inequalities. Sometimes it attains to a wonderful beauty in which every phrase participates. At other times the polyphonic writing appears overcrowded and meaningless. He never obtained a complete grip on this branch of his art. Too often his music presented itself to his mind only in its broader features. Its details were lacking, and had to be filled in mechanically, so that in many cases they have the effect of mere padding. As we have before pointed out, it was in expressing the elemental emotions that the composer was most happy. It is the humanistic quality of his music that makes so much of it still so popular, that goes straight to the heart and does not knock for entrance in vain. It asks for a sympathetic response to emotions that were our ruling masters when the earth was young, and which will maintain their sovereignty when it has grown old. And surely such art has a greatness of its own.

Coleridge-Taylor had one great misfortune: his first choral work had such an ovation when it was produced that none of its successors was ever able to oust it from its premier place in popular esteem. Some of those successors were undoubtedly of feebleness of inspiration, yet there were one or two others of fine poetical imagination that it could hardly be in the interests of British music to relegate to the limbo of forgotten things. Our art treasury would be considerably the poorer did they not exist. It is easy to participate in the popular liking for the picturesque qualities of 'Hiawatha,' but it is not so easy to understand the complete neglect of such poetical conceptions as 'Meg Blane' and 'Endymion's Dream.'

'The Song of Hiawatha' stands in no need of partisanship in spite of the slings and arrows of those who see no merit in anything unless it is abstruse. In 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' for instance, the clever handling of rhythms throughout and the passionate intensity of its romantic tenor song, 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' rest on too sure a foundation of solid achievement for hyper-criticism to do anything but demonstrate its own weakness, whilst the heartrending pathos of 'The Death of Minnehaha' can hardly fail to appeal to anybody whose feelings have not been blunted by his intellect. They have gained the 'Order of Merit' from the hands of most musicians, amateur and professional, and that decoration seems well deserved. The last part of the trilogy, 'Hiawatha's Departure,' has failed to gain the esteem of the two earlier parts. It certainly lacks the homogeneity of its predecessors, and in rhythmic development it is less noteworthy; yet it does not lag far behind them in attractive melody. The opening soprano solo, 'Spring had come,' is a beautifully fresh and joyous number. The account of Iagoo's wanderings and the mockery of his companions is delightful, whilst 'Hiawatha's Vision' is a noble baritone solo. Nor does one easily forget the beauty of the tenor solo, 'Then the Black-Robe chief, the Prophet,' or the dignified farewell to Hiawatha at the close. Generally, however, it must be confessed that the solo-writing is much more convincing than the choral writing in this portion of the work.

The cantata, 'The Blind Girl of Castél-Cuillé,' produced at the Leeds Festival, 1901, is founded on a translation by Longfellow of a Gascon poem by Jasmin. It is admittedly the feeblest choral work that the composer ever penned, and came with rather a feeling of shock to those who were anticipating much from him. His lack of discrimination in the choice of subject-matter was, however, largely to blame. Longfellow's translation is tedious and artificial in character, with no lines of real imaginative beauty, and with no picturesque qualities whatever. The composer seems to have entered upon his task dispiritedly. The poet's verse failed to move him, and he wrote conventionally and without enthusiasm. The banal setting of the lines commencing 'The roads should blossom, the roads should bloom,' for chorus, which is heard so many times during the first part of the work, is sufficient to show how little his heart was in his task. There is some dramatic writing towards the close, and here and there, scattered through the cantata, are charming passages of lyrical melody; but generally it is machine-made, uninspired, and dull. In contrapuntal interest, too, it is singularly lacking.

The failure of 'The Blind Girl of Castél-Cuillé' to achieve the distinction that had been hoped for it, led many to believe that Coleridge-Taylor had exhausted the whole of his powers in 'Hiawatha.' The fine work, 'Meg Blane,' that followed, and was first performed at the Sheffield Musical Festival in 1902, was a sufficient refutation of this reproach. Shorter than its predecessors, it is framed for mezzo-soprano, chorus, and orchestra, while the poem, by Robert Buchanan, has a rugged, elemental strength that could hardly fail to make a powerful appeal to the mentality of the composer. The music is in turn fiercely wild, dramatic, and pathetic. There is an economical use of thematic material, but it is employed throughout in graphic and finely-suggestive fashion. The music makes no pretence at subtlety, but aims at broad, dramatic effects. We do not feel that it had its birth within the mind of a man cramped in the narrow boundaries of four walls, but within the soul at grip with the boundless nature forces of the universe. It is not the intricate relationship of man with man, with its many problems, that the composer unfolds before us so vividly, so much as the relationship that binds man to his Creator. That is greater than all human bonds, greater than all thought, but simple, too, because it leaves one absolutely dependent on one Supreme Mind. One feels, then, in 'Meg Blane,' as one feels in the old Greek tragedies, the stirring of just those elemental emotions of the human individual that forge a link between him and the Eternal Mind—hope, fear, impotence, pity, distress, and despair—and in its very simplicity yet intensity of expression we feel the work fully justified. A fine solo, 'Lord, hearken to me! Save all poor souls at sea,' is full of a passionate pleading, urged through pity, and the ensuing chorus describing the frail bark contending with the fury of the storm-lashed sea is finely dramatic, whilst the distressful entreaty of the solo, 'Ah, God, put out Thy Hand,' wonderfully depicts the agony of mind of the suppliant. And so this rhapsody of the sea, with its alternating hopes and fears, proceeds with powerful impulse to the dramatic climax where the brave Meg Blane, who has set out to save the perishing crew, is herself engulfed beneath the cruel waves. Fate has claimed its victims, but God is the Controller of the waves and storms—that is the feeling we have at the close of 'Meg Blane.' Why is this fine work so rarely heard?

'The Atonement' was written in 1903, and was Coleridge-Taylor's sole attempt at a sacred cantata. In spite of much beautiful melody that the work contains, it cannot be said to be very successful from a devotional point of view. The composer's sense of the picturesque and his dramatic genius here came to hamper him. They gave to his music a feeling of unreality—as if one were assisting at the presentation of some imaginary drama behind the footlights, decked out in all the theatrical adjuncts that could give effect to the events visualised. One never feels that he is in the presence of the anguish of the great world tragedy. The music is often dramatic and beautiful, but it lacks the uplifting power that bears the soul into the highest regions of sublime contemplation. The spirit is held prisoner on earth to witness a melodrama, whereas its wings should bear it to the empyrean. The best parts of the work are certain solos allotted to Christ, the prayer of the Holy Women and Apostles (which goes to redeem much of the rest of the cantata), and the beautiful trio for the three Marys, 'Son of mine, my tears are falling.' Pilate's tenor solo, 'Breath of my life,' in the fourth part is fervent, and has much passionate beauty, but seems more like an excerpt from grand opera than from a sacred composition.

The 'Bon-Bon' Suite was published in 1908, and consists of six pleasant numbers (unconnected with each other) for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra. They have not the individuality of the composer's best work, but are by no means of negligible quality. There is much charm in 'The Fairy Boat,' and 'To Rosa,' whilst 'The Watchman' is quaintly and cleverly written, and there is a finely infectious spirit about 'Say, what shall we dance.' All the poems of this Suite are taken from Thomas Moore.

In 'Endymion's Dream'—for soprano and tenor soli, chorus, and orchestra, published in 1910—the composer made his first appearance in the realm of fantasy and with marked success. The poem is the work of C. R. B. Barrett, and the subject was one that appealed very much to the picturesque sense of Coleridge-Taylor. It contains much love-music of great beauty. In places we feel as if the spirit of Wagner's 'Tristan and Isolde' has caught the composer in its toils, for rarely did he pen music of greater fervency. In fact, Wagner's influence is present throughout, but it is only in this work of the African composer's that it obtrudes. The exquisite opening passages have some of the feeling of the 'Tannhäuser' Venusberg music, and are full of delightful fancy. Selene's solo, as she bends over Endymion, is very tense in mood, whilst Endymion's solo on waking, 'Who calls,' passes through many shades of emotional feeling and at the close becomes quite ecstatic. A duet which is heard later, 'O vision vain,' is also passionate in its phraseology and full-blooded in its vitality, whilst the closing passages of the work are dignified and impressive.

In Coleridge's 'Kubla Khan,' our composer had an Oriental and fanciful subject eminently suited to his genius, and it still remains one of his most picturesque works though it has not the intensity of some of them. It is written for solo, chorus, and orchestra, and has a long interesting prelude in which the main themes of the score are introduced. The simple subject with which the choral part of the work opens, to the lines 'In Xanadu did Kubla Khan a stately pleasure dome decree,' is of great fascination, and makes numerous appearances during the musical progress. There is also some very interesting writing beginning with the line 'The shadow of the dome of pleasure,' during which the main theme of the movement is cleverly developed. The work, generally, is original and unconventional throughout, and rhythmically very happy in effect.

Coleridge-Taylor's last cantata, 'A Tale of Old Japan,' was published in 1911, and has since proved the most popular of all his works since 'Hiawatha.' It is written for soli, chorus, and orchestra around a poetically-conceived and pathetic story by Alfred Noyes. In it we find the composer indulging in a new idiom with splendid success, and he has made out of the touching narrative of the devotion of the little Japanese maiden, 'O Kimi San,' to her artist-lover, Sawara, and her subsequent death, a beautiful picture of simple, unaffected charm. The various scenes depicted are full of variety, and none are really lacking in interest, though, naturally, some are finer than others. The opening passages, descriptive of Kimi and her father, are delicious. The ensuing movement in waltz rhythm for chorus, 'Peonies, peonies crowned the May,' is dainty and tuneful, though rather less individual in character. It leads up to a delightful quartet, 'He could paint her tree and flower,' in which the feeling is much more Oriental, and there is a beautiful pathos in the later quartet, 'Lying on the golden sand.' The soprano solo, too, 'So in her blue kimono,' is exquisite, and quite one of the gems of the cantata. And so the music proceeds in simple, dramatic, and touchingly-pathetic fashion, till we reach a short interlude in which we have to imagine the passage of three years. There is less interest in the music that immediately follows, 'Moon and flow'r, flow'r and butterfly'; but there is fine emotional feeling in the ensuing chorus, 'Dumbly she turned and left them.' There are then some eloquent reappearances of earlier subjects till we reach the painfully-pathetic closing picture. This is beautifully limned, and unforgettable in its simple sincerity and pitiful sadness. The composer never wrote anything finer.

And the bright genius whose imagination opened up so many new worlds for us, and who appealed so strongly to the emotions that Nature stirs up in every man, was destined to die at the early age of thirty-nine years! We owe a debt of gratitude, not nearly yet paid in full, for the magic spell his work casts over us, and we must ever think regretfully—futile though such thoughts may be—of what more he might have achieved had he not been cut down in his prime. As with Shakespeare's heroine, death came to him 'like an untimely frost.'

Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Death of Minnehaha' was recently performed for the first time in Jamaica by the Kingston Glee Singers, under the direction of Mr. George D. Goode.

THE COMPOSER AND THE PUBLIC

BY STANLEY H. CLARKE

Musical art suffers much from the misguided attentions of two unwitting enemies. One is the superior person who speaks slightly of all the lighter and popular forms of art, and the other is he who is persistently bewailing the fact that good music is not wanted and that only rubbish can be popular. Perhaps we ought to say that these are two aspects of the same mistaken attitude, an attitude which is most mischievous in its effect on musical progress. There is indeed no subject in art upon which so much confusion of thought prevails as this question of public taste, and it is especially marked with regard to music. The majority of mankind, though possessing a certain power of logical reasoning, do not overwork that faculty, and many of us find a substitute for thought in the empty catch-phrases and faulty generalisations of others. Two of the hardest worked of these are the terms 'popular' and 'classical' music, which are generally used to denote music with a tune in it, and music without; or, as the above-mentioned cynics have it, bad music (which pays), and good music (which doesn't).

That this crude division of music is false is palpable to anyone of open mind who does not ignore facts. While it is true that a man would not expect to make a fortune out of symphony-writing (it is believed that Beethoven had not that idea when he wrote the C minor), it is also true that some 'classical'* music is very bad and some 'popular' music very good. Yet if the average person be told that popular music need not be rubbish, though it often is, and that much of the present stuff would be more popular if it were better written, one is put down as either a crank or a humorist. The ordinary professional musician, even more than the layman, is obsessed with the fallacy that because bad work exists, it exists because of its badness, which is false logic. In fact, the non-musical person's views are often refreshingly original and catholic, while the professional's training sometimes induces this rigid classification of music into real music on which he is fed, and 'rubbish' which the wicked public force him to play. Thus at one extreme we have the man with no pretensions to taste—whose natural taste is in fact healthy enough, but who went go within a mile of a symphony concert because he thinks it is something beyond the ken of ordinary mortals—and at the other the over-superior musician, or enthusiastic student, who regards all music other than that by five or six great masters as of no account. We have known one of the latter refer to Sullivan's music as that 'comic opera rubbish.' Yet anyone who does not realise the exceptional genius of that truly great musician has not got the beginnings of a true musical education. It should not be overlooked that the first test of any work should be: Does it fulfil its aim, and is it suitable for its conditions? It is unprofitable to ask whether Sullivan should rank with masters of grand opera or the symphony, but it is a fact beyond argument that in his own inimitable sphere he was as great a master as any composer who ever lived: for he was that rare phenomenon, a great popular writer who was both greater and more popular than others.

There are pieces styled simply 'waltzes' which are recognised classics and veritable gems of art. In fact, the dance music of Strauss, Dvorák, or Chopin is alone sufficient to refute snobbish class-distinction in music. Much of Grieg's music was not merely intended for a narrow circle of cultivated listeners, but for his countrymen generally, who adored and honoured him as a national hero.

Moreover, the common idea that the public is tyrannic in its demand for rubbish, and the publisher and composer slaves to its will, is not strictly true, as it does not accurately represent the actual conditions of modern commercialism. It would, however, be correct to say that the composer and public alike are often at the mercy of the big publishing syndicates. But this phase will be dealt with later.

The public like a certain type of music for a certain purpose, be it a waltz or a patriotic ballad, or a Coronation march. But within that type there remains ample scope for genuine artistic work and freshness of style—quite enough to show whether the writer be indeed a composer or merely a charlatan.

We readily admit that empiricism and superficiality in art are not so evident nor so immediately dangerous in result as in, say, bridge-building or taxi-driving (to mention two other arts), but they are as much to be condemned. Yet when a musician decries certain light music, people always infer that he dislikes it because it is not more serious or 'classical,' as they will have it. Some musicians may be guilty of this superior attitude, as we have said; but the true artist is not such a foolish or unreasonable being. What he does know is that much of this light music, whether it be accidentally popular or not, fails in its professed object: it is badly conceived and badly written. If a dance movement, it has galvanic energy instead of real vitality and exhilaration; if a love song, it reveals treacly, weak sentiment instead of real passion. (The reader who at this point naturally asks 'Why, then, is this music popular?' is entreated patiently to wait and see.)

Most musical comedies are poor not because they lack the grand opera touch, but simply because they are second-rate. They do not pretend to be grand, but they do claim to be 'catchy,' and when the musician knows that they could be ten times as catchy if they were written by artists who knew their job as well as a good engineer knows his, there is ground for complaint. It is time it was recognised that to give the keenest satisfaction and real pleasure it is not enough merely to fill pages of the score with quick 6/8 or 2/4 time, badly orchestrated and with the drums used in almost every bar. This is no doubt very effective, but there must be brains behind it. In fact, regarding tunefulness and brightness alone, it is no exaggeration to say that a page of Mozart, Haydn, or Schubert has more than the entire score of some of these popular creations. The greatness of Mozart is not alone in the Symphonies, but is found in the 'Magic Flute' and 'Figaro' also.

It is rightly assumed that melody is a chief factor in the appeal of music, but the importance of harmony is often underrated. The 'man in the street,' when he cries 'Give me a tune I can whistle,' thinks he has summed up all. He does not—nor can he without a composer's training—know that harmony is as much responsible for the effect of a favourite passage as mere melody. A tune is bound up with its harmony and is often quite at its mercy, and no melody can be heard entirely isolated from all accompaniment without suggesting some harmony, though the ordinary man is unconscious of it. To take an example quite at random: the initial germ of the chorus of that popular success 'The long, long trail' is more of a monotone than a melody. It owes its hold on the listener to the effect of one note repeated above the harmonies which slide smoothly from the major to relative minor key (a good old reliable effect).

* This word in relation to music sadly needs a rest, as it is so often misused. Who ever speaks of a classical picture or a classical novel in exactly the same sense? The ordinary listener dubs everything 'classical' which he does not like. What pedants call 'classicism' is nothing but the transformation apparently brought about when the dust of years settles on what was once a romantic masterpiece.—Cyril Scott, in 'The Philosophy of Modernism.'

Again: some fairly accomplished melodists are lacking in rhythmic force and variety, and the result is music which, though pleasing up to a certain point, can express only a limited vein of sentiment (mostly soporific). The happiest conjunction of melody, harmony, and rhythm is naturally only rarely achieved by one writer, and when it is, then we have men like Sullivan. Edward German, though he repeats himself unduly, is a worthy successor. 'Merrie England' alone rises above its contemporaries as Snowdon above the Traeth Mawr.

One of the most popular entr'acte pieces ever written is perhaps Elgar's 'Salut d'Amour,' and it is mentioned here because it aptly illustrates a point already made. We have often heard this work disparagingly referred to, or admiringly instanced as 'the sort of thing that pays,' by people who showed no knowledge whatever that such a piece differed in any way from the countless effusions of our hack-writers. They say, 'Ah! that was the young Elgar writing pot-boilers.' To which we would reply, 'Yes! but how superior to other people's pot-boilers!' To anyone of discernment the hand of a master is apparent in this trifling fragment. Let him who wishes to learn something of composition study even such a slight piece as this, and then turn to some of the many other effusions of a like purport. Note also that this little work is not likely to die for many years yet, despite its familiarity. Apart from the position of its composer, its sustained vogue is due to its intrinsic superiority.

This brings me to the problem of the relationship (if any) between art and profit.

Dismissing, then, the hasty and utterly false contention that popular music necessarily means bad music, I commence with the statement that the public, left to itself, has no taste at all either for good or bad. This is not a joke, nor is it merely a personal opinion, for it can be confirmed by appeal to responsible authority. First let me quote from one of a series of pamphlets recently issued by the Ministry of Reconstruction—that on 'Art and Industry.' The writer's name is not mentioned, but it is needless to record he is a practical master of his subject. He says:

'A study of the so-called "public taste" proves that the public is not an originating force by reason of its artistic demand. In matters of art the public never demands anything, because it cannot demand that of which it is ignorant: individual members of the public possess a sense of taste, and to some extent influence supply by the insistency of their demand at the shops they patronise, but they are comparatively few, and not an organized force; therefore, speaking broadly, it is fair to say that it is supply which creates demand! Public taste is the exercise of selection of the offer made to it. The more the offer improves, the more the public is stimulated in its selection; but conversely, deterioration in quality of offer is not met by sustained and effective protest from the public. The public is enormously receptive and docile, especially in its desire to be in the mode. In spite, however, of the things it will accept because it is the fashion, the most outrageous of these are comparatively short-lived.'

The above is well worth pondering, for it is very sound sense. To a similar effect, though in a more vigorous and entertaining manner, writes 'Criticus' in the Era. After saying that 'because the public swallows every third-rate joke and fourth-rate ballad that is thrust down its throat, this does not mean that the public would not prefer to swallow something else—it only means that the public is very hungry,' he goes on to say:

'The fact is the public takes what it can get, and if it can't get anything good it takes something bad; just as a starving man will eat his boots if he has nothing else to eat. Given a diet of boots, a man will of course begin to distinguish, to say, "These are jolly tasty boots," or "These boots are a bit tough, all things considered." But the fact that he declares some of the boots he eats to be excellent fare does not mean that he is a boot-eater by nature.'

Again:

'The public has no special hankering after trash. There has been trash on the stage ever since the stage came into existence; but this is the first time there has been what you might call a Trash Monopoly, a Trash Trust, and that is the only reason why trash to-day is so unpromisingly popular.'

The writer concludes by saying that the manager who gives the public something better will find himself 'not a Samaritan, but a millionaire.'

Now, without pressing the latter statement, there is no doubt whatever that the above arguments are unanswerable, and those who repeat the parrot-cry that the public is athirst for rubbish are speaking neither sound art nor advocating sound business.

It is sometimes suggested that good composers are at fault in turning up their noses at popular forms of music; but there is little in this idea. Few composers nowadays are so indifferent to the chances of worldly profit. I commenced these remarks by decrying artistic snobbishness, but the real composer has never committed this fault. In the old days Mozart wrote musical comedies which are now classics, and Beethoven wrote dance-music without being ashamed of the fact being known.

What many producers have not yet grasped, however, is that they will not rouse the public to wild enthusiasm simply by giving them mediocrity; and so long as they are content with asking for the 'usual stuff that takes' they will not find a Sullivan. For the crux of the whole matter is that to produce outstanding work, even of a popular kind, the composer must cling to his ideals, and must continually nourish the artistic impulse within himself or he will get nowhere. But like the famous goose of the golden eggs, he must not be interfered with; nor must he be treated as a perverse young person whose best ideas should be suppressed, lest he deliver up symphonies when he is asked for waltzes. As Arnold Bennett says, 'To make the largest possible amount of money out of an artist, the only way is to leave him alone.'

SIR GEORGE GROVE: A CENTENARY APPRECIATION

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

On August 13 occurred the centenary of the birth of Sir George Grove, and yet the event passed by almost unnoticed.

George Grove was born at Thurlow Terrace, Wandsworth Road, Clapham, and his hundredth anniversary is worthy of being referred to, if only by reason of two outstanding works: (a) the projection of the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' and (b) the organization of the Royal College of Music. These works did not engross his activities, and we find him as editor of Macmillan's Magazine in May, 1868 (in succession to Prof. Masson), also as co-editor of the 'Dictionary of the Bible,' a work which stimulated the formation of the Palestine Exploration Fund. He also, for forty seasons, contributed the greater portion of the valuable analytical programmes of the Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace—a task suggested to him by Sir August Manns. In addition, he published a critical examination of Beethoven's Symphonies and Prefaces to Otto Jahn's 'Life of Mozart' and Hensel's 'Mendelssohn Family,' together with numerous contributions to various magazines. In fact, his versatility drew from Robert Browning a memorable letter in which Grove is described as 'the Orientalist, the Schubertian, the Literate in ordinary and extraordinary.'

Those who associate the name of Grove with the Dictionary which bears his name may be surprised to learn that originally he was a civil engineer, and served under Stephenson at Chester and Bangor—superintending the erection of the tubular bridge at Menai. He was appointed secretary to the Society of Arts in 1850, and, in the following year, married the sister of Dean Bradley of Westminster. It is worthy of mention that on the occasion of his receiving the honorary degree of LL.D. from Durham University, in 1875, the public orator laid stress on Grove's contributions to Biblical research and geography—ignoring his musical services.

As to his musical heroes Grove most honoured Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Handel, Schumann, and Brahms, but, strange to say, he rather disliked Wagner, whom he met, in 1877, at Dannreuther's house in Orme Square, London.

In addition to his honorary degree from Durham he received a similar degree from Glasgow University, and, in 1883, was knighted on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone. He was made a C.B. in 1894, and was presented with his bust (by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, R.A.) on his retirement from the Royal College of Music—being the gift of the pupils—a gift which he bequeathed to the College, where his name is perpetuated in the George Grove Memorial Scholarship.

It is almost unnecessary to add that an excellent 'Life of Sir George Grove,' by C. L. Graves, was published by Macmillan in 1904.

Occasional Notes

John o' London's Weekly recently asked a number of well-known writers and a couple of painters how they stood in the matter of appreciation of music. The replies were illuminating. None showed any knowledge of the art, only four—Mr. Conrad, Mr. Galsworthy, Miss May Sinclair, and Mr. Augustus John—expressed any enthusiasm for it, and the remaining eleven were either indifferent or anti-pathetic. Miss Rose Macaulay's answer is amusing, and just what might be expected from the author of 'What Not.' She says: 'I have never learnt anything about music, and certainly am not musical; but I like to hear it, particularly bad music. I know when it is bad, but still enjoy it. I don't mind good either, if the other is unobtainable.' Mr. W. W. Jacobs is quite definite in his liking for military bands, pianofortes, organs, and bagpipes, but gets a bit doubtful when classical music comes up. He decides, however, that he doesn't mind it 'if it includes an easy chair, a bright fire, and a good cigar.' But, as becomes a humorist, he adds that he can enjoy it without these accessories 'if it is very solemn and sad.' Mr. H. G. Wells takes the line Dr. Johnson took about a woman's preaching—it is worth hearing, but not worth going to hear. 'I like classical and some modern music very much—but not to the extent of going to the opera. Music has to come to me, and I don't want more than an hour of it at a time.' Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is annoyed by it—'especially in restaurants and other inappropriate places.' This 'especially' is promising, and when Sir Arthur goes on to say 'I always feel there is music which would move me greatly, but I never quite seem to get it,' we have an idea that the root of the matter is in him, and that some day he may see the light. Mr. Chesterton evidently couldn't be bothered. His wife wrote: 'My husband just asks me to inform you that he is so ignorant of music that he doesn't even mind it.' So that was that!

The gem of the collection however is the reply of the Honourable John Collier. He begins splendidly: 'I am a passionate lover of music.' Now here, we say, is the goods. It is quite refreshing to find a painter so appreciative of a sister art. We don't even feel that he is letting us down when he goes on to say, 'except when it distracts my attention from more important occupations, such as eating my dinner.' After all, there are occupations to which the hearing of music must give way, and feeding is one of them. Nor do we part company with him when he says: 'Also it always lasts too long; musicians never know when to stop.' We still go with him, because a passionate lover of music who likes it in moderate doses is evidently a bit of an epicure—the kind of music-lover who wants it little and good, and with plenty of time to savour it fully. After this fine start however, Sir John comes down with a rich dull thud: 'Again, it has the disadvantage that one tune so closely resembles another that I never can tell them apart. Surely there must be something wrong with an art which shows so little variety.' There have been others who have found this difficulty. There was Lamb, and we have all met the man who knows only two tunes, one of which is 'God save the King' and the other isn't. And the writer once saw the congregation at a village church standing during the playing of the 'Dead March' in memory of a deceased royalty, while the squire, a J.P. and other important public things, stalked down the aisle, wondering (as he explained afterwards) why everybody else was waiting. But in such cases the sufferers never think of blaming the music. They know the deficiency is nearer home. The J.P., for example, didn't say: 'Surely there must be something wrong with the "Dead March" if it is so much like the other pieces with which the organist plays us out that I reached for my hat at the third bar.'

Having gone down, the Honourable John stays down handsomely: 'But, worst of all, music is entirely divorced from intellect. . . . It makes no appeal to the mind, but only to the emotions, which is obviously immoral. As my emotions are not much stirred by it, it is to me a painfully dull form of immorality.' This passionate lover of music ends with a note of kindly tolerance: 'But as many worthy people (including monkeys) gain an honest living by music, far be it from me to decry it in any way. I have endeavoured to say the best that can be said for it.' And, implicitly, the worst that can be said for himself.

If a batch of eminent musicians were catechised on their literary tastes, can we imagine them making such a poor show as this? They could do so only by returning some such answers as the following:

'I learnt to read when a youngster, though I never got beyond words of one syllable, so I have few if any literary pretensions. But I don't mind sitting quiet if a friend has a really interesting yarn to read to me. I am very fond of the "pictures" and go two or three evenings a week. My favourite film is "The Clutching Hand," though "The Trail of Blood" runs it close.'

Or: 'I am passionately fond of reading, and should occasionally take down a book if I could find one short enough. But writers never know when to stop. Why take hundreds of pages to tell a story the plot of which can be given in a few lines? And anyway one book is pretty much like another. Unless I constantly refer to the title-page I never know whether I am reading Conrad, Mrs. Barclay, Arnold Bennett, or Nat Gould. There must be something radically wrong about an art in which the examples are as like as peas in a pod. Besides, there are no brains in it. It just appeals to the infantile love of a story—a thoroughly immoral proceeding. However, as a lot of worthy people (including printers' devils) make an honest living by this immoral pandering, never shall you find me saying a hard word about it.'

The fact is, the bulk of educated people still regard music as a mere toy and its practitioners as a not very amusing kind of entertainer. How much space do we find devoted to it in historical and sociological books? From Green's 'Short History' down to Mr. Chesterton's recent fantastic venture in the same field, all alike make little or no mention of the art that was popular centuries ago among hundreds of thousands who could not read or write and who rarely came into direct contact with any other kind of artistic expression. As Dr. Fellowes says in the Preface to his recently published volume of 'English Madrigal Verse':

To those who take a reasonable pride in the past achievements of their own countrymen, the names of Byrd, Morley, Wilbye, Dowland, and many another ought to be at least as well known as are the names of the great national leaders in poetry and painting. Yet many people of wide culture would confess unashamed to ignorance of such English composers, although they would be covered with confusion if they had to admit unfamiliarity with the achievements of, say, Marlowe or Dryden, of Reynolds or Turner.

Very common too is the total failure to recognise the intellectual power at the back of all fine musical work. 'Entirely divorced from intellect,' says the Honourable John; 'makes no appeal to the mind.' This pronouncement draws from Mr. Ernest Newman a rejoinder in the Sunday Times which is not a bit too strong:

And to the musician who is also interested in literature, and has some knowledge of the letters of his own country and epoch, the comparison in mere brain capacity between the great composers and the little literary men who do not think much of music is pathetically to the disadvantage of the latter. In everything that goes to make great art—in depth of thought and of feeling, in logical continuity, in the power to handle vast architectural masses—the creators of the ninth Symphony, 'Tristan,' the 'Ring,' or the B minor Mass are to the ordinary English novelist or journalist or painter of to-day as grown men to talkative children.

It is a pity John o' London didn't get answers from the few writers who are genuine music-lovers—Bernard Shaw, Arnold Bennett, Robert Bridges, and E. F. Benson, for example. The last-named, by the way, has just produced, in 'Queen Lucia,' a book the humour of which can be appreciated only by musicians—a very unusual kind of novel. The comedy gets rather near the farcical at times, but it is a rattling good, high-spirited bit of fun, and we advise our readers to get hold of it. But even Mr. Benson is guilty of a few slips. For example, the amusing passage concerning the 'submerged tenths' in Debussy is rather spoilt by the assertion of the prima donna (who is supposed to be well-informed, and is putting the others right) that 'you can't invert a fifth.' Can't we? Mr. Benson should test this by inverting a fourth—any old fourth will do—and then trying experiments with the result. But his book is so entertaining, and so rich in musical humour, that he may easily be forgiven much more than this.

On the whole the John o' London symposium helps us to understand the ease with which most novelists, when they take up their pen to refer to music, put their foot in it with sonatas in B sharp, deep-voiced sopranos who descend to B in alt, and gifted youths who, without previous instruction, seize a violin and hold the hearers spellbound with an oratorio.

The current number of the Musical Quarterly has a pronounced British flavour, no less than six of its twelve articles coming from writers on this side: Mr. Fuller-Maitland ('Towards Ugliness: a Revision of Old Opinions'); Mr. Herbert Antcliffe ('The Effect of the War on English Choral Music'); Mr. Colin McAlpin ('Musical Appreciation: a Plea for Catholicity'); Mr. Antrobus Harris ('Musical Animals in Ornament'); Mr. Frank Kidson ('Handel's Publisher, John Walsh'); and Dr. Annie Patterson ('The Folk-Music of Ireland'). The remaining articles deal with Malipiero, the ornaments in Bach's organ works (in which the author, Mr. Sumner Salter, is surely astray in the weak chromatic interpretation of the inverted mordents in 'Allein Gott in der Höh' sei ehr'), the Baron de Tremont's 'Souvenirs of Beethoven,' &c. There are some excellent illustrations, especially in Mr. Harris's paper, the plate 'An Ass playing the Organ' (Lower Rhenish School, 1500-20) showing not an organist, as some cynics might expect, but the real faithful Edward, spectacles on nose, all four hooves busy, taking nourishment at the same time in the shape of a thistle held to his mouth by a man looking round the corner.

The Welshman's love of choral singing is one of the household words of British music, but one can never cease to be astonished at the forms in which it shows itself. For instance, in the report in the North Wales Chronicle of the recent Harlech Festival, we read that :

From morning until evening it rained with unrelenting persistency. The opening hymn at the morning session had a baptism of rain, which continued practically without intermission until the final chords of 'Messiah' at the evening session had died away. In the morning the choirs, on a platform erected inside the walls, had what little protection was afforded by a canvas roof, but ere long the singers opened their umbrellas as the rain descended upon the platform in cascades. To add to the general discomfort the wind developed the sportive trick of lifting the canvas and dropping gallons of water on unsuspecting members of the audience. By the afternoon the Castle was innocent of all covering, the canvas having been removed either by the wind or the attendants, so the choir and the audience had the full benefit of the rain, which appeared to be hourly gaining in volume. Oft has 'Messiah' been heard in Wales, but the Harlech Musical Festival of 1920 will go down to posterity as the gathering where a choir of two thousand voices sang Handel's masterpiece to the accompaniment of a solitary pianoforte and where the principals rendered their solos under umbrellas!

This Festival is an annual affair to which choirs from a large surrounding district give devoted service. From Llanberis to Aberystwyth, towns and villages sent seventeen choirs—numbering two thousand singers—for a day's singing under Prof. Walford Davies. Six of the choirs joined together in an unrehearsed performance of 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure,' that earned enthusiastic praise from the conductor, and in what was apparently the one and only dry interval a professional orchestra played a movement from Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. The audience and choir showed no desire to curtail the programme, and the Festival was accounted a record success. Worcester festival-goers, comfortably cushioned in the Cathedral, please note!

The indefatigable management of the 'Old Vic.' has made further plans for helping South London to appreciate Opera and Shakespearean production. Miss Baylis announces a season to begin on September 18, and to last for sixteen weeks, under the musical direction of Mr. Charles Corri. The operas promised are 'Faust,' 'Il Trovatore,' 'Carmen,' 'The Bohemian Girl,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'The Marriage of Figaro,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Maritana,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Lohengrin,' 'The Magic Flute,' 'The Daughter of the Regiment,' and 'Tristan and Isolde.' Such a scheme has its financial problems, and an appeal is made for help in setting up a theatrical wardrobe that shall save the heavy price of hiring. The Carnegie Fund has granted fifteen hundred pounds towards the required five thousand.

THE INFLUENCE OF OCCIDENTAL MUSIC ON THE ORIENT

BY NORMAN PETERKIN

That Oriental art in its various manifestations has exerted an enormous influence on that of the West is a fact that can hardly be disputed. Perhaps only those who have lived in Oriental countries and are familiar with its art—whether it be that of music, painting, ceramics, decoration, &c.—can quite realise the extent of the influence. On returning to England after many years of life in Eastern countries, I have been astonished to find how little of the most advanced European art seems wholly original. For instance, the effects attained by our Futurist and Cubist painters and sculptors are far from being peculiar to them. In little native shops in Kyoto, the old and still unspoiled capital of Japan, I have seen water-colours, sketches, prints, that in drawing, colour, and general effect are of amazingly similar type to the work of the European Futurists and Cubists. I have also seen figures and heads executed in wood, soap-stone, marble, and other materials that are quite as startling in their conception as anything turned out by Epstein, Mestrovic, or even the more advanced work still of the German 'expressionist' Oswald Herzog.

Japanese art has in the past greatly influenced European art, but I should not care to decide as to whether it is now influencing our Futurists and Cubists, or whether it is a case of spontaneous conception of similar ideas in both lands.

In another direction, much has been said about the influence of the Orient supposed to be evident in the costumes and colour schemes of the Russian Ballet. Personally I think the ballet has never given us the unique colour combinations and decorative effects constantly met with in the East. Perhaps it is heretical to say so, but I found that some of the ballet's colour schemes irresistibly reminded me of the displays one associates with the windows of Liberty's, and Heal's in Tottenham Court Road, especially ballets like 'The Midnight Sun' and 'Thamar.' Perhaps I had better not say which I prefer!

In ceramic art the lovely work turned out by the Ruskin and Doulton potteries has its counterpart, both as to shapes and glazes used, in the Chinese pottery of certain periods. In this case, as the Chinese work long antedates the Western, there can be no question about the influence.

In the realm of dancing, we have had a deluge of 'Oriental' dances and dancers from Maud Allan to 'Chu-chin-chow.' I have witnessed the performances of a fair number, but with one exception, that of 'Roshanara,' I have seen nothing that convinced me it was Oriental either in atmosphere or accomplishment.

Oriental music has of course exercised a great influence on our own. There are very few of the moderns who do not reveal the influence somewhere in their work, including Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, and the modern French and Russian schools generally. Of our own men, Bantock is the one who is supposed to have come most under the fascination of the Orient. Strange to say, there is little in his work, fine though it be, that (to me) strikes a definite Oriental note, whereas I feel this note strongly in a great deal of Cyril Scott's music even where it is not concerned with Oriental subjects. However, it is not necessary to quote further instances of the general influence of the arts of the East on those of the West—it would be labouring the point, and in any case is not what I set out to write about. I see also that the Chesterian announces an article on 'Oriental influences in contemporary European music,' by Kaikhusru Sorabji, which should be welcomed by those interested in the subject. There is probably no one in England—or, for that matter, in Europe—better fitted to deal with it, for Sorabji, in addition to his Eastern heritage, possesses an encyclopædic knowledge of modern music, and one can look forward to an interesting and valuable article.

Though I have wandered from the point, I started out to write of exactly the opposite subject—the influence of Western music on the Orient. Some might be tempted to think that such an influence does not exist; but they would be quite wrong. The influence not only exists, but is growing rapidly. We are all aware that our composers write 'Eastern' music on occasion, though it would not be recognised as such by Orientals. It will probably surprise a good many people to learn that there are composers of Oriental birth writing 'Western' music. So far I have come across only two: Kaikhusru Sorabji, who is Indian, and Koscak Yamada, who is Japanese. That is, these two are the only men, so far as I am aware, who are writing music that in its scope and achievement can be placed in the same class as the best of our modern European writers. I have come across other composers of Oriental—or partly Oriental—birth who are writing music in light vein very successfully. Some of the Filipinos seem to possess remarkable gifts in this direction.

Unfortunately, in the case of Sorabji, none of his music is in print, and therefore available for general discussion or performance. I have seen and heard a good deal of it, and my own opinion is that he is a new and startling voice in our modern music. He has mastered all the technical resources of the art, which he uses with insight and surety, his handling of the modern orchestra being amazing. His works are chiefly in the larger forms, and are of a complex character. They include:

- 1915.—Pianoforte Concerto (A).
Six Songs to poems of Henri de Régnier,
Samain, and Pierre Louÿs.
Two Vocalises.
- 1916.—Orchestral work 'Chaleur.'
Pianoforte Sonata.
Pianoforte Concerto (B).
Songs to poems of Rollinat, Baudelaire, &c.
- 1917.—Songs by Dowson, &c.
Pianoforte Concerto (C).
- 1918.—First Pianoforte Concerto.
Songs by Baudelaire, Verlaine.
Two short Pianoforte pieces.
- 1919.—Pianoforte Sonata No. 1.
Fantaisie Espagnole, Pianoforte.
Incidental music to a play, 'The Rider by Night,' by Edward Lightfoot.
- 1920.—Pianoforte Quintet.
Prelude, Toccata, and Fugue, for Pianoforte.
Second Pianoforte Concerto.

Sorabji is a merciless critic of his own work, and has discarded all work previous to his first Pianoforte Concerto of 1918, as being immature. He has apparently absorbed and assimilated all the developments of modern harmony, and has succeeded to an uncommon degree in evolving an idiom (of a very advanced nature) that appears to be absolutely his own, yet in a great many ways basically Oriental. That is to say, one feels with his music that it could hardly have been written by any other than an Oriental. His rhythmic sense is tremendous. A great deal of his work has a boiling, surging effect, that is unlike anything I know in modern music: it gives one the feeling of an almost volcanic personality behind it.

I certainly think that when this music gets into print, and is performed, that it will become as much a storm centre of discussion as the music of Debussy, Stravinsky, Ravel, Goossens, and Schönberg.

The Japanese composer, Koscak Yamada, a fair amount of whose music is in print, is a writer of quite a different type, being not by any means a revolutionary, as is Sorabji. He is now in the early thirties, and commenced his musical training at the Imperial Academy of Music at Tokio, studying mostly with German teachers, who at that time ran whatever music there was in Japan. After a long period of studentship he became a teacher in the Academy, all the while devoting himself to composition in Western forms. He eventually left Japan for Berlin, where he continued studying and working for five years, Max Bruch, amongst others, displaying a lively interest in his work. His output at this time included operas, symphonies, &c. One of his operas, based on a Japanese subject, was accepted for production in Berlin, but was shelved owing to the war. Soon afterwards he returned to Japan, and has since devoted himself to composition, teaching, and conducting. He recently made a trip to the U.S.A., where he was one of the sensations of the 1918-19 New York musical season, many of his orchestral works being played under his own conductorship.

His output includes 'Autumn Festival' (Mōrike) for chorus and orchestra, 'The Dark Gate,' 'Madara no hana,' 'Blue Flame'—all symphonic poems; a symphony 'The Triumph of Peace'; 'Marie Magdalene' a choreographic symphony, and some vocal and pianoforte works.

A great deal of his earlier work displays the influence of the German classics, while the later leans to the methods of the modern French school. In common with Sorabji, Yamada displays fine musical craftsmanship and technical mastery; but unlike the former, he has not yet shown himself to be the possessor of any strikingly individual utterance, at least in his orchestral works. These, however, are interesting enough, and maintain a high level. They are as much deserving of performance as most of the orchestral novelties brought forward; nevertheless, one feels that they might have been written by any one of our well-schooled younger composers, for there is no definite individuality of utterance, and but little hint of their Eastern origin.

Some of the work written since his return to Japan from Europe seems to point to the fact that Yamada is now shedding the various influences that have hitherto moulded his work, and that a definite personality is emerging. His original Japanese songs reveal examples that are really interesting, and convince the hearer that in these he has succeeded in expressing, by means of a Western musical vocabulary and technique, something of the thoughts, feelings, and impulses that are of the essence of his own race and peculiar to them.

His arrangements of old Japanese songs and dances have considerable interest and exotic charm, and are of historical value. Skill is displayed in the manner in which this music is presented, so that we feel that here is authentic Oriental music as far as it can be expressed in terms of Western notation.

Yamada is a conductor of unusual ability, and a New York friend who is a prominent critic tells me that he considers him to be one of the most interesting and promising young conductors that have come before the American public. In his opinion Yamada is far greater as a conductor than as a composer.

Here then are two very concrete illustrations of the influence that Occidental music has begun to exert on the Orient and Oriental minds. To attain to a mastery of technical resources in a mode of expression strange to them is in itself a noteworthy achievement, but one that can be paralleled in other directions. What is more significant is the fact that Orientals, whose mental make-up is so different from our own, who so far as Occidental music is concerned have no tradition or inheritance of taste and feeling to guide them, who hear our music with such different ears as it were, can yet, in a short space of time, assimilate what we have to offer and in turn express themselves in a new medium with individuality and authority.

It must be recognised that it is not only a matter of learning a new language and expressing one's thoughts therein. In this case it means that a new view-point must be assumed, and a fresh mental development must take place before anything can be expressed that is of value or intelligible to the Occidental mentality. That is to say, the basic thought, impulses, and ideas which go to make up the personality to be expressed in terms of music, must be, if not actually altered, at least developed in new directions, before what is expressed as music can have much appeal to the average Westerner.

It is proverbial that the Oriental personality differs from our own in its make-up. Things that move us deeply and that possess great significance in our lives bear no meaning whatever to the Oriental. To take a common instance, how differently do they regard death! The thoughts and feelings it would give rise to in the Eastern mind are probably a complete reversal of those that would be prompted in ourselves by a similar contemplation. It is the same with our music. The greatest and most moving utterances of Western composers are meaningless to the Oriental, and not necessarily to the uneducated or lower class only. In turn, a great deal of Eastern music, even if it could be expressed in Western musical terms, would prove to be unbearable to us. We could not think of it as music at all; it would be merely noise to us, and actively unpleasant noise at that. Not only is the medium or material it uses beyond our comprehension or enjoyment, but what it strives to express is also alien to us. Nevertheless to the people whose utterance it is, it is all that is beautiful and vital.

So that if at first sight the fact that there are Oriental composers writing in Western idiom does not seem particularly remarkable, a little reflection and an endeavour to put ourselves in their place—i.e., write music in an Eastern idiom that will be intelligible and acceptable to Orientals—will soon suffice to prove that it really is a very remarkable achievement.

Western music is also exerting influences in the Orient in other and less valuable directions than the creative. There are now a rapidly increasing number of executive artists. This is far more understandable. Once the liking for European music has been cultivated and a certain amount assimilated, the necessary executive technique will soon be acquired, for all Eastern races are adepts at picking up anything that depends on manual skill, the Chinese and Japanese notably so. I have yet to hear, however, any Oriental executive artist whose performance was anything more than technically excellent.

One Japanese prima donna, Tamaki Miura, has achieved sensational success in America in operas like 'Madama Butterfly,' 'Iris,' 'The Geisha,' and others, and her success has been the signal for the appearance of other Japanese singers. I know also Malay, Chinese, and Filipino pianists and violinists who have given me pleasure, the more so when they have tried to afford me an idea of their native music instead of the Chaminade genre they usually dote upon. The Pathan and Punjaubi bandsmen of the Indian Army bands are also remarkably clever, and generally develop great sight-reading abilities. But I was never able to determine whether the Western music they played so well meant anything to them, nor could their European bandmasters enlighten me much. One friend told me he was quite convinced that it was merely a matter of parrot facility with them, and that they were completely indifferent and untouched by the music they played. On the other hand, another bandmaster of my acquaintance indignantly denied this, and assured me that they had strong likes and dislikes, and looked forward to new stuff—with an especial liking for Wagner excerpts!

The gramophone has played an enormous part in making Western music of the lighter type familiar to Eastern ears. At one time it was chiefly records of native music that were sold, but all this seems to be changing, and an enormous number of records of rag-time, light opera, and music-hall songs are disposed of direct to the natives. In China, much to my regret, gramophones, together with large orchestras, are gradually displacing the native orchestras that used to be so much a feature of every tea-house and restaurant. It is, indeed, rather remarkable how Eastern races have taken to our light music, especially rag-time. I have many times amused myself with noting the effect of European music on my native servants of different races—Malays, Tamils, Javanese, Chinese, Japanese. I have played on the pianoforte or gramophone all kinds of music—Stravinsky, Debussy, Irving Berlin, Elgar, Borodin, Lionel Monckton, &c. In every case the result was the same, they were always attracted to anything with strongly marked rhythm. Nothing else seemed to matter; the harmony might be ultra-modern and involved, or utterly elementary, so long as the rhythm was there. Borodin's 'Prince Igor' Dances drew them just as surely as Irving Berlin's 'Watch your step,' while such things as Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'une faune' found them absolutely indifferent and bored. Strong rhythm, therefore, seems to be the element that attracts them in Western music, and this doubtless explains why jazz and rag-time generally have attained such a hold. I was much interested to come across confirmation of this recently when reading a most interesting book on Indo-China by a French writer, Beaudesson. He tells how he made experiments with a gramophone on the Moi, one of the primitive races of Indo-China. In his own words:

'The choice fell on the "Spring Song," which however met with little favour. The audience evidently had no opinion of Mendelssohn. The small children made for their mothers' arms in terror, and were only consoled with difficulty. The general feeling was one of astonishment passing to displeasure. We hastily took off that record and replaced it by a hunting chorus plentifully sprinkled with the blare of horns. This met with a most enthusiastic reception. . . . We went on to the music-halls, and singers, and whistlers, and when the interval was announced after "Fou Rire," the entire audience went off almost convulsed with attempts to imitate it.'

Of the countries of the East that have taken most kindly to Western music Japan is the chief. Fifty years ago Occidental music was unheard and unknown in the land. There existed only the native variety, a good deal of which, incidentally, is very beautiful and acceptable to Western ears. When Japan started to modernise she did it thoroughly, and included music in the scheme. British and French bandmasters were brought in to train army and navy bands. A few years later Western music was introduced into the schools and colleges. Conservatories on Western lines were established, mostly with German teachers, who ran Japan's music for many years. The Japanese proved apt pupils, so much so that they are now quite competent to look after their own music, which they do. There is now very little to distinguish the Academy of Music, Tokio, from similar institutions in European centres. It turns out fully equipped students executively, who are absorbed into the numerous orchestras and bands that exist in the country. Most of its teachers are Japanese, and nowadays Western music has even penetrated into Court circles.

The same thing is gradually happening in China, but to nothing like the same extent, the spread of Western music being generally due to the missionaries and the ubiquitous gramophone.

That the influence which Western music is exerting is to be commended I much doubt. First of all, as already said, it is usually the lower forms of our music that are spreading—rag-time, musical comedy, &c. This element has tended to displace the native music in the affections of the people and push it into the background, as it certainly is doing in Japan and China. The native musician and his music are falling into disfavour, and in the end will die out, to be replaced by the mechanical European variety of the shoddiest kind. In a similar way the beautiful native costumes, materials, and hand-worked goods are being superseded by cheap machine-made European clothes.

I shall not soon forget the shock of one of my first experiences of Western music in the East. I had attended a performance in a little Malay theatre in an out-of-the-way district, the play being one of those old tales that date back hundreds of years. There had been some singing of rather plaintive native music which had interested and delighted me much. Then, to my stupefaction, one of the characters burst out into a distorted version of 'Yip-i-addy-i-ay!' sung to native words! I felt we were answerable for a good deal.

This kind of thing was to become a common experience, and I actually recall one performance of 'Macbeth' done into Malay, where various popular music-hall tunes were introduced, to the frantic delight of the native audience.

Civilization and progress, I suppose! Yes, Western music certainly is exerting a strong influence on the 'unchanging East,' and I for one wish it were not so.

THE MUSIC AND MUSICIANS OF DICKENS

By C. EDGAR THOMAS

(Concluded from August number, page 535)

II.

'Bleak House' provides us with that amusing character Matthew Bagnet, the ex-artilleryman. His appearance was remarkable and his 'musical abilities' were extraordinary. He appears before us 'tall and upright, with shaggy eyebrows, and whiskers like the fibres of a cocoanut, not a hair upon his head, and a torrid complexion.' Upon leaving the service, Bagnet adopted 'the musical business,' becoming a bassoon-player; upon which instrument he often 'blows away.' Occasionally, too, he speaks in short sentences, 'bassoon-like.' But let him speak for himself:

It was the old girl that brought out my musical abilities. I should have been in the artillery now, but for the old girl. Six years I hammered at the fiddle. Ten at the flute. The old girl said it wouldn't do; intention good, but want of flexibility; try the bassoon. The old girl borrowed a bassoon from the band-master of the Rifle Regiment. I practised in the trenches. Got on, got another, get a living by it.

Bagnet's Emporium is a place that every musical Dickensian would have wished to visit. It was one of the little shops in a street in the purlieus of the 'Elephant and Castle,' and had in its window a few fiddles, some Pan's pipes, a triangle, a tambourine, 'and certain elongated scraps of music.' Master Bagnet, too, played very creditably upon the fife.

The same book—'Bleak House'—introduces us to that irrepressible comic vocalist and character artist, Little Swills, the prototype of many engaged at those curious public-house sing-songs. With his gags and patter—as a true artist, mostly spontaneous—this worthy was a great success at the 'Sol's Arms.' When the Harmonic assemblies at that hostelry were suspended, Little Swills appeared at the 'Pastoral Gardens down the river,' where he sang comic songs, calculated, vide the bill, 'not to wound the feelings of the most fastidious mind.' Another member of the 'Sol's Arms' coterie was Miss M. Melvilleon, the 'noted siren,' who, notwithstanding 'some pretensions to musical ability,' did not allow her artistry to interfere with her domestic affairs, for she had her baby clandestinely conveyed to her every night to receive its natural nourishment during the entertainment. It is interesting to note that on one occasion the once popular song of 'King Death,' with 'Chorus by the whole strength of the company,' formed the week's special Harmonic attraction. The words of this song were by Barry Cornwall, and it was a great favourite of John Leech, the artist, who used to sing it. Mention must also be made of Little Swills's rendering of 'Listen to the Waterfall'—or, to be colloquially exact, 'Listen, listen, listen, Tew the wa-ter-fall,' which comes from Lord Mornington's glee, 'Here in cool grot.' Another song mentioned by Dickens in 'Bleak House,' is the famous Scotch air, 'We're a' noddin'.'

The Micawbers are a most important family of Dickensian singers. First of all the eminent Wilkins could both warble and hum, and complacently dispense many musical urbanities. His devoted spouse, too, was no mean vocalist, and her 'Little Taffine' and 'The Dashing White Sergeant,' among other efforts, no doubt helped her husband to bear with equanimity his many misfortunes. We read that Micawber cherished a particular liking for such ditties as Dibdin's 'Lovely Nan,' and 'Auld Lang Syne,' and Dickens has given us a picture of him leading with gusto the chorus of 'Gee up, Dobbin.' The musical abilities of this amusing couple were not denied to their offspring, the hopeful young Master Wilkins, who possessed of a remarkable 'head' voice, after failing to obtain a position as chorister in Canterbury Cathedral, descended—such is fate!—to singing songs across the fetid atmospheres of bar-parlours. David Copperfield has recorded that young Wilkins exhibited 'a certain expression of face as if his voice were behind his eyebrows,' when, 'as an alternative between that and bed,' he sang 'The Woodpecker Tapping.' Later he became a very creditable amateur singer, and we take leave of him after his rendering of 'Non Nobis' at the dinner given in honour of his sire at Port Middlebay, bowing to the plaudits of the select company.

In 'Little Dorrit' we may read of Frederick Dorrit. In his better days he had been a musical amateur of no small merit, and his house had ever been open to singers and musicians. When, together with his brother William, he fell from fortune, he contrived to maintain himself in part by playing a clarinet 'as dirty as himself' in the orchestra of a small and obscure theatre. The novelist tells us that 'he had been in that place six nights a week for many years, but had never been observed to raise his eyes above his music-book.' His brother William in former days had been a pianist—a fact that gained for him the good offices of the Marshalsea turnkey. Of him that dignitary says:

Brought up as a gentleman, he was, if ever a man was. Educated at no end of expense. Went into the Marshal's house once, to try a new piano for him. Played it, I understand, like one o'clock—beautiful.

'The Woodpecker Tapping,' already mentioned in connection with Master Micawber, is also referred to in 'Little Dorrit': 'Papa . . . is sitting prosingly breaking his new-laid egg in the back parlour over the City article, exactly like the "Woodpecker Tapping."' The song, it may be noted, is further alluded to in the 'Sketches' and in 'Martin Chuzzlewit.' 'Who passes this road so late,' the song associated with that redoubtable villain Rigaud, alias Blandois, was translated from the French by Dickens himself, and set to music by H. Dalton. Young John Chivery, Little Dorrit's humble lover, was evidently something of a dandy, for Dickens is careful to tell us that his pantaloons were so 'highly decorated with side stripes, that each leg was a three-stringed lute.' Many years after their engagement had been broken off, Mrs. Finching simperingly refers to a copy of the popular duet 'Paul and Virginia,' which should have been returned to her by her former fiancé Arthur Clennam; and the advice of that 'floury' widow Mrs. General to Amy Dorrit on deportment, &c., indicates that she might have gone far as a teacher of correct facial expression in singing:

You will find it serviceable in the formation of a demeanour, if you sometimes say to yourself in company—on entering a room, for instance—Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes and prism.

The dominant musical personality of Dickens's unfinished novel 'Edwin Drood' is John Jasper, with Mr. Crisparkle a good second. At times much controversy has waged over the precise position occupied by the former at Cloisterham Cathedral, but with that question we are not now concerned. What 'lay precentor' or 'lay clerk' may mean is immaterial; suffice it to say that Jasper had gained a reputation as a teacher of singing. Evidently he became tired of his Cathedral appointment, for we find him confessing to his nephew that 'even a poor monotonous chorister and grinder of music—in his niche—may be troubled with some stray sort of ambition, aspiration, restlessness, dissatisfaction, what shall we call it?' Going home to his bachelor rooms in company with Neville Landless and Edwin Drood, Jasper 'walking in the centre, hand to shoulder on either side, beautifully turns the refrain of a drinking song.' Jasper's knowledge of the old songs and melodies was considerable, and Dickens has presented him to us in two widely divergent musical silhouettes. To Mr. Sapsea, the pompous auctioneer, he once sang songs to his own accompaniment:

. . . no kickshaw ditties, favourites with national enemies, but gave him the genuine George the Third home-brewed; exhorting him (as 'my brave boys') to reduce to a smashed condition all other islands but this island, and all continents, peninsulas, isthmuses, promontories, and other geographical forms of land soever, besides sweeping the seas in all directions. In short, he rendered it pretty clear that Providence made a distinct mistake in originating so small a nation of hearts of oak, and so many other verminous peoples.

On another occasion he chants choir music 'in a low and beautiful voice for two or three hours':

Mr. Jasper is in beautiful voice this day. In the pathetic supplication to have his heart inclined to keep this law, he quite astonishes his fellows by his melodious power. He has never sung difficult music with such skill and harmony as in this day's Anthem. His nervous temperament is occasionally prone to take difficult music a little too quickly; to-day, his time is perfect.

The Rev. Mr. Crisparkle at various times openly avows his admiration for Jasper's musical and vocal talents. After service he remarks:

I must thank you, Jasper, for the pleasure with which I have heard you to-day. Beautiful! Delightful! You could not have so outdone yourself, I hope, without being wonderfully well.

Crisparkle was actively associated with the 'Alternate Musical Wednesdays Society,' which body seemingly included glee-singing among its activities. Once we find him thus addressing Jasper:

We shall miss you, Jasper, at the 'Alternate Musical Wednesdays' to-night, but no doubt you are best at home. Good-night. God bless you. 'Tell me, shep-herds, tell-e-ell me; tell me-e-e, have you seen (have you seen, have you seen, have you seen) my-y-y Flo-o-ora-a pass this way.' Melodiously good Minor Canon the Reverend Septimus Crisparkle thus delivers himself, in musical rhythm, as he withdraws his amiable face from the doorway and conveys it downstairs.

Probably he sat up that night, as frequently he did, softly playing his piano and practising concerted vocal music.

'Sketches by Boz' were Dickens's earliest publications, and it is not a little curious that in these, in some instances immature pieces, he should have contrived to introduce quite a deal of amiable musical fun. In the very first of them—'Mrs. Joseph Porter'—we are given a highly-coloured but nevertheless extremely amusing picture of contemporary amateur theatricals. In choosing the locale of a suburban villa as the scene of his satire Dickens only did the obvious thing—notwithstanding that a still more obvious place could have been found in the boarding-house, that furnishes quite an excellent setting for a skit upon the vocal accomplishments, or lack of them, of the guests. Have we not all met the young gentleman—so beloved of musical-hall comedians—who sings 'The Wolf' in the drawing-room and acts it in the dining-room? and cannot we all call to mind an evening in which we mentally writhed under the obliging musical favours of certain fellow-boarders?

'The Boarding-House' gives us Mr. Wisbottle, engaged as a clerk in the Woods and Forests Office, and in his private time an inveterate whistler, with a great idea of his singing powers. When we first encounter him he is whistling 'Di piacer,' previous to which he has raised the wrath of a fellow lodger by whistling songs early in the morning. 'Sentiment' calls to mind Signor Lobschini, the singing-master with the splendid tenor voice, and Miss Lætitia Parsons, the brilliant musical executant who plays 'The Recollections of Ireland'—unanimously declared to be 'almost equal to that of Moscheles himself.' At the ball, it will be remembered, the 'harp' came in a state of intoxication. 'The Steam Excursion' includes a racy description of the musical entertainment contributed by those on board the 'Endeavour' at the water-party.

A different type of musical character has been etched by Dickens in 'The Uncommercial Traveller' in his portrayal of Mr. and Mrs. Banjo Bones. The former is a comic Ethiopian minstrel of a distinctly unprepossessing appearance, with blackened face and limp sugar-loaf hat. The latter is introduced to us 'in her natural colours—a little heightened,' the while sipping rum-and-water. The description of a sailors' singing-house at Liverpool is vivid and realistic. Peering through the rank atmosphere we can recognise Antonio the swarthy young Spanish guitar player, 'whose cracked guitar raises the feeblest ghost of a tune'; and that un-named young girl 'of a delicate prettiness of face, figure, and dress,' who plays a piano accordion and sings to the instrument, first a ballad about village bells and how they chimed, then a song about going to sea, and finally an imitation of the bag-pipes. And the landlord, 'a sharp and watchful man. . . . with tight lips and a complete edition of Cocker's arithmetic in each eye,' has surely been faithfully depicted; who when he heard of talent, trusted nobody's account for it, but went off by rail to see it. If true talent, engaged it. Pounds a week for talent—four pound—five pound. Banjo Bones was undoubted talent. Hear this instrument that was going to play—it was real talent! . . . On delicate inquiry as to salary paid for item of talent under consideration, Mr. Victualler's pounds dropped suddenly to shillings—still it was a very comfortable thing for a young person like that, you know; she only went on six times a night, and was only required to be there from six at night to twelve.

Mention should be made of Pip and the 'Harmonious Blacksmith':

. . . I informed him in exchange that my christian name was Philip. 'I don't take to Philip,' said he, smiling. . . . 'I tell you what I should like. We are so harmonious, and you have been a blacksmith—would you mind it?'

'I shouldn't mind anything that you propose,' I answered, 'but I don't understand you.'

'Would you mind Handel for a familiar name? There's a charming piece of music by Handel, called the "Harmonious Blacksmith."'

The songs and ballads referred to throughout the novels would comprise a lengthy list indeed, but space may possibly permit a few comments. 'The Bay of Biscay' is mentioned at least three times; 'Believe me, if all Jarley's Waxworks so Rare' was a parody of Moore's once very popular 'Believe me; if all those endearing young charms,' Micawber quotes 'The death of Nelson,' which song is also mentioned by Dickens on two other occasions. Byron's 'Fare thee well, and if for ever' ('Old Curiosity Shop') has had several original settings; and the same poet's 'My boat is on the shore' ('David Copperfield') was set to music by Cratherne; while Bayly's 'O give me but my Arab steed' was for long sung by Braham. 'The Old Curiosity Shop' provides the only mention of Carey's 'Of all the girls that are so smart'; and the 'Sketches' contain a reference to Dr. Arne's 'The soldier, tired,' which, first sung by Miss Brent, remained for years a favourite item with sopranos. Other songs mentioned at length, or referred to, include 'The Ratcatcher's Daughter'; the Jacobite song, 'Over the water to Chatlie'; 'Polly put the kettle on'; 'Wapping Old Stairs'; Dibdin's 'All's well'; 'Cheer, boys, cheer,' one of Henry Russell's most successful songs; 'My heart's in the Highlands,' the words of which are attributed to Burns; the familiar 'Though lost to sight, to memory dear'; 'I am a Friar of orders grey'; 'God bless the Prince of Wales'; 'A Cobbler there was,' sung in 'The Beggar's Opera,' 1728; Ben Jonson's 'Drink to me only with thine eyes'; Moore's 'When in death I shall recline,' and several others of his Irish melodies.

A vast subject such as Dickens and Music can here be sketched only in a very broad and general manner, and much has of necessity to be omitted. One would wish to write of Horatio Sparkins, who could play the pianoforte and violoncello as well as render his own compositions 'with taste'; of Captain Cuttle, whose musical favourite was 'Lovely Peg'; and of Sampson Brass and his vocal snatches 'compounded of the "Evening Hymn" and "God save the King."' Again, there are Mr. Wopsle; and Dick Swiveller and Mr. Chuckster, who combined in a rendering of the duet 'All's well'; Mr. Pancks and his part-singing; and Mr. Morfin, who so annoyed Carker with his violoncello and his frequent humming and whistling. On Morfin's own showing, he once whistled accurately the whole of a Beethoven Sonata.

Our excuse must be that the present canvas is not sufficiently large to accommodate all the fascinating musical characters of Dickens, and that these articles (brief in comparison with the subject) do not in any way pretend to be complete. Such as they are, however, they will have served their purpose if they are successful in stimulating an interest that is well worth pursuing.

Autumn.

A FOUR-PART SONG UNACCOMPANIED.

Words selected from a Poem by H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Composed by GEORGE TOOTELL.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Con moto, ma moderato.

mf

SOPRANO.
There is a beau-ti-ful spi - rit breathing now Its mel-low rich - ness on the

ALTO.
There is a beau-ti-ful spi - rit breathing now . . Its mel low rich - ness on the

TENOR.
There is a beau-ti-ful spi - rit breathing now Its mel - low rich - ness on the

BASS.
There is a beau-ti-ful spi - rit breathing now Its mel - low . . rich - ness on the Con moto, ma moderato. ♩ = 60.

ACCOMP.
(For practice only.)

clus - tered trees, And, from a beak-er full of rich - est dyes, Pouring new clus - tered trees, And, from a beak-er full . . of . . rich - est dyes, Pouring new clus - tered trees, And, from a beak - er full of rich - est dyes, Pouring new

clus - - tered trees, And, from a beak - er full of rich-est dyes, Pouring new

Pour-ing new glo-ry on the au - tumn woods, And dip-ping in warm light the pil - lared - glo - ry on the au - tumn woods, And dip-ping in warm glo - ry on the autumn woods, And dip-ping in warm light the glo - ry on the au - tumn woods, And dip - ping in warm clouds, dip - ping in warm light the pil - lared clouds.
 light the pil - lared clouds, the pil - lared clouds.
 pil - lared clouds, dip - ping in warm light the pil - lared clouds.
 light the pil - lared clouds, the pil - lared clouds.
 Morn, on the mountain, like a sum-mer bird, Lifts up her pur - ple wing; and in the vales . .
 Morn, on the mountain, like a sum-mer bird, Lifts up her pur - ple wing; and in the vales, in the
 Morn, on the mountain, like a sum-mer bird, Lifts up her pur - ple wing; and in the vales, in the Morn, on the mountain, like a sum-mer bird, Lifts up her pur - ple wing; and in the vales The Musical score for "AUTUMN." featuring vocal and piano parts. The score is written in G major (one sharp) and 3/4 time. It includes lyrics about autumn woods and mountains. The piano part features triplets and dynamic markings such as cres., dim., f, and p.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

No.			No.			No.
1	Our Native Land ...	Reichardt	2d.	87	A Finland love song...	H. Hiles	13d.	173	The Moon ...	H. Smart	3d
2	Cricketers' Song (T.T.B.)	Macfarren	2d.	88	Evening ...	"	13d.	174	A Spring Song ...	Ciro Pinsuti	3d.
3	Boating Song ...	Monk	2d.	89	To the Morning Wind	"	3d.	175	An Autumn Song ...	"	3d.
4	Song of the Railroads	Macfarren	3d.	90	To Daffodils ...	"	3d.	176	The Two Spirits ...	"	3d.
5	Good-morrow, fair ladies	Morley	2d.	91	Summer longings ...	"	3d.	177	The Crusaders...	"	13d.
6	Home Fairy (T.T.B.B.)	Winter	2d.	92	Night, lovely Night...	F. Berger	13d.	178	The Caravan...	"	13d.
7	The Wreath ...	Benedict	2d.	93	Essay, my Heart ...	"	3d.	179	Stradella ...	"	13d.
8	Countryman's Song ...	Rimbault	3d.	94	Childhood's melody	"	13d.	180	When evening's twilight	Hutton	13d.
9	Student's Greeting (T.T.B.B.)	Berner	2d.	95	Now ...	"	3d.	181	Absence ...	"	13d.
10	Magdalen College Song	Monk	2d.	96	Sunset ...	"	13d.	182	April showers ...	"	13d.
11	Integer Vitæ (T.T.B.B.)	Flemming	14d.	97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	"	3d.	183	The red, red rose ...	"	13d.
12	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren	2d.	98	Night winds that ...	J. B. Calkin	13d.	184	Beware, beware ...	"	13d.
13	Harvest Song ...	Macfarren	2d.	99	Breathe soft, ye Winds	"	13d.	185	The Sailor's Song ...	"	13d.
14	Come, heavy sleep ...	Doulton	2d.	100	My lady is so wondrous fair	"	13d.	186	Good-Night ...	"	13d.
15	Fisherman's Song ...	Rimbault	2d.	101	Chivalry of Labour (S.S.A.T.B.)	"	4d.	187	Blythe is the bird ...	"	2d.
16	In all thy need ...	Doulton	2d.	102	Come, fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)	"	3d.	188	Stars of the summer night	"	13d.
17	All among the barley	Stirling	2d.	103	Echoes ...	"	13d.	189	The hemlock-tree ...	"	4d.
18	When icicles hang ...	Macfarren	2d.	104	Phœbus ...	J. Barnby	13d.	190	Jack Frost ...	"	13d.
19	Jolly Cricket Ball ...	Monk	2d.	105	Luna ...	"	13d.	191	I loved her ...	"	3d.
20	Emigrant's Song ...	Macfarren	2d.	106	A Wife's Song ...	"	13d.	192	The Village Blacksmith	"	13d.
21	Shepherd's Song ...	Brewer	3d.	107	Home they brought...	"	13d.	193	Bait, The (Come live with me),	"	13d.
22	Pedlar's Song ...	Doulton	2d.	108	Annie Lee ...	"	13d.	194	Softly fall the shades of	"	3d.
23	Fairies' Song (S.S.S.S.)	Bishop	6d.	109	Starry Crowns of Heaven	"	13d.	195	Auburn (Sweet village)	"	3d.
24	June (S.S.A.) ...	F. Dun	2d.	110	The Wind ...	"	3d.	196	Bird of the wilderness	"	3d.
25	Awake! the starry	Mendelssohn	2d.	111	The Skylark ...	"	13d.	197	The Summer gale ...	"	2d.
26	Fair Flower ...	Rimbault	2d.	112	The Sands of Dee	G.A. Macfarren	13d.	198	I met her in the quiet lane	"	2d.
27	O happy he who ...	Gastoldi	2d.	113	Alton Locke's Song ...	"	13d.	199	If thou art sleeping ...	"	3d.
28	Green Leaves ...	Taylor	2d.	114	The Starlings ...	"	13d.	200	Spring Song ...	"	3d.
29	Dirge ...	S. Wesley	3d.	115	The Three Fishers ...	"	13d.	201	Good wishes ...	"	3d.
30	Angler's Trysting Tree	Corfe	3d.	116	The World's Age ...	"	13d.	202	Parting and Meeting	"	2d.
31	The Dream ...	Stewart	2d.	117	Sing heigh ho! ...	"	13d.	203	Whether kissed by sunbeams,	"	3d.
32	God speed the Plough	Richter	2d.	118	Fairy Song ...	A. Zimmermann	13d.	204	The roses are blushing	"	13d.
33	There is a ladie sweet	Ford	3d.	119	Good-Night ...	"	3d.	205	The Rivals ...	"	3d.
34	Football Song ...	Monk	3d.	120	Gone for ever ...	"	13d.	206	The village dance ...	"	13d.
35	Haymakers' Song ...	Stewart	3d.	121	Flowers ...	"	3d.	207	Song of the Gipsy maidens	"	13d.
36	Come away, Death ...	Macfarren	3d.	122	To Daffodils ...	"	3d.	208	The Watertall ...	"	3d.
37	Old May-day, in A ...	Benedict	13d.	123	Good Morrow ...	"	13d.	209	Over hill, over dale ...	"	3d.
38	Invocation to Sleep ...	"	3d.	124	Sigh no more, ladies	Macfarren	13d.	210	Love me little, love me long	"	3d.
39	A Night Song ...	"	3d.	125	You spotted snakes (S.S.A.)	"	3d.	211	Going a-maying ...	"	3d.
40	Dirge for the faithful lover	"	13d.	126	Take, oh take those lips away	"	13d.	212	See, the rooks are homeward	"	3d.
41	A Drinking Song (T.T.B.B.)	"	3d.	127	It was a lover and his lass	"	13d.	213	Sweet Lady Moon ...	"	3d.
42	Sylvan pleasures ...	"	4d.	128	O mistress mine ...	"	13d.	214	Hark, the Convent bells are	"	13d.
43	Consolation ...	H. Smart	13d.	129	Under the greenwood tree	"	13d.	215	When evening's (male voices),	"	3d.
44	Good-night, thou glorious Sun	"	13d.	130	Hark, the lark ...	"	13d.	216	Warrior's Song ...	"	2d.
45	Hunting Song ...	"	13d.	131	Tell me where's fancy bred	"	13d.	217	Absence ...	"	13d.
46	Lady, rise, sweet Morn's	"	13d.	132	The Violet ...	H. Leslie	13d.	218	April showers ...	"	3d.
47	Summer Morning ...	"	13d.	133	One morning sweet in May	"	13d.	219	The red, red rose ...	"	13d.
48	The Sea King ...	"	13d.	134	Daylight is fading ...	"	13d.	220	Beware, beware ...	"	13d.
49	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren	13d.	135	Down in a pretty valley	"	13d.	221	The happiest land ...	"	13d.
50	When Icicles hang ...	"	13d.	136	The Primrose ...	"	13d.	222	The Sailor's Song ...	"	2d.
51	Come away, Death (S.A.T.T.B.)	"	3d.	137	Arise, sweet love ...	"	13d.	223	Busy, curious fly ...	"	2d.
52	When Daisies pied ...	"	3d.	138	'Tis break of day ...	H. Smart	2d.	224	Good-night, beloved ...	"	3d.
53	Who is Sylvia ...	"	13d.	139	My true love hath my heart	"	2d.	225	Bacchanalian Song ...	"	13d.
54	Fear no more the heat	"	3d.	140	Doth not my lady come	"	13d.	226	Stars of the summer,	"	3d.
55	Blow, blow, thou winter wind	"	13d.	141	Spring Song ...	"	13d.	227	King Witlaf's Song ...	"	3d.
56	The Belfry Tower ...	J.L. Hutton	13d.	142	The Curfew ...	"	13d.	228	Tars' Song ...	"	3d.
57	England ...	"	13d.	143	Hear, sweet spirit ...	"	13d.	229	The hemlock-tree ...	"	4d.
58	Come, celebrate the May	"	13d.	144	Spring Voices ...	S. Reay	3d.	230	Jack Frost ...	"	3d.
59	Song to Pan ...	"	13d.	145	Waken, lords and ladies gay	"	3d.	231	The Lye ...	"	3d.
60	The Indian Maid ...	"	13d.	146	As it fell upon a day...	"	3d.	232	I loved her ...	"	3d.
61	The Pearl Divers ...	"	4d.	147	Huntsman, rest ...	"	3d.	233	Village Blacksmith ...	"	3d.
62	Robin Goodfellow	G.A. Macfarren	13d.	148	'Tis May upon the mountain	"	13d.	234	The Letter ...	"	3d.
63	Break, break on thy cold grey	"	13d.	149	Take, oh take those lips away	"	13d.	235	Shall I wasting in ...	"	4d.
64	Echoes (The Splendour falls)	"	13d.	150	The Rainy Day ...	A. Sullivan	13d.	236	Way to build a boat ...	"	4d.
65	Song of the Railroads	"	13d.	151	Oh, hush thee, my babe	"	3d.	237	I loved a lass ...	"	3d.
66	Christmas ...	"	13d.	152	Evening ...	"	2d.	238	The Lifeboat ...	"	13d.
67	Adieu, Love, Adieu ...	"	3d.	153	Joy to the Victors ...	"	2d.	239	Shepherd's farewell...	H. Smart	13d.
68	Sir Knight, Sir Knight	Macfarren	13d.	154	Parting gleams ...	"	13d.	240	The waves' reproof ...	"	3d.
69	The Wounded Cupid	"	13d.	155	Echoes ...	"	13d.	241	Ave Maria ...	"	2d.
70	Woman's smile ...	"	3d.	156	Spring ...	W. Macfarren	13d.	242	Spring ...	"	3d.
71	Autolycus' Song ...	"	13d.	157	Summer ...	"	13d.	243	Morning ...	"	13d.
72	Footsteps of Angels ...	"	3d.	158	Autumn ...	"	3d.	244	Hymn to Cynthia ...	"	13d.
73	The Sun shines fair ...	"	13d.	159	Winter ...	"	3d.	245	Cradle Song ...	"	3d.
74	The Pilgrims ...	H. Leslie	13d.	160	You stole my love ...	"	13d.	246	The joys of Spring ...	"	13d.
75	My soul to God ...	"	3d.	161	Dainty love... ..	"	13d.	247	Dream, baby, dream ...	"	3d.
76	Awake, the flow'rs unfold	"	13d.	162	Drops of Rain ...	J. Lemmens	13d.	248	A song for the Seasons	"	2d.
77	How sweet the moonlight	"	13d.	163	The Fairy Ring... ..	"	3d.	249	O say not that my heart	"	3d.
78	Land, Ho! ...	"	13d.	164	The Light of Life ...	"	3d.	250	Love and mirth ...	"	3d.
79	Up, up, ye Dames ...	"	13d.	165	Oh, welcome him ...	"	3d.	251	Sweet Vesper hymn ...	"	13d.
80	Thine eyes so bright ...	"	4d.	166	Sunshine through the	"	3d.	252	Crocuses and Snowdrops	"	13d.
81	All is not gold ...	Westbrook	3d.	167	The Corn Field... ..	"	13d.	253	Stars of the summer night	"	3d.
82	Hark how the birds ...	H. Lahee	3d.	168	Wake! to the hunting	H. Smart	13d.	254	Wind thy horn... ..	"	3d.
83	All ye woods (S.S.A.T.B.)	"	13d.	169	Dost thou idly ask ...	"	13d.	255	The land of wonders ...	"	2d.
84	My love is fair (S.A.T.B.)	H. Leslie	13d.	170	A Psalm of Life ...	"	13d.	256	Ye little birds that sit and sing	"	13d.
85	Charm me asleep (S.S.A.T.B.B.)	"	3d.	171	Only Thou ...	"	13d.	257	How soft the shades of	"	2d.
86	When twilight dews ...	H. Hiles	13d.	172	I prithee send me back	"	13d.	258	How sweet is summer	"	2d.

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS

SCOTTISH AIR

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY LADY NAIRNE

THE MUSIC ARRANGED AS AN UNACCOMPANIED PART-SONG FOR MIXED VOICES BY

JOHN E. WEST.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro non troppo e risoluto.

SOPRANO. pp (With closed lips.)

ALTO. pp (With closed lips.)

TENOR. mp Wi' a

BASS. pp (With closed lips.)

ACCOMP. (For practice only.) pp Allegro non troppo e risoluto. ♩ = 76.

hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', We'll

This Part-Song may be sung a semitone lower if found more convenient.

Copyright, 1920, by Novello and Company, Limited.

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

poco cres. mf
O, it's poco cres.

poco cres.
up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'!

poco cres. mp

owre the Bor - der, a - wa', a - wa', It's owre the Bor - der, a - wa', a - wa', We'll p (With closed lips.)

cres. rit. a tempo. dim. f on an' we'll march to Car - lisle ha', Wi' its yetts, its cas - tle, an' a', an' a'. Wi' a cres. rit. a tempo. dim. f

Wi' a cres. rit. a tempo. dim. f

Wi' a cres. rit. a tempo. dim. f

Wi' a

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', We'll

hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', We'll

hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', We'll

hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a', We'll

rit. up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, a tempo. Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a'!

rit. up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, a tempo. Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a'!

rit. up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, a tempo. Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a'!

rit. up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, a tempo. Wi' a hundred pi-pers an' a', an' a'!

a tempo. Oh! our sod-ger lads look'd braw, look'd braw, Wi' their pp a tempo. (With closed lips.)

pp a tempo. (With closed lips.)

pp a tempo. (With closed lips.)

pp a tempo.

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

September 1, 1920.

(5)

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'! We'll hun - dred pi - pers an' a, an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'! We'll hun - dred pi - pers an' a, an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'! We'll hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'! We'll up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'!

up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'!

up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'!

up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'!

Bon-nie

Bon-nie

a tempo. mf O wha does fol - low the blaw, the blaw? Bon-nie

O .. wha is fore-most o' a', o' a'? O wha does fol - low the blaw, the blaw? Bon-nie a tempo. mf

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

Char-lie, the Prince o' us a', hur-rah! Wi' his hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'.

Char-lie, the Prince o' us a', hur-rah! Wi' his hun - dred pi - pers an' a',.. an' a'. His

Char-lie, the Prince, . . hur-rah! Wi' his hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'. His

Char-lie, the Prince, hur-rah! Wi' his hun - dred pi - pers an' a',.. an' a'. His

His pranc - in' steed just seems to fly; The bon-net an' feath - er he's wa - vin' high, His pranc - in' steed just seems to fly; The

bon-net an' feath - er he's wa - vin' high, His pranc - in' steed just seems to fly; The bon-net an' feath-er he's wa - vin' high, His pranc - in' steed just seems to fly;

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

Tempo 1mo.

nor' windsweepstho' his gold - en hair, An' the pib-rochs blaw wi' an un - co flare. Wi' a nor' windsweepstho' his gold - en hair, An' the pib-rochs blaw wi' an un - co flare. Wi' a nor' windsweepstho' his gold - en hair, An' the pib-rochs blaw wi' an un - co flare. Wi' a

An' the pib-rochs blaw wi' an un - co flare. Wi' a

Tempo 1mo.

hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'! We'll hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a',.. an' a'! We'll hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'! We'll hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a', Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'! We'll

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

up an gie' them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'!

up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a',.. an' a'!

up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a',.. an' a'!

up an' gie them a' blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun - dred pi - pers an' a', an' a'!

Poco meno mosso.

p legato.

The Esk was swol-len sae red, sae deep; But side by side the p legato.

The Esk was swol-len sae red, sae deep; But side by side the

(With closed lips.)

p

(With closed lips.)

Poco meno mosso.

p legato.

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

cres. ed accel. poco a poco.

brave lads keep, Twa' thou - sand swam to fell Eng - lish ground, An' danc'd them dry to the cres. ed accel. poco a poco.

brave lads keep, Twa' thou - sand swam to fell Eng - lish ground, An' danc'd them dry to the cres. ed accel. poco a poco.

cres. ed accel. poco a poco.

cres. ed accel. poco a poco.

mf sempre cres. ed accel.

pi - broch's sound. Dum-founder'd the Eng - lish saw, they saw, Dum-founder'd they heard the

mf sempre cres. ed accel.

pi - broch's sound. Dum-founder'd the Eng - lish saw, they saw, Dum-founder'd they heard the

mf sempre cres. ed accel.

Dum-founder'd the Eng - lish saw, they saw, Dum-founder'd they heard the

mf sempre cres. ed accel.

Dum - found - er'd the Eng - lish saw, Dum - found - er'd they

mf sempre cres. ed accel.

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

blaw, the blaw! Dum-founder'd they ran a - wa', a - wa', Fraethe hun - dred pi - pers, an'

blaw, the blaw! Dum-found-er'd they ran a - wa', a - wa', Fraethe hun - dred pi - pers, an'

blaw, the blaw! Dum-found-er'd they ran a - wa', a - wa', Fraethe hun - dred pi - pers, an' heard the blaw! Dum-found-er'd they ran a - wa', a - wa', Fraethe hun - dred pi - pers, an'

Tempo 1mo.

a', an' a'. Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan' a', an' a', Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan'

a', . . an' a'. Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan' a', an' a', Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan'

a', . . an' a'. Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan' a', an' a', Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan'

a', an' a'. Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan' a', an' a', Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan'

Tempo 1mo.

a', an' a'. Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan' a', an' a', Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan'

a', an' a'. Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan' a', an' a', Wi' a' hun - dred pi - persan'

WI' A HUNDRED PIPERS.

rit. p a tempo. leggiero.

a', an' a'! We'll up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a hun-dred pi-pers an'

rit. a tempo. leggiero.

a', .. an' a'! We'll up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a

rit. p a tempo. leggiero.

a', an' a'! We'll up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, a blaw, Wi' a

rit. p a tempo. leggiero.

a', an' a'! We'll up an' gie them a blaw, a blaw, a blaw, a

rit. sostenuto. pp

a', an' a', . . . an' a, an' a'! . . .

dim. rit. sostenuto. pp

hun-dred pi-pers an' a', an' a', an' a', an' a'! . . .

dim. rit. sostenuto. pp

hun-dred pi-pers an' a', an' a', an' a', an' a'! . . .

dim. rit. pp

blaw, Wi' a hun-dred pi-pers an' a', an' a', . . . an' a'! . . .

dim. pp rit. sostenuto.

The gen - tle wind, a sweet and passionate woo - er, a vales The gen - tle wind, . . . the gen - tle wind, . . . a sweet and passionate vales The gen - tle wind, a sweet and passionate woo - er, a sweet and passionate gen - - tle wind, . . . a . . . sweet . . . and pas - sion - ate woo - - er, a sweet and passionate woo - er, . . .

woo - - er, Kiss-es the blushing leaf, and stirs up life With-in the sol-enn, sol - enn woo - - er, a sweet and passionate, pas - sion - ate woo - - er, woo - er, Kiss-es the blushing leaf, and stirs up life With-in the sol-enn, sol - enn pp misterioso.

Kiss-es the blushing leaf, and stirs up life With-in the solemn woods, the solemn woods,

pp

woods, a sweet and passionate woo - er, stirs up life With-in the sol- emn woods, Where Autumn,

pp misterioso.

Kiss-es the blushing leaf, and stirs up life With-in the solemn woods, the solemn woods, Where

pp

woods, a sweet and passionate woo - er, stirs up life With-in the sol- emn woods, Where

pp misterioso.

Where Autumn, like a faint old man, . . sits down By the way- side a - wea - ry.

rall. e dim.

like a faint old man, a faint old man, sits down By the way- side a - wea - ry.

rall. e dim.

Au - tumn, like a faint old man, sits down By the way- side a - wea - ry.

rall. e dim.

Au - tumn, like a faint old man, sits down By the way- side a - wea - ry.

rall. e dim.

a tempo.

Oh, what a glo - ry doth this world put on For him who, with a fer - vent

a tempo.

Oh, what a glo - ry doth this world put on For him who, with a fer -

a tempo.

Oh, what a glo - ry doth this world put on . . For him who, with a fer - vent

a tempo.

Oh, what a glo - ry doth this world put on For him who, . . with a fer - vent

f a tempo.

heart, . . goes forth Un - der the bright and glo - rious sky, . . and vent heart, goes forth Un - der the bright and glo - rious sky, . . and looks On heart, . . goes forth Un - der the bright . . and glo - rious sky, . . and looks On heart, goes forth Un - der the bright and glo - rious sky, and looks On du - ties

allargando.

looks On du - ties well per - form'd, and days well spent, Looks on du - ties well per -

allargando.

du - - ties well per-form'd, and days well spent, Looks on du - - ties

allargando.

du - - ties well per - form'd, and days well spent, Looks on du - - ties

allargando.

well per - - form'd, . . and days well spent, du - ties

allargando.

sempre f

- - form'd, . . . and days well . . . spent !

sempre f

well . . per - form'd, and days . . . well . . . spent !

sempre f

well . . per - form'd, and days . . . well spent !

sempre f

well . . per - form'd, and days well spent !

sempre f

SOME MUSICO-LITERARY MISHAPS

BY CLEMENT ANTROBUS HARRIS

Though 'it is no good crying over spilt milk,' a great deal of good may result from finding out how the milk came to be spilt, with a view to the avoidance of similar disasters in the future. And similarly a practical benefit as well as academic interest may follow a consideration of the actual or threatened mishaps which have befallen some of the world's most valuable musical manuscripts. Sir Isaac Newton's 'Principia' and Thomas Carlyle's 'French Revolution' are not the only treasures which the world has all but lost through accident, or through that carelessness in the preservation of a work which sometimes characterises an inventor, artist, or author, who in the creation of it would consider no pains too great to take with the smallest detail.

At the bi-annual festivals held in honour of Confucius in Foo Chow city certain musical instruments of extreme antiquity are carried in procession, but the bearers only feign to touch them. The playing of them is a lost art. This is probably due to the fact that in the year 246 B.C. an iconoclastic emperor, Tsin-Shih-Huangti, ordered the destruction of all books, music-books, and musical instruments, so that the Chinese music of the present day, if the barbaric decree was rigidly carried out, must date from a subsequent period.

There is, I believe, no record as to how many works on music were included in the 700,000 volumes which (including duplicates) formed the Alexandrian Library at its best period. But as it was an epitome of the world's literature there were probably many. And I have often wondered what our knowledge of ancient music would have been had this magnificent collection of books not been partially destroyed in 391 A.D. by a fanatic band of Christians under Archbishop Theophilus, and the ruin completed two hundred and fifty years later by Arabs under Calif Omar. The latter gentleman is said to have used a formula not altogether unusual among blind believers in a written revelation: 'If these books agree with the Koran they are unnecessary, if not they are false—burn them!' If tradition may be trusted, the followers of the Prophet boasted that they heated the baths of the city for six months with the books they burned—which shows, of course, that the Christians had had the grace to spare quite a considerable number.

Someone will probably say that there was in all likelihood a great deal of rubbish got rid of in this conflagration. Agreed; but the same might be urged as a reason for burning the British Museum in the present day. Besides which we are dealing with mishaps, and bad luck has sometimes taken the form of the preservation of what had much better have been destroyed. Palestrina suffered from this paradoxical form of misfortune. The greatest of men have their little human weaknesses, and Giovanni Pierluigi was in such a hurry to do homage to a new Pope, Sixtus V., that he composed a Motet and a Mass in rather less time than even he could do work worthy to live. So of course it did live; for after his death his contemptible son Igino, caring only for the filthy lucre it would bring him, did his father the injustice of publishing these manuscripts.

Parallel, in its wholesale character, with the burning of the Alexandrian Library, though after civilization had been at work nearly a thousand years longer, was the havoc wrought by the dissolution of the monasteries. Here, again, doubtless much rubbish was got rid of. But one cannot think of the value of such a manuscript as that of 'Sumer is icumen in' without a sigh over the hundreds of other parchments of great if not equal value, which must have perished, and that without their loss contributing anything whatever to purity of doctrine or practice.

Much the same may be said of the burning of the Cathedral music libraries by the Puritans during the Commonwealth. That Mr. Henry Davey is right in exonerating the Roundheads from interfering with secular music, and even in crediting them with promoting it, is generally agreed by modern writers. But that they were fiercely opposed to music of the Cathedral type, and ruthlessly destroyed it, is undeniable. A demolished organ may be rebuilt, but a work of art of which every copy has been destroyed is lost indeed. And this all but happened to the first collection of Cathedral music ever published—that issued by the Rev. John Barnard in 1641. A hundred and fifty years or so later not a single complete copy of this monumental work was known to exist, and in 1862 a copy in score could be made only by gathering together part-copies—and it was in ten voice-parts—from different churches. No single library had a complete set. Wear and tear and carelessness, as well as Puritan fanaticism, probably contributed to this state of affairs, but it is an interesting example of a narrow escape.

So far the cause of destruction has been antipathy to a work. But esteem for it, coupled with covetousness, may have the same effect. In Purcell's day there was no copyright law. His 'Indian Queen' was published during his lifetime without his permission being so much as asked. Owing probably to the danger of surreptitious reproduction, it would appear that only one theatre copy of 'The Fairy Queen' was ever made, though selected songs from the work were published in the composer's own day. By October, 1700, the score had been lost, and the Patentees of the theatre offered a reward of £20 for its recovery. Surely of no manuscript could a more romantic story be told. It is believed to have passed through the hands of Dr. Pepusch, who died in 1752, of his pupil, William Savage, who died in 1789, and of R. J. S. Stevens, who died in 1837. But either they did not recognise the value of the manuscript, or regarded the game as one of 'hunt the slipper,' and kept the whereabouts of the treasure a secret. Thus the score was in hiding for two hundred and one years, not being discovered till, by a fortunate accident, it was found in the library of the Royal Academy of Music in 1901.

Indifference is probably responsible for the loss of more manuscripts than any other cause save fanaticism. Of this Bach's works are a notable instance. On the composer's death most of his autographs were divided between his sons Friedemann and Emanuel. Those entrusted to the former were lost, mislaid, or sold. Another miscreant was Cantor Müller (1801-09) of the Thomasschule at Leipsic. A large number of the Cantatas had been left in the library of the institution, and on Müller's death all but a very small portion had vanished. In 1850, when the Bach Gesellschaft was formed, manuscripts came in from some very unexpected quarters; it is said that pages in Bach's own handwriting had been used by a gardener to tie round some young apple-trees to preserve them from harm. I have read, though I cannot say where, of someone buying a pound of butter and finding that it had been wrapped up in an original copy of one of the Organ Fugues. Similar stories could be told of Schubert's manuscripts, many of which lay for years in garrets and other out-of-the-way corners till the enthusiasm of Schumann and others led to their discovery. Music can offer a very close parallel to the loss of the first draft of Carlyle's chief work, already alluded to, for Beethoven's cook used some sheets of the great Mass in D as wrappers for superannuated pots and kettles.

Palestrina and Bach were not the only composers to suffer from the perfidy or indifference of their own sons. Rinaldo di Capua was not as great a composer, but he was the reputed inventor of the recitative, and eminent enough for his manuscripts to be of considerable value in his own day. Falling into financial misfortune in his old age he determined to sell them, but they could not be found, and probability pointed to their having been sold by a profligate son—and one who had been the apple of the old man's eye—for waste paper.

That loss may occur through the indifference of a composer's neighbours, and even of his nearest relatives, will surprise no student of human affairs. But that the only copy of a masterpiece should be lost through the indifference of its composer would surely be unusual. Yet this is what the original manuscript of 'Adelaide' narrowly escaped. While the ink was still wet on it, Beethoven, dissatisfied with the song, was on the point of putting it in the stove, his only fear being that there was not enough fire therein to consume it, when a certain Herr Barth called, persuaded Beethoven to let him try the song over, and thereby saved what, if not one of Beethoven's greatest, is certainly one of his most popular works.

Possibly it was a similar failure on the part of the author to recognise the value of his own work which resulted in the first English history of music—for such the work may be called—not being published till a hundred and eighteen years after it was written. The book in question, the Hon. Roger North's 'Memoires of Music,' traces the fortunes of the art from the time of the ancient Greeks to his own day. Despite the importance of such a survey, it lay in manuscript from 1728, when it was written, till 1846, when it was 'rescued from the shop of a country broker'—I suppose a small furniture broker is meant.

We have seen how religious bigotry may occasion the loss of whole libraries. Political unrest may, of course, have the same dire results. How many musical works were included in the 250,000 volumes in the Library at Louvain before the war I do not know, but few if any remain of the whole contents. The University has had to be supplied with the barest necessities from outside sources. A temporary loss believed to be due to political causes was that of the MS. of Victor Schœlcher's 'Handel et son temps,' the publication of which was begun in Paris in 1860 but broken off in 1862 owing to the supposed destruction of the MS. Nineteen years later the original copy made its appearance in the market and was bought for the Conservatoire.

So far the mishaps dealt with have been due to the fanaticism, indifference, or greed, of man. Musical history is not without one or two instances, however, which have resulted from what insurance policies term the 'Act of God.' An admirable library of music was collected by King John of Portugal (1604-56). A catalogue was made, a copy of the first half being afterwards found in the National Library at Paris. It was reprinted in a noble quarto volume at Lisbon in 1874, with an essay on the treasures the library had contained: all of which is very tantalising, for the first thing which appears to have been generally known about the library is that it had mysteriously disappeared. The conjecture was made that it had perished in the earthquake of 1755.

It is certainly a misfortune when a great work is left uncompleted by the death of its author. And death is generally the 'Act of God,' for the hour of a man's quitting this life is rarely determined even by his enemies and still more rarely by himself. Mention should therefore perhaps be made of Schubert's 'Unfinished Symphony' and of three musical histories left incomplete by their writers—those of Forkel, La Fage, and Fétis. The last-named author was quite within his right in declining to finish the work of Forkel, as he had planned a similar but larger work himself. But having done this, and also borrowed largely from La Fage and Carl Engel without a word of acknowledgment (though many a one of depreciation), there is a certain poetic justice in his own work having been not only similarly interrupted by death, but broken off at exactly the same period as Forkel's—the 15th century.

If it is not too insignificant a thing to mention, a short manuscript of the present writer's went down with the Titanic. As he had kept a copy, and further observations would inevitably lead to the pointing of a moral, he had perhaps better let this bare statement of the little incident stand by way of conclusion.

The Musician's Bookshelf

By 'FESTE'

Musicians—especially star performers—are rarely good autobiographers. Their chronicles too often run to small beer, and give over-much space to folk whose importance began and ended with the accident of birth. An unusually interesting exception is David Bispham's 'A Quaker Singer's Recollections' (Macmillan, 4 dollars). It not only gives us Mr. Bispham's life from when that he was and a little tiny boy, but it drops en route a rich store of anecdote. Young singers will be encouraged in reading of his early difficulties. To begin with, it was no small handicap to belong to so strict a set. 'Does thee see that young man going along there singing?' asked an elderly Quaker of a friend, as young David went by humming. 'Well, he is the grandson of an old friend of mine; but I tell thee he isn't going to come to any good, for he is always fooling around after music.' As we know on both sides of the water, the young man fooled around to some purpose.

Of special interest are Mr. Bispham's memories of Richard Strauss. He tells us that Strauss was attacked for conducting a concert at Wanamaker's store. The composer was quite frank in his reply. He said he had come to America to make money, and so long as he made it he didn't care where he appeared. He was also reported to have said that he would stand on his head in the street if he was paid enough—a safe challenge, for a composer, on being inverted, becomes even as other men, so there would be little doing when the hat went round.

Discussing the imitative possibilities of music, Strauss claimed to be able to translate anything into sound. 'I can make you understand by music that I pick up my fork and spoon from this side of my plate and lay them down on the other side.' Hardly, without some title or other verbal help. This boast sheds a little light on some of Strauss's later works. I am tempted to go on quoting, but it will be fairer to send you to the book to dip for yourself.

Henry Edward Krehbiel's 'A Book of Operas,' and 'A Second Book of Operas,' have now been issued as one volume by Macmillan (2 vols. 50 cents. It is a pity the English price is not stated. Perhaps it wobbles with the exchange). The two make a fine book of nearly six hundred pages, dealing with the plot, history, and music of all the operas that count, old and new. There are plenty of musical and other illustrations.

A second edition of such a standard work as Prof. Buck's 'Unfigured Harmony' needs no more than bare mention. (The Clarendon Press, 7s. 6d. net.)

'The Chorales: their Origin and Influence,' by Dr. Archibald W. Wilson, is the first of a series of Church Music Monographs issued by the Faith Press (4s. 6d.). The subject is one of perennial interest on religious, social, and musical grounds alike. No musical form—certainly no form so small—has had more to do with the development of music than the chorale. And, probably because of its wealth of associations and its hold on the affections of musicians, it seems to have had the power of getting the best out of composers. It is not too much to say that the pre-Bach German organ writers produced nothing worth our hearing to-day save when they took a choral melody as a basis. When they did so the results were frequently worthy of Bach himself. Dr. Wilson goes very thoroughly into the origins of the melodies, and gives an account of the earliest collections. There is an interesting chapter on Luther and Walther, and a selection of the most famous melodies, with historical notes; also a prose translation of the German text of the tunes quoted. The volume is small for such a big subject, but thanks to a concise style and arrangement it contains a surprisingly large amount of matter. A word of praise should go to the very pleasing form of the book.

Mr. Herbert Antcliffe is well-known to readers of this and other journals as a thoughtful writer on matters concerning our art. He has recently put forth a collection of his periodical essays under the title of 'Short Studies in the Nature of Music' (Kegan Paul—4s. 6d. net). He opens with six short essays dealing directly with the title, and follows them up with longer papers on 'Programme Music,' the 'Symphonic Poem,' 'Music as an Educational Force,' 'History and Music,' and 'Religious Emotion and Music.' On all these subjects Mr. Antcliffe says a good deal well worth saying, with a simplicity and clearness of style that are too often lacking in musical literature. The cause of music in this country has suffered from a lack of books written for the plain average man who makes up the bulk of our concert audiences—books free from gush, affectation, and pedantry. Mr. Antcliffe does exactly what his Preface tells us he sets out to do, 'To suggest some lines of thought for the average thinking person who is interested in the subject.'

Here is another writer whose name is familiar to our readers—Ulric Daubeney—coming forward with a book. His 'Orchestral Wind Instruments' (Reeves, 12s. 6d. net), is 'an account of the origin and evolution of wind instruments from the earliest to the most recent times.' Treatises on orchestration of course glance at the origins of instruments, but naturally have no space to spare for more than a glance. No doubt there are books dealing each with an instrument, but apparently this is the first time the whole family has been considered historically in one volume. Bearing in mind the common origin of some instruments it is obvious that their evolution can be thoroughly understood only by the comparative method of study made possible by such a work as this. Mr. Daubeney has evidently spared no pains in research, and moreover he writes with a keen appreciation of the purely musical side of the subject. In this connection I am glad to see that he gives the bassoon due credit for its expressive qualities. The instrument has suffered too long from the 'clown of the orchestra' tradition. Mr. Daubeney truly says that 'of all the wood-wind the bassoon possesses the most varied and useful range of tone-quality,' rivalling the trombone as 'the most versatile and sympathetic instrument of the whole wood-wind band.' The book contains many admirable illustrations, and is altogether a necessary piece of historical work well done.

I end this month's survey with one of the most delightful volumes that has appeared for many a long day—'English Madrigal Verse, 1588-1632.' Edited from the Original Song-Books by E. H. Fellowes. (The Clarendon Press, 12s. 6d. net, on India paper, 15s. net.) Dr. Fellowes's splendid work for our madrigal composers could be rounded off in no better way than this. No one can have sung or listened to any considerable amount of Elizabethan vocal music without being struck by the rare quality of many of the lyrics to which it was set. Selections from them have been published from time to time, among the more recent being Mr. Bullen's 'Lyrics from the Elizabethan Song-books,' a book which has probably done more than any other in sending readers to this field. A complete collection, however, has been long since overdue, and here it is—a volume of well over six hundred pages, and a credit to English scholarship and publishing. Such a book demands a review filling several columns, and a pleasant task it would be to spread oneself on a subject so full of matter. But 'The Musician's Bookshelf' has to aim at bringing as many books as possible to the reader's notice, and as a consequence it has to be cursory at times like the present, when musical books come tumbling out as if in haste to make up the arrears of the past six years—as is in fact the case, for a note tells us that Dr. Fellowes's volume was finished in the summer of 1917, and then held up by war difficulties.

And after all, the mere mention of such a book ought to be enough. This is no case of buying a pig in a poke. Any musician worthy the name knows this branch of our literature well through the numerous samples that have come his way in the course of his ordinary work as a conductor, teacher, or singer. Here is the whole stock, well up to sample, and with a bonus in the shape of sixty pages of notes, packed with interesting lore.

The Sunderland Philharmonic Society (hon. conductor, Mr. N. Kilburn) has chosen the following works for performance during the coming season: 'Elegiac Ode' (Stanford), 'The Inchcape Rock' (Bridge), 'Sun Worshippers' chorus' (Sullivan), and 'King Olaf' (Elgar).

A NEW CHORAL WRITER

Musicians as a body will remember with pride the splendid manner in which those of their profession who were interned in Germany during the war rose superior to the depressing conditions under which they existed, and managed to 'carry on.' Some of the results of this dogged spirit have recently become evident in the publication of various works written by British composers while in captivity. The two Shakespeare songs of Benjamin Dale, recently published by Messrs. Novello, occur to us at once as examples. Some of these composers were well-known. Now comes a work by a composer new to us,* who writes under his final bar, 'Ruhleben, 15/4/18.'

'England' is a setting for soprano and baritone soli, chorus, and orchestra, of Swinburne's stirring ode, and even a cursory examination of its pages quickly reveals the fact that Mr. MacMillan is a composer to be reckoned with. The same skilful hand is apparent both in the orchestral and vocal writing, a noteworthy feature being some admirable examples of six- and eight-part work.

The overture is an important movement running to fifteen pages, and is well worthy of performance apart from the rest of the cantata. Much of the subsequent orchestral work is a consistent development of material presented in the overture. The bold opening :

with its confident upward spring of a fifth at the end, is the dominating theme of the work.

Akin to it in its upward closing leap is the opening phrase of the introduction to Part I :

This theme subsequently undergoes a good deal of ingenious development.

The opening chorus (Andante moderato) for S.A.T.B. contains much interesting and varied writing for the voices, ranging from pianissimo unaccompanied work to massive fortissimo effects with all parts divided.

The movement which follows (Allegro non troppo) provides some vigorous and dramatic writing for baritone solo, and leads without a break into a chorus (Andante moderato) for S.S.A.T.T.B. This is mainly contrapuntal in style, and is based on a short ascending scale-passage ending with a drop of a seventh. One would like to quote from this fine movement, but space will not allow. It must suffice to say that there is some masterly writing for the voices, a big climax being reached at which the sopranos have to negotiate a high B, the music finally subsiding to a soft close (ppp) on a widely-spread chord in ten parts, extending from D below the bass stave to F# in the treble.

Part 2 opens with a soprano solo (Andante tranquillo) with a beautifully-flowing orchestral part leading into a short chorus for S.S.A.A. The composer does not spare the voices. In the third bar of this chorus the sopranos are called upon to divide and sing high B and G (pianissimo). On the last chord the basses enter with a theme in 2-2 time (Allegro), which, it will be noticed, is derived from Ex. 2 :

Ex. 3. Allegro. 2 = 72.

This is treated fugally at considerable length for S.A.T.B. The vocal writing is very smooth, and quaver movement is kept up almost constantly in the accompaniment. Towards the end contrapuntal methods are discarded, the music broadens out, and for the final phrase every ounce is demanded from the choir. The orchestra enters four bars from the end, and a few bars of instrumental work bring the movement to a close.

Some quiet music for orchestra (Lento), presently quickening to Andante moderato, leads into a chorus in 9-8 time for S.S.A.A.T.T.B.B. This very fine movement commences quietly, and in contrapuntal style. Later the voices join in masses of harmony, and some richly-sonorous passages occur. The time-signature presently changes to 4-4 (Allegro pomposo), and the writing from now onward is for four voices. A quickening of movement soon takes place with another change of time-signature (6-4 Alla breve), the music is marked stringendo, a più mosso is reached, and the voices come together in a strong unison passage in 2-2 time—an augmentation of the pomposo passage of a few pages back—broadening out finally into a big close with divided alto, tenor, and bass parts. A few bars for orchestra alone bring the work to a brilliant conclusion.

The choral-writing, though free and modern in style, is grateful to the singers. In texture and melodic turn it suggests that Mr. MacMillan is an admirer of the methods of Elgar. The harmony is free from eccentricity, though full of interest and enterprise. Sometimes it is used with excellent descriptive effect, for example :

* 'England: an Ode.' By Algernon Charles Swinburne. Set to music by Ernest Campbell MacMillan. (Novello.)

There are points in the scoring on which we should like to dwell, but we hope enough has been said to indicate the fine qualities of this cantata. It is tolerably certain that all who make its acquaintance will await with keen interest further work from the same accomplished pen.

G. G.

London Concerts

BY ALFRED KALISCH

The most interesting concert of the latter half of July was that given on the 20th at Wigmore Hall by M. Ansermet, which afforded us an opportunity of knowing more than we knew before about the later works of Stravinsky. M. Ansermet gave a lecture on the æsthetics of the composer, in which he dwelt on his power of reproducing most rapid momentary impressions, his avoidance of what is commonly called sentiment, and the extent of importance he gives to tone-colour, which he regards more as an essence of his music.

The programme began with the three pieces for String Quartet, which were admirably played by the Philharmonic Quartet. Once more we derived pleasure from the second of the group, with its piquant rhythms suggestive of the negro playing with his ball in 'Petrushka,' while the number which represents a choir of monks deliberately out of tune left us doubtful. Miss Olga Haley sang a set of songs called 'Pribaoutki' (Chansons Plaisantes), in which the voice part is practically unsingable, while distinctly humorous use is made of the tone-colours of a chamber orchestra. Of these, one of the songs describing the adventures of a Colonel who was a bad shot was distinctly amusing. There is also an original and diverting atmosphere about the series of 'Berceuses du Chat,' which was accompanied by three clarinets. Quite an unusual number of these songs were encored. The suite of pieces 'L'Histoire du Soldat,' for chamber orchestra, contained some music which was really funny and some which was merely trying, but even the music which is least attractive is always that of an extraordinarily clever man, and always contains excellent material for students of orchestration. Personally I could not discover any value except technical exercises in the three pieces for clarinet, excellently as they were played by Mr. Haydn Draper.

For purposes of reference it may be worth mentioning that the 'Histoire du Soldat' is scored for violin, double-bass, clarinet, bassoon, trombone, and drum. It was composed in 1918. The 'Pribaoutki' dates from 1914, the clarinet pieces from 1919, and the 'Berceuses' from 1915 to 1916.

The audience was in some ways as interesting as the concert itself. It may be said roughly to consist of three sections—first, the earnest musicians; second, painters devoted to modern music, with their families; and, third, society, or rather that section of it that is always anxious for the latest thing in any art. All three sections vied with each other in expressions of enthusiasm, and the hall was packed.

After the date of the last concert mentioned in the August number, there was no other event in London which anyone would want to remember six weeks after it had taken place. It is a good many years since the end of July has been so devoid of musical interest in London, but apparently the autumn season will make amends by beginning early and lasting a long time. It was in the middle of July that an artist desiring to secure one of our concert halls for a recital was informed that there was no free evening between October 1 and December 23, and no free Saturday afternoon till the end of June, 1921.

Opera in London

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT

CLOSE OF THE COVENT GARDEN SEASON: THE FUTURE OUTLOOK

There is not a great deal to be said concerning opera in London, and so far as the month of August is concerned, nothing at all. But there is something to be added to complete the record of the Covent Garden season, and a thought or two to be uttered with reference to its effect and influence.

What amounted to the chief event of the season was duly recorded in the August number, namely the production of the (to us) new Puccini works. For the rest there was but vain repetition of familiar matter, amongst which M. Ravel's operatic essay alone stands out as having any distinction. There can be no question that his work 'L'Heure Espagnole,' is a very attractive piece. Unfortunately for the composer an impression seems to have got abroad that there is something very risky in the plot, with the result that there is a tendency to disregard the music, whereas the music has great charm and a quality all its own. With a congenial subject M. Ravel will always write a good opera, and one that has the further attraction of being fresh in style and idiom. As seen at Covent Garden this year his first example was well done, particularly by the men, MM. Maguenat, Cotreuil, and Oger, who showed perfect understanding of the spirit of the piece and full ability to interpret it with delicacy and point. The female character was somewhat less satisfactory as represented by Miss Desirée Ellinger. A later exponent, Mlle. Juliette Autran, was able by the very force of the blood in her to fall in more readily with the mood of music and story. Beyond this the bill was made up of operas that have done service before. It was interesting to hear again Massenet's 'Manon,' more especially as earlier in the season the Puccini setting of the romance had been given. Massenet takes the first place, because he could realise the underlying motive very much better than the Italian musician, who merely saw in it a subject for musical treatment.

And Massenet did more. He regarded it as would a patriot, and wrote music that never fails to charm and never fails to represent the true spirit and motive. The performance did all justice to the work, thanks to the presence of singers belonging to its country of origin. Madame Edvina as Manon, M. Anseau as des Grieux, and M. Maguenat as Lescaut made up an effective cast, Mr. Percy Pitt helping at the conductor's desk in a smooth performance. This, along with an appearance as Canio in 'Pagliacci' by M. Anseau, provided the sum total of the closing nights, the season finally ending on July 31.

THE CONTRIBUTION OF THE RUSSIAN BALLET

The honours of the season were certainly with the Russian Ballet. Well found, well prepared, and well controlled, M. Diaghilev's organization has pulled a splendid oar in the Covent Garden boat, and without its weight one rather wonders what would have happened. Originally there was an extensive scheme of opéra-ballets, but only one example has been seen in 'L'Astuzie Femminili.' The plan was quickly adapted to meet the needs of the operatic side of the house, and short examples from the Company's répertoire were given in conjunction with Russian Ballets until, on the penultimate night of the season, M. Diaghilev withdrew his company. The public would have liked to see more of the Ballet's presentation of the old Italian operas, of which some highly attractive examples were promised. The chief contribution, apart from the Cimarosa, resolved itself into a new version of M. Stravinsky's 'Nightingale.' The Russian Ballet were the sponsors of this work, which was seen at Drury Lane in 1914. Then the action was illustrated by dancers, while the vocal part of the music was given by red-robed singers stationed on rostrums on the stage. It was also given as an opera in English, when it was still less effective. Its latest form is the best. M. Stravinsky's composition, like Brer Rabbit's playing, much needs the pat of the foot 'to make it go down.' It now receives it through the ingenuity of M. Massine. The whole thing is made into a gorgeous display in which the action and colour on the stage compensate for the weird noises with which the composer illustrates the psychological situation. It may be that M. Stravinsky has some wonderful message to give us, but my own impression is that, apart from 'Petrouchka,' he has 'got it wrong.' But, as this season has shown us, the Ballet can still serve a useful purpose in two directions. One is the presentation of legitimate ballet like, let me say, 'La Boutique Fantasque' and 'Thamar,' and the other is the production of old Italian operas like 'L'Astuzie Femminili.'

LESSONS FROM THE SEASON

There is much to be done in the direction of reviving ancient masterpieces. M. Diaghilev has shown the way and must follow it up. There is many a good work we might hear, and the conditions under which this gifted Russian impresario produces them effectively shakes off all their gathered dust. But to present them in the manner in which 'Don Pasquale' was presented earlier in the season (not by M. Diaghilev) is to evoke a howl for their suppression. A feature of the season has been the endeavour to avoid the responsibility of giving the public what it wants. For the first time for many years not one of the really great Continental singers has appeared at Covent Garden. There have been some estimable people, no doubt, but they are not what London expects at this time of the year. Whatever may happen at other seasons we desire to hear the leading singers from abroad in London in the summer. London was ready for them. A season supplied by people of whom the public has read and whom some have heard would have been received with joy. Any price would have been paid by the new public to hear the Destinns, Tetrizzinis, Galli-Curcis, Carusos, Franzs, and Battistinis of the day, and the effect would have been an increased zest for our own endeavours in a similar field. But we have had nothing of the kind. There is scarcely one of this season's newcomers that the public is anxious to hear again, and the whole effect of the undertaking has been to promote an indifference concerning a form of entertainment in which interest was just being roused. The result is that the page must be turned and the operatic volume opened at another chapter. I would suggest two openings, a double entry in fact, one for opera by foreign artists and another for opera by British. The two cannot go together any more than chalk can be disguised as cheese. We must have a page of our own, and its heading must not be the hybrid 'opera in English,' but the true term of 'English Opera.'

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD

BY ALFRED KALISCH.

The National Eisteddfod oscillates between North and South Wales. This year there was a further contrast in that the venue was Barry, a busy town in the centre of the most prosperous tract of the South, whereas last year the place was Corwen, in the quietest part of North Wales. In one point the two agree—last year's Festival achieved a record, this year exceeded it. The expenses were £14,000, and the takings not far short of £18,000, leaving the largest surplus ever obtained.

Much of the success was due this year to Mr. D. W. Evans, of the music committee, who in his youth was one of the finest football players of the Principality, and has since then had a great deal to do with Cardiff Musical Festivals. His progressive ideas helped largely to bring the Eisteddfod more into line with modern musical movements. He was not indeed able to get it so far as Stravinsky (except for one short orchestral piece), but he led it a good deal further away from mid-Victorianism than had any of his predecessors.

The most significant innovation was the engagement of the London Symphony Orchestra, not only to play at evening concerts, but to accompany the choirs which sang Stanford's 'Revenge' in the principal choral competition. This was a severe test for some of the conductors, whose experience in handling an orchestra was obviously limited. In one or two cases, in fact, it is hardly an exaggeration to say that the Orchestra conducted them.

A QUESTION OF £50,000

Just here it is convenient to digress on a subject with which the whole future of the Eisteddfod is bound up, though strictly speaking it has nothing to do with last month's function. This is the question of the Welsh National Orchestra. It has been in the air for some years, and seemed likely to remain there; but an important meeting was held during the Eisteddfod week which helped to bring it to earth. An influential committee was formed, having among its members Lord Howard de Walden, Mr. Cyril Jenkins (who was responsible for the London Symphony Orchestra in Wales at Whitsuntide), Prof. Walford Davies, and Dr. Vaughan Williams. To put the case with brutal frankness, it is a question of £50,000. Considering that more money has been made in the three principal towns of South Wales—Cardiff, Newport, and Swansea—during the war than almost anywhere else in the world, this should not be difficult to secure; but when we remember how long an institution like our own Philharmonic has striven in vain for a few paltry thousands, we should not be too optimistic.

Prof. Walford Davies and Dr. Vaughan Williams, in their various adjudications—which are among the best-remembered incidents of the week—had frequently to refer to the typical weaknesses that marred much of the magnificent singing of the choirs. It would seem as if audiences, competitors, and adjudicators were running round and round a vicious circle. If Wales is to come into her proper heritage of music, and to take her place among the musical nations of the world, she must enlarge the basis of her musical experience; and this can only be done by means of an orchestra.

To return from our digression. Taken as a whole, the choral singing heard during the week was wonderful. I am inclined to agree with a London musician present, who said that the worst choir which competed would easily beat any London choir; and yet one could not help agreeing with many of the strictures passed by the two chief adjudicators. At least a dozen times Prof. Walford Davies was moved to protest against the 'unnaturalness' of much of the singing we heard. One day he said that 'naturalness' was of the essence of the contract between interpreter and listener; over and over again he pointed out how in their anxiety to make effect conductors and singers had spoiled not only the outlines of a beautiful phrase, but the proportions of a whole piece; also he drew attention to singers who sang as if the words were devoid of meaning, and again to others who jerked them out till they made the same effect as a pair of eyes starting out of the head. And he showed that a cantabile suitable to 18th century music had been applied to compositions of a later generation. Dr. Vaughan Williams solemnly adjured conductors and singers to remember that admiration at the overcoming of vocal difficulties and anxious speculation as to whether they could be surmounted, were not the feelings which music ought to arouse in its hearers; and last of all came his warning—it should be remembered not in Wales only—that choral singing is not an affair of 'stunts and monkey tricks.'

We have long known that warnings such as these are necessary in Wales, the more necessary because Welsh choral singing ought to be perfect—and, again, the only remedy is orchestral music. A better knowledge of orchestral music would teach Wales, Prof. Walford Davies said, to think of music apart from words, to appreciate purity of melodic outline, and the structure of great works.

How necessary it was to insist on this was shown by the way in which the five orchestras that competed played the slow movement of Schubert's 'Unfinished.' It was surprising that five bands should have attempted it. Indeed it was unprecedented, and in some ways the playing was extremely good, but in most cases the impression remained that the music was strange to players and conductors alike. So it was when choirs sang the 'Spinning' Chorus from 'The Flying Dutchman' and the 'Eia Mater' from Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater.'

Having without apology put the cart before the horse and drawn morals before stating facts, I will now proceed to a brief survey of the principal events of the week.

The two orchestral concerts given by the London Symphony Orchestra made a great impression on the audience. One of them was spoiled by the constant patter of heavy rain on the corrugated-iron roof, and Prof. Walford Davies had in consequence to eliminate some of the gentler items from the programme. The air of bewilderment with which the audience listened to the Infernal Dance from the 'Fire Bird' of Stravinsky was instructive. It is worth mentioning that this was the first time that the composer's arrangement for a small orchestra was used. The two prize compositions, a choral ballad and an orchestral composition, had been anticipated with eager interest. Both the compositions chosen showed promise and a certain amount of technical skill, but little individuality. It was interesting to notice that the young musicians of Wales have got away from mere slavish imitation of mid-Victorian models, and are now deriving inspiration mainly from Elgar, and, it may be added, from Prof. Walford Davies and Dr. Vaughan Williams, who were the adjudicators. No adjudication on the compositions was published, but it was gathered from conversation that the two works chosen were considerably in advance of any others submitted; yet it was only after some hesitation that the prizes were awarded. Both composers are very young and both are self-taught.

The first to be heard was the 'Orchestral Fantasy' on Welsh Airs by Mr. Hughes-Clark, of St. Anne's-on-Sea. He has treated some four Welsh tunes very freely with a good knowledge of orchestral resource, but the work needs compression and there is too little relief from the mood of melancholy, although not all the tunes are in themselves sad.

The other was Mr. J. Owen Jones's setting of Sir Henry Newbolt's 'He fell among thieves.' The composer writes vigorously, but is at his best in the quiet orchestral interlude depicting the passing of night and the waking of dawn; at the same time the work is not remarkably original. Mr. Owen Jones lives at Whitchurch, near Cardiff. He is the son of a working man, and was born in North Wales.

Both works may fairly be described as promising, but they also point to the crying need of an orchestra for Wales.

We add the results of the chief contests. The principal competition for mixed choirs of up to a hundred and fifty voices was remarkable, as already said, for the fact that the London Symphony Orchestra accompanied Stanford's 'The Revenge.' Twelve choirs competed, but the adjudicators took the unusual course of having a preliminary test of the other piece, 'Oh, god of dreams,' by J. Owen Jones (unaccompanied), and selecting five choirs for the final tests. The twelve choirs were: Cardiff Blue Ribbon Choir (Mr. Jenkin Morris), Rhondda Fach United Choir (Mr. Theo. Thomas), Cardiff Harmonic Society (Mr. Roderick Williams), Aber Valley Choral Society (Mr. D. J. Evans), Mid-Rhondda Choral Society (Mr. W. J. Hughes), Briton Ferry Choral Society (Mr. Evan Morris), Treynon United Choir

Mr. William Gwynne), Ammanford and District Choral Society (Mr. Gwilym R. Jones), Cwmmaman Choral Society (Mr. Stanley Jones), Rhymney Gwent Choral Society (Mr. Daniel Owen), Nottingham Philharmonic Society (Mr. William Turner), Pontypridd and District Choral Society (Mr. William Thompson).

Prof. Walford Davies in his adjudication said that some of the other choirs had been very close up to the successful five, and he was particularly sorry that it was necessary to exclude one which had gone to the expense of rehearsing 'The Revenge' with an orchestra. The five choirs chosen were Cardiff Harmonic, Briton Ferry, Ammanford, Cwmmaman, and Nottingham. The contest was throughout remarkably close. In the singing of the unaccompanied piece the highest choir got 90 marks and the lowest 71. In the final test, the highest marks were 88 and the lowest 84. The first prize was won by the Ammanford choir with a total of 177, Briton Ferry being second with 174, and Nottingham one mark below with 173. Ammanford had the highest marks in the first piece, but Briton Ferry was one ahead of the victors in the singing of the Stanford work.

Prof. Walford Davies's adjudication was extremely interesting. The enormous majority of the fifteen thousand people present seemed to agree that the choirs placed first and second deserved their places, but there was a good deal of difference of opinion as to the relative merits of the two. It must suffice to give in few words the gist of Prof. Davies's remarks about the winning choir. He quoted the assertion of one of the adjudicators that the performance of 'The Revenge' was the first real performance of the piece he had ever heard. It was 'simply splendid,' and there was nothing 'mechanical' about it. The only adverse criticism he could make was that there was a little rawness in the alto parts. With regard to the Briton Ferry choir he complained of the overdone accents in certain places and some shrillness in the tenors, but specially praised the interpretation of the final passage of 'God of Battles, was ever a battle like this?' and warmly congratulated the conductor on his handling of the orchestra. It is to be recorded with regret, on the authority of one of the principal officials, that there was a most inordinate amount of betting on the result.

On the Thursday we had a second choral competition for choirs of from sixty to ninety voices. The test-pieces were 'Blessed Jesus,' from Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' and 'My Bonnie Lass,' by Edward German. Here the competition was very close and the issue seemed to hang in the balance until the last choir, Bryn Choral Society, came on to the platform, when the result was speedily beyond doubt. It won with 182 marks, Jerusalem being second with 171. The lowest marking was 156. Dr. David Evans adjudicated, and expressed pride in the fact that these choirs all consisted of working men and women, and that many of the conductors were drawn from the same class. Without, however, wishing to exhibit any sort of bias, we might suggest that music such as that of Dvorák requires more artistic training than can be obtained in the leisure hours of strenuous avocations. While the standard of singing was excellent, the playing of the accompaniments for the most part was very indifferent. The great fault of the performances as a whole was that they did not seem to grasp the essential rhythm of the principal phrase of the Dvorák item. It should be in the basses

♩ ♪ ♩ ♪ but what we had was either ♩ ♪ ♩ ♪ or ♩ ♪ ♩ ♪. The female voices should answer with ♩ ♪ ♩ ♪ but it was usually ♩ ♪ ♩ ♪ or ♩ ♪ ♩ ♪, and if memory serves me the winning choir was the only one which was really correct. It is probably for this reason that the winning choir obtained 90 marks for its singing of this number.

The singing of 'My Bonnie Lass'—a work that is essentially simpler—was excellent in all cases. The six choirs competing were Aberfan and Merthyr Vale United (Mr. Robert C. Lloyd), Jerusalem Choral Society (Mr. Ben Devonald), Aberaman Institute Choir (Mr. Charles Thomas), Islwyn Harmonic Society (Mr. R. S. Lewis), Brynmaur Choral Society (Mr. W. T. Angell), and Bryn Choral Society (Mr. Tom Davies).

On the same afternoon came the female choirs, and here, too, we had the same experience. It was a very close contest until the last choir appeared and simply, if I may be allowed the expression, walked away from the others. The competing choirs were Mountain Ash Co-operative (Mr. Theophilus Morgan), William Turner's Girls' Prize Choir, Nottingham (Mr. William Turner), Canton Ladies' (Madame Gwenllian T. Williams), Clydach Vale and District (Mr. Spencer Evans), Rhymney Ladies' (Miss Mary Richards).

Rhymney choir, conducted by Miss Mary Richards, obtained 266 marks out of a total of 300; the next choir, Nottingham, had 250, and the lowest 234. The three test-pieces were 'Sound Sleep,' by Vaughan Williams, the 'Spinning Wheel' chorus from the 'Flying Dutchman,' and 'Canig y Clychau,' by Gwilym Gwent, arranged by D. Emlyn Evans.

In his adjudication, Dr. Vaughan Williams said that the Nottingham choir was the superior in respect of refinement and cultivation, but spoilt its chances by bad intonation. This remark was to a certain extent a criticism on the choice of the piece, for the bad intonation in question came in a passage which was not, strictly speaking, choral. The winning choir would have obtained higher marks in the first piece if it had not, presumably for purposes of effect, sung it too quickly. On this point of course he spoke with authority.

On Friday afternoon male-voice choirs of sixty to eighty voices competed. The twelve competitors were Rhymney (Mr. Abel C. Jones), Cleveland Harmonic (Mr. Garvin Kay), Wattstown (Mr. Dan R. James), Tonyrefail (Mr. Willie Middleton), Penywnern (Mr. Evan Thomas), Maesteg United (Mr. Myrnach Davies), Ebbw Vale (Mr. Tom Davies), Splott, Cardiff (Mr. L. Powell Evans), Kingswood, Bristol (Mr. Tom Davies), Abertillery (Mr. Tom Bundred), Tredegar (Councillor J. T. Jenkins), and Williamstown (Mr. Ted Lewis). Of these, two were English—Cleveland Harmonic and Kingswood Harmonic, from Bristol. The two test-pieces were Granville Bantock's setting of Villon's 'Ballade,' 'When he thought he was about to be hanged,' and 'The Winds,' by E. T. Davies. Here again by a curious coincidence it was the last choir that sang, Williamstown, that won the prize, Penywnern being second. It was chiefly in reference to the first piece that Dr. Vaughan Williams made the caustic remarks quoted above. It is a very difficult piece, and an example of Prof. Bantock's desire to make instrumental effects with a chorus and with the peculiar sardonic colour which presents such special problems to singers and conductors.

Dr. Walford Davies's adjudication was a model of what these things should be, except that his remarks were such as can only be appreciated when read—their full meaning cannot be grasped when simply heard. Among the things he said which deserve remembering were his description of the tone of one choir as 'brassy,' and his accusation of another, which sang modern music in an old-fashioned style, that the singers were putting new wine into old bottles. Of another choir he said that its effort had body but no sinew, and that its tone was rather fat. But the main doctrine he preached in all his comments on individual choirs was the need for naturalness and the necessity for continuity as against the making of individual points. The details which he specially praised in the two winning choirs were clear diction, absence of exaggeration, and their fine balance in chording. He praised the way in which they introduced real sarcasm into the singing, the ease with which they made real points while refusing to make false ones, and the excellence of their intonation in the first piece, while deploring lapses in this respect in the second.

In conclusion, a word must be said in praise of the general improvement in the standard of the instrumental competitions and the delightful singing of all the children's choirs. It should be mentioned that some critics objected strongly to the introduction of children's dances at the Eisteddfod, but to the majority it proved a very charming interlude. Training in the dances should help to teach Wales, what Prof. Walford Davies said was so necessary, that there is such a thing as music without song. This year's Eisteddfod did not produce any sensational soloists, but the winners of the contralto and baritone prizes should be heard of again.

To omit a word of praise of the Eisteddfod Choir would be unjust. The best proof of its excellence is that steps were taken on the spot to make it permanent. The Children's Cymanfa Ganu (Congregational singing), another innovation, was one of the most stirring things of the week.

Next year's Eisteddfod takes place at Carnarvon, and that of 1922 at Ammanford, which uninstructed Englishmen may like to know is in Cærmarthenshire.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players. We shall be glad if those making use of the scheme will let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.

Young lady pianist desires to meet other players, or good singer. Sheffield and Rotherham district.—'Pianist,' c/o Musical Times.

Ladies and gentlemen, all instruments, with good orchestral experience, are invited to attend the Symphony rehearsals held on Tuesdays at 7.45 at the Philological College, 248, Marylebone Road, N.W. 1 (near Great Central Station).

Chamber Music for amateurs in Italy. For particulars of a means of bringing together amateur players and singers, apply by letter to the Consul of the Independent Theosophical Society, 65, Via Mario Cutelli, Palermo, Italy.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist or 'cellist for practice; most evenings free.—FRED MEERS, 165, Galton Road, Bearwood, Birmingham.

Pianist (male) wishes to meet good violinist, for practice, Grieg (Sonatas), Coleridge-Taylor, &c.—J. C. BIRD, 1, Spooner Road, Broomhill, Sheffield.

Lady (violin and viola player) and gentleman ('cellist) wish to meet two violinists, or one violin and one viola player, for a weekly evening practice of classical quartets. Must be experienced and good sight-readers.—Mr. and Mrs. MARTIN, 5, Amblecote Road, Grove Park, S.E. 12.

Experienced violinist wishes to join good pianist for sonata playing, and also for pianoforte trios.—S. H. GOWING, 11, Salisbury Road, Leyton, E. 10.

Pianist (19) desires to form trio (pianoforte, violin, and 'cello) for study of good music. Saturday afternoon and evening.—A. W. W., c/o Musical Times.

String Players (amateur) wanted to co-operate with choir in recitals during next winter. Opportunities for study and performance of chamber music, accompaniment of choral works, &c.—Herbert C. R. Galer, St. Andrew's Church, Whitehall Park, N. 19.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist to form trio for weekly practice. She has a number of classical and modern trios. London, S.W. district.—L. G. K., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wanted to complete quartet, Monday evenings 7.30 to 10. Brownswood Park, N. district.—'Amateur,' c/o Musical Times.

The fourth annual Lydbrook Musical Festival was held in the Parish Church on July 21, a large congregation being present. Miss Beatrice Bellamy's orchestra played Elgar's Imperial March, the 'War March of the Priests,' and Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody'; Miss Muriel Awre played violin solos (Chopin's Nocturne in E flat and the Andante from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto); and Mrs. Barry gave a Mozart Larghetto for 'cello. The vocal soloists were Miss Bevan and Mr. Percy E. Underwood (Gloucester Cathedral), the latter singing one of Brahms's 'Four Serious Songs.' Choral items by Haydn and Wesley and well-known hymns made up a scheme of an excellence unusual in a village church. Miss Elsie Black, the organist, accompanied.

Church and Organ Music

THE PRECES, RESPONSES, AND LITANY OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH: A BY-WAY OF LITURGICAL HISTORY

By J. M. DUNCAN

(Continued from August number, page 552)

II

It is now time to examine the text of Tallis's Preces and Responses. The copies on which we have to depend all date from the same period, about fifty years after the composer's death. All but one are manuscript, and were written about the years 1625-40—one in London, one at Oxford, and two at Cambridge—besides two fragments of uncertain origin. The London copy is found in a set of part-books apparently written under the direction of the Rev. John Barnard, minor canon of St. Paul's, for the choir, and brought into use there on August 22, 1625. These books afterwards belonged to the Rev. William Costling, the celebrated bass singer, and are now in the library of the Royal College of Music.* Unfortunately the second counter-tenor part is missing, but the remaining four parts are here given in full:

SET I

THE PRECES

P.S. in Treble.

P.S. in Treble.

* Their existence was not known to Dr. Jebb.

P.S. ends.

shall be, world with-out end. A - men. Praise ye the

THE RESPONSES

P.S. in Tenor.

Lord, . . praise ye . . the Lord.

It is curious that the first of the Preces requires four parts only, and all the rest require five.

The Oxford copy is found in a set of part-books written for the choir of Christ Church probably not later than about the year 1640, since from 1641 onwards music of this kind could be had in print. The books are now in the College library—1220-4 is the catalogue number—but the treble and second counter-tenor parts have been lost. The three remaining parts, however, except for two copyist's mistakes, agree exactly with the corresponding parts of the St. Paul's copy already quoted.

The two Cambridge copies are contained in two sets of part-books belonging to Peterhouse, and now on loan to the University library. These books consist of a number of music-sheets written in several different hands, all of about the years 1625-35, and are believed to have been put together about 1635, at the time when John Cosin, afterwards Bishop of Durham, was Master, and was arranging to establish a choral service in the College chapel. The first set consists now of four parts only, the second counter-tenor, as at the Royal College, being missing. These parts, except for one copyist's mistake, agree exactly with the corresponding parts of the St. Paul's copy quoted above.

The second Peterhouse set is unfortunately still more incomplete, only three parts now surviving, namely, first counter-tenor, tenor, and bass. The Preces which this copy contains need not be dwelt upon, as they do not appear again in history. Space unfortunately does not allow the Responses to be quoted, and it must be enough to say that the Lesser Litany differs considerably from Set I., already quoted, and that as regards the other responses, the tenor is the same in both sets, the bass differs only in one note, but the counter-tenor differs considerably. The treble would also inevitably exhibit some points of difference, were it now forthcoming. We will call these Responses 'Set II.'

In 1641, Barnard, after many years of preparation, published the results of his researches in a collection of 'Select Church Music' for the use of cathedral choirs. This was the first publication of its kind for nearly eighty years. The Preces which he included in his book were Set I. above, transcribed exactly. In the Responses the Lesser Litany follows Set II. As for the other Responses, the bass (which, as we have seen, is all but the same in both sets) remains: the first counter-tenor follows Set II.; the tenor, however, no longer preserves the plainsong, but leaves it for a few notes in four different responses. The treble, which is all but identical with the treble of our present Festal Responses, also differs from Set I. in four places, and may be in fairly close agreement with the treble of Set II., now missing.* It is possible, as was surmised by Jebb, that Set II. and 'Church Musick' preserve a separate set of Responses written by Tallis as second thoughts to his first set. But the difference between the two sets does not on analysis appear to be sufficient to justify Jebb's conclusion. Moreover, it must be pointed out that in 'Church Musick' there occurs a passage, three times repeated, in which consecutive octaves are avoided only by the use of a broken chord, such as Tallis himself would scarcely have admitted:

It seems therefore more probable that the music written by Tallis is that given here as Set I.; and that in course of time, as the taste for melody grew at the expense of polyphony, the original was gradually modified, Set II. and 'Church Musick' representing two stages in this process. The fact that the Preces of Set II. are independent is no evidence against this view, for it must be remembered that while nowadays Preces and Responses are regarded as forming one composition, in the 17th century it was Preces and Psalms—settings of selected portions of psalms for chanting—which formed one set, and Responses another. Many sets of Preces and Psalms by composers of this period exist, without any Responses belonging to them.

The two fragments need not detain us long. They are two bass parts of the Preces only, without Responses, one in the Lambeth Palace Library, the other at St. John's College, Oxford. Both are the same as the Preces in Peterhouse Set II.

Of the authorities already cited in the Preces and Responses, two only contain the Litany—Peterhouse Set II. and Barnard's 'Church Musick.' The latter is inaccurately printed, a glaring error occurring in the Tenor Decani, which in the last three of the opening invocations, instead of agreeing with the Tenor Cantoris, reproduces the Treble an octave lower. The same mistake occurs in 'Spare us, good Lord.' Dean Aldrich's criticism of Barnard, that he was the first to despoil Tallis's Litany, seems to be justified by such careless editing. Allowing, however, for misprints and miscopyings, the two authorities agree together fairly well so far as treble, tenor, and bass are concerned, and substantially as regards the two counter-tenor parts, though the division of labour between the two varies. We give

* This part still existed in Jebb's time (1845), but had disappeared by about 1870. It is said by him to differ but little from 'Church Musick.' He does not, however, quote it, contenting himself with this general description, which, as regards the tenor part, is hardly accurate.

* Counter-tenor & Cantoris has E.

part of Barnard's text and variations in the Peterhouse version, of which the treble is also fortunately available, Dr. Jebb having printed it in his 'Choral Responses,' vol. 2. Of the Peterhouse Agnus Dei it must be said that in spite of 17th century addiction to false relations, it can scarcely have been tolerable; and if it was really sung as written, one can hardly be surprised at the determination of the Puritans to abolish Church music altogether:

O God the Fa - ther, of heaven: have mer -

- cy up - on us mis - er - a - ble sin - ners.

P.S. in tenor.

We be-seech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

Peterhouse thus:

We be-seech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

[Peterhouse preserves the plainsong unaltered. Barnard alters the second note, but produces a more pleasing chord. On the principle of difficilior potius lectio, we prefer Peterhouse.]

It will be observed that in his own setting Tallis did not work upon the musical adaptations in Cranmer's Litany. While Cranmer, as we have seen, retained but one single tone for the whole set of Litany responses, Tallis employs four of those given in the Salisbury Processional, showing that there must have existed in his time another adaptation of the plainsong differing from Cranmer's, and retaining the old tones more completely than did Cranmer.

Why Tallis did not finish the Litany is not known. Perhaps he was asked to set only the first half; perhaps he was so much disgusted with Cranmer's mishandling of the latter half that he preferred leaving it alone altogether. At any rate, he did so; and although adaptations have been made from the Responses to fit the later portions, such makeshifts are not successful, and serve by their tediousness only to weary listeners by contrast with the real Tallis. But in the year 1908, at the present writer's suggestion, Prof. Wooldridge undertook to supply the omitted matter and to complete the musical setting of the English Litany in an appropriate style and in the traditional form. §

(To be concluded.)

* Peterhouse has G sharp in the Treble.

† Peterhouse D in 1st counter-tenor, probably a mere copyist's mistake.

§ 'Musica Antiquata.' Part 3 (Oxford University Press).

The 'Hymn of Praise' was performed at St. David's Cathedral on July 22 by the Haverfordwest Choral Society, numbering about a hundred voices. Mr. W. E. Dixon conducted, and Mr. Herbert C. Morris, the Cathedral organist, accompanied.

The committee of the Nottingham Central Mission (Halifax Place Chapel) has presented a pair of silver vases to Madame Ethel Parkin, in recognition of her services as principal contralto.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Harold Helman, St. Margaret's, Ilkley (three recitals)—Impromptu, Lemare; Voluntary in C, Maurice Greene; The Pilgrim's Progress (Parts 1, 2, and 3), Ernest Austin; Scherzo, Bairstow; Introduction and Variations on a theme in the bass, Haynes; Aubade, Bernard Johnson; Prelude and Fugue, Charles Macpherson; Legend, Harvey Grace; Fantasie Rustique and Fantasia in E, Wolstenholme; Toccata in D minor, Faulkes.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (two recitals)—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Grand Chœur, Haigh; Minuet, Boccherini; Concert Overture, Fricke; 'Star of Hope,' Barber; Concert Toccata, Holloway; Lied, Wolstenholme.

Mr. A. G. Mathew, St. Paul's Cathedral, Calcutta—'Pomp and Circumstance,' Elgar; Pastoral, Guilmant; Capriccio, John Ireland; Sarabande and Finale (Suite for Violin, 'Cello, and Organ), Rheinberger; Basso Ostinato, Arensky.

Mr. Cyril P. Musgrove, Bar Congregational Church, Westborough, Scarborough—Imperial March, Elgar; Solemn Prelude, Noble; Dithyramb, Harwood; Largo and Finale ('New World' Symphony).

Mr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church (three recitals)—Processional and Good Friday Music, 'Parsifal'; Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Scherzando, Piërné; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Two Preludes, Dallier; Prospice, Bellairs.

Mr. Alan Burr, Queens' College Chapel, Cambridge (two recitals)—Pavane, Byrd; Galiardo, Bull; Fantasia in Four Parts, Gibbons; Prelude on 'Now thank we all our God,' Karg-Elert; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Elevation, Communion, and Sortie, Vierne; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Villanella, John Ireland; Pœan, Harwood.

Mr. T. A. Bevis, St. Nicholas, Childe Okeford (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Chanson de Nuit, Elgar; Postlude (In Memoriam), Mackenzie; Meditation, Frank Bridge; Festal Prelude, Dunhill.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Berceuse and Carillon, Vierne; Chant Pastoral, Dubois; Marche-Finale (Suite No. 2) and Canzone, Boëllmann.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (four recitals)—Aria (Suite in D) and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude and Fugue on the name BACH, Liszt; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Marche Pontificale, Widor; Selection from the 'Yeoman of the Guard'; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Air with Variations, Best; 'Ite Missa est,' Lemmens; 'L'Arlesienne,' Bizet; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, Bach; Study in A flat, Schumann; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Prelude on Darwin's 148th, Darke; Carillon, Sowerbutts; Caprice Héroïque, Bonnet.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, Royal Albert Hall—Grand Chœur in D, Guilmant; Minuet in E flat, Mozart; Chaconne in G minor and March (Occasional Overture), Handel.

Mr. J. Hammond Fearon, Mount Tabor U.M. Church, Sheffield—March for a Festival, Fearon; Prelude on the 'Old Hundredth,' Parry; Romance in D flat, Lemare; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Postlude in D, Smart; March in B flat, Silas.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, organist and choirmaster, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham.
 Mr. Alban Hamer, organist and choirmaster, Bloemfontein Cathedral, and music master, St. Andrew's High School, South Africa.
 Mr. W. A. Macduff, organist and choirmaster, All Saints', Scarborough.
 Mr. A. Forbes Milne, organist and music master, Berkhamsted School.
 Mr. Ernest H. Smith, organist and choirmaster, St. James's, New Brighton.
 Mr. J. J. Percy Terry, organist and choirmaster, Erdington Parish Church, Birmingham.
 Mr. George F. Walter, organist and choirmaster, Parish Church, Altrincham, Cheshire.

Letters to the Editor

ROBERT FAYRFAX

SIR,—May I be allowed to explain that, with reference to my article in last month's Musical Times, the second C in the third bar from the end of the quotation from the 'Agnus,' was an error. It ought to have been B. Fayrfax's modernity was not, I fear, quite equal to the broken upward suspension indicated.

In the Madrigal there was an A missing in the first bar of the treble. The tenor reproduces the proper opening in this respect.

These errors will be corrected in a reprint of the article, designed to assist in a propaganda for a suggested Fayrfax Commemoration on October 24, next year, the fourth centenary of his death.—Yours, &c.,

The Old Bridge Cottage, S. ROYLE SHORE.
 Staines, August 14, 1920.

SIR,—Mr. S. Royle Shore's invitation to Dr. Grattan Flood at the close of his article on 'Robert Fayrfax' in your August issue is so personal a one that I must apologise for entering into the hunt for Fayrfax information. I owe Dr. Flood too much gratitude for past help to wish to rob him of the honour of any fresh discovery relating to so important and interesting an English musician. My object in writing is to draw the attention of Mr. Royle Shore and your readers to my articles on Robert Fayrfax appearing in Musical News for January 20, February 3 and 10, 1917. Those articles are, I believe, as complete as they could be from the bibliographical point of view. I have tried to give a comprehensive catalogue of Fayrfax's writings, so that those interested in the man could know where to find specimens of his work. The use of a bibliography is apparent to those who have to work in places where access to the various museum and library catalogues is difficult or impossible. Neither Mr. Shore's nor Dr. Flood's articles supply a list of Fayrfax's works and their present whereabouts. So far as the present whereabouts are concerned it is quite likely that my list is no longer quite correct. Dr. Flood takes the history a little farther back than I was able to do, owing to the publication of papers not available when I wrote. Mr. Shore's article is valuable on account of the number of musical examples he is able to give. I think that a writer using the three articles as sources of information could put together a fairly good account of Fayrfax's activity.

Mr. Royle Shore says that Fayrfax took the degree of Mus. D. in 1501 or 1502. It is true that, according to the Cambridge Grace Book, he was licensed to proceed in 1501-02, but an entry in the Privy Purse Expenses of Elizabeth of York does not include a degree in his style. Moreover, and more important, Fayrfax himself says, in 1511, that he had possessed the degree of Mus.D. for seven years; he must, therefore, have had it conferred upon him in 1504. His exercise was the five-part 'O, quam glorifica' (Lambeth Palace, Cod. I.).—Yours, &c.,

JEFFREY PULVER.

London, N. 16.

GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL SCHOOL

SIR,—The visit of the Glastonbury Festival School to London has created two dominant impressions: first, that the Glastonbury movement contains the seeds of a healthy musical and dramatic development in the life of the country, and, secondly, that Mr. Boughton's music-drama 'The Immortal Hour' is a work of genius; but unfortunately, unless the movement can receive further financial support, it must cease with this year. The local resources are too slender to support even its present modest outlay of expenditure. To carry on the work requires an additional income of £750 a year to pay a small living wage to the musicians who take part in the School's activities and to defray the expenses of the periodic performances. So long as these have to be given in the small Assembly Rooms at Glastonbury they cannot pay their way because large audiences cannot be accommodated.

Two things then are necessary. This income of £750 must be found for, say, three years. At the same time the site secured through the generosity of a supporter to build a permanent home for the Glastonbury performances has to be paid for this year, or the offer of it will be lost.

Last year an appeal was issued asking for £10,000 for the construction of the Theatre, with permanent stage and lighting, and a temporary auditorium. Out of this £10,000 £3,000 will be required to secure the above-mentioned site. About £1,200 has been received or promised towards the Theatre Fund, therefore not more than £1,800 is required to secure the site. If this were assured, it would give considerably further time in which to collect the remainder for the construction of the Theatre.

If a hundred and fifty people who have received favourable impressions through the 'Old Vic' performances will promise a subscription of £5 each for three years, the first point can at once be satisfactorily settled. The work of the Glastonbury School can then go on, Mr. Boughton being given adequate help in its executive details and set free for his own proper business of composition—with the prospect of giving us more immortal hours.

But the point is that unless both the site and the necessary income are provided now, there will be nothing left in existence to be added to later on. That should be a disastrous prospect to those who have appreciated the result of the last seven years' work, lately shown at the 'Old Vic.' It is one, however, which they can avert if they will.

We believe that Glastonbury has in it the possible development of a movement of the greatest importance, both for British music and the regeneration of the life of the countryside. It will form a musical and dramatic centre for the study of British music from the Elizabethan period down to the present time. Its methods will be largely experimental. We believe that at present Mr. Boughton's work is unique, but we hope that it will also be an example, and that centres may be started in other parts of the country on the same lines.

It is necessary to add that the two funds—that of working expenses and the permanent theatre scheme—are kept entirely distinct, and that cheques drawn to the hon. treasurer, Mr. Roger Clark, Street, Somerset, should be crossed 'School' or 'Theatre Fund,' according to the intention of the giver.—Yours, &c.,

(Signed) EDWARD ELGAR
 (Chairman of the London Committee).

(Signed) W. H. HADOW.

N.B.—The following gentlemen have consented to act as Trustees of the Theatre Fund: The Rt. Hon. Sir Frederic Pollock, Bart., LL.D., D.C.L., Mr. Roger Clark, and Mr. P. Napier Miles.

THE ARTISTIC VALUES OF OPERA

SIR,—Although it cannot be denied that there is much truth in the views which Mr. A. L. Salmon has expressed in his article on 'The Artistic Values of Opera,' which appeared in your August issue, I cannot help thinking that he leaves the greatest justification for opera untouched.

It seems to me probable that the majority of real lovers of opera will be prepared to admit the existence of its defects as a means of combining the various departments of art which are used in its production, but for them there is a greater attraction in opera which more than counterbalances these details. Recognising its possibilities, they patronise it with lofty expectations—which, it is true, are not always fulfilled; but that is not their fault.

Few will venture to contradict the statement that from time immemorial the human voice has been found capable of moving our species more profoundly than any other known means. The orator has held, holds, and will continue to hold, an audience spell-bound by the judicious use of his voice and his command of language. But even his immense power over men's feelings pales before that of the great singer. Instruments may charm the senses, but the voice touches a much deeper and more tender chord in the human heart.

An instrumental composition aims at expressing the intentions of its composer, but comparatively few are sufficiently educated to grasp its message unaided. People who have the musical sense but insufficient education will be likely to interpret the composer's ideas in various ways, guided therein by their individual feelings or intuition. Not every one, when listening to the 'Pastoral' Symphony, for example, is capable of closing his eyes and imagining himself seated in a forest hearing the warbling of birds and the babbling of the brook. Uncertainty as to a composer's intention may or may not be an advantage.

In vocal music it is otherwise. Its message is not in doubt. The singer's duty is to endeavour to express that message in accordance with the composer's intention. His privilege is to take a dead, printed page of notes and words and cause them not only to live, but to reach the heart of his hearers. Besides that, if he be a real artist, he will impart to his interpretation of a given theme a certain element from his own personality, which will stamp individuality on his effort.

To the real singer the message is embodied in the words; the music is but the vehicle whereby he gives it expression. If the music be well adapted for the expression of lyricism and dramatism, so much the better, and his task will be facilitated. But whatever be the quality of the music, his aim remains the same. His success depends upon his ability to convey the message to the audience. He calls upon gesture and colour to assist him in making it more impressive, not to the real musician, but to the majority of his hearers, who would not be content with lyricism pure and simple. But he must never forget that his chief object is the delivery of the articulate message—the meaning of the words for which the music has been written.

I further disagree with Mr. Salmon when he states that 'Wagner triumphed by his music alone, not by his drama.' To my mind this stamps him as an instrumentalist, hence he cannot be expected to pass a dispassionate judgment on opera. Not being an instrumentalist, I opine that in all the operas he wrote after 'Tannhäuser,' Wagner failed dismally in this vocal music, because instead of the text, he made music-drama the centre of his creations.—Yours, &c.,

A. KEAY.

2, Gledstanes Road, W. 14.

August 18, 1920.

RESPONSES AT MATINS AND EVENSONG

SIR,—Has not Mr. J. M. Duncan, in his interesting article in your issue for August, done the memory of Merbecke an injustice? He accuses him of making the mistake, when adapting the responses of the choir offices, of giving a rising note when the scansion of the final foot of the response was a trochee.

But Mr. Duncan seems to have overlooked the fact that the Latin rules governing the responses are the same as those governing Psalm Tones 2, 5, and 8, viz., that the rising note shall be used when the final word of the response is (1) a monosyllable or (2) a Hebrew word; and that when the final word comes within either of these two classes, it is then not a question of scansion. Thus when Merbecke gives O Lord, have mercy upon us.

he has made no mistake.

The same thing can be seen (e.g.) in vv. 27 and 28 of the Te Deum to Tone 8.1. in Briggs and Frere.—Yours, &c.,

F. DARWIN FOX.

111, Lansdowne Road, W. 11,

August 2, 1920.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of September, 1860:

WANTED, a CONDUCTOR for a Choral Class connected with one of the Bethnal Green Parishes. Remuneration, 42s. per quarter for 2 hours upon one evening of the week. Address, Choral Class, Benham's Money-order Office, Mile End Road.

DEBAIN'S ANTIPHONEL, a Substitute for an Organist. Any music, from the common hymn tune to the grand chorus, can, by this instrument, be played on the Organ or Harmonium by a person who has no knowledge of music.—'Mons. Debain has successfully carried out the idea of giving to all Churches and Chapels the benefit of an Organ and Organist at a trifling cost.'—H. BERLIOZ.

Illustrated Price List, on application at the London Wholesale Warehouse, 43, Watling Street, Cheapside, and of all Music-sellers.

DESTRUCTION OF ST. MARTIN'S HALL BY FIRE.

We regret to state that this highly popular music hall was almost entirely destroyed by fire, on Sunday morning last, August 26. The fire is said to have originated in the extensive premises of Messrs. Kesterton, coach-builders, at the corner of Hanover Street, in Long Acre (immediately adjoining St. Martin's Hall), the whole of which were entirely destroyed. . . . The building and property are of course insured to a considerable amount; but there is reason to fear that Mr. Hullah's loss will greatly exceed the amount of insurance, and that he will stand in need—and doubtless receive—the active sympathy of the 'musical' public, for whose benefit and enjoyment he has so successfully catered for many years. Mr. Hullah was out of town at the time of the unfortunate occurrence, as was also Mr. Headland, his active manager. Mrs. Hullah and others were on the premises at the time, but were got out in safety.

DENBIGH.—The National Eisteddfod of Wales was this year held at Denbigh, on the 7th of August and three following days, when prizes were awarded for the best compositions in poetry and music. The prize for the best anthem was awarded to Mr. R. Davies, of the St. Asaph Cathedral Choir. There was also a competition in chorus singing. Three choirs competed for the prize of ten guineas, which was awarded to the Denbigh Choral Society. The other choirs were the Dyserth Wesleyan Choir, and a choir from the vicinity of Denbigh. Concerts of vocal and instrumental music were held each evening.

DR. FOWLE'S EIGHTEEN ANTHEMS.—Second Thousand. Price 10s. 6d., with a Portrait of Handel and an Oratorio GRATIS. Notice.—The numerous testimonials in favour of these Anthems from the Nobility, Clergy, and the Musical Profession, can be had GRATIS, and post-free, on application to Dr. Fowle, Birchyfield, near Bromyard, Herefordshire.

ONLY FOR ONCE IN A WAY. Ladies' Comic Song. The words (which are unexceptional) [sic] by CARPENTER, the music by C. W. GLOVER. Price 2s.

Obituary

J. J. DOUCE, organist for forty years of the Church of St. James, Spanish Place, London, passed away on July 18, full of years. The former Catholic Church was built in 1791 as the Chapel of the Spanish Embassy, adjoining the Ambassador's house in Manchester Square (whence the name of the street, 'Spanish Place'), and was replaced by the present church in 1891. Mr. Douce was appointed organist of the old church in 1880, and retained his post in the splendid new Gothic church with considerable distinction. He was interred in St. Mary's Cemetery, Kensal Green, after a solemn Requiem Mass in St. James's.

W. EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN, at Alexandra Road, Sale, near Manchester, on June 26. Born at Sale in 1866, and a brilliant student at the Royal College of Music, Mr. Duncan composed Masses, operas, odes, overtures, songs, &c., and published a dozen volumes, including 'The Story of Minstrelsy,' 'The Story of the Carol' (both issued by Walter Scott), and an 'Encyclopædia of Musical Terms' (Schirmer, 1915). He was well-known as the musical critic of the Daily News in pre-war days, and he was the Manchester correspondent of Musical Opinion since last January. Although in failing health for the past three years, he struggled on manfully to the end. As recently as Christmas he had completed and published, through Aird & Coghill, five remarkable song-cycles, some of which display a freedom of diction and an originality that ought to appeal to those desirous of modernity combined with sound musicianship.

[An article on Edmondstoune Duncan, by Mr. Samuel Langford, appears on page 585 of this issue.]

LETTERS OF GREAT COMPOSERS :

BEETHOVEN, MOZART, MENDELSSOHN,
WAGNER

BY WILLIAM PEARSON

One was rather surprised the other day to see a contemporary American journal lamenting that our great composers have said so little about their own works. Such an assertion is inexplicable when one thinks of the many volumes of letters of famous musicians, from Mozart and even earlier, down to Brahms—letters wherein we come across almost on every page some reference to the composition they had on hand at the time of writing, or of some criticism the critics had passed on a work which had already been offered to the world. The present writer has been for a long time collecting the published correspondence of the world's master-musicians. Of all the varied phases of musical literature—biographical, historical, æsthetic, critical—none is more fascinating and more abundantly serviceable to the musician than the study of what the great minds in music have thought and felt about their own offspring.

For example, no one can read Beethoven's letters (now happily accessible in an English edition) without being profoundly impressed by the enormous import of the man and his message. It does us good merely to scan the index of his two bulky volumes of letters, to notice his wide range of interests, his knowledge of men and affairs, his æsthetic observations on certain subjects, his religious and moral sentiments, his deep reverence for Shakespeare, his lifelong reading of Homer, his opinion of Handel, his exaltation of Mozart, his acquaintance with Goethe, and his love-letters to Countess Giulietta Guicciardi, 'the immortal beloved.' Then again his pathetic epistles to his blackguardly nephew Carl, his heartrending references to his increasing deafness, his communications with our own Philharmonic Society in London, and—what is still more of interest to those of us who really study Beethoven's music—his comments upon his works. But before giving brief extracts from references to his works I should like to strike the personal note (or rather let the master do it for me) and select from the copious outpourings of his full heart one or two passages which show him in a little-known light. I am tempted to dwell upon his letters to his nephew, but space forbids. Yet I cannot help quoting a passage from one, that shows the extraordinary magnanimity of the man. Addressing him as 'My dear son,' he exclaims:

'Say no more! only come to my arms, not one harsh word shall you hear. For God's sake do not bring misery on your own head! You shall be received as lovingly as ever. I pledge my word of honour you shall meet with no reproaches. You need expect only the most affectionate care and assistance.—BEETHOVEN (volti sub.)!'

Here is tenderness, indeed! But there is another picture of the irritable, irate master. Falling out in his habitual way with his servants, whom he always suspected, he thus writes of his somewhat summary treatment of one of them:

'All the devilry began again yesterday morning, but I made short work of it by throwing the heavy armchair beside my bed at his head, which procured me peace for the rest of the day.'

On his pecuniary difficulties, fancied or real, Beethoven dwells constantly:

'You know yourself that a sensitive spirit ought not to be fettered by miserable anxieties, and much that might render my life happy is thus abstracted from it. Even my inclination, and the duty I assigned myself to serve suffering humanity by means of my art, I have been obliged to limit, and must continue to do so.'

In another letter he complains that he is a very bad man of business. (That we shall not dispute.) But he goes on to make a very wise suggestion concerning composers and the remuneration they should receive. It is this:

'There ought to be one grand dépôt of art in the world to which the artist may repair with his works, and on presenting them receive what he required; but as it is now one must be half a tradesman besides—and how is this to be endured? Good heavens! I may well call it troublesome.'

Of Beethoven's appreciation of other composers, one quotation shall suffice. Writing to Kapellmeister Hofmeister he proceeds:

'Your intention to publish Sebastian Bach's works really gladdens my heart, which beats with devotion for the lofty and grand productions of this our father of the science of harmony. I trust I shall soon see them appear. I hope when your subscription list is opened to procure you many subscribers.'

As I said above, it was upon the subject of his own works that Beethoven dwelt most frequently. His Sonatas are constantly discussed:

'As for myself, I wander about here with music-paper among the hills and dales and valleys, and scribble a great deal. But I shall finish the Sonata some day or other, for I cannot contain myself with it much longer.'

(One would just like to know the precise Opus which was causing this travail at birth.) Much illuminating matter, too, occurs in his letters to Count Oppersdorf relative to the Symphonies. (The fourth Symphony is dedicated to Count Oppersdorf.) His solitary opera, 'Fidelio,' at one period is never out of his mind and letters. Of his Quartets, and one in particular, he was very anxious about payment. To Peters & Co., his publishers, he writes a very long letter, and tells them his demands for the following:

'For the greatest work I have hitherto written, a Grand Mass with choruses and four obbligati voice-parts and full orchestra, I demand at least 1,000 florins; Variations on a Waltz (Diabelli's) for the pianoforte (they are numerous) 30 ducats in gold. A Song with pianoforte accompaniment 8 ducats. An Elegy for four voices with the accompaniment for two violins, viola, and violoncello, 24 ducats. Four military marches with Turkish music; when applied for I will name the sum. . . .'

He adds many other works with price appended, and concludes somewhat naïvely:

'My fixed principle has always been never to make any offer to publishers; not from pride, but simply from a wish to ascertain how far the empire of my small talents extended.'

Mozart's letters show a playfulness and a nicely-balanced sense of humour and observation one looks for in vain in Beethoven's. And how truly do the letters of both reflect the inner man! If one had the time he could point out pages and pages of Mozart's letters analogous to pages and pages of the composer's scores; spontaneity, brightness, a nimble wit, a certain pathos (the corollary of the gay man), a wistfulness, and above all charm—the indefinable Mozartian charm—pervading his correspondence and music alike. Then again the familiar and confidential mood which permeates all his epistles makes one feel that they were written for the actual reader, whoever he may be. The Mozart letters, properly arranged and with a few explanatory and connecting notes, would make a biography of the 'little master' far more authentic than many a pretentious volume. His letters commence when a boy of thirteen years at Salzburg, and close with his all too short life, his last epistle being written but a few weeks before his death, at Vienna, in 1791. How he lived and laboured, enjoyed and suffered, is delineated with a degree of vividness and graphic reality which, as I have said, no biography of the master could accomplish. A perusal of his correspondence must of necessity kindle fresh zeal in our artists of to-day. It is manifestly the unrestrained, natural, simple outpourings of his heart, delightfully recalling to our minds all the sweetness and pathos, all the spirit and grace which have a thousand times enchanted us in his music. The accounts he gives us of his visit to Paris may indeed lay claim to a certain æsthetic value, for they are written throughout with visible zest in his own descriptions and also with wit and charm and characteristic energy. But to try to analyse Mozart's letters, like endeavouring to analyse the effect of his music, is as futile as attempting to explain the scent of a flower or the thumping of one's heart when a friend unexpectedly enters the room. When we consider his brief existence, we are more and more amazed at the amount of life he crammed into it. Unlike his great contemporary of whom I have been speaking, Mozart travelled much, and his letters from Italy, Vienna, Munich, and Paris reveal a keen susceptibility, a power of delicate observation which make his descriptions a most entertaining volume even to one not specially interested in music. His predilection for England and the English is marked. Writing from Vienna he says:

'During my stay here I have taken three lessons in English. I hope in the course of three months to be able to read and understand English books very tolerably.'

Again, when in 1782 the Spaniards attacked Gibraltar and were heavily beaten, the news put Mozart in a fever of excitement, and he exclaims in a letter:

'I did indeed hear, and with the greatest joy (for you know I am thoroughly English at heart) of England's victory.'

Now there is one salient feature of Mozart's letters that must strike the most indifferent reader, and that is his freely-expressed opinion upon all that relates to his art. One can almost hear him proclaiming his likes and dislikes in the most authoritative manner. The soft complaining flute comes in for his ire, and he refers to it thus:

'I become quite obtuse when obliged to write for an instrument I cannot bear.'

Of the much-discussed operatic libretti the composer of 'Die Zauberflöte' has some pertinent remarks. In a communication to a very intimate friend, dated Vienna, June 16, 1781, we find this:

'I don't care what the subject is provided the libretto be only good. Do you really suppose that I am likely to write an "opera comique" in the same style as an "opera seria." There should be as little sprightliness in an opera seria and as much learning and solidity as there should be little learning in an "opera buffa" but all the more sprightliness and gaiety. That people like to have a little comic music in an "opera seria" I cannot help, but here they draw the proper distinction on this point. I do certainly find that in music the merry-andrew is not yet got rid of, and in this respect the French are right.'

How dear to Mozart's heart was this subject of 'opera' all readers of the letters are soon aware. Down to his last week of life he was ever at a performance of his stage works, if not in the body, then in the spirit:

'Oh to hear my "Magic Flute" once more! Now it's time for the "Bird Catcher's Song," now for the "Queen of the Night's Aria"'

he keeps ejaculating in a letter the calligraphy of which shows the very feeble state of his health. But it is his 'Figaro' that Mozart expatiates upon more than any other of his works. On May 1, 1786, by the positive command of the Emperor, after many cabals, it was first produced. He writes from Prague, May 18:

'At the second performance of "Nozze di Figaro" there were five encores, and at the third seven encores, one of these, a short duet, being encored three times.'

On January 15 in the following year he is writing in his characteristic boyish vein to Herr Jacquin. He is returning from a ball where the flower of the Prague beauties assembled:

You ought to have been there, my dear friend. I think I see you running or limping after all those pretty creatures, married and single. I saw, however, with the greatest pleasure all these people flying about with such delight to the music of my "Figaro" transformed into quadrilles and waltzes; for here nothing is talked of but "Figaro"; nothing played but "Figaro"; nothing whistled or sung but "Figaro"; no opera so crowded as "Figaro"—nothing but "Figaro"—very flattering certainly.'

Great as Mozart was in all forms of music, he was certainly the greatest in opera. But his singers were for him a constant occasion for the invention of scathing remarks. A certain Herr Raaff—a noted tenor in his day—is drawing crowded houses and Mozart goes to hear him. This is how he writes after his performance:

'Herr Raaff in four arias of somewhere about 450 bars sang in a manner which gave rise to the remark that his want of voice was the principal cause of his singing so badly. When he begins an air I defy anyone not to burst out laughing. I had to take out my handkerchief to hide a smile.'

That Mozart was in the best sense a religious man is as obvious to the readers of the letters as that he was a musician. The space at my disposal could readily be occupied by culling his sentiments and reflections upon this topic. Writing to his father, Leopold Mozart (a truly remarkable man), we read:

'I never lie down at night without thinking that (young as I am) I may be no more before the next morning dawns. And yet not one of all those who know me can say that I ever was morose or melancholy in my intercourse with them. I daily thank my Creator for such a happy frame of mind, and wish from my heart that every one of my fellow creatures may enjoy the same.'

But I must have done with Mozart for a while. I will, however, give one more quotation. It will serve to show him in the light of a philosopher and moralist. In the last year or so of his allotted span he wrote the following note to a friend whose life does not appear to have been one of the most regular:

'Now tell me, my dear friend, how you are. I hope you are all as well as we are. You cannot fail to be happy, for you possess everything that you can wish for at your age and your position—especially as you now seem to have entirely given up your former excited mode of life. Do you not every day become more convinced of the truth of the little lectures I used to inflict upon you? Are not the pleasures of a transient, capricious passion, widely different from the happiness produced by rational and true love? I feel sure that you often in your heart thank me for my admonitions. I shall feel quite proud if you do, for I certainly played no insignificant part in your improvement and reform.'

Some biographers of Mendelssohn rate his letters as highly as his music. He, indeed, of all the great composers, is the prince of letter-writers. Although others have written a greater number (Tchaikovsky has two thousand to his credit), yet the composer of 'Elijah,' with his general culture, fostered and developed by the best education, has been able to give a literary flavour to his epistles that one usually looks for in vain in the correspondence of other great composers. Not only could Mendelssohn keenly analyse scenes, events, and persons that came before him, but few writers have had a happier knack of expression—and even Cowper himself, with all his genius as a letter-writer, did not excel him. Such happy expressions—free and gay, but never even tintured with slang—as abound in the two volumes of Mendelssohn's letters place him almost as high in the literary as in the musical world.

The letters begin with his famous visit to Goethe when quite a boy, and conclude with one to his 'dearest brother Paul,' penned but a week before his death. Perhaps the most interesting of all the letters is the series from Weimar, where Felix describes his meeting with the aged poet. The opportunities which he enjoyed as a boy of seeing and knowing Goethe in his own house gave an impulse to his whole life. Goethe's living presence strengthened and nurtured that love for perfection, and that dislike for everything mean and morbid, which always distinguished him. 'Keep your wits about you,' writes his father. 'Mind you snap up every word Goethe says,' enjoins the mother. And right well did their devoted son obey the paternal exhortations. Here is a passage from a lengthy letter written at Weimar:

'Yesterday evening I was at a party at Goethe's and played the whole evening—the "Concert-Stück," the "Invitation à la Valse," and Polonaise in C, all by Weber, my three Welsh pieces and my Scotch Sonata. He is so friendly and kind to me that I don't know how to thank him sufficiently, or what to do to deserve it. In the forenoon he likes me to play to him the compositions of the various masters in chronological order for an hour, and also tell him the progress they have made while he sits in a dark corner like a Jupiter Tonans, his old eyes flashing on me. He did not wish to hear anything of Beethoven's, but I told him I could not let him off, and played the first part of his Symphony in C minor. It seemed to have a singular effect on him. At first he said: "This causes no emotions, nothing but astonishment; it is grandiose." He continually grumbled in this way, and after a long pause he began again: "It's very grand, very wild; it makes one fear that the house is about to fall down; and what must it be when played by a number of men together." He said he hoped to learn much from me. I became henceforth twice as tall in my estimation.'

Mendelssohn's letters from Italy and Switzerland make delightful reading, especially those from Italy.

In a lengthy communication dated Rome, June 16, 1831, he gives us a graphic picture of Holy Week and its attendant ceremonies. He is at St. Peter's, and apparently so intent on hearing and seeing that he ignores decided physical risks to gratify his insatiable longings:

'I must not forget to tell you that on the Thursday when the "Miserere" was about to begin I clambered up a ladder leaning against the wall, and was thus placed close to the roof of the Chapel, so that I had the music, the priests, and the people far beneath me in gloom and shadow. Seated thus alone without the vicinity of any obtrusive stranger, the impression made on me was very profound.'

In the evening we find the ardent young Felix again at St. Peter's, and as the following extract shows, he was strangely impressed by a certain singer:

'One lesson was chanted by a soprano solo on a peculiar melody that I mean to bring home with me. It is an Adagio in long-drawn notes, and lasts a quarter of an hour at least. There is no pause in the music, and the melody lies very high, and yet it was executed with the most clear, pure, and even intonations. The singer did not drop his tones so much as a single comma, the very last notes swelling and dying away as even and full as at the beginning; it was indeed a masterly performance.'

There are a good many references to his own works. On the popularity of his 'Songs Without Words,' he says, writing to his publishers from Leipzig:

'I hope shortly to complete some pieces, but they are not "Songs Without Words," for I have no intention of writing any more of that sort, let the Hamburgers say what they will. If there were too many such animalculæ between heaven and earth at last no one would care about them; and there really is too great a mass of piano music composed now in a similar style; another chord should be struck, I say.'

His letters contain much to interest in regard to 'Elijah.' Years before its production he is writing to Pastor Schuburg, who made himself responsible for the libretto, and Mendelssohn's letters to him show what a keen sense of dramatic fitness he possessed on the purely literary side. But the letters, again to his brother, dealing with his triumph at the initial performance of 'Elijah' at Birmingham on August 26, 1846, are perhaps the most arresting. After describing the 'giant hall and its magnificent organ,' he proceeds:

'How often I thought of you during the time I was conducting! more especially however when the "Sound of abundance of rain" came and when they sang and played the final chorus with furor, and when after the first part we were obliged to repeat the entire movement. Not less than four choruses and four airs were encoired, and not one single mistake occurred in the whole of the first part; there were some after in the second part, but these were trifling. A young English tenor sang the last air with such wonderful sweetness that I was obliged to collect all my energies not to be affected and to continue beating time steadily.'

Mendelssohn was evidently overjoyed at the birth at Birmingham of his greatest offspring. At a subsequent production in London this was by no means the case, and he expressed himself pungently:

'The worst singer was the soprano' [he goes on to say]. 'It was all so neat, so elegant, so slovenly, so devoid both of soul and head that the music acquired a kind of amiableness that even now drives me almost mad to think of it.'

His tone, however, changes towards the close of this letter, and he speaks thus of other singers:

'Towards ten o'clock, when I was tired enough, the Italians lounged quietly in with their usual cool nonchalance. But from the very first moment that Grisi, Mario, and Lablache began to sing I inwardly thanked God. They themselves know exactly what they intend, sing with purity and in time, and there is no mistaking where the first crotchet should come in.'

But I must make no more quotations from these delightful pages, though sorely tempted. In leaving Mendelssohn, I cannot but regret that some of our enterprising publishers who do various series of standard literature should not include a selected volume of his letters, for they certainly would not be out of place in any library of best books.

Now for a glimpse of Wagner's letters. Of all the great musicians Wagner's literary output is by far the largest. In addition to some six or seven volumes of correspondence, about the same number of works upon his art, viz., 'The Music of the Future' (now, I suppose, the music of the past), and a bulky autobiography, there are of course his opera libretti, from 'Rienzi' to 'Parsifal,' which would fill a shelf of their own. But it is not my purpose here to speak of anything but his letters, and as the field is so wide I shall narrow it down to the immortal communications to Mathilde Wesendonck. (His letters to Liszt, to his first wife Minna Planer, to Emil Heckel, and to August Roeckel are all full to the brim with interesting matter, but want of space compels me to leave them untouched.) To the student of Wagner the Wesendonck letters are of paramount importance. To her he confided his innermost thoughts; and, what is of far more importance to remember, if it had not been for her the world would have been infinitely the poorer, for we should never have had 'Tristan and Isolde'—at any rate, so Wagner himself declares. A perusal of these precious documents addressed to his 'Dearest precious child'—as he styles her—reveals at once the magnitude and littleness of the man. The world owes a debt of gratitude to Frau Wesendonck, who after Wagner's death did not regard herself as exclusive owner of this unique correspondence the master addressed to her. She silently preserved them for posterity and willed their publication:

'For years since his death I have lived on these letters' [writes this remarkable woman]. 'True, for me alone they have been written, adapted to my individual sense; but the truths were expressed so lucidly, the sure paths to inner calm and happiness so gently and so clearly pointed out, that a knowledge of them must be salutary for every seeking mind.'

In such a welter of subjects one finds it a hard task to concentrate upon any single one. Now it is Buddha and his teachings which come up for discussion and are soon dissected; anon it is Beethoven and his Symphonies; then Jesus of Nazareth as a subject for a music-drama. Yet again our own Shakespeare, with a vivid dissertation upon Act 5 of 'Hamlet.' But a little further on it is animals—for his knowledge and love of dogs was proverbial. Turn but a few pages in these letters, and we light upon some glowing criticism of Homer, or some stinging remarks upon Schopenhauer; or he expatiates upon the psychology of sleep, or Tschudi's 'Fauna of the Alps,' or 'Judaism in Music.' Then he is comparing London and Moscow, or Paris and Naples, or Berlin and Rome. Later he is holding up to merciless ridicule the 'operamongers,' as he designates the once-popular opera composers like Rossini, or Außer, or Boieldieu, and even the German Spohr who befriended him not a little and was the first to produce his 'Flying Dutchman.' But it is when he analyses and explains the principal characters in his own works that the musical reader is most held.

I must squeeze in a paragraph or two to show the reader what 'Tristan' was to Richard Wagner and Mathilde Wesendonck. In his Venice diary, under date of October 12, 1858, he writes:

'I shall now return to "Tristan," to let the deep art of sounding silence there speak for me to thee.'

From Paris some three years later he writes:

'The production of the "Tristan" still remains my eye's chief mark. That once successfully effected, I have not much more to do on this earth and would gladly lay myself to sleep beside Master Cervantes. For my having written "Tristan" I thank you from my deepest soul to all eternity.'

Again, from Venice:

'Here will the "Tristan" be completed—a defiance to all the raging world. So be it—Sir Tristan—Lady Isolde—help me. From here shall the world once learn the sublime and noble stress of highest love, the plaints of agonising joy. And august as a god serene and hale shalt thou then behold me back, thy lowly friend.'

E

But one more extract from these Venice letters:

'The marvellous relation in which I stand to "Tristan" now you will easily perceive yourself. I say it openly since it is an observation due to the initiated mind, though not to the world that never has an idea so definitely passed into experience. How far the two predestined one another is so subtle, so wondrous a regard that the common mode of perception will be able to conceive it only in the sorriest distortion.'

But here I must pause. I have I trust said enough to show that the correspondence of the great composers is a field which we may explore with pleasure and profit.

A PEEP BEHIND THE SCENES IN ITALY

BY CLAUDE TREVOR

Having assisted many scores of times at episodes such as those recounted below, I venture to think musical readers may like to join me in 'a peep behind the scenes in Italy.'

The opening meeting of an operatic company in Italy usually takes place at the first rehearsal with the pianoforte, and is often considered by singers as an audition. At the rehearsal, or prova, as it is called in Italian, besides the director of the orchestra there are also present his substitute—always engaged in case of an emergency—the prompter, the impresario, and one or two members of the municipal authorities: rarely anyone else. The prima donna almost invariably arrives a few minutes late, accompanied by her inseparable mamma—or chaperone—who considers it not at all correct for her charge to go about alone, though, be it said, the lady is perfectly capable of taking care of herself. The general appearance of the artist in question is loud and showy, and in her ears and on every finger blaze ornaments set with more or less authentic gems, while brooches, lockets, and chains are hung about her person wherever possible. But this is a trait of the sterner sex also, whose curious habit it is to adorn all the fingers of each hand—not by any means always immaculately clean—to wear a huge scarf pin, usually a horse-shoe in form, and a colossal watch-chain—from which hang all manner of charms for good luck and against the lettatura (evil eye). After the usual introduction of the members of the company, each one saying the stereotyped thing—how glad he or she is to be singing with such an array of great artists—the rehearsal begins. The prima donna seats herself by the director (if there are two of the former, one on each side of him), the men standing about waiting for their cues to approach the pianoforte. It will be unusual if at the commencement of a prova the leading lady or the tenor does not complain of a slight indisposition. 'Caro Maestro,' pleads the former, 'I arrived late last night after a journey of twelve hours, and feel quite knocked up in consequence. You will be indulgent, won't you?'—at the same time letting one of her bejewelled hands rest lightly upon that of the director, a smile, meant to be irresistibly bewitching, accompanying her action. Usually the Maestro is far too old a bird to be caught with such chaff, but if he knows the lady's capabilities he permits her to go through her part sotto voce, otherwise he remarks drily, 'My dear Madame, if we are going to rehearse, have the kindness to sing out, or we shan't get along at all.' The result is one of two things. Either the singer (male or female) has merit, the indisposition being all humbug; and this being so, having 'sung out' and shown their capability, all goes well. In the alternative, the director rises, closes the pianoforte, and the singer is protestato (declared incompetent). Such a slight is perhaps the greatest an artist can receive, and a singer of only mediocre value will never submit without a vigorous protest against a verdict of the kind, leaving no stone unturned to get it reversed. Most performers who are not celebrities hold strong cards in their hands to avert a protesta, in the form of letters of praise, &c., from musicians of note. How such documents are obtained is in some cases a mystery, and it is not our business to inquire into the means resorted to. If a protesta is imminent, these valuable documents are produced, when, confronted also with the relations, or friends, who miraculously spring from no one knows where, the director and impresario experience an unpleasant half-hour. In the case of a lady a husband, father, brother, or more commonly a fiancé, takes up her cudgels, and interviews those who have dared so to humiliate an artist of such standing. Is the management aware that in England, France, Russia, Spain, and indeed every European country (not to mention every corner of America) she has had colossal success? Has such a singer come to the present city, which was really a condescension, to be insulted? And be it known further that a splendid contract for the Scala and San Carlo of Naples was refused to keep faith with the present management! Shall the diva be declared incompetent for a slight cold? As if such cannot happen to anybody. A few days' rest and care, then will be heard something like a voice. Such notes! Finally the impresario is inclined to give the singer another chance, provided the Maestro agrees. Generally matters are adjusted in this way. The singer interviews the director, who, after considerable manoeuvring, consents to give his valuable aid and run over the part the artist has been engaged for, before another trial with the company, and after an interval of a few days for the cure of the 'slight cold.' Frequently the whole matter is an understanding between impresario and director, and ends by a nice little sum finding its way into the latter's pocket. In these circumstances, if the performer is really unfit to sing the part she is engaged for, there is no hope for it but to allow an appearance, and let the public judge, which is not often at fault in spite of paid clagues, &c. It may be remarked in passing that rehearsals nowadays with the pianoforte are limited to a few, and one cannot help comparing this procedure with that of the past, taking as an example the occasion of the evening prior to the general rehearsal of Verdi's 'Macbeth' (the two chief parts to be sustained by two of the greatest singers of the day), when the composer insisted on their going through the famous duet of the fourth Act for the hundred and fiftieth time!

Envy and jealousy are two qualities that seem inseparable from the theatre, and when revealed by rival prime donne are not easily to be matched, and certainly not surpassed, by any other mortals. I will close this portion of my article by citing a case of which I was a witness. Some years ago it was decided to mount Meyerbeer's 'Les Huguenots' at ———, a strong cast being engaged. The dramatic soprano was going through the great love duet of the fourth Act when the impresario appeared adorned with an immense gardenia in his button-hole. Not far from the pianoforte was seated the light soprano engaged for the part of the Queen, who, on seeing the impresario, went towards him and entered into conversation, the two retiring to a remote corner in order to chat more at their ease. After a short time, at most five minutes, they came forward and approached the instrument. Gradually the voice of the dramatic soprano diminished, she grew pale, and with a gasp or two burst into hysterics. The consternation of all present can be imagined. All attempts to soothe, or learn the cause, proved in vain. When somewhat recovered, the lady seized her fur boa, and, rising to her feet, with her eyes ablaze, exclaimed, 'I have never been so insulted in all my career. To think that under my very eyes my impresario dares to present to a singer of the second part [very much emphasised], flowers, in preference to his prima donna. It's monstrous, and I will not put foot in the theatre again till I have received ample apology,' and with a last look that should have killed the two culprits, the offended diva flounced out of the place. Alas! only too true was her statement of the flower, for the outraged dramatic lady had seen, as the manager and light soprano emerged from their corner, that the gardenia of the former had found its way to the bosom of the latter. It may be called to mind, however, that the part of the light soprano in 'Les Huguenots' is in its way quite as important as that of the dramatic soprano.

The first orchestral rehearsal is ordinarily 'called' for 12 o'clock, and lasts till about 3.0 or thereabouts. Half an hour previous to the hour fixed, all the band parts are distributed, usually by the prompter, on the desks of the players, and he is responsible for any loss of such after the final performance of an opera. The performers arrive tardily, generally taking the utmost advantage of the legal half hour allowed for the difference of clocks, the very last to arrive being the director. The stage-manager is alert to note any late-comer, inflicting a fine of from two to five lire—which, however, is rarely paid. The director shakes hands and smiles amiably on all with whom he thinks it worth while to be friendly, for even such an important being as he cannot afford to set at naught all that are under his baton. Ascending his throne, he exclaims, 'Gentlemen, please take your places,' which in the case of a fixed orchestra is a superfluous admonition, all the members being accustomed to their posts. When a director is engaged in an important theatre for the first time, he usually addresses a few words to the members of his orchestra. One I have in mind invariably ended his speech with: 'I have the honour to direct the first orchestra in the world' (pause), 'so it is said' (pause; and then, drily)—'We shall see!' The rehearsal proceeds more or less rapidly according to the difficulties of the score, or the familiarity that the orchestra may have with it. Often I have assisted at such a rehearsal when in two and a half or three hours no more headway has been made than one Act, and not infrequently only half of an Act. I heard a celebrated old chef d'orchestre once say: 'We are for the composer what light is for the painter, but sometimes the light we are seeking we alone know how much work and patience it costs us to find'—and his words were very significant.

The prova generale, or dress rehearsal, which immediately precedes the first performance of a new opera, or an elaborate work which has not been mounted for some time, should in all essentials be the same in execution as a première. But this is seldom the case, for several reasons, one being the desire of the impresario that the opera shall be launched with as little delay as possible, he rarely considering the venture as other than a means for making money, and not caring a jot about the artistic side of the business. To fill his pockets is his one aim and object. I do not pretend to assert that there are not some honourable exceptions, but these are few and far between. These drawbacks, along with scenic or lighting effects not working as desired, are some which militate against a final rehearsal being like a first performance. I will set before the reader an incident that comes to my mind, which happened a few years ago during the prova generale at one of the leading theatres of Italy. The first Act of the opera was just terminating, all having gone swimmingly so far, when an unfortunate player in the orchestra came in at the wrong moment. 'Stop,' shouted the conductor, striking his desk furiously with his baton, and turning to the culprit the following altercation ensued. 'What are you doing there? Where is your head?' demanded the irate chief—and then, forcibly and volubly, 'You had better learn to read music and directions before you pretend to play in a decent orchestra.' 'As a matter of fact I probably read music better than you do,' was the retort. 'You are an idiot,' retaliated the conductor. 'The idiot is yourself,' was the answer. Beside himself with rage, the conductor descended from his desk, and, with clenched fists, made for his adversary. At once there was general confusion in the orchestra, all the players rising to their feet to interpose between the belligerents, those present in the stalls (the press and friends of the company) rushing forward to intervene, while to add to the dismay the prima donna took the occasion as a good one to faint, whereat the tenor, baritone, and bass carried her to a convenient sofa while the rest of those on the stage wildly called for the doctor of the theatre. The manager, who had witnessed the whole episode from a box, descended precipitately to aid in appeasing the anger of the conductor, who, under the combined efforts of those around him, gradually calmed down and reascended his throne, while the prima donna thought it opportune to return to her senses, and in a pathetic voice declared herself ready to go on. 'All's well that ends well' seemed apposite at this juncture, and everything promised to proceed smoothly. But the fire, though subdued, was not extinguished. Scarcely had twenty bars been played when the conductor gave a sign to cease. Placing his baton on his desk and crossing his arms, amid a terrifying silence he roared, 'Stage manager!' 'Here I am,' responded that personage, presenting himself behind the foot-lights. 'Send the manager,' was the demand. 'What is it?' inquired the impresario in anxious tones. 'It is this: either that gentleman'—indicating the former culprit—'leaves the orchestra or I don't conduct. That is all I have to say'—upon which he descended once more from his post, lighted a cigarette, and flung himself into a seat, crossing his legs and puffing furiously. Another half-hour now elapsed, which was occupied in trying to appease the ire of the two antagonists. At length the offending player was induced to proffer his excuses to his chief, who graciously extended his hand and consented to continue the rehearsal. All resumed their places, but it was time wasted, for the prima donna sang almost inaudibly, and the organist (who had to accompany her just then) and the master of the chorus (which latter should have sung with her) could not hear their cues, so chaos was the result. After trying over the passage two or three times the conductor once again lost patience, exclaiming, 'Madame, if you don't sing out it is impossible for the organ and chorus to come in at the right time.' 'Oh! Maestro,' was the reply, while a slight stagger seemed to indicate that another fainting fit was imminent, 'after what I have gone through it's impossible, quite impossible.' 'Very well, when you can' (brusquely), 'let me know. In the meantime, gentlemen' (turning to the orchestra), 'I thank you. The rehearsal is at an end.' So saying he left the theatre, and the company dispersed.

The emotions attendant upon a première of importance are little known, and less understood, by the mass of the public who elect to be present at it. All the principals are dressed and ready long before they are required, and as the time approaches for their entrance on the stage a positive panic seizes many of them, some breaking out into violent perspiration, while others' hands and feet become like ice. It is extraordinary the different ways in which artists are affected. A famous prima donna—happily, still among us—on the night of an important première would be almost physically prostrated; another I knew was sometimes seized with deadly sickness. The tenor Gayarré would furiously smoke a dozen cigarettes before appearing, enveloping himself in a veritable fog, while Stagno, another famous tenor, and invariably courteous, was capable of the greatest violence to anyone who came in contact with him before 'going on.' Scores of strange instances could be cited of the uncontrollable nervousness exhibited by performers. It is however worthy of note that no sooner are they before the public than their fear entirely disappears. I have known singers who have been acclaimed in a town, and left the most profound impression of their voices and talent, yet upon their return a few years later, when it would be thought their anticipation of renewed triumphs would engender calm, they have experienced greater panic than before, from the fear of having lost ground in the interval. Such a feeling is positive agony.

On the occasion of a new opera being produced its failure or success is generally decided at the second Act. If the first two Acts should have conquered the public, it is rare that disaster waits upon the remainder of the work.

CHAMBER MUSIC FOR AMATEURS.—Will 'F. H.' kindly communicate with the Editor? His address has been lost, and a letter is waiting to be forwarded.

The Competition Festival Record is not presented as a supplement to this issue of the Musical Times, as it does little more than duplicate the M. T. report of the Royal National Eisteddfod.

The two hundredth meeting of the Three Choirs Festival takes place at Worcester on September 5, 7, 8, 9, and 10. A full report will appear in the October Musical Times.

Music in the Provinces

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS)

BIRMINGHAM

A feature of special interest just now is the changing of the pitch of the Town Hall organ, which has for some time past been a vexed question. The following details, as given in the Birmingham Post, will therefore be perused with interest by readers of the Musical Times:

'Changing the pitch of a large pipe-organ is a somewhat delicate undertaking, . . . and the builders will be engaged on their task for some weeks. The organ, which is considered one of the best in the country, was originally built in 1834 for the purpose of Triennial Musical Festivals, and it had 64 draw-stops and 2,492 pipes. The cost was £3,000. In 1890 it was entirely rebuilt at considerable expense. A tubular pneumatic action was supplied, four hydraulic engines were installed, and an independent solo organ was added to replace the combination organ. At the present time there are no fewer than 4,450 pipes in the organ, the largest being 40-ft. in length and weighing three-quarters of a ton each.

When the late Dr. Richter was a familiar figure in Birmingham musical circles he insisted on the organ being pitched at A 435, which denotes the Continental pitch. This has proved quite unsuitable for the woodwind instruments of the modern English orchestral combination, and the pitch is being adjusted to A 439. It is probably not generally known that as a consequence of Dr. Richter's insistence on the Continental standard pitch it was necessary for Mr. C. W. Perkins (the city organist) to play for a whole season and part of another, at certain concerts, in a key half a tone higher than that in which the music was written, while for other performances the organ was inevitably out of tune.'

Active preparations are now being made for the coming musical season, which will start in September, and of which the following forecast of events will convey an idea of what we may expect to hear.

Mention has already been made (see August number) of Madame Minadieu's forthcoming Musical Matinées at the Grosvenor Room. Particulars of the Festival Choral Society's scheme have not yet been published, nor of many other concerts contemplated to be given in the autumn.

The City of Birmingham Orchestra—of which Mr. Appleby Matthews is director and conductor—figures largely in forthcoming events. As already stated there will be five Wednesday evening symphony concerts, eight popular Saturday concerts, and Sunday evening popular orchestral concerts at the Theatre Royal.

Mr. Max Mossel's series of concerts will be held at the Town Hall instead of at the Central Hall. Among the artists who will appear are MM. Alfred Cortôt and Arthur de Greef, Misses Irene Scharer and Myra Hess (pianoforte), and Madame Donald, Mr. John Coates, M. Mischa Leon, and Mr. Murray Davey (vocalists). Mr. Max Mossel will be solo violinist at the last concert, and Mr. Landon Ronald will conduct the symphony concert.

Mr. Hubert Brown will give four subscription concerts at the Town Hall, for which he has secured the following operatic artists: Mesdames Rosina Buckman, Gleeson White, Jeanne Brola, Edna Thornton, and Messrs. Frank Mullings, Maurice D'Oisly, Arthur Jordan, and Robert Radford. The instrumentalists will include M. Arthur de Greef, Mr. Victor Benbow, Miss Irene Scharer, Miss Margaret Fairless, and M. Zacharewitsch. The list of engagements also include the appearances of Miss Margaret Cooper and the Joseph Lewi Choir.

The Beecham Opera Company will give a season of opera at the Prince of Wales Theatre from September 27 to October 23. The repertory includes 'The Mastersingers,' which has not previously been staged here by this Company, otherwise the selection is of the usual orthodox order, comprising 'Aïda,' 'Côq D'Or,' 'Faust,' 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Il Trovatore,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Tristan and Isolde,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Madame Butterfly,' 'La Bohème,' 'Carmen,' 'Louise,' 'Marriage of Figaro,' and 'Othello.'

CHATHAM AND DISTRICT.

With the arrival of the holiday months concerts and other things musical had been shelved, and it was left mainly to educationists and those in the teaching profession to keep the flag flying. In response to the wishes of the local branches of the National Union of Teachers, the Kent Education Committee arranged a lecture on music, with demonstrations, which was given by Dr. R. T. White (of Goldsmiths' College), at Chatham, in the last days of July. The lecturer dealt with the subject of music in the school curriculum under the headings (a) 'Singing at Sight' (the nature of the problem—the degree of efficiency attainable—the relative advantages of staff and tonic sol-fa notations—the subject in connection with school songs); (b) 'Music in Infant Schools' (the ideal to be cultivated—how much theoretical instruction can usefully be given—eurythmics—singing games and action-songs); (c) 'Ear-and-Eye-training' (their place in musical instruction); and (d) 'Music in Continuation Schools and Schools for Older Scholars' (the problem of specialisation—the need for a wider interpretation of the phrase 'musical instruction'—the special difficulties with older boys, and the connection between school music and that of the outside world). Dr. White advocated half-hour concerts by specialists and the use of the gramophone in schools. There was, he said, too much snobbery in the musical world, and choral societies took themselves and their efforts much too seriously. There ought to be in every district an organization to which every musical young person could belong with the certainty of having a happy and not too strenuous time. Concert-giving should be quite a secondary consideration. Dr. White invited and replied to criticism, while some difficulties that might prove to be attendant upon the scheme that he advocated were pointed out by the teachers present.

The value of the gramophone in musical education at school was demonstrated before local head-masters and head-mistresses by Mr. A. Robertson, at a meeting promoted by the Medway Association of Head-Teachers. In the course of his remarks the lecturer contrasted the treatment meted out to a composer's ideas by a performance on the typical school pianoforte with that afforded by a reproduction on the gramophone. The comparison, he said, was all to the advantage of the mechanical instrument.

The annual Choirs' Festival at Rochester Cathedral was revived on July 21, when upwards of five hundred voices assembled under the conductorship of Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, the organist and master of the choristers at the Cathedral. Mr. A. H. Allen (assistant-organist) was at the organ. The service comprised the unison setting in A flat by Dr. Charles Wood, and Tallis's anthem 'All people that on earth do dwell' was also sung. The responses were those recently issued by the Church Music Society, for which the organ part was written by Mr. Hylton Stewart. The service showed how even a simple scheme could be endowed with appealing beauty.

Under the conductorship of Miss Leney (the organist), Holy Trinity Church Choir, Maidstone, gave a sacred concert in H.M. Prison on August 8 to a large congregation of prisoners. Included in the programme were three anthems, organ solos, and concerted numbers from Stainer's 'Crucifixion.'

The Medway Amateur Operatic Society commenced rehearsals on August 13 for the season, which opens in December with 'Les Cloches de Corneville.' The Society is producing 'Havana' in April, 1921.

Three musical newcomers to the variety stage were given a cordial reception at the Empire Theatre, Chatham, on August 9. They were Mr. Cecil Baumer (pianoforte), Miss Constance Izard (violin), and Mr. Frederick Allen (vocalist), whose first appearance before the footlights was at the London Coliseum the previous week.

CORNWALL

On Bank Holiday band contests at Truro attracted four thousand enthusiasts. There were ten entries, six in the section for small bands and four in that for large bands. Mr. J. F. Stater, of Manchester College of Music, adjudicated. In the first section the chief honour—carrying with it Sir Edward Nicholl's challenge cup—was won by Mount Charles band (bandmaster, Mr. J. Libby), which scored an unexpected success, this being its first competition. The order of results was: St. Dennis (Mr. W. Juleff), St. Austell (Mr. J. Williams), Redruth (Mr. G. Wills). Of the small bands Foxhole (Mr. J. Morcom) won first place, and Mr. Charles Williams's cup; Newlyn East (Mr. L. Abram), St. Ives (Mr. J. Tanner), Falmouth (Mr. M. T. Atkinson), Indian Queens (Mr. Ford Knight), and Wadebridge (Mr. G. A. Barrett) being the order achieved by the other competing bands. Among the small bands the cornet prize was won by F. Morcom (Foxhole), the horn by L. Halls (Newlyn East), the euphonium by W. Bidgood (Newlyn East). In the large bands W. Juleff (St. Dennis) won the cornet prize, and R. S. Hambly (Mount Charles) the euphonium.

West Cornwall Musical Society has already become active in educational directions, and for its third concert early in September, to be given at Falmouth, has organized an orchestra (conducted by the Rev. C. Daly Atkinson) which will play music by Mendelssohn, Haydn, Stanford, Schubert, and Wagner.

A new organ was opened in Mabe Parish Church on July 29 by a recital given by the Rev. F. B. Rogers (All Saints', Falmouth).

Madame Bertha Moore and Miss Marjorie Moore gave a song and story recital at Carbis Bay on July 29.

COVENTRY AND DISTRICT

The only concert of note has been one arranged for charitable purposes by the male-voice choir of the Coventry Musical Club. Numbers contributed to a well-arranged programme included 'Bold Turpin,' 'Invictus,' 'Awake, Æolian lyre,' 'Come, let us join the roundelay,' 'Land o' the Leal,' and the Soldiers' Chorus ('Faust'). The choir acquitted itself well, under the leadership of Mr. John Chapman, giving its hearers a foretaste of interesting musical programmes to come in the season before us.

DEVON

The series of weekly organ recitals which Dr. Ernest Bullock, organist of Exeter Cathedral, commenced in May closed on July 30. These recitals, which have been largely attended, have formed the most important educational musical work at Exeter for a long time, and their value, from the points of view of matter and manner, can hardly be over-estimated. The opening of a new series in October is anticipated with interest.

Organ recitals have been frequent during the holiday season. At Holy Trinity Church, Exmouth, a series is being given on Sunday afternoons, the performers including Dr. Harold Darke, of St. Michael's, Cornhill, Mr. F. Gandy Bradford, sub-organist of Exeter Cathedral, and Mr. F. J. Pinn, of St. David's, Exeter.

On July 21 the band of the Grenadier Guards visited Exeter. Unfortunately Capt. A. Williams, M.V.O., Mus. Doc., was not able to conduct, and Band-Sergt. Cobb took his place. The most important number was an extract from César Franck's symphonic poem 'The Redemption.' The prelude to Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un faune' was surprisingly successful in military band arrangement, and Balfour Gardiner's 'Shepherd Fennel's dance' was another good number.

To members of the South Western section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians Miss Katherine Eggar on July 24 gave a lecture at Torquay on 'Modern aims in Musical Education.' Mr. F. Harris (Paignton) presided, supported by Dr. Emilie B. Guard (Plymouth), hon. secretary.

DUBLIN

The many friends at Dublin of Mr. W. S. Hopkins who appreciated his valuable services as assistant-organist of St. Patrick's Cathedral, were very pleased at his selection as successor to Mr. T. H. Weaving (now organist of Christ Church Cathedral vice Dr. C. H. Kitson resigned) at the Castle Chapel, generally known as the Chapel Royal.

Mr. John Gill, of Christ Church Cathedral and formerly of the choir of Armagh Cathedral, has been appointed solo tenor in St. Patrick's Cathedral. Mr. Gill received a sound training as a chorister in Gloucester Cathedral, under the regis of Mr. Charles Lee Williams, and numerous well-wishers will be gratified at his promotion to St. Patrick's.

The annual Oireachtas was held during the week commencing Sunday, August 1, but music was more or less subsidiary to football, oratory, educational schemes, and committee meetings. The glorious Uilleann (Shakespeare's 'Woollen') Pipes are, alas! disappearing, and are, unfortunately, replaced by the ear-piercing war-pipes, many of which are of Scots pattern, not Irish. From a musical point of view the principal item of the week was the concert on August 5, to which Miss Flora MacNeill (Scotland), the Rev. J. C. O'Flynn, Messrs. Arthur Darley and Owen Lloyd contributed acceptable numbers. Carl Hardebeck, the well-known German musician, received a cordial welcome. The prize-winners' concert was on August 7.

The new La Scala Theatre and Opera House, which will seat three thousand persons, will be available for concerts, oratorios, and opera, but its primary object is the presentation of first-class films along with artistic musical programmes with an orchestra of twenty-three, under the direction of Mr. W. T. W. Mortimer. Mr. Chambers and Mr. Fleming, the proprietors, have expended about £20,000 on this enterprise, which deserves success. Mr. T. W. Senior has been appointed resident manager. One of the attractions from August 10 to 14 was Mr. John Clarke (vocalist).

In days of old the Horse Show week—quite the social event of the year in the Irish metropolis—was looked forward to for a season of opera, but in recent years 'musical comedy' has been the fare. Hence it is not surprising that the votaries of Apollo had to be content with the 'Southern Maid,' announced 'from Daly's Theatre, London, with full chorus and augmented orchestra,' at the Gaiety Theatre from August 9-14.

Already there is brisk postal booking for the Quinlan Subscription Concerts, of which five are to be given in the season 1920-21 at the Theatre Royal, including such well-known artists as Miss Agnes Treacy and Mr. John MacCormack.

PORTSMOUTH

Owing to the ill-health of Mr. Hugh Burry, who had accepted the position of hon. musical director of the proposed municipal concerts during the winter, the Town Hall committee of the Town Council has decided that it is impracticable to proceed with the scheme. It is, however, unlikely that the concerts will on this account be indefinitely shelved, for the proposals of the committee appear to possess sound possibilities and to meet a great need.

Early in August, twenty-five young miners comprising the Troedryhiw Merthyr glee party visited Portsmouth for a holiday, and with their wonderful voices charmed many large audiences. They gave a concert on board the Royal Yacht before the King and Queen, soon after their majesties' arrival at Portsmouth from Ryde on August 9. The Royal party expressed their delight with the selections, which included a part-song 'Dear Home,' 'Evening Bells,' and 'Hyfyddol,' the favourite hymn tune of Queen Mary, who also specially asked for 'Aberystwyth,' which was feelingly sung under the baton of Mr. H. Llewelyn. A duet, 'Soldiers and Comrades,' was sung by Messrs. Ben Lewis and G. Edwards.

The annual Festival of the London Sunday School Choir will be held at the Crystal Palace on October 16. The programme includes two choral competitions, concerts by the juvenile choir of five thousand voices, and by an adult choir, and two organ recitals.

SOUTH WALES

The end of July saw the competitive spirit in full stride throughout South Wales, and various choral bodies competing at the National Eisteddfod at Barry in Bank-holiday week gave concert-rehearsals in their respective districts to crowded and enthusiastic audiences.

In addition to these, the Jerusalem Choral Society at Ton, Rhondda Valley, on July 29 gave, Mendelssohn's 'Lord, Thou alone art God' and German's 'My bonnie lass,' under the conductorship of Mr. B. Devonald, and contributions by local artists completed the programme. Haverfordwest Choral Society gave a creditable performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' at St. David's Cathedral. The conductor was Mr. W. E. Dixon, and Mr. Herbert C. Morris accompanied. The proceeds were in aid of the County Hospital Memorial Fund.

It is announced that the promoters of the Welsh Musical Festival have decided to hold their second Festival at Mountain Ash, when the London Symphony Orchestra will again be in evidence, in conjunction with the Mountain Ash Choral Union, under the baton of Mr. Albert Coates. The Cardiff Symphony Orchestra has decided to continue its Sunday orchestral concerts at the new Playhouse in Wood Street, and it is confidently hoped that the increased comfort of the building will be productive of greater success during the coming season.

At a special meeting of the committee of the Swansea and District Royal Male Choir, with Mr. George Hill in the chair, it was decided to open a fund with the object, inter alia, of enabling the Choir to visit Belgium and France, to sing over the graves of the fallen.

Prof. Walford Davies, the director of music for Wales, was a dynamic force at Barry in the Eisteddfod week. On Tuesday afternoon, August 3, at the English Congregational Hall, he addressed a large audience of the Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion on 'The Council of Music for Wales; its Objects and its Aspirations.' Primarily, said Prof. Davies, it aimed at inculcating a love of music, and fostering and directing special talent in the rising generation. He emphasised the need for issuing large quantities of good folk-music, for promoting regular weekly concerts in schools, and for appointing tutors to assist societies and school children in all branches of music. This would involve the outlay of both time and money, and the lecturer trusted that the needs of the National Council would be readily responded to.

Lord Howard de Walden, who also spoke, while agreeing substantially with the lecturer, felt that the needs of the present generation should also be considered, while Mr. Cyril Jenkins deprecated too much folk-song, and advocated reform in the Gymnfa Ganu (Singing Festival), and Mr. Samuel Langford claimed that unity was essential to success.

Merthyr is to be congratulated in possessing such an energetic enthusiast as Mr. E. T. Davies in the cause of instrumental music. It may be remarked, in passing, that Merthyr revels in a wealth of choral music, but there is a marked deficiency on the instrumental side. Mr. Davies has consistently advocated the cause of chamber music in the borough, and last year he enterprisingly promoted a chamber concert there, and brought down the London String Quartet. Though the venture was not exactly a financial success, yet, owing to the keen appreciation of those present, Mr. Davies is encouraged to organize for the coming season a series of four chamber concerts—two to be devoted to quartets, one to trios, while the fourth will be a violin and pianoforte recital. If possible, he intends establishing a similar series at Tredegar, Aberdare, and other towns where chamber music is practically unknown. Mr. Davies is music-master at Merthyr County School, where half-hour concerts of classical music were initiated last year. It is contemplated arranging to hold some chamber concerts for the pupils of the county school and the two secondary schools of the town during the coming year.

Another meeting, convened by the Lord Mayor of Cardiff (Mr. G. F. Forsdike), was recently held at the Y.M.C.A. buildings, Barry Dock, by the promoters of the National Orchestra for Wales, under the chairmanship of Prof. Walford Davies. Suggestions prepared by the sub-committee of the National Council of Music—dealing with the personnel of the players, the basis of their engagement, and the question of finance—were laid before the meeting, and it was resolved that a committee be formed to consider further the various aspects of the problem, and that the University Council of Wales be asked to draft proposals for its constitution.

Answers to Correspondents

W. SMITH.—So far as we know, Rachmaninov attached no legend to his Prelude in C sharp minor. Various more or less gruesome stories have been invented and applied to it, among them being one which tells us of a man being buried alive, and knocking at the 'coffin-lid.' The knocks are of course represented by the ostinato of three notes. But why bother about a programme? Let the music speak for itself. If it says a dozen different things to as many hearers, so much the better. No other art has this rare power.

A READER.—If you confine your practising to the very reasonable limits described in your letter, your neighbours have no ground for complaint. Go ahead, and never mind anonymous postcard writers.

CONTENTS

	Page
Prize Competitions	585
William Edmondstoune Duncan. By Samuel Langford	585
Shall we Retain the Bar? By Arthur L. Salmon	587
Three Unpublished Portraits of Henry Purcell. By William A. Shaw, Litt.D.	588
The Organ Works of Bach.—II. The Weimar Period (continued). By Harvey Grace	590
Interludes. By 'Feste'	594
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XII.—John Traverer. By W. H. Grattan-Flood	597
The Choral Works of S. Coleridge-Taylor. By George Lowe	598
The Composer and the Public. By Stanley H. Clarke	601
Sir George Grove: A Centenary Appreciation. By W. H. Grattan-Flood	603
Occasional Notes	603
The Influence of Occidental Music on the Orient. By Norman Peterkin	605
The Music and Musicians of Dickens.—II. By C. Edgar Thomas	608
Some Musico-Literary Mishaps. By Clement Antrobus Harris	617
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	618
A New Choral Writer	620
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	621
Opera in London. By Francis E. Barrett	621
The Royal National Eisteddfod. By Alfred Kalisch	622
Chamber Music for Amateurs	625
Church and Organ Music	625
The Preces, Responses, and Litany of the English Church: A By-way of Liturgical History.—II. By J. M. Duncan	625
Letters to the Editor	628
Sixty Years Ago	629
Obituary	630
Letters of Great Composers: Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Wagner. By William Pearson	630
A Peep behind the Scenes in Italy. By Claude Trevor	633
Music in the Provinces	635
Answers to Correspondents	638

MUSIC:

'Autumn.' A Four-part Song (unaccompanied). By George Tootell	611
---	-----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number.—

'Wi' a hundred Pipers.' Part-Song for S.A.T.B. Arranged by John E. West.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BAXTER, F. N.—An Easy Congregational Setting of the Office of Holy Communion, arranged to familiar Church melodies. 6d.

BULLIVANT, G.—"The Spacious Firmament." Hymn for Septuagesima or general use. (No. 979, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

BURGESS, FRANCIS.—The Plainchant of the Ordinary (The English Gradual, Part I). People's Edition. 2s. net.

BUTTON, H. ELLIOT.—"System in Musical Notation." (No. 91, Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.) 1s. 6d.

CHADBOURNE, M. A.—"These are they." Anthem. 8d.

CRAGG, AUTHUR E.—Vesper ("Lord, keep us safe this night"). 1d.

HUNTER, I. F.—"My God, my Father, while I stray." Hymn and Tune "Morna." 2d.

MENDELSSOHN.—"O for the wings of a dove." Arranged as a duet for female or boys' voices by JOHN E. WEST. (No. 66, Novello's Chorister Series.) 3d.)

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW. (No. 339) contains the following music in both notations:—"Fortune." Two-part Song. Composed by SCHUMANN. "The Fair." Spanish Song. Arranged by EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. 1½d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1293. "The Silent Land" Arranged as a Two-part Song. A. R. GAUL ... 3d. —

No. 1296. "The Birks of Aberfeldy," and "My heart's in the Highlands." Arranged by DAVID ST. PHEN 3d. —

No. 1297. "The bonnie, bonnie banks," and "Mary Morison." Arranged by DAVID STEPHEN ... 3d. —

STOCK, F.—"Souvenir." Pianoforte Solo. 2s.

TOOTELL, G.—"Autumn." Four-part Song. (No. 931, The Musical Times.) 1½d.

WEST, JOHN E.—"Wi' a hundred pipers." Scottish Air. Arranged as a Four-part Song. (No. 1383, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

WILLIAMS, J. G.—"March Morning." Song. In C, for low voice. In E flat, for high voice. 2s. each. — Two Songs. 1. "Absence." 2. "Serenade." For low, medium, or high voice. 2s. each key.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BARLOW, H.—"King Charles." Part-song for T.T.B.B. 15 cents (8d.).

DELAMARTER, E.—"Sing we to our God." Cantata for Solo voice. $2 (8s.).

RUGGLES, C.—Toys. Song.

FOR SALE.—Two-Manual CHAMBER ORGAN, by Foster & Andrews, 1905. Very good condition. Great Organ: Oper Diap., Dul., Har. Flute: Swell Organ: Lieb. Gedact, Viol da Gamba, Flauto Dolce, Tremulant, Pedal Bourdon. Three Couplers: Full organ, Comp. Pedal. Complete with Hyd. Engine. Price, about £350. Approx. measurements: 9-ft. by 7-ft. by 10-ft. high. May be tried at J. W. Walker & Sons, Ltd., 27, Francis Street, Tottenham Court Road, W.C.1.

FOR SALE.—Valuable, two-manual pedal PIANO. Perfect condition, excellent for student or College. Specially built by Rogers, London. Address, Principal, College, Clebury Mortimer.

WANTED.—A few O. N. copies of "THE KINGDOM AND THE KING." By T. Mee Pattison. (Curwen's Edition, 3254). Send price and particulars to D. Augustus Davis, Newport, Pem.

DR. RALPH H.

BELLAIRS'

Melodic and Rhythmic Primer

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

There is in existence a multitude of pianoforte tutors, all of which are rather out of date in the light of modern educational developments.

The "MELODIC AND RHYTHMIC PRIMER," by Dr. Bellairs, breaks essentially new ground, by making a definite appeal to the sub-conscious as well as to the conscious mind of the musical beginner.

No dry-as-dust finger exercises or scale studies are employed. Against such, the pupil naturally rebels, and only negligible progress results.

The basis of music being melody, harmony, and rhythm, it is obvious that a correct educational plan must embrace all three.

Ear and imagination need training as well as hand and fingers, which have hitherto had the lion's share of attention.

The object of this "PRIMER" is to eliminate drudgery by stimulating interest from the very outset.

Published in 2 parts, each 2s. net. Complete, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON:

ENOCH & SONS,

58, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W. I.

Telegrams: ENOCOUSE, LONDON. Telephone: GERRARD, 5595.

£100 SINGING, £50 PIANO,

Free Scholarships, Souvenir Cup, Cash Prizes, and Medals.

MR. CLIFTON COOKE'S OPERA COMPETITIONS,

6th and 13th NOVEMBER.

Adjudicators:

Singing—Miss KATIE THOMAS, F.R.A.M.

Piano—Miss JOY SMITH, A.R.C.M.

Prospectus from Secretary, 26M Guilford Street, W.C. 1.

ORGANIST WANTED, for Congregational Church. Honorarium of £20. Apply by letter, Secretary, 25, Rothschild Street, West Norwood, S.E. 27.

LYRIC AUTHOR is prepared to submit several original MSS. without obligation. Write, "Lyricus," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

OFFER—Some 1,000 First-Class New PIANOS for prompt shipment. Lowest prices. Otto Mohr, Export, Hamburg 36.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Concerts, Oratorios, Reception, &c.

"Judas Maccabæus," "Messiah," "Elijah," &c.

67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CYRIL SCOTT.

YOUNG HEARTS

(PIECES FOR CHILDREN).

Series I., 2s. 6d. net.

1. SEE-SAW.
2. LAMENT FOR A BROKEN DOLL.
3. MUSICAL BOX.
4. EVENING PRAYER.
5. QUICK MARCH.

Series II., 2s. 6d. net.

1. MARCH OF A TIN SOLDIER.
2. SUNDAY MORN.
3. CONCERTINA.
4. LONELINESS.
5. THE BOY WITH THE PIPES.

These pieces are quite short and quite easy—easier even than the same composer's well-known "SUMMERLAND" Suite. Their aim is to familiarize young players with the modern idiom, so that they will be able to pass on to more complex works in due course.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

"I can now play Octaves for an hour on end without my arms aching."

So writes one of my pupils who has worked through the Octave Lesson of my Advanced Course of Piano Playing.

Think what this would mean to you! I set myself to overcome the drudgery of Piano Playing and I know I have succeeded. Another pupil—an organist—writes: "I have got a wonderful command over Arm Balance and Relaxation," and a letter from yet another says, "I have found a vast improvement in Tone and Ease." Do you wish to improve your Technique—Fingering—Phrasing—Rhythm—Interpretation—Memorising—Sight reading? Each of these subjects is dealt with fully in the Gillett Course and twenty years of actual teaching experience, both Oral and by Correspondence, lies behind my training.

A postcard will bring you full particulars of the system.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

School of Pianoforte Playing. Studio, M.T.

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET,

NEW BOND STREET, W. 1.

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION OF PART-SONGS

SELECTED LISTS OF RECENT PUBLICATIONS

MIXED VOICES

(S A.T.B. unaccompanied or accompaniment ad lib. where not otherwise indicated.)

*Alexander (Humorous)	A. H. Brewer	1½d.	*Lullaby, A	C. Lee Williams	1½d.
Autumn	G. Tootell	1½d.	*March of the Cameron men, The ...	Granville Bantock	3d.
*Beacon, The	Adam Carse	3d.	My dear mistress has a heart	John E. West	2d.
*Beyond	C. Lee Williams	1½d.	*O can ye sew cushions ... (arranged by Granville Bantock)	3d.
Boy, The	A. H. Brewer	3d.	*Oh! the noble Duke of York (arranged by N. F. Byng-Johnson)	1½d.
Cries of London, The	R. Deering	6d.	*Rolling down to Rio	Edward German	4d.
" "	Orlando Gibbons	6d.	*Soldier, rest... ..	David Stephen	3d.
" "	T. Weelkes	4d.	*Song of the grey seas (accompanied) ...	Percy E. Fletcher	6d.
*Deil's awa' wi' the exciseman, The ...	E. T. Sweeting	3d.	*Song of the thrush, The (accompanied) ...	R. Walthew	4d.
*Echo Song	Oliver King	1½d.	Sweet Day, so cool... ..	David Stephen	2d.
*Frog, The (arranged)	Ernest Newton	4d.	Sweet Western Wind	John E. West	1½d.
From the lone Shieling	Malcolm Maclean	3d.	Tell me where is fancy bred	John Pointer	1½d.
Gather ye rosebuds	John Pointer	3d.	Tewkesbury Road	E. T. Sweeting	3d.
Here a pretty baby lies	J. A. Sowerbutts	1½d.	*There is a lady sweet and kind ...	Harold E. Darke	1½d.
*How happy the lover	John E. West	1½d.	Three Sleeps	John Gerrard Williams	1½d.
Hunting Song	John Gerrard Williams	3d.	Tide rises, The	Adam Carse	1½d.
*I love my love in the morning ...	Bernard Johnson	1½d.	Water Party, A	C. H. Lloyd	3d.
Islet, The	Percy E. Fletcher	1½d.	*Weep you no more	Arthur Somervell	3d.
*John Peel	(arr. by John E. West)	3d.	*What shall we dance	F. H. Cowen	4d.
*Lass with the delicate air (arranged) ...	Michael Arne	1½d.	Where shall the lover rest	E. C. Bairstow	4d.
Longing	Haydn Keeton	2d.	Wi' a hundred pipers	(arr. by John E. West)	3d.
*Love is a sickness	A. W. Marchant	1½d.	*World is too much with us, The ...	Granville Bantock	3d.
Love the Harlequin	H. W. Wareing	3d.	Youthful, charming Chloe	W. McNaught	3d.
Love wakes and weeps	B. Luard-Selby	1½d.

MALE VOICES

(T.T.B.B. unaccompanied or accompaniment ad lib. where not otherwise indicated.)

*Alexander (Humorous) (T. (or A.) T.T.B.B.) ...	A. H. Brewer	2d.	*Lullaby (Op. 49, No. 4)	Brahms	1½d.
*Bacchanalian Chorus	J. W. Elliott	4d.	*Mad Dog, The (Humorous) (A.T.B.B.)...	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
*Ballade	Granville Bantock	4d.	*Marching (Op. 41, No. 4) (Humorous) ...	Brahms	2d.
*Boy, The (Humorous) (T. (or A.) T.T.B.B.) ...	A. H. Brewer	3d.	*Night March, The (Op. 62, No. 1)	Schumann	3d.
*Cargoes	H. Balfour Gardiner	3d.	*Oh! the noble Duke of York (arranged) N. F. Byng-Johnson	3d.
Crossing the Bar	T. F. Dunhill	2d.	Orpheus (Humorous) (A.T.B.B.)	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
Dirge of Kisses, A	Percy E. Fletcher	3d.	*Pibroch of Donuil Dhu	Granville Bantock	4d.
*Duncan Gray (T.T.B.B.)	A. M. Richardson	3d.	Queen of my heart, The	A. H. Brewer	3d.
Early one morning (arr. by T. F. Dunhill) (A.T.B.B.)	Folk-Song	2d.	*Riders of the night, The	Laurent de Rillé	4d.
Echoes	T. F. Dunhill	2d.	*Sailor's Return, The	Percy E. Fletcher	4d.
*Festival Song	Granville Bantock	4d.	Sally in our Alley (A. (or T.) T.T.B.B.) ...	H. Elliot Button	3d.
*Full fathom five	T. F. Dunhill	3d.	Sir Eglamore (arranged)	H. Balfour Gardiner	3d.
*Glories of our Blood and State, The ...	Granville Bantock	3d.	*Sleeping	Edward German	3d.
He that hath a pleasant face (arranged) ...	Hatton	2d.	Softly fall the shades of evening (arranged) ...	Hatton	3d.
Hymn to Harmony	Laurent de Rillé	4d.	*Soldier, rest... ..	A. Somervell	3d.
I fear thy kisses (A. (or T.) T.T.B.B.) ...	A. H. Brewer	2d.	*Song of Freedom (Op. 62, No. 2)	Schumann	3d.
*I would I were the glow-worm	Harold Rhodes	3d.	That very wise man (Humorous) (A.T.B.B.) ...	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
*Laird o' Cockpen	Granville Bantock	4d.	There was an old man (Humorous) ...	A. H. Brewer	3d.
Lament, A	(arr. by H. Elliot Button)	2d.	*United are we (Op. 41, No. 2)	Brahms	2d.
*Land of the leal, The (arr. by H. Elliot Button)	Scotch Air	2d.	*Viking Song	Julius Harrison	4d.
Lass of Richmond Hill, The (A. (or T.) T.T.B.B.)	A. H. Brewer	3d.	*Walpurga (Op. 30)	F. Hegar	6d.
Let the hills resound (arranged)	Brinley Richards	4d.	Ware, Wire!	C. Lee Williams	3d.
*Little Sandman, The	(arr. by John E. West)	3d.	Who rides for the King	Reginald Somerville	3d.
*Lotus Flower, The (Op. 33, No. 3)	Schumann	2d.	Winter is gone, The (arr. by R. Vaughan Williams)	Folk-Song	2d.
*Lucifer in starlight (6 parts)	Granville Bantock	6d.

§ Orchestral Accompaniment.

* Also published in Tonic Sol-fa.

NOVELLO'S CHORAL MUSIC

A SELECTED LIST.

FREDERIC AUSTIN

SONGS IN A FARMHOUSE

A cycle of traditional songs, S.A.T.B. Soli and Chorus, with accompaniment for pianoforte or orchestra. 18 mins.

Price One Shilling.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK

A PAGEANT OF HUMAN LIFE

Chorus only, unaccompanied. 15 mins.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

J. BRAHMS

SONGS OF LOVE (LIEBESLIEDER)

S.A.T.B. Soli or Chorus with accompaniment for pianoforte duet. 20 mins.

Complete vocal score, Four Shillings.

Vocal parts only, One Shilling.

EDWARD ELGAR

THE MUSIC MAKERS

Contralto Solo, Chorus and Orchestra. 35 mins.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.

EDWARD ELGAR

THE SPIRIT OF ENGLAND

S. or T. Solo, Chorus and Orchestra. 30 mins.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.

EDWARD ELGAR

THE BLACK KNIGHT

Chorus and Orchestra. 40 mins.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

BALFOUR GARDINER

NEWS FROM WHYDAH

Chorus and Orchestra. 5 mins.

Price Eightpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

HAMILTON HARTY

THE MYSTIC TRUMPETER

Bar. Solo, Chorus and Orchestra. 35 mins.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

GUSTAV HOLST

KING ESTMERE

Chorus and Orchestra. 25 mins.

Price Two Shillings.

E. C. MACMILLAN

ENGLAND

S. and Bar. Soli, Chorus and Orchestra. 40 mins.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

C. HUBERT H. PARRY

THE PIED PIPER

T. and B. Soli, Chorus and Orchestra. 30 mins.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

C. HUBERT H. PARRY

THE CHIVALRY OF THE SEA

Chorus and Orchestra. 16 mins.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.

RICHARD WAGNER

PARSIFAL

Prelude and Selection from Act I.

T. Bar. B. (B.) Soli ad lib., Chorus and Orchestra. 1 hr.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

RICHARD WAGNER

SCENES FROM TANNHÄUSER

Soli, Chorus and Orchestra. 1 hr. 45 mins.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

R. T. WOODMAN

FALMOUTHChorus only. Accompaniment ad lib. 5 mins.

Price One Shilling.

* Orchestral material for reduced orchestra may be hired from the publishers.
See also page 642 for list of Operas adapted for concert performance with reduced orchestra.

NOVELLO'S EDITIONS
OF THE FAVOURITE OPERAS ADAPTED FOR CONCERT USE.

1. FAUST.

Price 1s. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.

*2. IL TROVATORE.

Price 1s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

*3. TANNHÄUSER.

Price 1s. 6d.

*4. MARITANA.

Price 1s. 6d.

*5. THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.

Price 1s. 6d.

*6. THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT.

Price 1s. 6d.

*7. MARTHA.

Price 1s. 6d.

Orchestral Parts for Reduced Orchestra may be obtained from the Publishers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA
THE ANCIENT MARINER

30th 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REFLECTIONS
FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SONGS

BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

"LOVE OUTWITTED"

Phantasy Duet for Voice and Pianoforte.

Price Two Shillings.

"MARCH MORNING"

For High and Low Voice.

Price Two Shillings each.

TWO SONGS.

"ABSENCE" AND "SERENADE"

For High, Medium, or Low Voice.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO PASTORALS
COME YOU, MARY.

WHO WOULD SHEPHERD PIPES FORSAKE?

THE WORDS BY

NORMAN GALE.

THE MUSIC BY

ERNEST BRISTOW FARRAR

(Op. 21, Nos. 2 and 3)

TWO KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOUR
SHAKESPEARE SONGS

1. HARK! HARK! THE LARK.

2. WHO IS SYLVIA.

3. TAKE, O TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY.

4. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

COMPOSED BY

REGINALD STEGGALL.

Op. 28.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES
FOR THE VOICE.

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

BY

GEORGE HENSCHEL.

IN TWO PARTS

						s.	d.
PART 1.	High Voice	...	...	...	...	2	6
"	Medium Voice	...	...	...	...	2	6
"	Low Voice	...	...	...	...	2	6
PART 2.	High Voice	...	...	...	...	2	6
"	Medium Voice	...	...	...	...	2	6
"	Low Voice	...	...	...	...	2	6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EVENTIDE

(MELODY)

FOR STRINGS, HARP, AND ORGAN

FROM

SUITE IN D MINOR

COMPOSED BY

GEORGE J. BENNETT.

	s.	d.
FULL SCORE	...	2 6
STRING PARTS	...	2 3
HARP	...	0 6
ORGAN	...	0 6
PIANOFORTE SOLO	...	1 6
ORGAN SOLO	...	1 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ADORAMUS TE

PRELUDE FOR ORCHESTRA

BY

HUGH BLAIR.

	s.	d.
FULL SCORE	...	5 0
STRING PARTS	...	2 6
WIND PARTS	...	6 3
Do. (Arrangement for String, Brass, Timpani, and Organ)	...	2 6
Arrangement for Organ Solo	...	1 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

	s.	d.
EVENING REST	...	1 6
SCHERZO	...	1 6
MORNING SONG	...	1 6
MINUET	...	1 6
EPITHALAMIUM	...	1 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THREE CHORALE PRELUDES

FOR THE ORGAN.

1. ST. PETER.
2. DARWELL'S 148TH.
3. THEME BY TALLIS.

COMPOSED BY

HAROLD E. DARKE

(OP. 20).

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SOLEMN MELODY

COMPOSED BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

FULL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
FULL SCORE	...	3 0
STRING PARTS	...	1 3
WIND PARTS	...	3 9

STRINGS AND ORGAN.

	s.	d.
SCORE	...	2 0
STRING PARTS	...	1 3
ORGAN	...	0 6

PIANOFORTE SOLO	...	1 6
ORGAN SOLO	...	1 6
VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE	...	1 6
VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE	...	1 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Valse LYRIQUE

("THE SMILE OF SPRING")

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

GOODWIN & TABB,

PERCY STREET, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE'S NEW WORKS.

	s.	d.
"PICKWICK" STRING QUARTET	...	6 0
STRING QUARTET, No. 5 (SONGS AND DANCES)—Score	...	6 0
"NOCTURNE"—Organ	...	1 6
"EILEAN SHONA"—Organ	...	1 6
"DYLAN"—Organ	...	3 0

FOUR MEZZOTINTS—Violin and pianoforte, or clarinet and pianoforte	...	2 6
SUITE MODERNE—Pianoforte	...	each 2 0
1. Scherzo; 2. Valse; 3. Nocturne; 4. Bacchanale.

VALENTINE—Pianoforte	...	2 0
TWO DRAMATIC SONGS	...	3 0
"ANNABEL LEE"—Ballad	...	2 6
NODENS' SONG	...	2 0
"THE SHIRKER"—Part-song	...	0 4
"PIERROT"—Operetta	...	7 6

PRINTING SPECIALIST

TO THE

MUSICAL PROFESSION.

PRICE—LOW.

QUALITY—HIGH.

Write for Estimates and particulars

FREDK T. MORAT,

9, MOORVILLE GROVE, LEEDS.

TASTY WORK

IN LETTER HEADS.

BOOKLETS.

CIRCULARS.

LEAFLETS.

PRICE LISTS.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE. A SELECTED LIST.

SONATAS AND SUITES.

EDWARD ELGAR

SONATA

Price Six Shillings net.

ERNEST FARRAR

CELTIC SUITE

Price Three Shillings net.

C. HUBERT H. PARRY

TWO SUITES

No. 1, in D. No. 2, in F.

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence each net.

ARTHUR HINTON

SUITE

Price Five Shillings net.

A. C. MACKENZIE

PIBROCH SUITE

Price Six Shillings net.

A. DUTEUIL D'OZANNE

SUITE PITTORESQUE

Price Six Shillings net.

SHORT PIECES.

JOHN IRELAND

BAGATELLE

Price Two Shillings net.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE

SOUVENIR DE PRINTEMPS

Price Two Shillings net.

H. WALFORD DAVIES

SOLEMN MELODY

Price One Shilling and Sixpence net.

A. C. MACKENZIE

BENEDICTUS

From Six Pieces, Op. 37.

Price Two Shillings net.

J. B. McEWEN

SIX HIGHLAND DANCES

Price Two Shillings each net.

W. McNAUGHT

BARCAROLLE

Price Two Shillings net.

H. WALDO WARNER

SCHERZO

Price Two Shillings net.

JOHN E. WEST

IN THE SPRING

Price Two Shillings net.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER, JUN.

SOUVENIR

Price Two Shillings net.

A. DUTEUIL D'OZANNE

AIR À DANSER

Price Two Shillings net.

EDWARD ELGAR

SERENADE

From the Wand of Youth Suite, No. 1.

Price Two Shillings net.

EDWARD ELGAR

CHANSON DE MATIN

Price Two Shillings net.

EDWARD ELGAR

CHANSON DE NUIT

Price One Shilling and Sixpence net.

EDWARD ELGAR

PASTOURELLE

Price Two Shillings net.

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Two Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON WOODLAND DANCES

Price Two Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

HUBERT G. OKE THREE PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Two Shillings.

SCHUMANN PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 1s. ; Part II., Price 1s. 6d.

ARNOLD KRUG TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

SCHUMANN THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling.

ARNOLD KRUG SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Two Shillings each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TH. KULLAK TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price One Shilling each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

MAX MAYER BAGATELLES

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

E. A. SYDENHAM SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price One Shilling.

TSCHAIKOWSKY CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price One Shilling each.

FRANCESCO BERGER FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise that tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1 1/2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
---------------------------------------	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.
---	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR HARVEST

AND OTHER SEASONS.

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

ANTHEMS.

BLESSED BE THOU—(HARVEST)	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
THINE, O LORD—(SHORT ANTHEM)	2d.
O CLAP YOUR HANDS	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
I WAS GLAD—(FESTIVAL)	4d.
" " " " TONIC SOL-FA	2d.
HARVEST OR FESTIVAL HYMN: "SING TO THE LORD"—WITH WORDS }	1d.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM IN E—FOUR VOICES	4d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, IN E	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, IN E	4d.
CANTATA AND DEUS, IN E	4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

POT - POURRI

A CYCLE OF FRAGMENTS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

ON VERSES BY

ISOBEL SCOTT BREMNER

COMPOSED BY

JOHN GERRARD WILLIAMS.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CONCERTO

IN E MINOR

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 85).

ARRANGEMENT FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire only.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

TO

STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S DRAMA

NERO.

PRELUDE:

Pianoforte Solo	2 0
Violin and Pianoforte	2 0
String Parts	3 0
Wind Parts MS.

PROCESSIONAL MARCH:

Pianoforte Solo	2 0
String Parts	2 6

FIRST ENTR'ACTE ("NERO"):

Pianoforte Solo	2 6
Violin and Pianoforte	2 0
Pianoforte Conductor	1 6
String Parts	3 0
Wind Parts	9 9

SECOND ENTR'ACTE ("POPPÆA"):

Pianoforte Solo	2 0
Violin and Pianoforte	2 0
Pianoforte Conductor	2 0
String Parts	2 6
Wind Parts	9 6

INTERMEZZO ("Singing Girls' Chorus"):

Pianoforte Solo	1 6
Violin and Pianoforte	2 0
Pianoforte Conductor	0 6
String Parts	2 3
Wind Parts	3 3

EASTERN DANCE:

Pianoforte Solo	2 0
Violin and Pianoforte	2 0
Pianoforte Conductor	1 0
String Parts	2 6
Wind Parts	6 3

SUITE OF FOUR PIECES:

Pianoforte Solo	4 0
String Parts	8 0
Wind Parts (just published complete)	24 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF
THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC
AND
THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

PATRON: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

PRESIDENT: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

TELEGRAMS: "ASSOCIA, LONDON."
TELEPHONE: MUSEUM 1710.

CENTRAL OFFICE:

14 & 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON, W.C. 1.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

THE EXAMINATION MUSIC for 1921 and subsequent years for School and Local Centre Examinations in Pianoforte and in Violin will be published by the Board and supplied from the Central Office as above.

All orders and correspondence relating to these publications should be addressed to:—

THE PUBLISHING MANAGER, The Associated Board of The R.A.M. and The R.C.M., 14 & 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON, W.C. 1.

LIST OF BOOKS FOR 1921.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS.

PIANOFORTE.

				NET. s. d.
Primary.	Lists A, B, & C	...	...	2 0
Elementary.	Lists A, B, & C	...	...	2 0
Lower.	Lists A, B, & C	...	...	2 0
Higher.	List A	...	...	2 0
Higher.	List B	...	...	2 0
Higher.	List C	...	...	2 0

VIOLIN.

Primary.	Lists A & B	...	...	3 0
Elementary.	Lists A & B	...	...	3 0
Lower.	Lists A & B	...	...	3 0
Higher.	Lists A & B	...	...	3 0

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS.

PIANOFORTE.

				NET. s. d.
Intermediate.	List A	...	...	2 0
Intermediate.	List B	...	...	2 0
Intermediate.	List C	...	...	2 0
Advanced.	List A	...	...	2 0
Advanced.	List B	...	...	2 0
Advanced.	List C	...	...	2 0

VIOLIN.

Intermediate.	Lists A & B	...	...	3 0
Advanced.	Lists A & B	...	...	3 0

JAMES MUIR, Secretary.

CATHEDRAL STRINGS .. SUMMIT STRINGS..

Retail Prices: "Summit" from 3d.; "Cathedral" from 6d.

MR. OLLY OAKLEY says: "They are really excellent."

The following letter is from MR. OLLY OAKLEY, the famous Banjoist:—

"52, Palmerston Road, East Sheen, S.W.

"July 14th, 1920.

"I tried the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd wire, also the 4th silk strings yesterday, and they are really excellent. I feel sure I could not play on better, if as good, and I shall be only too pleased to use 'The Cathedral Strings' at all my engagements, and for making my 'Gramophone' records. With all good wishes, I am, yours sincerely,

"(Signed) OLLY OAKLEY."

Mr. Oakley is probably the best judge living of what a Banjo string should be. We do not ask for a finer tribute.

Both the "Cathedral" and "Summit" Brands are made in our own London factory by skilled craftsmen. Particular attention is paid to the gauge of the strings, and the packing suits the quality—a dust-proof envelope for every string, and attractively designed boxes to hold one dozen.

Prices range from 3d. for "Summit" and from 6d. for "Cathedral." Every Music Dealer can get these fine strings for you. Don't be put off with foreign brands of inferior quality and higher price.

We make good our claims by offering a free sample string to every reader of the "M.T." Send us your name and address on a postcard, and state the exact string required. This offer applies to banjo, mandoline, guitar, or violin.

STEEL AND COVERED STRINGS FOR ALL INSTRUMENTS OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS.

SEND FOR A SAMPLE STRING.

This offer of a Sample String applies to Violin, Mandoline, and Banjo. State exact String required.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS:

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD.,
MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

Telegrams: "CELLO, FINSPARK, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2594.

NOVELLO'S SONGS.

A. HERBERT BREWER—

When all the world is young.

In D (Compass, D to E) and F.
Price 2s.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR—

Sweet evenings come and go, love.

In F (Compass, D to E flat) and B flat.
Price 2s.

BROMLEY DERRY—

The Raiders.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).
Price 2s.

LAXTON EYRE—

Life's Highway.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to F).
Price 2s.

ERNEST FARRAR—

Brittany.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F, and G.
Price 1s. 6d.

PERCY FLETCHER—

Hark! Hark! my Soul.

In C (Compass, A to C) and E flat.
Price 2s.

EDWARD GERMAN—

Charming Chloe.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat, and F.

It was a Lover and his Lass.

In G (Compass, D to E) and B flat.
Price 2s. each.

W. McNAUGHT—

The Piper.

In D (Compass, D to D) E flat, and F.
Price 2s.

W. G. ROSS—

A Daffodil Wedding.

In C (Compass, C to F) and D.
Price 2s.

LEONARD J. WALKER—

My Life is like a Garden.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.

The Summertime of Love.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C, and D.
Price 2s. each.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE CHESTERIAN

Edited by G. JEAN-AUBRY.

A MUSICAL MAGAZINE OF PROGRESSIVE TENDENCIES.

Eight Numbers per annum.

Subscription Five Shillings.

Second Year commencing September 15th, 1920. Full Prospectus on application.

Principal Contributors:

ENGLAND—Granville Bantock, Eric Blom, Rutland Boughton, Gerald Cumberland, Edward J. Dent, Edwin Evans, Eugène Goossens, Harvey Grace L. Dunton Green, Sydney Grew, H. Festing-Jones, Leigh Henry, Josef Holbrooke, Robin H. Legge, J. A. Fuller-Maitland, George Moore, Rollo H. Myers, Mrs. Rosa Newmarch, Frank Rutter, Cyril Scott, Wm. Barclay Squire.

FRANCE—Robert Brussel, Jean Cocteau, René Chalupt, Paul Dukas, Louis Durey, Louis Fleury, Mlle. M. Godebska, Gabriel Grovlez, Pierre de Lanux, Roland Manuel, Edmond Pilon, G. J. Prod'homme, Henry Prunières, Maurice Ravel, Albert Roussel, Raoul de Roussy de Sales, Florent Schmitt, Edouard Schneider.

BELGIUM—Georges Systermans.

HOLLAND—W. L. van Warmelo.

INDIA—Kaikhusrú Sorabji.

ITALY—Alfredo Casella, Mario Castelnuovo, Guido M. Gatti, G. Francesco Malipiero, Vincenzo Tommasini.

POLAND—Jan Sliwinsky.

RUSSIA—Lazare Saminsky.

SPAIN—Oscar Espla, Manuel de Falla, J. Joachim Nin, Felipe Pedrell, Adolfo Salazar, Joaquín Turina.

SWITZERLAND—Gustave Doret, Aloys Mooser.

U.S.A.—Carl Engel, A. Walter Kramer, Frederick H. Martens.

Letters from London, Paris, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Holland, Poland, Scandinavia, &c.

Published by J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W. 1.

If you have room for an upright piano you have
room for : : :

The Weber Small Grand Piano

Length:
4 ft. 10 ins.,
Width:
4 ft. 10 ins.

This instrument is the latest product of the famous Weber factory at Hayes, Middlesex. It is a triumph alike for its producers and for British craftsmanship, for never have any foreign makers succeeded in obtaining so rare a tone in an instrument of such limited proportions. Less than five feet in length, it occupies almost the same space as an ordinary upright piano, but has all the advantages of tone and appearance that characterise the Grand type of piano ::

The tone of the Weber Concert Grand Piano has made that instrument the choice of the world's chief pianists, and in this miniature model all the beauties of the Weber tone are preserved. This wonderful new piano may be seen and played in our showrooms; it is obtainable upon easy payment terms that make it as accessible as an upright piano.

THE AEOLIAN COMPANY, LTD.,
(Formerly the Orchestral Co.).

Aeolian Hall, 131-7, New Bond St.,
LONDON, W. 1.

THE PURCELL SOCIETY.

Committee.

SIR C. VILLIERS STANFORD, D.C.L., M.A., MUS. DOCT., MUS. PROF., CANTAB.
SIR J. FREDERICK BRIDGE, M.A., MUS. DOCT., C.V.O., GRESHAM PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.
G. E. P. ARKWRIGHT, Esq.
ROBERT BRIDGES, Esq., M.A., M.B., D. Litt.
LL.D., Poet-Laureate.
E. J. DENT, Esq., M.A., MUS. BAC.
J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND, Esq., M.A., F.S.A.
ALAN GRAY, Esq., LL.M., MUS. DOCT.
AUGUSTUS J. LITTLETON, Esq.
CYRIL B. ROTHAM, Esq., MUS. DOCT.
W. BARCLAY SQUIRE, Esq., M.A., F.S.A., F.R.G.S.,
Hon. Sec.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES HAVE NOW BEEN PUBLISHED:

- | | |
|---|---|
| I. "The Yorkshire Feast Song." | XII. "The Fairy Queen." |
| II. "Dido and Æneas." [Athens.] | XIV. "Sacred Music"—Part II. |
| III. "The Masque" in "Timon of Athens." | XV. "Welcome Songs for Charles II. and James II."—Part I. |
| IV. "Ode on the Duke of Gloucester's Birthday." | XVI. "Dramatic Music"—Part I. |
| V. "Twelve Sonatas of Three Parts." | XVII. "Sacred Music"—Part III. |
| VI. "Harpsichord and Organ Music." | XVIII. "Welcome Songs"—Part II. |
| VII. "Ten Sonatas of Four Parts." | XIX. "The Indian Queen," and "The Tempest." |
| VIII. "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, 1692." | XX. "Dramatic Music"—Part II. |
| IX. "Dioclesian." | XXI. "Dramatic Music"—Part III. |
| X. "Three Odes for St. Cecilia's Day." | |
| XI. "Birthday Odes for Queen Mary"—Part I. | |

Subscription Price

One Guinea per Volume net.

Most of the back numbers are offered to new subscribers at special rates.

Owing to the advisability of keeping, so far as possible, the chronological order of the Anthems, and of printing the contents of the important autograph volume from Buckingham Palace Library while it was deposited at the British Museum for the use of the Society, it has been decided to defer for the present the issue of Vol. XIII., which will contain earlier Anthems than those in the Buckingham Palace Manuscript.

The names of new subscribers should be sent to the Hon. Sec. (W. BARCLAY SQUIRE, British Museum), who will also be glad to hear from any members willing to assist in the Society's work, either by collating and copying, or by subscribing to a small fund which has been raised for defraying the editorial expenses.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF

THE ROYAL ACADEMY of MUSIC & THE ROYAL COLLEGE of MUSIC

FOR

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

ASSOCIATED BOARD:

ERNEST MATHEWS, Chairman.

SIR ALEXANDER C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., St. And., Cantab., et Edin., LL.D., D.C.L., Principal of The R.A.M.	H. W. RICHARDS, Mus. Doc., DUNELM.
SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon., Professor of Music, University of Oxford, Director of The R.C.M.	SIR CHARLES V. STANFORD, D.C.L., LL.D., M.A.,
OSCAR BERINGER,	Mus. Doc., Cantab. et Oxon., Professor of Music,
PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.	UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.
EATON FANING, Mus. Doc., Cantab.	S. P. WADDINGTON.
FREDERIC KING.	H. WESSELY.
SAXTON W. A. NOBLE.
SIR WALTER PARRATT, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. Doc.,
Oxon., Cantab. et DUNELM.

Secretary: JAMES MUIR.

Bankers: BANK OF ENGLAND, WESTERN BRANCH, BURLINGTON GARDENS, LONDON, W. 1.

THE Board holds Examinations throughout the United Kingdom and in the Colonies in both Theoretical and Practical Music. The Examinations are of two kinds, "Local Centre" and "School." The Local Centre Examinations are carried out by two Examiners chosen almost exclusively from the Staffs of The Royal Academy of Music and of The Royal College of Music. The School Examinations are conducted by one Examiner.

The Subjects for Examination are comprised in the following list:—

GRAMMAR OF MUSIC.	ORGAN.	DOUBLE BASS.
RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.	VIOLIN.	HARP.
HARMONY.	VIOLA.	WIND INSTRUMENTS.
COUNTERPOINT.	VIOLONCELLO.	SINGING.
PIANOFORTE.

Local Centre Examinations (Syllabus A). Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March—April at all Centres; and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November—December also. Entries for the November—December Examinations close Wednesday, October 13th, 1920 (or, with extra fee, October 21st).

School Examinations (Syllabus B) held three times a year: viz., October—November, March—April, and June—July. Entries for the October—November Examinations close Wednesday, October 6th, 1920 (or, with extra fee, October 14th).

Theory Papers set in past years (Local Centre or School) may be obtained from the Central Office, price 6d. per annual set post-free.

The Board offers annually Six Exhibitions tenable at The Royal Academy of Music or The Royal College of Music for two or three years. These Exhibitions are limited to Candidates under twenty years of age who fulfil certain conditions set forth in each Syllabus.

Syllabuses A and B for 1920 or for 1921, Forms of Entry, and any further information, may be obtained, post-free, from the Secretary—

JAMES MUIR,

TELEGRAMS:—"ASSOCIA, LONDON."
 TELEPHONE:—MUSEUM 1710.

CENTRAL OFFICE: 14 & 15, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON. W.C. 1.

No. 932

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

OCTOBER 1, 1920

Price 6d.

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.

HAVING acquired the West End Premises of Messrs. J. & J. Hopkinson, Ltd., are opening

NEW SHOW ROOMS AT 52, WIGMORE STREET

for the
Sale of Pianos
by the best
English Makers

WIGMORE HALL
32-40, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON · W.1

Tunings & Repairs effected by a skilled staff of Piano Makers.

Pianos Stored in a special storage warehouse which is kept at an even temperature throughout the year. Insurance included in the storage rates.

Piano Removals

by experienced men in our own motor vans.

TELEPHONE:
MAYFAIR 1761.

The Name of

J. & J. HOPKINSON

Stands for the HIGHEST ATTAINMENTS
in THE WORLD OF MUSIC

REMARKABLE FOR THE EXQUISITE QUALITY OF TONE

J. & J. HOPKINSON, LTD.,
44, FITZROY ROAD, PRIMROSE HILL,
LONDON, N.W.-1

SONGS and MUSIC of DISTINCTION.

"The Harvesters' Night Song"

First introduced to the public by Mr. NORMAN ALLIN, the well-known Lancashire Bass. A great Blackpool favourite.

"The Minster Bell"

A song with a refrain that has positively jumped into fame. Ask your music dealer to play it over.

"Rest at Eventide"

An unusual combination of real musical merit and popular appeal. Suitable for all voices.

"My Lady Charming"

Charming by name and charming in character. Just a delightful little entr'acte for piano.

"Dream Sprite"

An intermezzo for pianoforte. Dainty in construction, melodious, and effective.

Of all Music Sellers, price 2/- net; or direct from the Publishers, post free, 2/1½.

THE NEWMAN PUBLISHING CO., Ltd.

7, Newman Street, London, W. 1.

THE MOST NOTED HOUSE FOR REALLY MUSICAL NUMBERS.

SAMES

HIGHEST QUALITY
GRAND & UPRIGHT
PIANOS

WILLIAM SAMES, LIMITED,
Ombersley Road :: BIRMINGHAM.
LONDON SHOWROOMS: 126 NEW BOND ST.

— THE — SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW

A Monthly Periodical devoted to the interests of Music in Schools.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

PRICE THREEPENCE

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, INCLUDING POSTAGE, FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(From a photograph by G. C. Beresford, London, S.W.)

Ch. Kennedy 105th

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 932.—Vol. 61
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

OCTOBER 1 1920

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

FIFTIETH SEASON, 1920-1921.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

ELIJAH - - - - - MENDELSSOHN

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MR. BEN DAVIES.

MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. HERBERT BROWN.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

JUDAS MACCABÆUS - HANDEL

MADAME STRALIA. | MISS MILLICENT RUSSELL.
MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND. | MR. GRAHAM SMART.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1920, AT 2.30.

CAROLS

MISS FLORA WOODMAN.
MR. JOHN BOOTH.

MISS CARMEN HILL.
MR. TOPLISS GREEN.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. BEN DAVIES.

MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

SAMSON AND DELILAH - SAINT-SAËNS

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS. | MR. EDWARD HALLAND.
MR. EDMUND BURKE.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR

MISS OLGA HALEY.
MR. JOHN COATES. | MR. FREDERICK RANALOW.

GOOD FRIDAY, MARCH 25, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS | MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS. | MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1921, AT 2.30 P.M.

HIAWATHA - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MR. JOHN COATES. | MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

Of the EIGHT CONCERTS to be given, Seven, including the Carol Concert on December 18, will be comprised in the Subscription Series. Prices of Subscription for these Seven Concerts: Stalls, £2 14s. 6d.; Arena, £1 19s.; Balcony (Reserved), £1 7s. 6d.

Prices of Tickets for each Concert: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

Subscribers' names will be received and tickets issued at the Booking Office, Royal Albert Hall, and the usual Agents.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W. 1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, October 9 and 23, at 3. CHAMBER CONCERT, Monday, November 1, at 3.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted. L.R.A.M. CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION. Last day for entry October 31.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams: "Initiative, Southkens, London."

Telephone: "1160, Western."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The CHRISTMAS HALF-TERM will commence on MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1920.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from the Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

(CORPORATION OF LONDON).

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL ... LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

AUTUMN TERM began MONDAY, 20th SEPTEMBER.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and/or Orchestra.

Saturday Opera Class, "Veronique," in rehearsal. There are a few vacancies.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Telephone: Cent 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications are again advanced as from June 30, 1920, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1919-1920.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical Instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

The Twenty-ninth Year begins on October 11.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c., and Opera.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches: Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3,
and 117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORKE-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examination in Music and Elocution, July and December. Spang Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC. LONDON.

Governors: Directors of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.
INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December. Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented. Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, and all other subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

ORCHESTRAL CLASS for Ensemble Playing, Thursdays, at 12 (noon). Terms, £1 11s. 6d. per course.

All communications to be addressed To The Secretary.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxx. § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

Vice-Presidents:

THE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX
THE REV. CANON W. DOUGLAS SPRINGETT, D.D. Oxon.
THE REV. SIR GEORGE RALPH FETHERSTON, BART., J.P.

Warden:

DR. J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman (Board of Examination):

DR. J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc. Cantab., F.R.A.M.

October 21st, 1920, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "Registration Enigma," by DR. J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

Chairman: DR. J. H. LEWIS.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1920.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best INTRODUCTORY
VOLUNTARY for the ORGAN, and EVENING SERVICE.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, TE DEUM
(Chantwise), Harmonized Setting of the GUILD OFFICE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

NATIONAL CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1895. INCOR. 1900.

Under direction of National Conservatoire Corporation (Ltd.),
149, Oxford Street, London, W. 1.

For Musical Examination and Education.

Council: Professor ALEXANDER PHIPPS, Mus. Bac. (Warden).

W. H. PALTRIDGE, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

F. W. HAYDOCK, Esq., Mus. Doc. T.C.D.

WALTER WILLIAMS, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

Local Centre and Diploma Examinations, December.

Educational Dept., also at Liverpool College of Music, 62, Princes Rd.

COLLEGE OF VIOLINISTS. LTD.

91, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, W.C. 2.

EXAMINATIONS

IN VIOLIN, VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO, AND THEORY OF MUSIC
held in JUNE and DECEMBER

Syllabus on application to E. E. JACKSON, Hon. Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER. FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The Prospectus containing information as to the Courses of Study for the Mus. B. and Mus. D. degrees will be forwarded on application to the Registrar. Under the regulations, graduates of other approved Universities who fulfil the requirements of the syllabus, may qualify for the degree of Mus. D. The Hargreaves Scholarship, of the value of £30 per annum, and tenable for two years, is awarded on the results of the First Mus. B. Examination. The Session commences October 7th, 1920.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY. •

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.)

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

£15,000 WANTED.

FOR THE FOSTERING AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF
BRITISH MUSIC AT HOME AND ABROAD.

YOU CAN HELP

By sending a Donation to the Foundation Fund.

By becoming a Member.

(Membership is open to Professionals and Amateurs.)

By forming New Branches.

By assisting Centres and Branches already formed.

Full particulars from

THE GENERAL SECRETARY,

19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

ADVISORY BOARD FOR COMPOSERS.

FEDERATED BOARD OFFICES: 101, MORTIMER STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Director: DR. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

Advisory Board:

MESSRS. ARNOLD BAX, FRANK BRIDGE, EDWARD J. DENT,
EUGENE GOOSSENS, DR. EAGLEFIELD HULL, HAMILTON HARTY, JOHN IRELAND, DR. R. R. TERRY, DR. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS.Advice, criticism, and appraisal of Composer's MSS., with suggestions for publication and performance if worthy.Particulars from Mr. L. C. MORRIS, M.C., Secretary, Advisory Board for Composers.

Federated Board Offices, 101, Mortimer Street, W.1.

THE PHILHARMONIC CHOIR.

Hon. Conductor: CHARLES KENNEDY SCOTT.

Arrangements for next season include performances of "Christmas Oratorio" (Bach); "Christmas Carols" (Vaughan Williams);
"Schicksalslied" (Brahms); "Prometheus" (Scriabin); &c., &c.

Rehearsals will be resumed on Wednesday, October 6th.

Applications for membership should be addressed to—

GRANVILLE HUMPHREYS, 145, Elms Road, Clapham, S.W.4.

Y.M.C.A. MUSIC SECTION.

Chairman: SIR JOHN D. McCURE, LL.D., D.Mus.

Committee: Prof. Percy C. Buck, M.A., D.Mus.; Prof. H. Walford
Davies, LL.D., D.Mus.; A. A. Fitzsimmons; Harvey Grace, F.R.C.O.;
J. T. Lightwood; Sydney H. Nicholson, M.A., B.Mus.; Percy A.
Scholes, B.Mus., A.R.C.M.; Miss Phoebe M. Walters, A.R.C.M.; Mrs. Z. F. Willis. Secretary: Major J. T. Bavin.All information regarding its aims and plans for the introduction and maintenance of good music in the Y.M.C.A. as an educational and recreational feature, may be obtained from The Secretary, Y.M.C.A.
Music Section, Shakespeare Hut, Malet Street, W.C.1.THE IDEAL METHOD
OF MEMORY-TRAINING FOR MUSICIANS.A SYSTEM OF STUDY WHICH QUICKENS AND STRENGTHENS THE MUSICAL MEMORY, THE
IMAGINATIVE AND PERCEPTIVE POWERS.

A CORRESPONDENT WRITES:—

"I could not play one piece from Memory. Now I can play from Memory every piece I learn."

Write for particulars:—

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC.,

SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 25, LOXHAM STREET, BOLTON.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON "ITALIAN PRODUCTION."

Coming Lectures: London (2), Manchester, Edinburgh, Glasgow,
Pontefract, Farnborough, Croydon, Plymouth, Weston, Halstead,
W. Bromwich, Ashton-under-Lyne, Walsall, Cockermouth, Felstead,
Luton, Southend, Horwich, Bolton, Markinch, Greenock, Grimsby, Leicester, Nottingham, Mansfield, Grantham, Todmorden, &c.There are perhaps to-day twenty singers who have been busy before the public for thirty years or more. Twenty! During those thirty years probably twenty thousand have been "trained." There cannot be the slightest doubt that with the correct, definite, easy method the lives of those short-lived voices could have been trebled. This is of NATIONAL IMPORTANCE.

"How to acquire ease of voice-production," by Charles Tree (5s.).

(If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &c.: Address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W. 5.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING

TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d."The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee."One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y."Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentleman."A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News."Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald."His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press."Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury."Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—Western Morning News."I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: MR. A. MCALISTER, B.A.

SUCSESSES - - 48.

Final.

Ex.

1st M.B.

Matric.

MUS. BAC. One fee for the whole Series.

GUARANTEE COURSES:

A.R.C.O.

F.R.C.O.

A.R.C.M. L.R.A.M.

A. Mus. T.C.L.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

The TECHNIQUER in New Zealand

Invented and Patented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, MUS. BAC.

Copy of Testimonial from ROBERT PARKER, Esq., Organist St.
Paul's Pro-Cathedral; Musical Instructor to the WELLINGTON TRAINING COLLEGE:—"I have an earnest and intelligent pupil whose progress at the pianoforte has been greatly impeded by hands so cramped and stiff that the usual keyboard exercises, and even systematic hand gymnastics, have availed her but little in time past. For the last few weeks she has been using the 'Techniquer' with most satisfactory—I had almost said astonishing—results, and I fully believe that her former disabilities and discouragements are at an end. I have tested the apparatus myself, and find from personal experience that the claims made for it are not exaggerated."

Send for full particulars and list of testimonials.

No earnest student should be without a Techniquer.

"Hand Development," post free, 7d. Set of 15 photos, 4s.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W.1.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION AND EXAMINATIONS.

PATRON—HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

PRINCIPAL—DR. F. J. KARN, MUS. BAC. CANTAB.

DIRECTOR OF EXAMINATIONS—G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, ESQ.

HIGHER EXAMINATIONS, 1920.

The following is the List of SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES at the DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS held in London and at Provincial and Colonial Centres for the half-year to July, 1920 :—

DIPLOMAS IN PRACTICAL MUSIC.

LICENTIATES (L.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Gershon Anderson, Enid Almond, Jennie Auld, Ada Alderson, Mollie Allen, Harry Borley, Violet Beardshaw, Florence M. Bowden, Florence B. Bagnall, Emily Bowling, Muriel R. Beesley, Elsie Brown, Gladys Baylis, Helen C. Brown, Gwendoline Bennett, Phyllis M. Brook, Alice E. Baker, Minnie Bilton, Kathleen Beasley, Edgar L. Booth, Eleanor Blvth, Ruby Ball, Beatrice E. Croxall, Margret Cowlin, Doris L. Cooper, Doris Corden, Edith Connor, Nora Corscaden, Hilda Crook, Elizabeth G. Cameron, Eileen M. Coles, Avicé Chisholm, Elletta R. Coulson, Edith Court, Annie E. I. Chilton, Mary Carlin, Elsie I. Crealy, Dulcie Connor, Edith I. Davies, Albert T. Davies, Hope Dalley, Ida Daly, *Nettie Dennington, Dulcie E. Don, Maudie Dunn, Ruth E. Evans, Arthur Elliott, Lena Evans, Elizabeth Etchells, Jeanette Frith, Evelyn M. Foreman, Jessie Fennessey, Annie E. Fall, Katie Fahey, Doris Formby, Vera M. Fordham, Winifred Grills, Ethel Guest, Dorothy C. Gwinnell, Hilda E. Goddard, Alfred H. Glover, George Gorton, Alice Goodier, Teresa M. Green, Gertrude Gardner, Jessie C. Gaywood, Una Gledhill, Greta M. Green, Myrtle Griffiths, Margaret J. Hutchinson, Lilian Heath, Charles H. Hardy, Gwendoline Hamilton, Viola A. M. Hill, Dorothy L. Hawtin, Leila Hodges, Veronica S. Johns, Margaret A. Johnston, Harry C. Jackson, Hugh Jones, Ceciley M. Jones, Violet James, Myrtle Jeffery, Cushla Jones, Winifred Johnston, *Florence L. King, Selby Keeler, Harry B. Knudson, Lillian Keep, Evelyn Kirk, Mary Langshaw, Veronica Lang, Jennie Ludford, Dorothy Lee, Albert L. Lvcett, Doris Lloyd, Rosa Mason, Cicely Moore, Hannah McKavanagh, Gertrude McMahon, Violet K. McBride, Marjorie A. May, Veronica Maher, Alice McLean, Susan Mahony, Lillian Mann, Rachel McKenzie, Barbara McCarthy, Doreen Maddock, Annie C. McGarry, Chrystobel McRae, Cecilia Moore, Cicely Maher, Rene Moore, Lucy Mullens, Estelle M. Norton, Vera M. Nelson, Mary W. E. Ollier, May Osland, Dolly Powell, Norman S. Peters, Elizabeth Pimblett, Doris M. Perrin, Robert Poole, May Patmore, Rita Perry, Doris Plowman, Muriel M. Prince, Alice Randle, Foma D. Renton, Grantley Rudge, Kathleen H. Rolph, Edith I. Roscoe, *Annie H. Rankin, Hazel Ross, Aileen Roper, Ethel M. Reed, Olive R. M. Scott, Emma Speakman, Linda Straker, Ada C. Smyth, Maude Sennett, Mary A. E. Shankland, Doris Stuckenschmidt, Dora Stizaker, Mary D. Shuell, Nellie A. Torode, Rita A. Turrell, Stanley F. Thurlow, Edith Thirlway, Gladys Timms, Nellie Taylor, Edith H. Trevena, Florence L. Tamlyn, Thelma D. Thomas, Gwendoline Toomey, Glenn Thitchener, Edith Wilkinson, Myrtle Watson, Annie E. Wilson, Erica K. Walker, Nina M. Warmoll, Freda I. Webb, Fannie E. Warden, Mary Wilson, Coral A. H. Wood, Marie S. Wilson.

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Edgar Baker, Eileen Connell, Winifred E. Finch, Miriam Freiman, Evelyn R. Gibbs, Cecilia Hopkinson, Jessie Johnson, Gladys McPhail, Sarah McLoughlin, Dorothy M. O'Connor, Eleanor E. Perkin, Winifred Pithie, Freda A. Rigoy.

SINGING.—Dora Anderton, Lillian E. Armond, Dora M. Derbyshire, Dora Gray, Leonard W. Hanks, Theodore G. M. Leeson, Charles C. Legge, Charles H. Pollard, Gladys M. Richards, Mary Shaw, Wilkinson Townsend.

ELOCUTION.—Eloise Bartels, Francis J. Duffy.

TRUMPET.—Henry Albert Rainbow.

BANDMASTERSHIP.—Wilkinson Townsend.

TEACHERS' DIPLOMA (T.D.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Margaret V. Armstrong, Elizabeth G. Cameron, Kate E. Dales, Effie Dickson, Margaret Doyle, Gladys I. Llewellyn, Herbert D. Melrose, Kathleen McNeice, Annie Middleton, Myra E. Oliver, Annie Owen, Mary Wareing, Eileen White.

ELOCUTION.—Florence B. Campbell, Francis J. Duffy, Gladys de La Cour, Alys Duncan, Eva J. Hall, Lily Hughes, Ada Plant Beatrice P. H. A. Preston, Ethel M. Punshon, Lily Ward.

ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Arthur J. Aston, Rosie Adams, Eva A. Attwooll, Doris W. Adcock, Matilda Armitage, Annie Acton, Alice L. Ashmore, Sarah Aspinall, Jennie Allen, Ivy M. Ayling, Dorothy M. Allen, Madge D. Arland, Nellie Andrew, Ruth Armstrong, Marion R. Allen, Mollie Allen, Dora Allen, Dorothy Annabel, Charles Anning, Agnes Butchart, Narelle Bullard, Edna C. C. Bennett, Doris M. Benson, Vera Bradford, Vera Boardman, Aldyth Braby, Dorothy Bavister, Sylvia Barton, Agnes Batchelor, Bella Bethune, Jean F. Bath, Winifred Barnes, Bernice Berkery, Doris H. Berger, Percy Brown, Lizzie Burns, Irene J. Bunn, Mary R. Black, Helen R. Bakewell, Lena Bloom, Marion K. H. Bunting, Annie Blumfield, Sybil W. Blatcher, Doris E. Bilbe, John N. Burrows, Florence J. J. Byers, Alice R. Bland, Miriam E. O. Brown, Edith M. S. Brown, Ethel F. Brown, Gladys Brown, Priscilla Bridgwater, Daisy Bain, Edith Bisset, Ethel A. Burke, Jervisia Bennix, Mary Bolger, Bertha V. Booth, Charlotte J. Byrne, Thomas W. Brown, Aurelie Bellennare, Olga E. Bruslan, Gladys C. Burns, Ailyn Berry, John W. Burgum, Gertrude Broadbent, Lalaf F. Bax, Lily Beardmore, Richard H. Ball, Agnes D. Bell, Joshua Brailsford, Violet B. Booth, Arther M. Bate, Fred Bennett, Raymond A. Blockside, Elizabeth M. Burns, Lily Barry, Maie Bulluss, Erma Bowen, Mary Barry, Jane N. Baldwin, Phoebe C. Barton, Clarice Brownbill, Honora M. Barratt, Lorna M. Bartlett, Mary Baker, Beatrice M. Cudbard, Alice M. Cadman, Olive M. Cleaver, Mona Clarke, Harriet Cliff, Nora Corscaden, Florence Clinch, Harold Clarke, Lilian Crooks, George C. Carr, Teresa Carroll, Edith Crampton, Dorothy Coombs, Isabel Christie, Ethel M. M. Clibery, Kate M. Chamberlain, Florence C. Catt, Mabel Cooper, Emily M. Cooper, Enid E. Conway, Adeline Condliff, Rosa V. Chesney, Marie Collins, Edward Carter, Florrie Cohen, Albert H. Carter, Elsie Charlesworth, Stanislaus Curry, Colin Crapper, Doreen Clapham, Mary V. Casey, Margaret Crellin, May Clark, Frances Collins, Violet Cohen, Doris Cox, Madge Comer, Eileen Crowe, Rene Cusick, Gladys M. Charlton, Kathleen Conway, Marjorie Cockerill, Mabel Cockerill, Maggie M. Cuthbert, Melba Cramer, Clarice Carol, Edna Coutts, Mary Carroll, Doris Dodd, Mary E. Devlin, Ethel M. Davies, Margaret Davies, Harry Dyson, Winifred G. G. H. Dyer, Annie Docherty, Susan Dalgarno, Alice Duncalf, Dora Dearden, Eleanor Dobson, William Donohoe, Ethel Dodd, Margaret H. Davies, Jessie S. Drewery, Patricia Duncan, Bernadette Delahenty, Doreen Drinan, Alice M. Dempsey, May N. Davey, Louisa Dodd, Agnes Doyle, Catherine Dillon, Ruth Davies, Doris H. Dyson, Ivy Dunkley, Pearl Dunkley, Donald Dudgeon, Mary E. Davison, Nellie Doolan, Mary A. Devine, Desna Dennett, Gladys E. Devereaux, Lily Danson, Winifred Deasey, Francis J. D'Arcy, Gwladys Evans, Gladys R. Elton, Doris Evans, Nellie Edwards, Ruby M. Eastwood, Eileen V. Egan, Gordon R. Edwards, Doris, Binnie Fleming, Elsie M. Fisher, Thelma J. Frahm, Agnes Fanning, Lily Fawcett, Maggie Ferriday, Clarice T. Foster, Maude Francis, Winnifred Fisher, Thomas Fowler, Maude Franks, Dodo Foster, Aileen Fitzgerald, Gladys Fisher, Emily H. Franks, Alice M. Fletcher, Ada Fielding, Annie L. Fall, Pearla Freedman, Gertrude L. Field, Ina A. Flad, Roy Faull, Eileen Foristal, Agnes Fitzpatrick, Corella M. I. Farmer, Mary Foster, Phyllis T. Gallienne, Elsie Garlick, Florence L. George, Nora Gilmore, Georgina E. Goldsmith, Alfred H. Glover, George E. Griffin, Isabel T. Gorrle, Grace F. B. Goldsmid, Ethel M. Grandfield, Edith Greene, Charles E. Gibson, Irene Goodfellow, William B. Gell, Quigta Golding, Elsie M. Graham, Daisy L. Gilhooley, Nonie Griffen, Bessie Grogan, Myrtle Griffiths, Birdie Gatehouse, Hilary Gardiner, Nellie Glasheen, Daniel W. Griffith, Mary A. Giles, Mary Gemel, Charles E. Harper, Phyllis B. Hilcox, Edith Hook, Lottie D. Haddleton, Charles H. Hardy, Annie E. Howell, Dorothy G. Hampton, Gladys Holden, Grace E. H. Heavens, Dorothy Horrocks, Doris Holt, Muriel R. Hand, Joseph C. Harrison, Olive Holland, Olive H. Harding, Violet Hale, Stanley Hall, Colin Howson, Alfred Heaton, Muriel Halliday, Maura Hanna, Doris Harkness, Doris M. Hurley, Edith B. Henley, Edith Hunter, William Howlett, Mabel Harrison, Isabella G. Hedley, Annie E. Hadley, Emily M. Hammond, Gwendoline S. Hamilton, Doris E. Horton, Ruby E. M. Harmon, Edna B. Hansson, Gwendoline Harkin, Hannah Harris, Jean Hislop, Cora Handley, Elvie M. Hook, Katie Harper, Marquita W. Hanley, Alma C. Hill, Gwendoline I. Herbert, Nellie Hinchey, Cecilia E. Hogan, Mollie Hume, May Harding, Thomas Glennie-Holmes, Mabel E. Hanna, Mary Howard, Stella A. Horton, Norman G. Hamilton, Helena Idsal, Mabel W. Irving, Ivy L. M. James, Harriet C. Jones, Arthur Jasperson, Howard Jackson, Emma Jewell, Albert O. Jones, Frederick Jennings, Charles Jones, Mary A. Jones, Leila M. L. Johnston, Ernest S. Jones, Thomas Johnston, Enid E. Jalland, David S. Jamieson, Brynmor Jones, Olwyn Jones, Morfy Jones, Una Jensen, Jessie Johnson, Olive Jackson, Glory Joyce, Trissie Jay, Iris A. Jepsen, Lorna V. Jones, Alice Kimberley, William H. Kirby, Mildred Kirkpatrick, Leslie H. Kendall, Frances E. Kitchen, Ida M. Kilbride, Ida W. Kelley, Edna J. Kitson, Florence M. E. Knuckey, Florence Kimber, Edna Keane, Violante Kimpton, Doris Kelsey, Vera King, Ursula Kennedy, Ada Kleinman, Tillicent Keane, Dorothy Key, Lionel W. Langley, Doris M. Louis, Gwendoline E. Ledsome, George Love, Ivy Lockwood, Mary C. Leishman, Doris I. Lilley, Aileen J. Larkinson, Doris M. Little, Francis H. Littler, Nancy Littlefield, Rose Lewis, Irene Lloyd, Daisy M. Lewis, Leslie R. Lockwood, Moya Larson, Edna A. S. Lawrence, Jennie Lambert, Ruth Lovegrove, Eva L. Landry, Faith I. Luttrell, ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.)—continued.

